TO THE

Chriſtian Reader.

Chriſtian Reader,

THe nature of man is more apt to be guided by Examples than by Precepts; eſpecially by the examples of men eminently learned, and of great repute for Piety and Godlineſs. Such men are as Looking-glaſſes to the places where they live, by which moſt people dreſs themſelves, and when they fall into ſin, they fall like men in a Croud, many falling with them. The bodies of men are not ſo ſubject to be infected by the illneſs of the Air, as the ſouls of men by the ill examples of godly learned Miniſters. When Peter at Antioch diſſembled, many of the Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him, and Barnabas was brought into their diſſimulation alſo. It is very remarkable that this example of Peter is ſaid to be a conſtraining of the Gentiles to Judaize; Why conſtraineſt thou the Gentiles to do as the Jews? Gal. 2. 14.

There is a compulſive power in the ill examples of godly men to conſtrain others to do the evil that they do; and therefore let godly Miniſters (eſpecially in theſe days) take heed leaſt by any wicked compliance they build men up in ſin, and bring deſtruction upon themſelves, as the two ſons of old Ely did, who by their wicked examples made the people of Iſrael to tranſgreſs, and thereby brought ruine upon their old Father and themſelves. 1 Sam. 2. 24.

And ſo on the contrary, there is a heavenly power and efficacy, in the good examples of men eminent in place and godlineſs, to draw others to Piety and Holineſs. As long as Joſhua lived, and the Elders that had ſeen all the great works of the Lord that he did for Iſrael, the children of Iſrael ſerved the Lord. The religious carriage of Theodoſius the Emperour in his family, made, not only his family, but his whole Court to be a Nurſery of Religion. Pezel. Mel. Hiſt. in vita Theodo. 2.

But this is moſt eſpecially ſeen in the godly Lives of godly and learned ned Ministers. Herod the King reverenced John Baptist, observed him, and when he heard him, did many things, and heard him gladly; not so much for the love of his Doctrine, as because he was a just and holy man, and (as Jesus Christ saith of him) a Burning and Shining Light; Burning in holy zeal for God, as well as Shining in Orthodox Doctrine. He is called by the Prophet, The voice of him that cryeth in the Wilderness. And as Nazianzen saith of him, he cryed louder by the holiness of his Life, than the sincerity of his Doctrine; He was Tota vox, All voice; his apparel, his diet, and his conversation, did Preach Holiness, as well as his Doctrine. Mar. 6. 20. John 5. 35. Isa. 40. 3.

And therefore it cannot but be a work very profitable to the Church of Christ, for any man to write a History of the Lives of the eminently learned, and godly Ministers of former times, as a fair Copy for Posterity to write after, and a Pattern for them to imitate. This Reverend, religious, and learned Author hath undertaken this work in this ensuing Treatise, and effected it so well, as that I thought it not sufficient to give a naked Imprimator unto it, without this addicional commendation both of the Author and of his Work. The Apostle having in the eleventh Chapter to the Hebrews given us a little Book of Martyrs, in the beginning of the twelfth Chapter, he calls them A cloud of Witnesses. Such a cloud of witnesses is contained in this Book. And as the children of Israel were directed in their journeys by the Pillar of a Cloud, that went before them, as long as they were in the Wilderness, so let us make this cloud of Witnesses (so far as it followeth Christ) a Pillar of Cloud to guide us, while we are in the Wilderness of this World, till we come to enjoy that unexpressible happiness of which they are now made partakers.

So prayeth your servant

in Christ Jesus,

EDMOND CALAMY.

TO

TO THE

Christian Reader.

Christian Reader,

THE right improvement of good Examples, doth reach the highest ends of man, (viz) Gods honour, and the Souls welfare. It was an honour unto King David, to have so many men of valour under his command. And doubtless the wisdom, faith, love, zeal, courage and humility, which Gods faithful servants in the several ages of the Church have expressed in their attendance upon him, do publish the high praises of his blessed Majesty. For if there appear so much Worth in small drops, what is there in the Seas of Divine Allsufficiency? He that seeth the Sun-beams bright, will see cause to admire the brightness of the Sun it self. The luster left upon Moses his face, by the reflection of the glory of Gods back parts, was a full demonstration of the incomparable infinite glory of his face. When we read of men raised above the World, despising promises, and scorning threatnings, whereby they have been assaulted to desert the Truth of the Gospel, and to make shipwrack of a good conscience; how can we do less then glorifie God in them? For can any power, on this side Omnipotency, enable sinful men to deny themselves, their dearest relations, and the greatest earthly advantages for Jesus Christ? How much of Deity shines in their Lives, who could trample upon preferments, laugh at imprisonment and banishment, yea with smiles and joys embrace stakes, and endure flames, in love unto the Lord Jesus? Oh what abundant occasion is administred of adoring the most High God, in his rich perfections, faithfulness and unchangeableness, when we consider, how, even to admiration, he hath furnished many of his Ambassadors with raised parts and graces to defend his cause and edifie his Church, in the several corners of the World from generation to generation! Histories hold forth the acknowledgements extorted from Heathens to the honour of the true God, upon the notice taken of Christians gracious carriage, both in life and death: When you be informed of their unwearyed industry in services, and their undaunted magnanimity in sufferings for Christ their Lord, then conceive, that you hear themselves thus speaking unto you with a loud Voice; Why look you thus upon us? Not unto us, not unto us, but unto the Name of God give glory. And as our gracious God is advanced, so may our selves be very much advantaged by a due consideration of those things, which have been exemplary in the Lives and Deaths of choise Men, Champions for Scripture-truths, and Patriots for the power of godliness. For as Gods Laws are the good mans rules; so good Examples are his motives and encouragements. The holy Scriptures do hint the prevalency hereof for saving Conversion. And it is reported that that Juſtin Martyr by obſerving the pious Lives and patient deaths of the Martyrs, was brought to Chriſt. Men likewiſe may be faſt Riveted, and more ſtrongly Rooted in the Truth received, by reflecting upon the ſound judgements and ſpotles Lives of them who have publiſhed and maintained it. In which reſpect Pauls ſpeech unto young Timothy is very remarkable; But continue thou in the things which thou haſt learned, and haſt been aſſured of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them. Such are witneſſes with a witneſs, there are none ſuch.

The common people are more apt to enquire what Miniſters do, than what they ſay. And the eye is more operative and affecting than the ear.

Neither is this only true, in regard of Gods Worthies who live with us, but alſo in reference unto them who have lived long before us. The Apoſtle writing to the Hebrews concerning Abels faith, he tels them, that by it, though he be dead, he yet ſpeaketh. Upon which phraſe famous Maſter Perkins, hath this note. Abels Faith, is a never dying Preacher.

It is the pleaſure of Almighty God, that we ſhould walk in the way of good men, and keep the path of the Righteous. Walk ſo as you have us for an Example. The Apoſtle Paul draws their obſervation and imitation, upon thoſe who were really and eminently good.

And the Apoſtle James, inculcates the ſame thing. Take, my Brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the Name of the Lord, for an example. In Examples there ſhould be excellency and conſpicuity; As the ſtamps upon Coyns which make them current. It is moſt true that wiſe Solomon ſends ſluggiſh man unto School, to learn of the Piſmire. And therefore, grant that Chriſtians ſhould imitate Heathens in their virtues: how much rather then, ought we to make practical improvement of the Epitomized Lives of theſe many eminent ſervants of Chriſt, who are preſented to our view in this book?

Theſe fair Copies we ſhould ſpread before our eyes, and write after them, till our writing, our living, be like them. Frequent meditation upon the wiſe ſavory ſpeeches, and holy gratious practices of theſe renowned Worthies, will be a ſpecial means to mould us (even us) into the ſame ſimilitude.

Peter Martyr, perſwading the improvement of good Examples, tell's a ſtory of a deformed man, marryed unto an uncomely woman, who, being deſirous of comely children, bought many beautiful pictures, and deſired his wife daily to look upon them, by means whereof their children were handſome and lovely. And doubtleſs, brave Chriſtian qualifications might be begotten in our boſoms by filling our heads and hearts frequently with the commendable converſation of theſe holy men of God, who have been burning and ſhining lights in the Churches of Chriſt, in their reſpective Ages.

But whilſt we are moving imitation, we muſt not forget to give in ſome few cautions to prevent miſcarrying.

1 Cor. 11. 1.

1. Do not ſo Idolize any man in reſpect of his place, parts, or graces, as to make him your pattern in every particular. The Apoſtle gives in a good Item to the Corinthians, which concerns all Chriſtians, Be followers of me, as I am of Chriſt. Chriſtians are not bound (as Maſter Latimer expreſſeth himſelf to be the Saints Apes, labouring to be like them in every thing: It's Chriſts peculiar honour, to be imitated in all morals abſolutely. This Caveat is neceſſary in theſe Man-admiring times, wherein many pin their faith and conſciences upon ſome mens ſleeves. Here it might ſeaſonably be remembred, that the opinion and practice of the Apoſtle Peter did once lead many out of the right way. When mens parts are high, their graces ſhining, or their power great, we are in danger either to be dazzelled with their brightneſs, or biaſſed by their greatneſs. Therefore before you adventure to follow Men, weigh the chiefeſt of them in the ballance of the Sanctuary, and try their moſt ſpecious notions and actions by the touchſtone of the Temple.

Gal. 2. 11, 12, 13.

Non enumeranda ſuffragia, ſed perpendenda. Auguſt. 1.

2. Beware on the other hand, leſt you ſo pry into and peer upon the weakneſſes of Gods Worthies, as not to value and imitate thoſe virtues which did break forth brightly in their converſations. You muſt give good gold all its allowance, and not throw it aſide, becauſe it wants ſome grains and hath a crack. The Snow-like Swan hath black legs, and in many things we offend all. And though some of these pretious Servants of Jesus Christ, who are justly commended in this Book, had their ble mishes in Judgment, or in some Actions: yet how much did they in many particulars exceed the most Famous Professors of our times? Jam. 3. 2.

3. When you meet with that in their Lives, which was not only truly but eminently good; sit not down satisfied, till you have attained their Measure. Be followers of me, &c. (saith the Apostle) for our Conversation is in Heaven. Follow the forwardest Christians, with a desire to overtake them. His speech savored more of Wit than Grace, who counselled his Friend, Not to come too nigh unto Truth, lest his Teeth should be beaten out with it's Heels. Dwell upon the Exemplary Lives of these Transcendent Saints, till you be changed into the same Image: Their Love to Christ, his Truth and People, should enlarge your hearts: Their Zeal should enflame you: Their Magnanimity should encourage you Their Humility should abase you. Their Patience should calm you. Their Labors. should quicken your Diligence. Their Temporance should moderate you in the use of all Sensual Contentments. Their Confidence should confirm your Fiducial dependance upon Gospel-Promises. Their Contempt of the World, should call you off yet farther from all empty Sublunaries. Their high estimation of the Holy Scriptures, should heighten your reverent respect of them. Their many Assaults from Satan, and Sufferings from men, in Estate, Liberty, Credit, and Body, should embolden and arm you in evil Times. Their Experiense of support under Grievances, of supplies in necessaries, of comfort in crosses, of deliverance in streights, of success in services, and of triumphing perseverance; notwithstanding all oppositions from within and from without, should hold up your faint hopes, unweariedly to wait for the full accomplishment, of all the pretious Promises of the Covenaut-grace in Jesus Christ. Phil. 3. 17. 20.

Virtutes sanctorum sunt quasi testimonia, quæ nos confirment, ut illis vel ducibus vel sociis freti, alacrius ad Deum pergamus. Cal. in Heb. 12. 1.

4. Confine not your desires, designs, endeavours, to any degree of Spiritual goodness attained by the fairest Saint on this side Heaven. For no Example (Christ's only excepted) did ever reach that Rule, according to which we are always obliged to order our Hearts and Lives. A man may fully fall in with the forwardest Follower of Jesus Christ, and yet fall far short of Conformity to Gods Commandements. That blessed Apostle, who propounds himself a Pattern for Imitation, having his Conversation in Heaven; yet he speaks thus of himself, Not as though I was already perfect. And that beloved Disciple John tells us, that Every one who hath a Well-grounded, lively hope of Heaven, purgeth himself, as Christ is pure. 1 Joh. 3. 3.

If according to this Counsel, with these Directions, you shall improve the manifold pretious Examples, which are here presented unto your perusal; then shall you have good cause to bless Almighty God, for bringing this Book unto your hands. The Godly and Reverend Author, our Antient Friend and Fellow-Pupil, with one of us (under the Tuition of Master Thomas Hooker in Emanuel Colledge, who for his Eminent Abilities, and Glorious Services, both in this, and in the other England, deserves a place in the First Rank of them who are here Recorded); hath in this Collection, imitated the Lord, who hath a Book of Remembrance, wherein he Registers the Gratious Speeches and Actions of his Zealous Servants in evil Times. Hereby also he is Instrumental in the Accomplishment of Gods Promise, who hath said, The Righteous shall be had in Everlasting Remembrance. An Instance whereof the Apostle gives in Abel, (the Proto-Martyr) who, for his Faith and Righteousness, is yet spoken off, (as some render the phrase) though long since dead. S. Ash. Mal. 3. 16. Psal. 112. 6. Heb. 11. 4.

That which the Apostle affirms, upon the Review of his Catalogue of Beleivers, Recorded in the Eleventh Chapter of his Epistle to the Hebrews, I may apply to this Book: We are compassed about with a Cloud of Witnesses: For which way can we look, or to what condition and concernment of Life can we turn our selves, wherein some Example propounded in this Book, will not aptly suit with our Estates for guidance, comfort, encouragement. Heb. 12. 1.

And although the Labor of our Author, hath been in this Collection very great, yet he resolves if (God give Life and Health) to add a Second Part unto this now published: wherein, if any one will be pleased to furnish him, with full and faithful Relations, of the Godly Life and death of any of their Christian Friends (whether Ministers or others) who have been eminent in their days, their Names may hereby be perpetuated unto the Service of Posterity.

Here we might have given in a true, though short Character, of some pretious Servants and Messengers of Christ, whose Graces were admired whilst they lived, and whose Memory their surviving Friends do much honor: viz. Doctor Preston, Sibs, Tailor, Stoughton, &c. Mr. Rogers, Stock, Culverwel, Pemble, &c. As also Mr. Hildersham, Dod, Pierson, Herring, Ball, Nicols, Hind, and Rathband, who for their Christian Graces, and Ministerial Abilities, for their Services and Sufferings, do deserve an honourable Memorial in the Church of Christ: The latter of these (though they lived and dyed Non-Conformists) yet they always kept a due distance from Browniſtical Separation, and were Zealously affected towards the Presbyterial Government of the Church, as the works of some of them do sufficiently witness.

Most of whose lives are since published by the Author.

Through Gods Grace, their Judgments were never tainted with the noisom Errors of these declining times, neither were their Lives stained with any such Scandals, for which too many who pretend to an higher pitch of purity and Saintship, are justly reproached. But now we will not discourse any further of them, because we hope that the next Part of this Book (which before we intimated) may bring to light the Excellencies of some of them (at least) which call for Remembrance and Imitation.

*And now (Christian Reader!) craving pardon for our tediousness, whereby thou hast been thus long detained out of this Pleasant* Garden, we desire that Gods Direction and Blessing may accompany thy Passage through it: That whilst thou seest thy self surrounded with sweet and fragant Flowers, thou mayst adore the inexhaust and fulness of Jesus Christ, from whom all Graces and Consolations do continually flow. And because an inward Supernatural principle is necessary to the right improvement of such helps, (as the Bee by an Innate quality, which other Creatures want, maketh Honey out of Flowers) we commend thee to the God of all Grace, that by the Abilities of his Spirit, thou mayst be abundantly benefited in Spiritual Respects, by thy serious survaying of this useful Book.

TO THE Chriſtian Reader.

Chriſtian Reader!

THE Holy Apoſtle tels us, that When Chriſt aſcended on High, he gave Gifts unto men, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors and Teachers, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the Work of the Miniſtry, for the Edifying of the Body of Chriſt, till we all come into the Unity of the Faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect Man, unto the Meaſure of the Stature of the Fulneſs of Chriſt: The Accompliſhment hereof will in part appear by theſe Examples following, wherein we ſhall ſee how the Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath in all Ages raiſed up, and ſent Paſtors after his own Heart for the ends before mentioned: and becauſe that Old ſubtile Serpent the Divel knows, that the chiefeſt way to hinder the Succeſs of the Miniſtry is to breed in mens hearts an undervaluing, and diſ-eſteem of the Miniſters: Therefore we may take notice what Titles Chriſt Jeſus in the New Teſtament is pleaſed to honor them withall: He calls them Angels: Rev. 2. 1. 8, 12, 18, &c. Stars: 1 Rev. ult. Ambaſſadors of Chriſt: 2 Cor. 5. 20. Builders: 1 Cor. 3. 10. Gods Stewards: Tit. 1. 7. Lights of the World. Matth. 5. 14. The Glory of Chriſt: 2 Cor. 8. 23. Nurſes: 1 Theſ. 2. 7. Spiritual Fathers: 1 Cor. 4. 15. And ſuch as ſtand in Chriſts ſtead: 2 Cor. 5. 20. And ſuch indeed have moſt of theſe Worthies been, whoſe Lives are Recorded in this Book: Yet leſt any ſhould run into the contrary extream, and judge of them above that which is meet, the Scriptures tell us alſo, that they are Earthen Veſſels, 2 Cor. 4. 7. and men ſubject to the like Paſſions with others: James 5. 17. Acts 14. 15. This you ſhall find evidenced in the Narratives of ſome of theſe Lives, who, though they were Men of God, yet were they Sons of Adam alſo: And I could have given you in a Catalogue of the Nævi, and blemiſhes of the Antient Fathers, as well as of the Modern Divines, that ſo we might be convinced, that our Faith ought not to ſtand in the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God: But moſt men are too apt to eſpy Motes upon a Black Coat; and therefore I forbear them.

Ephes. 4. 11, &c.

What Excellent uſe may be made of theſe Lives, will appear if we conſider, Firſt;

The Divine and Comfortable Speecheswhich have proceeded from theſe holy men of God, worthy to be written in Letters of Gold, and to be engraven, not upon the Tables of Stone, but upon the fleſhly Table of our Hearts.

Secondly, The induſtry, diligence, and faithfulneſs which they ſhewed in their General and Particular Callings, worthy our beſt Imitation.

Thirdly, Their behaviour and deportment in times of Perſecution, and how ready the Lord was to ſupport, encourage, and ſtrengthen them therein, which may help our Faith and Dependance upon God in the like times, and upon the like occaſions.

Fourthly their Zeal, Patience, and Perſeverance in the Truth, Not loving their Lives unto the Death, ſo they might fulfil their Miniſtry with Joy; which ſhould teach us to be Followers of them, who through Faith and Patience do now inherit the Promiſes.

Rev. 12. 11.

Heb. 6. 12.

What Benefit this Collection of mine may afford to the Learned, and to Miniſters, I leave to their own Prudence, who can beſt judge of it: Yet thus much I dare ſay, That here they ſhall find gathered into one Book, thoſe things which before lay ſcattered in many: Here they ſhall ſee in what Centuries, Ages, and Places the Famouſeſt Lights of the Church, both Antient and Modern, have flouriſhed.

Here they ſhall have, contracted into one little Volume, the Subſtance of that, which if it had been tranſlated, or tranſcribed according to the Originals, would have filled many ſuch Books as this; and yet (as I ſuppoſe) nothing of worth orweight omitted.

ndif together with this, they ſhall pleaſe to make uſe of my two Martyrologies, and my Mirror, or Looking-Glaſſe both for Saints and Sinners: I preſume, they may be ſtored with Examples, almoſt for every Subject which they ſhall Preach upon: And how grateful and uſeful to the Auditories ſuch Examples are, I conceive none can be ignorant.

Now much enlarged.

But to conclude, I hope (through Gods Bleſſing) theſe my weak and unworthy Endeavour will prove ſeaſonable and ſuitable to the times; pleaſant and profiable, to the Readers; and ſome way or other inſtrumental to Gods glory, which is thetſerious and earneſt deſire of Thine unfeigned Friend to ſerve thee,

Ἀνδράσι παμπόλλοις κραδίη ἐπήγειρε ἔνεσιν·
Ἡ ἐπίγεια μεμᾶσα λίαν, ἀισχιστά τε πολλά.
Θεῖα κέαρ σέθεν φίλε μᾶ, καλλιστά τε πάντα.
Κῦρε ἐγὼ τόσσα μάλα σοι συγχαίρω ἅπασιν
Εὐχόμενος τραπίδας ταῖς σαῖς παπίδεσσιν ὁμοίας.
Καὶ χαίρειν οἶδα βίβλε ταύτης τόσα κάλλεα δόσης.
Οὔτοι οἱ Πατέρες λαμπροὶ καὶ Ποιμένες ἄλλοι,
Ἔνθεοι ἀμφότεροι, δυνατοὶ λόγῳ ἠδὲ καὶ ἔργῳ,
Κάλλεα τ' ἐν γαίης ἦσαν πάλαι ἀστερόεντα,
Δόξα τε τῷ Χριστῷ, ὡς εἶπεν Ἀπόστολος ἐθνῶν.
Κάλλεα καὶ νῦν εἰσιν ἐν οὐρανῷ· ἀστέρες εἰσὶν
Ἡλίῳ ἐγγύτατοι χριστῷ τε καλλέα δόξαν.
Ξυμπάντων ἀγίων τόσσον φανερώτεροι ἄλλων
Ὅσσον ὑπερβαίνει φάος αἰθέρος ἀστέρος αὐγή.
Τὰς ἀναγινώσκων ἀρετὰς, καὶ εἰκόνας εἰδων
Ἥδομαι ὡς θνατὸν ἐφευρήσας πολύτιμον.
Καὶ μέγας ἐν σπήθει ἀρετῶν πόθος ἔστιν ἐκείνων,
Καὶ μέγας ὄψεσθαι ἀγίας ἐν ὑψέσι ψυχάς.
Φίλε σέθεν δέομαι ἔτι πλείονα κάλλεα μῶσθαι,
Καὶ νέα πραδεῖναι τόποις τοῖς ἀσράσιν ἄσρα.

Thomas Dugard. A. M. Rector Barfordiæ.

Ἄτιμος καὶ ἔντιμος ὁ τοῦ θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος.

Νῦν θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος παρὰ πλείοσιν ἔστιν ἄτιμος.
(Φῶτι σκότος μάχεται, μισεῖ τε τὸ ἔρανον ἄδης.)
Ἀλλὰ θεανθρώπῳ, ὡς ὄμματα, τίμιος ἔσθω,
Πᾶσί τε φιλοθέοις, σφετέρας κομέουσί τε ψυχάς.
Οὗτοι θειολόγοι ὡσεὶ θεοῦ ἀγγέλοι ὄφιν,
Καὶ πόδας ὡραίους πέλασιν, ἀεί τε γλίχονται
Ὧδε εἶδεν, καὶ πλεῖστα βίῳ χάρισι θανόντος.
Θάρσει δὴν ἄνθρωπε θεοῦ· ἀθέτει ἀθετοῦντας·
Τέτλαθι γηγενέας γενναίως· χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ
Γήθησον, καὶ εὐσεβέσιν, καὶ τούτῳ ἀδελφῷ,
Τῷ σοφὸν βίβλοις ἐρατοῖσι σὺν εἰκόσι τούτων
Ἀνδρῶν σεμνοτάτων, τῷ σοφώσαντι καὶ ἄλλων,
Ἀνέρι φιλοθέῳ, φιλοαδέλφῳ, εὐφρονι λίαν·
Ἀξίῳ ἀθανάτου τε εἶδος καὶ ἀγηράντου αἴνου.

To his Reverend Friend Mr. Samuel Clark.

FAlſe Lights to Error now our Souls betray;
Thou art a Cull-markes to direct our way.
From White of Truth we rove as in the dark.
Thy Book's our Marks-man, and Cull's out A Mark.
We ſail in troublous Seas 'midſt rocks and ſhelves,
Thou ſet'ſt up Sea-marks leſt we loſe our ſelves:
Mercurial Statues here rais'd out of clay,
Whoſe Faith, Zeal, Patience, guide us heavens way:
Thy Life, Name, Works, ſo well in one agree,
I wiſh me follower of theſe LIVES with thee.

John Fuller, Miniſter of Gods Word at Botolphs-Biſhops-gate.

Others by the ſame.

STorie's a Light of time for after-Ages,
This Book's a Lanthorn which this Light incage's:
No fatal Comet's here with fear to dread us,
But Pole-ſtars all from Chriſt to Chriſt to lead us.
And ſhould the witneſſes not yet be ſlain,
Thou mak'ſt us ſee they may be rais'd again.
If Teachers be as Stars, then ſure thy Book
Doth as an Heavenly Conſtellation look:
If they be ſeaſoning ſalt, this Book of thine
May well be nam'd a Rich Salt-Peter-Mine.
If Watchmen, Witneſſes; he's not miſled
Calls it a Mizpah and a Galeed.
A Sacred Sampler drawn to th' life in Storie,
Gen. 31.47, 49. Legend of Saints, indeed, a Directorie.
And whilſt that ſome ſnuff-out Lights of our Age,
Thou trim'ſt, and ſet'ſt ſuch here in equipage:
Spirits once rais'd, imploy'd not, vaniſh ſoon,
When theſe LIVES guide us, then thy Book is done.

John Fuller.

To my Reverend and learned Friend, upon his Book called The LIVES, &c.

LIke Jacob's Rods thy LIVES thou laiſt in view;
His Rods were pill'd, thy LIVES are pickt; their hew (Reader) is thy Exemplar; Look on, Love,
Buy, Read, yea Live their LIVES, and then 'twill prove
That when you have enquir'd what bargain's beſt,
A purchaſe made for LIVES is gainfulleſt:
Could but one Life be bought, who would not trade?
Who buys thy Book, buyes many Lives: I'le wade
One ſtep more in thy praiſe; How th' Faces fit
I judge not, ſure thy LIVES to th' Life are writ.

Guilielm. Jenkyn, Eccleſiæ Chriſti apud Londinenſes Paſtor.

Upon the Book of the LIVES of the FATHERS, &c. Made by the Reverend, his dear Father Mr. Sam. Clark.

LO here the quinteſſence of more
Then Crœſus ever ſaw before.
Gold, Silver, Diamonds, theſe are Compar'd to this, not half ſo rare,
Contracted worth! much in a little ſpace:
'Tis Homer's Iliads in a Nut-ſhel caſe.

Rare Chymiſtrie! how could you make So pure Elixar? did you take
Theſe Worthies aſhes ſo Divine,
As matter fit for your deſign?
Such Sacred Reliques, whereſo'ere enſhrin'd,
Make the Urn pretious to a pious mind.

Of ſeveral Stars our Sophies ſay,
United's made the Milkie-way:
The Ignes fatui cannot be Exalted to ſuch dignitie.
No wandring Stars are here. Theſe fixed are;
A Conſtellation in heaven's higheſt Sphere.

Then ſure this Book, if readd, will pleaſe;
Who will not chooſe to be with theſe
Deceaſed Heroes? this bliſs
To th' Reader here imparted is.
Here's many Saints; one Book: thus, Schools do tell,
Ten Thouſand Angels in one point may dwell.

Sam. Clark, A. M. Aul. Pembr. Soc.

To his Reverend and much honoured Father, Mr. Samuel Clark, concerning his Book called The LIVES, &c.

HOW! LIVES! They're dead. No: death they did evade
By their good Lives, which them immortal made.
Death could not take their Lives away, you find
He took their Bodies, left their Lives behind;
Which here aſſembled ſhew themſelves ſo well,
As though they ſtrove each other to excell.
'Tis a choiſe Synod O! who would not be Preſent, their Acts, and Orders for to ſee!
Like Cyrus Court with good men 'tis ſo ſtor'd,
That wink and chooſe, it will good choice afford.
Then ſince good Lives are in this Book ſo rife,
I make no doubt to call't a Book of Life.

IF

IF to these Lives the Reader shall please to add the Martyrologies twice formerly Printed, and now going to the Press again, together with the Lives at the end thereof, he may find a Compendium of the History of the Church from the beginning of the World, especially from the Apostles times to our present Age; together with the various dispensations of God towards the same. In this Book (besides what is remarkable in the Lives and Deaths of these Worthies) he may find the Rise, Reign, and Ruine of most of the Hereticks and Heresies which have molested and disquieted the Peace and Welfare of the Church from Christ's to our present times.

In the Second Part he may see what Eminent Emperors, Kings and Princes, God hath raised up in several Ages and Places to be, not only Nursing-Fathers, but strenuous Defenders of the Church and Flock of Christ, and Propagators of his Glorious Gospel.

In the Third Part he may see how punctual God hath been in the accomplishment of those Predictions and Prophesies concerning the Rise, Growth, and Ruine of the four Great Monarchies, set down in sundry places of the Sacred Scriptures. As also how wisely and powerfully He Rules and Over-rules the affairs of the World, even among the Heathen. In the Martyrologies he may find the Torments and Triumphs, the Conflicts and Conquests of the Worthies of Christ in all places where the Light of the Gospel hath shined, who have found that Scripture of Truth fulfilled upon themselves, 2 Tim. 3. 12. All that will live Godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer Persecution.

THE Life and Death OF OUR BLESSED LORD & SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST.

IN the 6th. Moneth after John, ſirnamed the Baptiſt, was conceived, the Angel Gabriel (who had in time paſt foretold to Daniel, the coming of the Meſſias, by a definite number of Weeks) was ſent by God to Nazareth in Galilee, to the bleſſed Virgin Mary, that was betrothed to Joſeph, of the ſame Tribe of Judah with her ſelf, and of the ſtock of David, who, after Salutations, declared unto her that ſhe ſhould bring forth the Son of GOD, and ſhould call his Name JESUS: and having more fully taught her of the admirable manner of her Conception, to be performed by the power of the holy Ghoſt overſhadowing her, with great Faith ſhe ſaid, Be it to the handmaid of the Lord according to thy Word. Luk. 1. 26, 38.

Chriſts conception foretold.

Chriſt being thus conceived, the Mother of our Lord went into the Hill Countrey, with haſt into a city of Juda (to wit, Hebron, a city of the Prieſts, ſituate in the mountains of Judea, Joſh. 21. 10, 11.) where, when ſhe entered into the houſe of Zacharias the Prieſt, and had ſaluted her couſin Elizabeth, ſhe, perceiving the child to ſpring in her womb, was filled with the holy Ghoſt, and declared that Mary was bleſſed which believed, and confirmed that thoſe things ſhould be performed that were told her of the Lord: To whom for an anſwer the bleſſed Virgin (imitating that ſong of Hannah, 1 Sam. 2. 1.) rehearſed that Divine Hymn, My ſoul doth magnifie the Lord, &c. After which Mary tarried with her about three moneths. Luke 1. 36, 59.

Mary goes to her Couſin Elizabeth.

Not long after, Joſeph finding his betrothed wife Mary with child, was willing to put her away privily: but being warned of God in a dream, and informed that ſhe had conceived by the holy Ghoſt, and ſhould bring forth her Son Jeſus, who ſhould ſave his people from their ſins, he taketh his wife. Mat. 1. 18, 24.

Joſeph is warned not to put away his Wife.

When the time of Maries delivery drew near, there came forth a command from Auguſtus that all the Roman world ſhould be taxed, which taxing was firſt made, when Cyrenius was Covernour of Syria, [Luke 2. 1.] whereupon Joſeph went up from Galilee, from the city of Nazareth, into Judea into the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, becauſe he was of the Houſe, and linage of David, that he might be taxed, with Mary his Wife, being great with Childe. Luk. 2. 4, 5.

Joſeph and Mary go to be taxed.

During their abode there, Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God in the fulneſs of time was born of the moſt bleſſed Virgin Mary at Bethlehem, [Matth. 1. 25. & 2. 1, 5. Gal. 4. 4.] in the four thouſandth year of the World [ſaith the learned Primate of Ireland, Doctor Uſher] whom Mary roled in ſwadling clothes, and laid him in a manger, becauſe there was no room in the Inn. Luk. 2. 7.

Jeſus Chriſt is Born.

Chriſt being thus born, his Nativity was revealed by an Angel of the Lord to Shepherds that were keeping their Flock by night in the neighbouring Fields, which word, a multitude of the Heavenly Hoſt receiving, prayed for Glory to God, peace to the earth, and good will to men; when they were departed, the Shepherds making haſt to Bethlehem, found Mary and Joſeph, and the Child lying in the Manger, and they publiſhed that which was told them concerning the Child, and ſo returned praiſing, and glorifying God. Luk. 2. 8, 20.

His Birth is revealed to the Shepherds.

The eighth day after his Nativity the Child was circumciſed, and his Name was called Jeſus, which was ſo appointed by the Angel Gabriel, before he was Conceived in the Womb. Luk. 2. 21.

Chriſt is circumciſed.

Preſently after, the Wiſe men from the Eaſt, being guided by a new and extraordinary Star, came to Herod to Jeruſalem, and there, having learned that the Birthplace of Chriſt was Bethlehem of Judea, they went thither, and entring into the houſe which was pointed out to them by the Star that ſtood over it, they found the little Child, and Mary his Mother, and falling down they worſhipped him, and opening their Treaſures, they offered unto him, Gold, Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe. Then being warned of God in a dream that they ſhould not return to Herod, they depa:ted into their own Countrey another way. Matth. 2. 1, 12.

Wiſe Men come to Jeruſalem.

The fortieth day after her delivery, Mary went up to Jeruſalem to the Temple, both that ſhe might preſent him to the Lord according to the Law of the firſt-born; and alſo that ſhe might offer for her ſelf a pair of Turtle Doves, or two young Pigeons (ſhe being ſo poor that ſhe could not offer a Lamb) according to the Law concerning Women that had lain Inn. Luk. 2. 22, 23, 24, 27. with Levit. 12. 2, 3, 4, 6, 8.

Mary goes to be purified.

When his Parents, Joſeph and Mary brought the Child Jeſus into the Temple, to do for him according to the cuſtome of the Law, there came in at the ſame time Simeon of Jeruſalem, to whom it was revealed by God that he ſhould not die before he had ſeen the anointed of the Lord, whom he took in his arms, and praiſed the Lord, adding Propheſies, both concerning Chriſt and his Mother. At the ſame inſtant

Simeon and Anna propheſie of Chriſt.

also came Anna, a Propheteſs, the daughter of Phanuel, who alſo acknowledged the Lord openly, and ſpake of him to all that looked for Redemption in Jeruſalem. Luk. 2. 25, 38.

Thus when Joſeph and Mary had performed all things according to the Law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own City Nazareth. Luk. 2. 39.

Joſeph is warned to fly into Egypt.

Some time after, the Angel of the Lord appeared unto Joſeph in a dream, warning him to fly into Egypt, thereby to provide for the Life of the Child, and to eſcape the malicious deſigns of Herod, who having by the Wiſe Men heard that one was born King of the Jews, ſought to deſtroy Him: and accordingly Joſeph, when he awaked, took the young Child and his Mother by night, and went into Egypt, where he remained until the death of Herod. Matth. 2. 13, 14, 15.

The Babes of Bethlehem are ſlain.

But Herod, thinking that the young Child had been ſtill at Bethlehem (being further provoked by the Wiſe Mens not returning to him) that he might deſtroy Him amongſt the reſt, ſent forth ſome of his Souldiers, who killed all the Children which were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſt thereof from two years old and under, according to the time of the Star firſt ſeen in the Eaſt, concerning which he had enquired of the Wiſe Men. Matth. 2. 16.

Joſeph returns into Judea.

After the death of Herod, who had ſought the life of the young Child Jeſus, the Angel of the Lord appeared again to Joſeph in a dream whilſt he was in Egypt, commanding him that he ſhould return with the young Child and his Mother into the Land of Iſrael, for that he that ſought his life was dead: and accordingly when Joſeph awaked, he performed what was by the Angel enjoyned him. Matth. 2. 19, 20, 21.

He goes to the city of Nazareth.

But when he was come back into the Land of Iſrael he heard that Archilaus raigned in Judea in the room of his Father Herod, he therefore feared to go thither: and being warned of God in a dream, he departed into the parts of Galilee (which Tetrarchy Herod had given by Will to Antipas) and there dwelt in the City of Nazareth, from whence Jeſus took the name of Nazarene. Matth. 2. 22, 23. and the Primitive Chriſtians of Nazarenes. Act. 24. 5.

Jeſus is found in the Temple.

When Jeſus was twelve years old, at the Feaſt of the Paſsover, he was brought to Jeruſalem by his Parents, Joſeph and Mary; and when the ſeven days of unleavened Bread were ended, his Parents returning home, Jeſus ſtaid behind them. But ſo ſoon as they miſſed him, they ſought him three days, and at laſt found him in the Temple ſitting in the midſt of the Doctors hearing them, and asking them queſtions, ſo that all that heard him were aſtoniſhed at his underſtanding and anſwers. Luk. 2. 41, 47.

His private Life.

Then went Jeſus down with his Parents to Nazareth, & was obedient to them. Luke 2. 51. and during his minority, followed his Fathers trade of a Carpenter, eating his Bread in the ſweat of his brows, as appears by the ſpeeches of his fellow-Citizens. Is not this the Carpenter, the Son of Mary? Mar. 6. 3.

John Chriſts forerunner.

The thirtieth, and the laſt Jubilee falling in the thirtieth year of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and in the beginning of his Goſpel, John, his forerunner proclaimed in the Wilderneſs: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths ſtrait. Mark. 1. 1, 2. & opening the acceptable year of the Lord, or the time of his Divine pleaſure, in which our good God vouchſafed to manifeſt that Great One to the World, Iſa. 61. 2. Luke 4. 19. For in the 13*th.* year of the raign of Tiberius Cæſar, Pontius Pilate being Govenour of Judea, Herod Antipas Tetrarch of Galilee, his brother Philip Tetrach of Ituræa, and the region of Trachonitis, and Lyſanias Tetrarch of Abilene, under the Prieſthoods of Annas, and Caiphas, came the word of the Lord unto John the ſon of Zacharias in the Deſert [Luke 3. 12.] according unto whoſe command this Nazarite, both Prieſt and Prophet of the Lord, did Baptize in the Deſert of Judea, (in which there were many Cities which are mentioned Joſh. 15. 16.) preaching the Baptiſm of Repentance for the remiſſion of ſins. Matth. 3. 1. Mar. 1. 4. Luk. 3. 3. endeavouring that Chriſt that came after Him might be made known to Iſrael. John 1. 7, 8, 13. which that He might more certainly know, this ſign was given him of God, that upon whom he ſhould ſee the holy Ghoſt deſcending and remaining, he ſhould thereby know that it was He that ſhould Baptize others with the holy Ghoſt. Joh. 1. 23. Its moſt probable (ſaith the learned Doctor Uſher) that this his miniſtry began on that moſt convenient day, the tenth of the ſeventh moneth (about the nineteenth day of our October) which was both penitential, being joyned with a ſolemn Faſt, in which whoſoever did not afflict his ſoul, ſhould be cut off from his people, and alſo Expiatory, in which the high Prieſt went into the Holy of Holies to expiate the ſins of the People with blood that was offered: and that ſame day in which by the ſound of Trumpet the Jubilee was commanded to be proclaimed over all the Land, Levit. 25. 9.

John preaches and Baptizeth.

So John Baptiſt, the Preacher of repentance and remiſſion of ſins, to be attained by the blood of Chriſt that was to come, paſſing through every Region round about Jordan, liſted up his voice like a Trumphet, ſaying, Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand: whereupon there went out to him Jeruſalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan (eſpecially that huge multitude which returned from Jeruſalem, the Feaſt of Tabernacles being ended about the beginning of our November) and were Baptized of him in Jordan, confeſſing their ſins. Matth. 3. 2, 3, 5, 6. Mark 1. 5.

Jeſus is Baptized.

And when all the People were Baptized, Jeſus came alſo from Nazareth of Galilee to Jordan to be Baptized of John. Luke 3. 21. Matth. 3. 13. Mark 1. 9. which office John denied at firſt to perform as ſtanding in need himſelf to be Baptized of Chriſt; but the Lord urging that thus it behoved that all righteouſneſs ſhould be fulfilled, he Baptized him. Matth. 3. 14, 15. Jeſus then beginning to be about thirty years old, Luke 3. 23.

A manifeſtation of the Trinity.

At this time there was made a moſt illuſtrious manifeſtation of the bleſſed Trinity: For the Son of God in the humane nature that he aſſumed, aſcending out of the water and praying, the Heavens were opened, and the holy Ghoſt was ſeen in a bodily ſhape like a Dove, deſcending upon him, and the voice of the Father was heard from Heaven ſaying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed. Matth. 3. 16, 17. Mark 1. 10, 11. Luke 3. 21, 22.

Jeſus tempted of the Devil.

Jeſus being now full of the holy Ghoſt, returned from Jordan, and was driven by the Spirit into the Deſert, where for forty days and nights, being tempted by the Divel, he remained amongſt wild Beaſts, not eating any thing, and when the days were ended he was an hungry. Luke 4. 1, 2. Matth. 4. 1, 2. Mark 1. 12, 13. Satan taking this opportunity, ſet upon him with a threefold Temptation, all which being ended, he departed from him for a ſeaſon. Matth. 4. 3, 11. Luke 4. 3, 13. and the Angels came and miniſtred unto him. Matth. 4. 11. Mark 1. 13. After which Jeſus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee. Luke 4. 14. John the Baptiſt, the next day after Chriſts coming to him, when the Jews from Jeruſalem ſent ſome Prieſts and Levites of the Sect of the Phariſes to him, as he was Baptizing at Bethabara by Jordan, to ask him who he was, he profeſſed clearly that he was not the Chriſt: He denied alſo that he was Elias, or that Prophet (foretold by Moſes. Deut. 18. 15. the ſame indeed with Chriſt. Act. 3. 22. & 7. 37. but by the Jews thought to be another), He told them alſo that he was, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, make ſtrait the way of the Lord: and then added the teſtimony of Chriſt, I Baptize with water, but there ſtands one amongſt you whom ye know not, he it is who cometh after, and is preferred before me, whoſe ſhoe lachet I am not worthy to unlooſe, John 1. 19, 28. with Chap. 5. 33.

Johns teſtimony of Jeſus.

The next day John ſeeing Jeſus coming to him, ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the Sins of the World. This is he of whom I ſpake, there comes one after me that is preferred before me, for he was before me, &c. and I ſaw him, and teſtifie that this is the Son of God. John 1. 29, 34.

The day after John ſtood and two of his Diſciples with him, and ſeeing Jeſus walking, ſaid, Behold the Lamb of God, which, when the two Diſciples heard they followed Jeſus, and tarried with him that day, for it was about the tenth hour. One of theſe was Andrew, who brought his Brother Simon to Jeſus, and then Jeſus ſaw him, he he said, Thou art Simon, son of Jonah; thou shalt be called Cephas. John 1. 35, 42. Simon named Cephas.

The next day Jesus going into Galilee, commanded Philip (which was of Bethsaida, the City of Andrew and Simon Peter) to follow him. Philip finding Nathanel under a Fig-tree, brought him to Jesus, who declared him truly to be an Israelite in whom their was no guile, John 1. 43, &c. withall hinting, that himself was that Ladder of Heaven foreshewen to Jacob in his dream. Gen. 28. 12. upon which the Angels of God were seen ascending and descending. John 1. 51.

On the third day their was a marriage in Cana of Galilee to which Jesus was invited, together with his Mother and his Disciples, where he turned water into wine, the beginning of his miracles: and his Glory being hereby made manifest, his Disciples believed in him. John 2. 1, 11. Christs first Miracle.

After this he went down to Capernaum, He, his Mother, and Brethren (or Kinsmen) and his Disciples, and tarried there not many Days. John 2. 12. And thus we are come to Christs entring upon his publick Ministery, whose Acts shall be set forth according to four distinct Passovers out of the Harmony, of the four Gospels contrived by Doctor Richardson, Bishop of Ardah in Ireland, and recorded by the Primate Doctor Usher: In which this is singular, that Saint Matthew only is found not to observe the order of time which is constantly observed by the other three Evangelists; excepting onely the Parentheses of Johns being cast into prison by Herod. Luke 3. 19, 20. Dr. Ushers Annals.

The first Passover of the Ministry of Christ. John 2. 13. from which the first year of the seventieth, and last Week of Daniel began, in which the Covenant is confirmed with many. Dan. 9. 27. with Matth. 26. 28.

Jesus went to Jerusalem to the Passover, and going to the Temple he scourged out them that bought and sold there: and for a sign of his Authority, he declared unto them that the Temple of his Body should be dissolved by the Jews, and be raised again by himself. John 2. 13, 14, 19. Jesus went to the passover.

He wrought Miracles, and many believed on him, but he did not commit himself to them because he knew what was in man. John 2. 23, 24, 25. He works miracles

He instructed Nicodemas, the Desciple that came to him by night, in the mistery of Regeneration, and about Faith in his Death, and the condemnation of unbelievers. John 3. 1. 21. Then leaving Jerusalem he went into the land of Judea with his Disciples. vers. 22. There he tarried and Baptized (viz. by the hands of his Disciples, who had been before Baptized, either by himself (or by John.) At this time John Baptized in Ænon, for he was not yet cast into prison. John 3. 23. 24. There arose a question between some of Johns Disciples and the Jews about purifying. vers. 25. Then did John instruct his Disciples, who told him of Jesus in a way of emulation, concerning himself, and his Office, and of the Excellency of Jesus Christ the Son of God, giving this notable and last Testimony of him before his Imprisonment. vers. 26, &c. For presently after, Herod the Tetrach cast John into Prison for reprehending his Incest with his brother Phllips wife, and other evils done by him. Mark 6. 17, 20. Matth. 14. 3, 4, 5. He instructed Nicodemus. Johns last testimony of him.

Jesus hearing that John was cast into Prison, and that the Pharises had heard that there were many made Disciples by him, and Baptized, viz. by the hand of his Disciples, he left Judea (having staid there about eight moneths) and went into Galilee. John 4. 1, 2, 3. Matth. 4. 12. But in his way he must needs go through Samaria, where he brought the Samaritan woman near the City Sychar, and the Citizens thereof, to the knowledge and acknowledgement of him, four moneths before the harvest (or the Passover) about the middle of the ninth moneth called Ab. John 4. 4, 5. &c. Jesus went into Galilee.

Jesus having staid two days in Sychar he went onward in his journey into Galilee. John 4. 43. This was his second return from Judea into Galilee after his Baptism, and He preaches with great applause.

and being received of the Galileans who had ſeen what things he had done at Jeruſalem, he preached with great fame in their Synagogues. John 4. 45. Luke 4. 14, 15. Mark 1. 14, 15.

He preaches, and works miracles.

In Cana of Galilee he healed the ſon of a Nobleman that lay ſick. John 4. 46, 54. he wrought miracles alſo in Capernaum, and afterwards came unto Nazareth where he had been brought up; and entring into the Synagogue (as his cuſtome was) he expounded to them the propheſie of Iſaiah concerning himſelf: the Citizens at firſt wondering, but afterwards being filled with wrath, they thruſt him out of the City, and endeavoured to have caſt him down head long from a Hill; but he, paſſing through the midſt of them went his way. Luke 4. 16, 30.

Jeſus then leaving Nazareth dwelt at Capernaum, and there ſo taught them on the Sabbath days that they were aſtoniſhed at his Doctrine. Luke 4. 31, 32. Mark 1. 21, 22. Alſo at the Synagogue in Capernaum, he caſt out an unclean ſpirit, commanding him that he ſhould not tell who he was. Luke 4. 33, 37. Mark 1. 23, 28. After which he aroſe and went out of the Synagogue into the houſe of Simon and Andrew, where he healed Simons wives mother that lay ſick of a Feavour. Luke 4. 38, 39. Mark 1. 29, 30, 31. Matth. 8. 14, 15.

He heals all Diſeaſes.

About Sun-ſet Jeſus healed all the ſick folk which were brought to him, and caſt out Devils, commanding them to hold their peace. Luke 4. 40, 41. Mark 1. 32, 33, 34. Matth. 8. 16, 17. In the morning he went into a Deſert place to Pray, and when Simon and others ſought, and would have ſtaid him, he anſwered, that he muſt Preach to other Cities alſo, Luke 4. 42, 43, 44. Mark 1. 25, 39.

Then Jeſus went through all Galilee, and taught in their Synagogues, and caſt out Devils. Luke 4. 44. Mark 1. 39. and as he ſtood by the Lake of Genazereth a great multitude preſſed upon him: He entred therefore into Simons ſhip, and taught the multitude from thence. Luke 5. 1, 4. and when he had left ſpeaking, at his command there was a great draught of Fiſhes taken; at which Simon Peter and and Andrew, James and John being aſtoniſhed, he commanded them to follow him, and he would make them Fiſhers of men. Luke 5. 4, 11. Mark 1. 16, 20. Matth. 4. 18. 22.

A great draught of Fiſhes.

Then Jeſus went through all Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues, and healing every diſeaſe; and his fame went through all Syria, and a great multitude followed him. Matth. 4. 23, 24, 25.

A Leper healed.

In a certain City Jeſus healed a Leper, who, though he was forbidden, yet publiſhed it: and they came to him from every place to hear him, and to be healed; inſomuch as he could no more openly enter into the City, but was in Deſert-places, and Prayed. Luke 5. 12, 16. Mark 1. 40, 45. Matth. 8. 1, 4.

He forgives ſins.

Then again Jeſus entred into Capernaum, his own City, after ſome days, and taught them at home, and before the Scribes and Phariſees, and a great multitude: He forgave ſins to one ſick of a Palſie, who was let down through the roof of a houſe, and healed his diſeaſe to the aſtoniſhment of them all. Luke 5. 17, 26. Mark 2. 1, 12. Matth. 9. 1, 8.

He called Levi.

Then went Jeſus forth again by the Sea-ſide, and all the multitude came unto him, and he taught them, and as he paſſed by, he ſaw, and called, Levy, or Matthew, ſitting at the receipt of Cuſtome. Luke 5. 27, 28. Mark 2. 13, 14. Matth. 9. 9.

And defends his practice.

Jeſus in the Houſe of Levi defended both himſelf and his Diſciples for eating with Publicans, and excuſeth and vindicates them againſt the Phariſees for their not Faſting. Luke 5. 29, 39. Mark 2. 15, 22. Matth. 9. 10, 13. And it came to paſs on the ſecond Sabbath after the firſt (i. e. the firſt Sabbath of the New-year, inſtituted after their coming out of Egypt, and beginning from the moneth Niſan, or Abib) Jeſus going through the Corn fields, cleared his Diſciples from the charge of the Phariſees, becauſe they plucked the ears of Corn; and explained the Doctrine of the Sabbath. Luke 6. 1, 5. Mark 2. 23, 28. Matth. 12. 1, 8.

The ſecond Paſſover of the Miniſtery of Chriſt, from which the ſecond year of the ſeventieth week of Daniel begins.

AFter this was the Feaſt of the Jews, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem, and healed on the Sabbath day a man that had an infirmity thirty eight years, who lay at the Pool of Bethesda: and made a moſt Divine Apology to the Jews, who ſought to kill him becauſe he ſaid that God was his Father. John 5. 1, 47. He heals on the Sabbath.

Afterwards he went from thence and entred into a Synagogue and taught, and healed one that had a withered hand: whereupon the Phariſees went forth, and ſtraightways, with the Herodians, took counſel how they might deſtroy him. Luke 6. 6, 11. Mark. 3. 1, 6. Matth. 12. 9, 14. They ſeek to deſtroy him.

But Jeſus when he knew this, withdrew himſelf to the Sea, and healed the multitudes that followed him, ſtraitly charging them that they ſhould not make him known, and commanded his Diſciples that a ſmall ſhip ſhould wait on him, becauſe of the multitude that thronged him. Mark 3. 7, 12. Matth. 12. 15, 21.

And it came to paſs in thoſe days that he went into a Mountain to Pray: and when it was day, he choſe twelve, whom he called Apoſtles, who are ſpecified by name. Luke 6. 12, 16. Mark 3. 13, 19. He chooſes twelve Apoſtles.

And he came down with them from the mountain, and ſtood in a plain, where a great multitude came to him and he healed them all. Luke 6. 17, 18, 19.

After this they went into an Houſe, and the multitude came together again ſo that they could not ſo much as eat bread, and when his kinſmen heard of it they went to lay hold on him, for they ſaid, He is beſides himſelf. Mark 3. 19, 20, 21. He is judged to be mad.

When Jeſus ſaw the multitude, he went up into a Mountain, and when he was ſet, his Diſciples came unto him: and then he preached that long, and excellent Sermon, firſt to the Apoſtles, and afterwards to all the People. Luke 6. 20, 49. Matth. 5, & 6, & 7. His Sermon on the Mount.

Now when he had ended all his ſayings in the audience of the people he entred into Capernaum, where he healed the Centurions ſervant that lay ſick of the Palſie, ready to die. Luke 7. 1, 10. Matth. 8. 5, 13.

The day following he went into the City of Naim, and raiſed one that was dead, and carrying out to his Burial, which was the only ſon of a widdow: whereupon his fame ſpread abroad. Luke 7. 11, 17. Raiſes a dead man to life.

John the Baptiſt, being yet in Priſon, and being moved with the relation of his Diſciples concerning the fame, and deeds of Jeſus, ſent two of them unto him, ſaying, Art thou he that was to come, or ſhall we look for another? and when they were returned with his anſwer, Chriſt gave a large teſtimony of John. After which he upbraided ſome of the Cities for their ingratitude, and yet willingly ſubmitted to the ſole good pleaſure of his Father, who hid his Son from ſome, and revealed him to others, Luke 7. 18, 35. Matth. 11. 2, 30. Jeſus his teſtimony of John.

Then Simon the Phariſee, deſired him that he would eat with him, and as they were at meat he defended againſt Simon, and abſolved the woman, a ſinner, that waſhed his feet with her tears and wiped them with the hair of her head, both kiſſing, and anointing them, Luke 7. 36, 50. One waſhed his feet.

It came to pas afterwards that he went from City to City preaching, and his Diſciples were with him, and certain women miniſtred unto him. Luke 8. 1, 2, 3.

Then they brought unto him one that had a Devil that was both blind and dumb, and he healed him, and zealouſly defended himſelf againſt the Phariſees and Scribes that came down from Jeruſalem, that blaſphemed him, ſaying, He caſteth out Devils through Beelzebub. Mark. 3. 22, 30. Matth. 8. 22, 37. Caſts out a Devil.

Then ſaid ſome of the Scribes and Phariſees to him, Maſter, we would ſee a ſign of thee, to whom, when he had ſharply rebuked them, he would give no other ſign but that of Jonas. Matth. 8. 38, 45.

Whilſt

He ſhews who are his kinſmen.

Whilſt Jeſus ſpake to the People, it was told him that his Mother and Brethren ſtood without deſiring to ſee, and to ſpeak with him: but Jeſus anſwering, ſhewed them whom he accounted for his Mother, and Brother, and Siſter. Luke 8. 19, 20, 21. Mark. 3. 31, 35. Matth. 11. 46, 50.

He teaches by Parables.

The ſame day Jeſus went out of the houſe and ſate by the Sea-ſide, and great multitudes were gathered unto him, ſo that he went into a Ship, and ſate, and taught the multitude many things, by the parable of the Sower, and by divers other parables, Luke 8. 4, 18. Mark 4. 1, 31. Matth. 13. 1, 53.

He calms the Tempeſt.

Alſo the ſame day when it was evening, he ſaid unto them, Let us lance forth unto the other ſide of the Lake: and when he had given an anſwer to ſome that would follow him, and ſent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ſhip, and by the way there aroſe a great tempeſt, but he rebuked the wind, and calmed the Sea, and ſaved his Diſciples. Luke 8. 22, 25. Mark 4. 35, 41. Matth. 8. 18, 27.

He caſts out the Legion of Devils.

When they came to the other ſide into the Countrey of the Gadarens, or Gergaſens, which was on the oppoſite ſhore to Galilee, and when he was gone on Land, there met him two poſſeſſed with Devils, very fierce (Mark and Luke mention but one) out of whom Jeſus caſt the Devils, and ſuffered them to go into the heard of Swine; whereupon the Gadarens deſired him to leave their Coaſts. Then did the poſſeſſed perſons importune him that they might abide with them; but he denied their requeſt, and ſent them back to publiſh about Decapolis what great things Jeſus had done for them: After which he paſſed over again by Ship to the other ſide, and from thence went unto his own City [Capernaum.] Luke 8. 26, 36. Mark 5. 1, 16, 17, 20. Matth. 8. 28, 33, 34.

He anſwers Johns Diſciples.

And it came to paſs that when Jeſus was returned, the people received him gladly, for they waited for him, and he was by the Sea-ſide. Luke 8. 40. Mark 5. 21. and there came to him the Diſciples of John, ſaying, Why do we and the Phariſees Faſt oft, but thy Diſciples Faſt not? to whom he gave anſwer. Matth. 9. 14, 17.

Whilſt Jeſus yet ſpake, behold there came Jairus, one of the Rulers of the Synagogue, beſought him greatly for his only Daughter, being about twelve years old, who lay at the point of Death: and as he was going, even at Jairus door, a woman that had an iſſue of blood twelve years was ſuddenly healed by touching the hem of Jeſus Garment: and the Daughter of Jairus being now already dead, was reſtored to life by his Word onely: and he ſtraitly charged them that no man ſhould know it. Luke 8. 41, 56. Mark 5. 22, 43. Matth. 9. 18, 26.

Then went Jeſus round about all their Cities, and villages, teaching, and healing their diſeaſes. Then ſent Jeſus the twelve Apoſtles by two and two, having ſufficiently inſtructed them with commands and power to preach, and to heal Diſeaſes. Luke 9. 1, 5. Mark 6, 7, 11. Matth. 10. 1, 42.

And it came to paſs when Jeſus had made an end of commanding his Diſciples, that that he departed thence to teach and to preach in their Cities, and the twelve departed, and went through the Towns preaching the Gospel, and healing every where. Luke 9. 6. Matth. 11. 1, 12, 16.

About this time (November 17th.) Sejanus was killed: after whose death, Tiberius Cæsar soon knew that all the crimes which he had charged upon the Jews, were feigned by himself: Wherefore he commanded the Governours of all the Provinces, that in every Town they should spare that Nation, except very few that were guilty persons: but that they should alter none of their customs, and should make much account of them as lovers of peace, and their customs as conducing to publick tranquility. Sejanus killed at Rome.

About this time also was John Baptist beheaded. Mark 6. 17, 28. Matth. 16. 6, 11, 12. and when his Disciples heard of it, they came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus. Mark 6. 29. John beheaded.

Mark 6. 31, 32. Matth. 16. 13, 14.* Multitudes follow Jesus.

Then Jesus went up into a Mountain, and there sate with his Disciples, and the Passover was nigh. And when it was evening, he fed above five thousand men, besides women, and children, with five Barley loaves, and to little Fishes, and there remained twelve Baskets full of fragments. And when the Jews (seeing his Miracles) would have made him a King; Jesus constrained his Disciples to go before him unto the other side, opposite to Bethesda, towards Capernaum: and he himself went apart in a Mountain to pray: and when they had gone about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, in the fourth watch of the night, Jesus went to them, walking upon the Sea, and would have passed by them: but they being affrighted, he told them who he was, rebuked Peter and saved him from sinking, so that they were amazed: and they drew to shore and came to the land of Genazeret: and when he came out of the ship, as soon as it was known, they brought their sick that they might touch the hem of his Garment, and they were presently made whole. *John 6. 1, 21, Luke 9. 12, 17. THe Scribes, and Pharisees which came from Jerusalem, came to Jesus, and when they saw some of his Disciples to eat with defiled, that is, unwashen hands, they found fault, because they did not walk after the tradition of the Elders, to whom Jesus answered concerning traditions, that they frustrated the commands of God that they might keep the traditions of men: and he taught the People, which he also expounded to his Disciples at home, that nothing which enters into a man, but that which cometh from within, that defileth a man. Mark 7. 1, 23. Matth. 15. 1, 20. He condemned their Traditions.

And the Phariſees came to him, requiring a ſign from Heaven, who after he had deeply ſighed, he denied any ſign but that of Jonas, to thoſe Hypocrites, who knew how to diſcern the face of the ſky, but not the ſigns of the times: and leaving them, he entred again into a Ship and paſſed to the other ſide. Mark 8. 11, 12, 13. Matth. 16. 1, 4

And when his Diſciples were come to the other ſide, they had forgotten to take bread, and they had but one loaf with them in the Ship. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Take heed of the Leaven of the Phariſees and Sadduces, and of the Leaven of Herod: and they reaſoned amongſt themſelves becauſe they had forgotten to take bread: But Jeſus rebuking them that they had forgotten the miraculous multiplication of the loaves, gave them to underſtand that he ſpake not of the Leaven of Bread, but of their Doctrine. Mark 8. 14, 21. Matth. 16. 5, 21.

And Jeſus went with his Diſciples into the Towns of Cæſarea Philippi: And it came to paſs as he was alone praying, and was now in the way, that he asked his Diſciples, whom do men ſay that I am? When they had anſwered, he ſaid unto them, But whom do ye ſay that I am? And when Peter had anſwered, he pronounced him happy, annexing promiſes, and forbad his Diſciples to tell any man that he was the Chriſt. He alſo foretold his Death, and Reſurrection, and called Peter Satan, becauſe he rebuked him for ſo ſaying. Then he Preached to his Diſciples, and to the multitude, of the Croſs, which every one muſt bear that would follow him, and at length foretold his Transfiguration. Luke 7. 18, 27. Mark 8. 27, 38. Matth. 16. 13, 28.

And it came to paſs about eight days after theſe things (or ſix intermediate days) that he was Transfigured in an high Mountain. And when they came down from the Mountain, he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what they had ſeen till he was riſen from the dead: and they kept it cloſe, queſtioning one with another, what the riſing from the Dead ſhould mean, and they asked him, why do the Scribes ſay that Elias muſt firſt come; and they received an anſwer by which they underſtood that Jeſus ſpake of John Baptiſt, as that Elias. Luke 7. 28, 36. Mark 9. 1, 13. Matth. 17. 1, 13.

that it was about his child that had an unclean ſpirit, both deaf and dumb, and that his Diſciples could not caſt him out. Then Jeſus having caſt out the ſpirit, reſtored the Child to his Father whole: and being at home, he ſhewed his Diſciples the reaſon why they could not caſt out this Devil. Luke 7. 37, 42. Mark 9. 14. 29. Matth. 17. 14, 21. Pays Tribute.

At Capernaum Jeſus asked his Diſciples what it was that they diſputed of among themſelves by the way, at which, when they were ſilent at the firſt, they afterwards told him that it was, who ſhould be the greateſt in the Kingdom of Heaven: Then Jeſus taking a child, and ſetting him in the midſt, taught them that they ſhould have humility even as a child. He alſo warned the world of Offences: Admoniſhing us to take heed that neither hand, foot, nor eye make us to offend. That little ones are not to be deſpiſed. How our Brother ſinning againſt us, is to be reproved, as alſo to be bound and looſed by the Church: and to be forgiven to ſeventy times ſeven times, as he ſhewed in that Parable of the two debtors to the King. Luke 7. 46, 47, 48. Mark 9. 33, 37. Matth. 18. 1, 35. In the laſt and great day of the Feaſt, Jeſus crying out concerning Faith in him, there was a diviſion concerning him amongſt the People: but the Officers which were ſent, and Nicodemus defended both his perſon and cauſe before the Phariſees that ſpake againſt him. John 7. 11, 53. Lazarus's ſickneſs and death. Lazarus of Bethany being ſick, his Siſters ſent to tell Jeſus thereof, who as ſoon as he heard it, tarried two days in the place where he was: but afterwards he ſaid to his Diſciples, Let us go again into Judea: they ſaid to him, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee, and goeſt thou thither again? Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, Lazarus ſleepeth (meaning that he was dead) Let us go to him (ſaid Thomas) that we may die with him. John 11. 1, 6.

Jeſus raiſes him. Jeſus came nigh to Bethany, and found that Lazarus had been buried four days: and Mary hearing of it, came quickly to him out of the Town, where Martha alſo met him, and Jeſus ſeeing her weep, he wept alſo, and coming to the grave, he bad them remove the ſtone, and giving thanks to his Father, called Lazarus out of the grave, whereupon many believed on him: but ſome went to the Phariſees and told them what things Jeſus had done. John 11. 17, 54.

Hereupon the Phariſees called a Councel, where Caiphas prophecied concerning Jeſus, and from that day they conſulted together that they might put him to death, commanding that if any one knew where he was, they ſhould give them notice that they might might take him. Jesus therefore walked no more openly amongst the Jews, but went unto a City, called Ephraim, and there continued with his Disciples. John 11. 54.

After this they went up to Jerusalem, and as they were in the way, Jesus went before them, and they were afraid, and he again took the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him, but they understood none of those things. Luke 18. 31, 34. Mark 10 32, 33, 34. Matth. 19. 17, 18, 19. He foretells his sufferings.

Then came to him James and John, the sons of Zebedee, and their mother, desiring that they might sit, the one on his right hand, and the other on his left; but he repelled them with his answer, and when the rest were displeased with their request, he admonished them all, that he that would be great and first amongst them, must be the Minister and Servant of all, Mark 10. 35, 45. Matth. 19. 20, 28.

And it came to pass when Jesus came nigh to Jericho, a certain blind man sate begging by the way-side, and asking who it was that passed by, and hearing that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he (though he was rebuked) earnestly implored his mercy, and being called by Jesus, he received his sight, and followed him, Glorifying God, Luke 18. 35, 43. He cures the blind man.

Then Jesus entred, and passed through Jericho, and espying Zacheus in a Sycamore-tree, he said unto him, I must abide at thy house to day, Luke 19. 1, 10. Calls Zacheus.

And as Jesus went out of Jericho, a great multitude followed him: and he restored sight to two blind men, whereof Bartimeus was one, and they followed him, Mark 10. 46, 52. Matth 19. 29, 34.

Being come nigh to Jerusalem, because they thought that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear, as he went forwards, he told the Parable of the Noble man that went into a far Countrey, who gave to his ten servants ten pounds to occupy therewith till he returned, and when he came back, knowing which had gained most by trading, he rewarded each of them according to the proportion of their gain. Luke 19. 11, 27. Ten pounds given to ten servants.

Now the Passover was at hand, and many went out of the Countrey up to Jerusalem before the Passover, that they might purifie themselves, John 11. 55, 56, 57.

And Jesus, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany, and they made him a Supper, and Lazarus sate with him, and Mary anointed his feet, and wiped them with the hairs of her Head, whom Jesus defended against Judas: and much people came thither, not onely for Jesus sake, but that they might see Lazarus: But the chief Priests consulted how they might put Lazarus to death, because many of the Jews believed by reason of him, John 12. 1, 11. Mark. 11. 1, 7. Matth. 21. 1, 7. Luke 19. 28, 35.

After this Jesus went before, ascending up to Jerusalem; and it came to pass that when he was nigh to Bethphage, and Bethany, at the Mount of Olives (the 29th day of our March) he sent two of his Disciples for an Ass-colt that was tyed. Matthew mentions the Dam also: and they brought the Colt unto Jesus, and cast their Garments on the Colt, and set him thereon, and much people that came to the Feast, met him, many casting their Garments in the way, and others cut down branches of the Trees and strewed them in the way, and when he was come unto the decent of the Mount of Olives, the company that went before and that followed, cried, Hosanna to the Son of David; then said some of the Pharisees to him, Master, rebuke thy Disciples: Jesus answered them; and the Pharisees thereupon said amongst themselves, Perceive ye not that we prevail nothing? Behold the world is gon after him. John 12. 12, 18. Luke 19. 36, 40. Mark 11. 8, 9, 10. Matth. 19. 8, 9. He rides into Jerusalem.

When Jesus was come nigh, seeing the City, he wept over it, foretelling the utter destruction thereof. John 12. 19. Luke 19. 41, 42. Mark 11. 10, 11. He wept over Jerusalem.

And when he was entred into Jerusalem, all the City was moved saying, who is this? And Jesus entred into the Temple of God, and cast out those that bought and sold in it, and healed both blind, and lame in it: and justified the children who cryed, Ho-

Hosanna, in the Temple, against the Priests, and Scribes that were displeased at it. He also taught daily in the Temple, those that heard him being very attentive: But the chief Priests and Elders of the People sought to destroy him. Luke 19. 45, 46. Mark 11. 11. Matth. 21. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

A voice from heaven.

Some Greeks of those that came to worship at the Feast, desired to see Jesus, and he answered them that told him: also by preaching of his Passion, and calling upon his Father he received an answer from Heaven, which some thought to be Thunder, others an Angel: and speaking again of the lifting up of the Son of man from the Earth, he answered them that asked him, who this Son of man was? Then going from thence, he hid himself from them: and when it was evening, he went with his Disciples unto Bethany: and though he had done so many miracles amongst them, yet did they not believe, that the word of Isaias might be fulfilled. Yet nevertheless many of the Rulers believed on him, but did not confess him for fear of the Pharisees. Jesus crying out therefore, preached concerning Faith in him. John 12. 20, 50. Mark 11. 17.

He curses the Fig-Tree.

On the morrow when he came from Bethany, he was an hungry, and seeing a Fig-tree that had onely leaves on it, he cursed it, and it straitway withered. Then they came to Jerusalem, and entring into the Temple, he again cast out those that sold and bought there, and would not that any should carry a vessel through the Temple; and crying out, he taught concerning Faith in himself: But the chief Priests sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people were astonished at his Doctrine: and when evening was come Jesus went out of the City. Mark 11. 12, 19. Matth 21. 18, 19.

Power of Faith.

And when they returned in the morning, as they passed by the Fig-tree, they saw that it was dried up by the roots, which Peter shewing to Jesus, he preached unto them of the power and virtue of Faith, but especial in Prayers. And they came again into Jerusalem, and as he was walking in the Temple and teaching, the chief Priests, Elders, and Scribes came unto him, saying, By what authority doest thou these things? Jesus answered by asking them concerning Johns Baptism. He also spake unto them the Parable of the two Sons, asking them, which of the two did the will of his Father? and applied it unto them. As also the Parable of the vineyard let out to Husband-men, and of their killing the Heir of the vineyard, together with the application thereof: And from that hour they sought to take him: but they feared the People, for they took him for a Prophet. Again he propounded to them the Parable of the marriage of the Kings Son, and the refusals, and excuses of some that were bidden, and the wickedness and punishments of others, especially of him that had not on the wedding Garment. Then went the Pharisees, and took Counsel how they might intangle him in his talk: wherefore they sent out unto him their Disciples, with the Herodians saying, Is it lawful to give tribute to Cesar, or not? These being astonished at his answer, left him, and went their way. Luke 20. 1, 8, 9, 19, 20, 40. Mark 11. 20, 33, & 12. 1, 12, 13, 37. Matth. 21. 19, 46. & 22. 1, 46.

They lay snares for him.

He proves the Resurrection.

The same day there came to Jesus the Saduces, asking him of the woman that had seven Brethren to her Husbands, which of them should be her Husband in the Resurrection? and when the multitude heard his answer whereby he proved the Resurrection, they were astonished at his Doctrine: Then a Pharisee that was a Lawyer, tempted him, asking which was the great Commandment in the Law? to whom he answered, and asked the Pharisee whose Son Christ is? and no man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth, ask him any more questions. Luke 20. 41, 44.

Eight woes against the Pharisees.

Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his Disciples concerning the Scribes and Pharisees, denouncing eight woes against them: and turning his speech to the City of Jerusalem, he accused her of cruelty, and obstinacy, and foretold her desolation. Luke 20. 45, 46, 47. Mark 12. 38, 39, 40. Matth. 23. 1, 39.

The poor widdows charity.

And as Jesus sate over against the Treasury he saw a widow casting in two mites, whom he preferred before them that cast in more. Luke 21. 1, 4. Mark 12. 41. 44.

When

When he was gone out of the Temple his Disciples shewed him the stately buildings, and stones of it, whereupon he foretold the ruine thereof. Luke 21. 5, 36. Mark 13. 1, 37. Matth. 24 1, 51.

And as he sate on the Mount of Olives over against the Temple, his Disciples asked him when these things should be, & what should be the sign of his coming, & of the end of the world? To whom he at large answered concerning the signs of them both: and warned them to watch, and be ready, because they knew not the hour when the Lord would come, and he taught the same thing by the Parable of the ten Virgins: As also by the Parable of the Talents delivered to the Servants to trade withall; and described the Judgement of this world (perhaps as a Type of that) by setting the Sheep on the right hand, and the Goats on the left, and giving sentence upon each of them. By day he taught in the Temple, but at night he went into the Mount of Olives: and all the People came unto him early in the morning, and he taught them in the Temple. Matth. 25. 1, 46. Luke 21. 37, 38. He foretells the destruction of the Temple, and the end of the World.

And it came to pass when Jesus had finished these saying, he said unto his Disciples, Ye know that after two days is the Passover, and the Son of man shall be betrayed to be crucified: About which time they consulted together in the Palace of the High Priest, that they might kill Jesus: But they said, not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar amongst the People. Mark 14. 1, 2. Matth. 26. 1, 5. Foretells his death.

As Jesus was in the House of Simon the Leper, he defended a woman that powred an Alabaster Box of Ointment on his Head, as he sate at meat, against his Disciples that murmured at it, and foretold his Burial. Mark 14. 3, 9. Matth. 26. 6, 13. And is anointed.

Then entred Satan into Judas, who offered himself and covenanted to betray him. Luke 22. 1, 3. Mark 14. 10, 11. Matth. 26. 14, 15, 16.

The fourth and last Passover, in which Christ (our Passover) was Sacrificed. 1 Cor. 5. 7. and so an end was put to all the Legal Sacrifices which prefigured this only one. The fourth, or middle year of the last week of Daniel now beginning. Dan. 9. 27.

IN the first day of unleavened Bread, when the Passover was slain (April 2.) his Disciples asked him where they should prepare it? Then he sent Peter and John into the City, telling them that there should meet them a man bearing a pitcher of water, by following of whom, they should find a Guest-chamber ready furnished by the good man of the House. Mark 14. 12, 16. Matth. 26. 17, 18, 19. The Passover is prepared.

And in the evening he went thither with the twelve, and when they had sate down and eaten, Jesus said, I have greatly desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer: And he comanded them to divide the Cup amongst themselves: saying, I will not any more eat of the Passover, or drink of the fruit of the Vine, until the Kingdom of God shall come; Then said he, One of you shall betray me, and they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and he answered, It is he that dippeth his hand with me in the dish: and to Judas, asking Is it I? he answered, Thou hast said. Luke 22. 14, 18. Mark 14. 17, 18, 21. Matth. 26. 21, 25. Judas the Traytor.

Also whilst they were eating, Jesus instituted the Sacrament of his Body and Blood in Bread and Wine, after he had supped, adding, I will not henceforth drink of the fruit of the vine, till I shall drink it new with you in the Kingdom of my Father? But, behold (saith he) the hand of him that betrays me, is with me at the Table, then they began to enquire amongst themselves if any among them should do this. Luke 22. 19, 23. Mark 14. 22, 25. Matth. 26. 25, 26. The Lords Supper instituted.

There was also a strife amongst them which of them should be accounted greatest: when Supper was ended, Jesus arose and laid aside his Garments, and took a Towel and girded himself therewith, and began to wash, and wipe his Disciples feet, and Peters also, who at first denied it, but afterwards desired it. This being done, Jesus sate down again, saying, I have shewed you an Example, that as I have done, you might likewise He washes his Disciples feet.

wash one anothers feet: He that will be greatest amongst you, let him be the least: Yet he added, I do not speak of you all; for I know whom I have chosen. When he had said these things he was troubled in spirit, and testified, saying, One of you shall betray me: His Disciples therefore looking one npon another, were uncertain of whom he spake: Peter therefore beckened to the beloved Disciple that he should ask who it was: Jesus answered, he it is to whom I shall give a sop after I have dipped it, and he gave the sop to Judas, and said unto him, what thou doest, do quickly. Judas having received the sop went out immediately; and it was night. Joh. 13. 2, 38. Luke 22. 24, 30.

When Judas was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of man Glorified, and God is glorified in him: and he told them of his sudden departure, and exhorted them to the mutual love one of another. He said also, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired you, that he might winnow you as wheat: but I have pray'd for thee: and do thou strengthen thy brethren: and when Peter, too confidently, said, I will lay down my life for thee, he answered, The Cock shall not Crow till thou hast denied me thrice. Then said he unto them, He that hath a purse, let him take it, and he that hath not a sword, let him buy one: Some answering, Here are two Swords, he said, It is enough. Luke 22. 31, 38.

Faith shall not fail.

Then did Jesus comfort them against the sorrow which they conceived for his Death: and to the questions of Thomas, Philip, and Judas (who is also Libbæus, surnamed Thaddæus, another of the Sons of Alphæus, and brother of James) he answered every one particularly, promising them that the holy Ghost should be their Teacher: And left his Peace with them: and again admonished them of his approaching Death, and of the joyful fruit thereof: Adding, Arise, let us go hence: And when they had sung an Hymn, they went out towards the mount of Olives. John 14. 1, 31. Mark 14. 26. Matth. 26. 30,

He comforts his Disciples.

In the way as they were going, by the parable of the Vine, & the branches, he exhorted them to bring forth fruit, and to remain in the Love of God towards them, and mutually to love one another, and to abide patiently the hatred of the World, which hates Christ himself: and that they should not be offended for persecutions. John 15. 27. And again he comforted them against sorrow for his Death by the promise of sending them the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, whose Office against the World, and towards them he describeth. And admonished them that yet a little while, and they should not see him: and they not understanding what that meaned, he explained it unto them: and told them that their aforesaid sorrow should be turned into joy, by the example of a woman bringing forth a man-child: As also by the promise of his returning to them, by the love of the Father towards them, and by his ready hearing of their Petitions that they should make in his Name. And when he said, I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world, and again, I leave the world and go unto the Father, his Disciples answered, Lo, now thou speakest plainly: we believe thou camest from God: To this Jesus replied, that the time was now come that they should be scattered every one to his own, and that himself should be left alone, and at last concluded with a most Divine Prayer to the Father for the mutual illustration of his own, and the Fathers Glory: As also for the Apostles, and the whole company of believers. John 16. 1, 33. & 17. 1, 26.

The Parable of the vine and branches.

When Jesus had spoken these things, he went with his Disciples (as he was wont) over the Brook Cedron, to the Mount of Olives. Then said Jesus unto them, all ye shall be offended because of me this night. But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee: and when Peter said, Though all men should be offended, yet will not I; Jesus said, To Day, even this night before the Cock-crow thou shalt deny me thrice: but both he, and all the Disciples replied, Though we should die with thee, yet we will not deny thee. John 18. 1. Luke 22. 39. Mark 14 27, 31. Matth. 26. 31. 35, 36.

His Divine Prayer.

Then came they to a place called Gethsemane, where was a Garden into which Jesus entred, and his Disciples, unto whom he said, Pray ye that ye enter not into Temptation: Sit here, while I go and Pray yonder. And he took Peter, and the two Sons of Zebedee with him, and began to be very sorrowful, and he said unto them, Tarry here and watch, & going from them about a stones cast, he kneeled down & Prayed that the Cup might pass from him: and there appeared an Angel from Heaven strenthening him. Then he returned and finding his Disciples sleeping, he reprehended and admonished them: and then went the second time, and prayed more earnestly, and being in an Agony his ſweat was as drops of blood; and coming again, he found them ſleeping for ſorrow, for their eyes were heavy: and therefore he again admoniſhed them, and they knew not what to anſwer. Then left he them, and went away again and prayed the ſame words: after which coming to his Diſciples, he ſaid unto them, Sleep on now, and take your reſt: Behold the time is come, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners: Ariſe, Let us be going: Behold he is at hand that doth betray me. Luke. 22. 46. Mar. 14 32. 42. Mat. 26. 36. 46. Jeſus in his Agony.

While Jeſus yet ſpake, Behold Judas (who knew the place, becauſe Jeſus often reſorted thither with his Diſciples) with the chief Prieſts, Phariſees, Captains of the Temple, and Elders of the People, and Officers, and a Band ſent from them, came thither with Lanthorns, and Torches, and a great multitude with ſwords and ſtaves. And Judas had given them a ſign, ſaying, Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs the ſame is he, and he ſtraitway kiſſed Jeſus: To whom Jeſus ſaid, wherefore art thou come? Betrayeſt thou the Son of Man with a kiſs? John 18. 23. Luke 22. 47, 48. Mar. 14. 43. 4, 7. Matth. 26. 47, 56. But Jeſus knowing all things that ſhould come unto him, went out, and ſaid unto them, Whom ſeek ye? They ſaid unto him, Jeſus of Nazareth. Jeſus ſaid unto them, I am he: and they went backwards and fell to the ground. He asked them again, and anſwered them as at firſt: adding If ye ſeek me, let theſe go away. Joh 18. 4. 9. Then they took him; and when thoſe that were about Jeſus ſaw what would follow, they ſaid to him, Lord ſhall we ſmite with the Sword? and Peter ſtruck off the right ear of Malchus. To whom Jeſus ſaid, Put up thy ſword: Cannot I pray, and have more than twelve Legions of Angels? Shall not I drink of the Cup that my Father hath given me? Suffer you thus far: and he touched his ear and healed him. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Do ye come out as againſt a Thief with Swords and Staves? But this is your hour, and the power of Darkneſs. Then all his Diſciples left him and fled, and a certain young man (of their company) being laid hold of, left his linen cloth, and fled from them, John 18 10, 11. Luke 22. 49, 50, 51. Mark 14. 48, 52. Mat. 26. 57, 75. He is betrayed by Judas.

Then they bound Jeſus, and brought him, firſt to Annas, the Father in law of Caiphas, who ſent him bound to Caiphas the high Prieſt, who formerly had propheſied, that it was expedient that one Man ſhould die for the People. There were all the chief Prieſts, and Elders, and Scribes of the People gathered together. Then Caiphas asked Jeſus concerning his Diſciples, and his Doctrine: Jeſus anſwered, I ſpake openly to the world, ask them that heard me? then one of the Officers ſtroke him with a ſtaff: To whom he ſaid, If I have well ſpoken, why ſmiteſt thou me? then all the Council ſought falſe witneſſes againſt him, and found none. At laſt two falſe witneſſes came, but their teſtimony agreed not. Caiphas then ſaid, Anſwereth thou not to what they witneſs againſt thee? But Jeſus held his peace. Then he adjured him to tell whether he were the Chriſt, and Jeſus anſwered, I am: and ye ſhall ſee the Son of Man ſitting at the right hand of the power of God, and coming in the Clouds of Heaven. Wherefore they judged him guilty of death for this blaſphemy. Then did they mock him, and ſpit upon him, and cruelly beat him with buffets and ſtaves: and covering his face, they ſaid, Propheſie who ſmote thee? and many other things they ſpoke againſt him reproachfully. Joh. 18. 12, 27. Luk. 22. 54, 65. Mar. 14. 53, 72. Mat. 26. 57, 75. He is ſent bound to Caiphas. Falſe witneſſes againſt him. He is judged guilty of death and abuſed.

Peter followed afar off that he might ſee the end, and ſo did another Diſciple that was known to the high Prieſt, and went with Jeſus into the Pallace, but Peter ſtood without at the door: then that other Diſciple ſpake to her that kept the door, and brought him in. And as Peter was warming himſelf at the fire (for it was cold) the maid that kept the door asked him, and affirmed that he was one of his Diſciples, but he denied it, or that he knew him, or knew what ſhe ſaid. A little after he went out into the Porch, and the Cock crew. And as he was going out another maid ſaw him, and ſaid to the by-ſtanders, This fellow was alſo with Jeſus of Nazareth; Alſo another ſaid, Thou art alſo one of them: Then he again denied it with an Oath: and about an hour after they that ſtood by ſaid, Thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee: and the Couſin of Malchius amongſt the reſt ſaid, Did not I ſee thee in the Garden with him? and while he yet ſpake the Cock crew the ſecond time: then the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter, and he remembring the words of Jeſus, went out, and wept bitterly. John Peter denies him. And Repents.

18. 25, &c. Luke 22. 55, &c. Mark 14. 66, &c. Matth. 26. 69, &c.

As soon as it was Day, the Elders of the People, and the chief Priests, and the Scribes, came together, and led him into their Council, saying, Art thou the Christ? Jesus said unto them, Ye will not believe, nor answer me, nor let me go. Yet he said, that he was the Son of God: To which they replied, what need we any further witness. Luk. 22. 66, 71.

Then straitway in the morning the whole multitude of them arose, and led him bound to Pontius Pilate, the Governour: from Caiphas to the Hall of Judgement (April 3d.) But they went not into the Judgement Hall lest they should be defiled that they could not eat the Passover: and Jesus stood before the Governour. Pilate therefore came forth unto them, and said, What accusation bring you against this man? they answered, If he were not a malefactor we would not have delivered him up unto thee: & they accused him, saying, we found this man perverting the Nation, and forbiding to pay a tribute unto Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ, a King: And when he was accused of the Chief Priests, and Elders, he answered nothing. Then said Pilate, Heareſt thou not how many things they witness against thee? But he answered him not a word, so that Pilate marvelled. Then said Pilate to them, Take ye him and judge him according to your Law: But they replied, It is not lawful for us to put any man to Death. Pilate then entred into the Judgement Hall again, and calling Jesus, said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jewes? Jesus answered, Saiest thou this of thy self, or did others tell it thee of me? Pilate said, Am I a Jew? Thine own Nation, and the Chief Priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done? Jesus answered, My Kingdom is not of this world: Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou then a King? Jesus answered, For this cause came I into the world that I might bear witness unto the truth. Then said Pilate to him, what is Truth? And when he had said this, he went out again to the Jews, and said unto them, I find in him no fault at all: and they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the People, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning in Galilee, to this place. Pilate hearing of Galilee, asked him if he were a Galilean? and when he knew that he belonged to Herods jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who was in Jerusalem in those dayes. When Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: But being deceived of his hopes of seeing a Miracle, and Jesus not vouchsafing any answer, either to him, or to the chief Priests and Scribes that vehemently accused him, after he had set Jesus at naught, and mocked him he sent him back to Pilate, arayed in a gorgeous Robe: and Herod, and Pilate were made friends that very day. John 18. 28, 40. Luke 23. 1, 16, 25. Mark 15. 1, 5. Matth. 27. 11, 26.

He is sent to Herod, who abuses him.

Then Pilate, when he had called the Chief Priests, and the Rulers, and the People, he said unto them; Neither I, nor Herod find any fault in him, nor any thing worthy of Death: I will therefore chastise him and release him. For he was of necessity (according to the custome) every Feast to deliver to the People one Prisoner whomsoever they would. And the multitude crying out aloud, began to desire that he would do unto them as he ever had done. Then said Pilate, ye have a custom that I should release one unto you at the Passover: Will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews, or Barabbas? For he knew that the chief Priests had delivered him up of envy: But they stirred up the People that they should rather desire Barabbas, who was a notable Thief, who lay bound for insurrection, and murther in the City. When Pilate was set down on the Judgement seat, his Wife sent to him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: For I have suffered many things in my dream by reason of him this day. Pilate therefore spake unto them again, being willing to release Jesus, which of them will ye that I release unto you? They all cryed out, saying, Not him but Barabbas. Pilate replied, What then will ye that I shall do unto him whom ye call King of the Jews? and they all cryed out again, Crucifie him, Pilate said unto them the third time, Why? what evil hath he done? I find no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go: But they cryed the more earnestly, Crucifie him: and were very instant with loud voices desiring the same. Mark 15. 6, 15.

Pilate again cleers him.

Then Pilate took Jesus and scourged him, and the Souldiers platted a Crown of Thorns, and put it on his Head, and clothed him with Purple, saying, Hail King of the Jews,

Jesus is scourged,

Jews, and beat him with ſtaves. Pilate therefore went forth again unto them, and ſaid unto them, Behold I bring him forth unto you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him: Then Jeſus came forth, wearing the Crown of Thorns, and the Robe, and Pilate ſaid unto them, Behold the man. When the chief Prieſts, and Officers ſaw him, they cryed out, ſaying, Crucifie him, Crucifie him. Pilate replyed, Take ye him and Crucifie him; for I find no fault in him. Then ſaid the Jews, He ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God: When Pilate heard that, he was the more afraid, and went again into the Judgement Hall, and ſaid to Jeſus, Whence art thou? But Jeſus gave him no anſwer. Then ſaid Pilate to him, Speakeſt thou not unto me? Knoweſt thou not that I have power to Crucifie thee? Jeſus anſwered, Thou couldſt have no power unleſs it were given thee from above. From thence-forth Pilate ſought to releaſe him: But the Jews cryed out, Then art thou not Cæſars friend. When Pilate heard this, he ſate on the Judgement ſeat, in the place called the Pavement, and it was the preparation of the Paſsover, and about the ſixth hour: Then ſaid he to the Jews, Behold your King: The chief Prieſts anſwered, We have no King but Cæſar. When Pilate therefore ſaw that he prevailed nothing, but the rather a tumult was made, he took water and waſhed his hands before the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent of the blood of this juſt perſon, ſee you to it. And all the People anſwered, and ſaid, His bloud be upon us, and our Children. Then Pilate being willing to content the multitude, releaſed unto them Barabbas, and when he had ſcourged Jeſus, he delivered him over to their will, that he might be Crucified. John 19. 1, 16, 17, 30.

and Crowned with Thorns.

Pilate condemns him.

Then the Souldiers of the Governour, when they had led Jeſus into the Hall called Prætonium, they called together the whole band; and when they had ſtripped him, they put upon him a Skarlet Robe, and platted a Crown of Thorns and put it on his Head, and a Reed in his right Hand, and bowing the knee, they mocked him, ſaying, Hail, King of the Jews. And when they had ſpit on him, they took the Reed, and ſmote him on the Head: and when they had mocked him, they took off the Purple, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to Crucifie him. Matth. 27. 27, 31. Mark 15. 16, 37.

He is mocked.

Then Judas which had betrayed him, when he ſaw that he was condemned, repented himſelf and brought the thirty pieces of Silver to the chief Prieſts, confeſſing his ſin unto them: and caſting the Silver pieces into the Temple, went and hanged himſelf: and they bought with them the Potters Field, that the Propheſie might be fullfiled, Matth. 17. 5. &c.

Judas hangs himſelf.

And Jeſus came forth carrying his Croſs; but as they were leading him, they found one Simon of Cyrene, as he came out of the Countrey, whom they took, and compelled to carry the Croſs after Jeſus: There were alſo two Thieves that were led with him to be Crucified. And there followed a great multitude of People, and of women that lamented, to whom Jeſus turned and foretold the lamentable deſtruction of Jeruſalem. And when they were come into the place called Calvary, but in the Hebrew, Golgotha, they gave him to drink Wine mingled with Myrrhe, and Vineger mingled with Gall, and when he had taſted it, he would not drink it: and they Crucified him there (and it was the third hour) and two Thieves with him, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. And Jeſus ſaid, Father forgive them: for they know not what they do. And Pilate wrote a Superſcription in Hebrew Greek, and Latine, and put it on the Croſs: which, at the requeſt of the chief Prieſts, Pilate would not alter. And after they had crucified him, they divided his Garments into four parts, to every Souldier, that was imployed in his execution, a part: and caſt Lots for his Seamleſs Coat, whoſe it ſhould be, that the Scripture might be fulfilled: & ſitting down they watched him there; and the People ſtood beholding him: But they that paſſed by, reviled him, wagging their heads, & ſaying, Oh, thou that deſtroyeſt the Temple, & buildeſt it in three Days, ſave thy ſelf: If thou beeſt the Son of God, come down from the Croſs. Likewiſe alſo the Chief Prieſts, and Rulers, with the People, and Scribes and Elders mocking, and ſcoffing, ſaid amongſt themſelves: He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave. If he be the King of Iſrael, If that Chriſt, be the choſen of God, let him come down from the Croſs, and we will believe him, He truſted in God; let him deliver him now if he will have him. For he ſaid, Jeſus carries his croſs.

He is crucified.

And mocked.

I am the Son of God: The Souldiers also mocked him & coming to him, offered him Vinegar, saying, If thou be the King of the Jews, save thy self. The Thieves also that were Crucified with him, cast the same in his Teeth. And one of them, continuing his railing against him, the other being converted, rebuked him, & said unto Jesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy Kingdom? To whom Jesus answered, To day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. And there stood by his Cross the Mother of Jesus, and his Mothers Sister, Mary, the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene: When Jesus therefore saw his Mother, and the Disciple whom he loved standing by, he said to his Mother, Behold thy Son; and to the Disciple, Behold thy Mother. And when the sixth hour was come there was darkness over all the Land, or Countrey, untill the ninth hour: and about the ninth hour, Jesus cried out with a loud voice, Eli, Eli, lamma sabacthani? and some that stood by, said, he calleth Elias. Luke 23. 26. 38. Matth. 27. 32, 50. Luke 23. 44, 45, 46.

The good Thief.

After this, when Jesus knew that all things were accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, he said, I thirst. Now there was set there a vessel full of Vinegar, and they filled a Spunge with Vinegar, and put it upon Hyssop, or a Reed, and put it to his mouth, saying, with the rest, Let alone, let us see if Elias will come to save him, and take him down. But Jesus, when he had received the Vinegar, said, It is finished. And then again he cryed with a loud voice, Father into thy hands I commend my Spirit, and bowing his head, he gave up the Ghost. And when the Centurion saw that he so cryed out, and gave up the Ghost, he Glorified God, saying, Truly this is a just man; Truly this is the Son of God. Mark 15. 38, 42.

He gives up the Ghost.

And behold the vail of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottome, and the Earth did quake, and the Rocks rent, and the Graves were opened, and many Bodies of the Saints, which slept, arose, and came out of their Graves after his Resurrection, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many. And the Centurion, and they that stood over against, and they that watched Jesus, when they saw the Earthquake, and the things that were done, feared greatly, Saying, Truly this was the Son of God. And all the People that came together to that sight, beholding the things that were done, smote their Breasts, and returned: And his acquaintance, and the Women which followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things, among whom were Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Mother of James the Less, and Mother of Joses, and Salome, who also when he was in Galilee followed him, and ministred unto him, and many other Women that came up to Jerusalem with him. Luke 23. 47, 48, 49. Mat. 27. 51, 56.

The Vail of the Temple is rent.

The Jews therefore, that the Bodies should not remain on the Cross on the Sabbath (for that Sabbath was an high day) because it was the preparation, besought Pilate that their leggs might be broken, and that they might be taken down. The Souldiers therefore came and brake the leggs of the two Thieves, but not of Jesus, because he was already dead. Yet one of them with a spear pierced his side, and there came out Blood and Water, and these things were done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. Joh. 19. 31, 37.

His side is pierced.

And when Even was now come, because it was the preparation, that is, the Day before the Sabbath, there came Joseph of Arimathea, a Rich man, and an Honourable Councellor, who also looked for the Kingdome of God, a good, and a just man, and one who had not consented to the Counsel and deed of them: Being a Disciple, but secretly for fear of the Jews, came boldly to Pilate, and begged the Body of Jesus, Pilate marvelled that he was already dead, and calling the Centurion asked him, and when he knew it, he gave the Body to Joseph. There came also Nicodemus (which at first came to Jesus by night) and brought a mixture of Myrrhe, and Aloes about a hundred pound weight: and they took the Body of Jesus and wrapped it in a linnen cloth with the spices, as the manner of the Jews was to bury. And Joseph laid it in his own new Sepulchre, which he had hewen out of a Rock, wherein yet never man was laid, and which was in a Garden in the place where Jesus was crucified, roling a great Stone to the door of the Sepulchre: and Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Mother of Joses, who came with with him from Galilee, beheld where they laid him, ſitting over againſt the Sepulchre; and they returned & prepared ſpices and ointments, & reſted the Sabbath Day according to the Commandment. Joh. 19. 38, 42. Luke 23. 50, 56. Mark 15. 42, 47. Mat. 27. 57, 61.

The next Day [April 4th] the Phariſees beſought Pilate that he would command the Sepulchre to be made ſure untill the third Day, adding their reaſon, which, when he had yeelded to, they went and made the Sepulchre ſure, ſealing the Stone, and ſetting a Watch. His Sepulchre is ſealed.

In the end of the Sabbath, or when the Sabbath was now paſt [April 5th] when it dawned towards the firſt day of the Week, in the morning very early whileſt it was yet dark, came Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Mother of James and Salome, bringing Spices which they had bought, that they might ſee the Sepulchre, and annoint Jeſus: And they ſaid, Who ſhall role away the Stone from the door for us? and when the Sun was riſen, coming to the Sepulchre they ſaw the Stone roled away: For behold there was a great Earth-quake: For the Angel of the Lord came down from Heaven and roled away the Stone, and ſate upon it: and they went in, but found not the Body of the Lord Jeſus: and it came to paſs, as they were much perplexed thereat, behold two men came to them in ſhining Raiment; their countenances were as lightening, and their garments white as ſnow. Matthew and Mark mention but one Angel: and the Keepers for fear did ſhake, and became as dead men. And when the Women were afraid and bowed their Faces to the Earth, the Angels ſaid to them, Fear not ye, I know that ye ſeek Jeſus that was Crucified: But why ſeek ye the living amongſt the Dead? He is not here: He is riſen as he ſaid, Come and ſee the place where the Lord was laid, and remember what he ſaid, whileſt he was in Galilee with you ſaying, The Son of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinfull men, and be Crucified, and the third Day riſe again: But go ye quickly, and tell his Diſciples, and Peter, that he is riſen from the dead, and behold he goes before you into Galilee, there ye ſhall ſee him, behold, I have told you. Then the women remembred the Words of Jeſus, and they departed quickly out of the Sepulchre with fear and wonder, and great joy, and ran to tell his Diſciples: but they ſaid nothing to any man as they went: for they were afraid. And when the Women told theſe things to the eleven, and to all the reſt, their words ſeemed to them as idle Tales. But Mary Magdalene telling Peter, and the other Diſciple whom Jeſus loved, They have taken away the Lord and we know not where they have laid him; Peter and that other Diſciple went out, and came to the Sepulchre: but that other Diſciple did out-run Peter, and came firſt to the Sepulchre, and when he ſtooped down, he ſaw the linnen clothes lying, but went not in. Then came Peter following him, and went into the Sepulchre, and ſaw the linnen clothes lye, and the napkin that was about his Head not lying with them, but wrapped together in a place by it ſelf: Then went in that other Diſciple, and ſaw and believed, and Peter went unto his own home, wondring at what was done: For as yet they knew not the Scriptures, that he muſt riſe again from the Dead. And the Diſciples went to their own home. But Mary Magdalene ſtood without at the Sepulchre weeping, and whileſt ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped down in the Sepulchre and ſaw two Angels in white, ſitting, the one at the Head, the other at the feet, where the Body of Jeſus had lain; and they ſaid unto her: Woman why weepeſt thou? She ſaid, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him: and when ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned back, and ſaw Jeſus, but knew not that it was he. And Jeſus ſaid to her, Why weepeſt thou? Whom ſeekeſt thou? She, ſuppoſing that it had been the Gardiner, ſaid, If thou haſt born him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away: Jeſus ſaid to her, Touch me not, but go and tell my Brethren ſaying, I go, &c. And ſhe came and told his Diſciples, and thoſe that had been with him, as they were weeping, and mourning, that ſhe had ſeen the Lord, and that he had ſaid theſe things to her: But they believed her not. And as the Women went from the Sepulchre (perhaps Mary Magdalene was abſent) that they might tell his Diſciples, behold Jeſus met them, and ſaid unto them, All hail, and they came and held him by the feet, and worſhipped him. Then ſaid Jeſus to them, Be not afraid, Go and tell my Brethren that go into Galilee, there they ſhall ſee me Joh. 20. 1, 2, 18. Luk. 24 1. 12. Mar. 14. 1, 11. Mat. 28. 1, 8, 9, 10. His Reſurrection. Jeſus appears to Mary M. And to other women

Now

Now when they were going, behold the Watch went into the City, & ſhewed to the Chief Prieſts all the things that were done: and when they were aſſembled with the Elders, they took Counſell, and gave large money to the Souldiers that they ſhould ſay, that his Diſciples came and ſtole him away whileſt they ſlept: and if it come to the Governours ears (ſaid they) we will perſwade him, and ſecure you. So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this ſaying is commonly reported amongſt the Jews to this Day. Mat. 28. 11, 15.

And two, going to Emaus.

And two of them went into the Countrey that ſame Day to a Village ſixty Furlongs from Jeruſalem, called Emaus: and as they journeyed, Jeſus went along with them; and they, telling what things were done concerning Jeſus of Nazareth, how he was crucified, and that he roſe again, &c. Jeſus ſhewed them out of the Scriptures that it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to enter into his Glory. And in the Village, when he had taken Bread, and given Thanks, and broken it, he was known to them, their eyes being opened, though he appeared in another form, and he vaniſhed out of their ſight. And they roſe up that ſame hour, and returned to Jeruſalem to the eleven, who ſaid to theſe two, The Lord is riſen indeed, and hath appeared unto Simon. Then they told, them what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of Bread: but neither believed they them. Luke 24. 13. 35. Mark 14. 12, 13.

Whileſt they yet ſpake, it being evening, in the firſt Day of the Week, the Doors being ſhut where the Diſciples were gathered together for fear of the Jews, came Jeſus himſelf and ſtood in the middeſt of them, and ſaid, Peace be unto you: But they were affrighted ſuppoſing that they had ſeen a Spirit; But he upbraided them with their unbelief, and hardneſs of heart, becauſe they had not believed thoſe that had ſeen him ſince he was riſen: and he ſaid unto them, Why are you troubled? ſee my hands and my feet: A Spirit hath not fleſh and bones: and he ſhewed them his hands and his feet and his ſide: And while they yet believed not for Joy, and wondred, he ſaid unto them, Have ye here any meat? and he did eat a piece of broiled meat and an Hony-comb: and his Diſciples rejoyced that they had ſeen the Lord. And he ſaid unto them, Theſe are the words that I ſpake unto you, while I was yet with you: That all things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms of me. Then he opened their underſtandings that they might underſtand the Scriptures, and ſaid unto them, Thus it is written, and thus is behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the Dead the third Day, and that Repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his Name among all Nations, and ye are witneſſes of theſe things. And behold I ſend the Promiſe of my Father among you: But tarry ye at Jeruſalem till ye have received power from on high. He ſaid again unto them, Peace be unto you: as my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you. Goe ye into all the World and Preach the Goſpel to every Creature: He that believes and is Baptized, ſhall be ſaved: but he that believe not ſhall be damned. And theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe: In my Name they ſhall caſt out Devils: they ſhall ſpeak new Tongues: they ſhall take up Serpents: and if they drink any deadly thing it ſhall not hurt them: they ſhall lay their hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover. And when he had ſaid theſe things, he breathed on them, and ſaid, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt: Whoſe ſins ye remit, they are remitted to them, and whoſe ſins ye retain, they are retained. Thus Jeſus appeared five times in the firſt Day of his Reſurrection. Joh. 20. 19, 23. Luke 24 36, 49. Mar. 14. 14, 18.

His ſpeeches to them.

Thomas his incredulity.

But Thomas called Dydimus was not with them when Jeſus came, and the reſt of the Diſciples told him, We have ſeen the Lord: But he very confidently profeſſed that he would not believe it. After eight Dayes [April the 12th] Thomas being then preſent with the reſt, Jeſus came, the doors being ſhut, and ſtood in the middeſt, and ſaid unto them, Peace be unto you, and abundantly ſatisfied Thomas his unbelief, Joh. 20. 24, 29. Luke 24. 16, 20.

His Faith is confirmed.

Then the Eleven Diciples went into Galilee unto the Mountain that he had appointed them. And when they ſaw him, they worſhipped him, but ſome doubted: and when Jeſus came unto them, he ſaid, All power is given unto me both in Heaven and Earth, Go therefore and teach all Nations, Baptizing them, &c. & loe I am with you to the end of the World. Mat. 28. 16, 20. After that, Jeſus was ſeen of above five hundred Brethren at once: and after that to James. 1 Cor. 15 6. 7.

He appeared again.

After-

Afterwards Jesus shewed himself to his Disciples at the Sea of Tiberias: or at least, to seven of them as they were fishing: For they having fished all night, and caught nothing, in the morning, Jesus unknown unto them, stood upon the shoar, and bid them cast their net on the right side of the Ship, and they caught a hundred fifty and three great Fishes: and Jesus said unto them, Come and Dine; and none of them durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing it was the Lord. When they had dined, he warned Peter thrice of his Pastoral charge, as he loved Jesus, and forewarned him what kind of death he should die. And to Peters question concerning John, he gave an answer that was not rightly understood of the Brethren Joh. 21. 1, 24. And again.

Last of all he appeared to his Disciples in Jerusalem, and led them out as far as Bethany, and he lift up his hands, and blessed them. And it came to pass that as he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into Heaven. Luk. 24. 50, 51. Mat. 28. 19. His Ascension.

This Jesus Christ was promised to Adam in Paradise presently after his fall in those Words, The Seed of the Woman shall break the Serpents Head: but whether he should come of Jew or Gentile, not a word was told him. After this Abraham (the Hebrew) was given to understand that of his Seed should come the Messiah: but of what Tribe, nothing was revealed. To Jacob indeed it was shewed, that of the Tribe of Judah should Siloh come, but whether Male, or Female, nothing certain. David was assured that a Son of his should sit upon his Throne for ever: But till Isaias, it was not known that he should be born of a pure Virgin: that a woman should compass a man. Isa. 7. 14. Behold a Virgin, that famous Virgin (the Originall sets it forth with an Accent) spoken of Gen. 3. 15. shall conceive and bear a Son. The very place of his Birth was not set forth till Micha did it. Mich. 5. 2. Not the just time till Daniel foretold it. Dan. 9. 24. Thus by degrees, and piece-meal (as it were) God spake of old to the Fathers by his servants the Prophets. Heb. 1. 1. Every age almost, brought forth some new thing touching the Babe of Bethlehem (lapt up in the swathbands of the Holy Scriptures) either in express and evident terms, and testimonies, or else in mirrors, and miracles, Lastly John Baptist (Fibula Legis & Gratiæ, as one calls him) the Buckler of the Law, and Gospel, pointed him out with his finger, Behold the Lamb of God, &c. The Promises of him to the Fathers. Chrysolog.

Now this Jesus Christ is the most excellent Person in the world; the fairest amongst men: worth ten thousand of us, as the People said of David. 2 Sam 18. 3. Look upon him as he is described, Heb. 1. 1. 2, 3. For his Nobility, He is Gods own Son: For his Riches, He is Heir of all things: For his Wisdom, He made the Worlds: For his Eminency, He is the brightness of his Fathers Glory, and the express Image of his Person: For his Might, He upholdeth all things by the Word of his Power: For his Merits, He hath by himself purged our sins: For his Preferment, He sate down at the right hand of the Majesty on High-Traps Treas. His excellency.

The quality and kind of Christs Death is remarkable for three Characters which were engraven on the Death of the Cross, which he died on.

1. For the painfulness of it. The nature of that Death was painfull; For Death it self is painfull; no man payes that debt with ease. When Asa dies, he cryes, Ah my feet. When David dyes, he complains, O my Cold Body. When the Shunamites Child dyes, he cryes, Ah my pained head. When Uzzah dyes, he cryes, Oh my Leprous skin. Life is a precious Pearl: But there are three things besides, which made Christs Death painful. His painfull Death.

1. Violence. It's painfull to die of any violent disease but when five deaths do all concur, and strive which of them shall dispatch the poor man sooneſt, this must needs be more painfull. Such was Christs Death, which made him complain. Psal. 22. 16. They pierced my hands and my feet, and Joh. 19. 34. One of the Souldiers with a Spear pierced his side, and forth with there came out blood, and water. Here are five Deaths that invaded a living man: Death on each hand, and on each legg, & Death on his side, though this last, came a little too late. Now a violent Death it must needs be, when strong & great nails did pierce the most nervous parts of his Body, his hands & his feet. His Violent Death.

2. Slowness, Four leasurely violent Deaths seized on him. Blood is the life of the living Creature: then look how long his blood was coming out, his Life was dropping out as long. It's a great aggravation for a man to be long a dying, and yet cannot die. To have his torment quick, and yet his Death slow is an Image of Hell, where His slow Death.

men seek Death, and yet cannot finde it. Christs slow Death was divided into four quarters. Death at each hand, and at each foot made his pain the greater. The weight of his Body did hang upon those four tormenting nails, his pierced Hands and Feet, as if Death had delighted to hold Christ long at sea, and to deny him it's last sad service. Christ had been before dying a terrible Death in the Garden, when he was boiled (as it were) in a bloody sweat: and two circumstances shew that the two Thieves Death was nothing in slowness of torment comparable to Christs death.

1. The sad and direful preparatories to Christs Death, as he was the night before in a Soul-death, when those θρόμβοι αἵματος, as it were Drops, or great Hail stones of blood, frozen, or hardned, together (as Stephanus thinks) through extream terrour: when he was scourged, and Crowned with Thorns.

2. He was so weakned in Body thereby, that he was not able to bear his own Cross: which made him complain. Psal. 22. 17. I may tell all my Bones, My strength is dried up like a Potsheard: So that Christ began to die the night before, and continued dying twenty four hours, the Lords anger & curse being on him, & then bodily pain, with the curse of the Law all this time wrought upon him, And Christ, in bearing the pains of the second Death, did suffer that which all the Elect should have sustained in their Souls for-ever. Isa. 53. 6. The Lord laid upon him the Iniquity of us all: and though Christ died but one Death for all the Elect, yet in the extremity of the pain, it was many Deaths to him.

3. Many degrees of Life were taken from him. Consider how much of Life Christ had, and the removing of it by violence must be so much the more painfull. Now life natural had in Christ a sweet and a peaceable dwelling: the possession of life was with excellent delights: It was planted besides the Glorious God-head personally, & so had sweet company, and that made it pleasant. It had not been so much to take away the Life of a common man, whose life is not priviledged with Grace, and the Grace of a Personal union with God.

2. His shamefull death.

The second Character that was engraven on Christs Death, was, that it was shameful, and reproachful. Now Shame is, first, Fundamentally in the cause: Sin, and Sin acted by men against that Law of God is the only Foundation of Shame: Exod. 32. 25. Aron made the People naked to their Shame. So 2 Sam. 13. 13. Shame and sin are neer a kin. And thus Christ was no more capable of Shame than he was of sin. He came out of the Womb clothed with the white Robe of Innocency, and he never contracted one black spot on that fair Robe of the highest Image of God from the womb to the Grave, and therefore there was no shame fundamentally in Christ.

2. There is Shame formally in sin: and that, first, In being ashamed Actively. Secondly, In bearing of Shame Passively. In the former consideration, because sin is a shameful thing in it self. Jer. 11. 13. There is an Internal blushing, & Shame rising from sin; the Conscience of the sinner (if it be not cauterized) thinking ill of sin, and esteeming it self base in doing it. Rom. 6. 21. What fruit had you in those things whereof you are now ashamed? So Christ thought ill of sin, and esteemed the Creature base in sinning. 2. Christ our Lord being our surety, though he could not be ashamed of any sin he did himself: Yet being made a sin for us, he did bear the shame of our sin: and thus he was not free from shame passively, as it's a punishment of sin. Isa. 50. 6. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting. Heb. 12. 2. He endured the Cross, despising the shame. So then in these respects Christ did bear our Shame.

1. In that though he was the Lord of Glory, and thought it no robbery to be equal with the Father; yet he abased himself to become man: yea, the lowest of men, a Servant. Phil. 2. 6, 7, 8. Matth. 20. 28. Isa. 49. 7.

2. All the tokens of reproach and shame were on his sufferings: As,

1. In Gestures: they put a Crown of Thorns on his head: and a Reed for a Scepter in his hand to mock his Kingly Power. They saluted him with mocks, and bowing the knee to him.

2. In words. They cried out, Hail, King of the Jews: They scorned his Prophetical Dignity, when they blindfolded him, saying, Prophesie who it is that smote thee.

And

And to deride his Prieſt-hood, they put a Robe on him: and when he was on the Croſs offering himſelf as our Prieſt in a Sacrifice to God, all that paſſed by, wagged their Heads, and ſhot out their Lips, ſaying, He truſted in God, let him deliver him, &c. Then did they ſpit in his face, which in the Law was a great ſhame. Deut. 25. 9, 50 Job 30. 10.

3. His Death was ſhameful, the Death of a thief, and robber: So it's called, Chriſts reproach. Heb. 13. 13. Let us go forth bearing his reproach. It was a ſhameful thing to ſee the Lord of Glory, bearing his own Croſs on his back, and all the children, and baſe ones of the City wondring at him, & crying out upon him. This is called the reproach, or Shame of Chriſt. Heb. 11. 26. Pſal. 22. 7.

4. They ſhamed him in pulling off his Garments, & ſcourging him. As, Jer. 13. 26. They brought him bound to Pilate as if he had been a Common Thief. Matth. 26. 2. Hence Iſa. 53. 3. He was deſpiſed, and rejected of men: and we hid as it were our faces from him. He had all ſhame put upon him: He was branded as the greateſt Thief of the three: He went out at the Gate of life, bleeding, pained, curſed, ſhamed, forſaken deſpiſed and mocked. Even the Sun ſeemed to be aſhamed to ſee its Creator in ſo painful and ſhameful a condition, and therefore hid its head.

The third Character which was engraven on Chriſts Death, was the curſe of God. Now the Curſe that Chriſt was made, Was, 3. His curſed Death.

1. The Lords pronouncing him a Curſe. Deut. 21. 23. Curſed is he that hangeth on a Tree; which Paul applies to Chriſt. Gal. 3. 10, 13. This indeed was a Ceremonial curſe; but had a ſpecial Relation to Chriſt, who was under a real, and Moral Curſe.

2. Gods devoting and ſetting him apart in his eternal Counſel for ſuffering the puniſhment of ſin.

3. The diſhonour that was put upon him; and ſo was Chriſt under a curſe. Pſal. 22. 7. He was a worm and no man. Iſa. 53. 3. The leaſt of men: the contempt and refuſe of men. Act. 4. 11. The Stone rejected by the builders. Hanging is the death of the pooreſt, & baſeſt of men: & thus was Chriſt uſed. Act. 5. 30. Whom ye ſlew and Hanged on a Tree. Act. 2. 23. Whom by wicked Hands ye have Crucified and ſlain. Hanging is more than ſlaying: It's putting him to a baſe Death that is curſed of God & man: and this to be inflicted on a King lineally deſcended of the Blood Royal, the Kingly Tribe of Judah the onely man on Earth that by birth and Law had Title to the Crown of Judea, was the worſt that men or Devils could do.

Triuni Deo Gloria.

IGNATIVS

The Life of Ignatius, who Dyed Anno Chriſti, 111.

IGnatius ſaw Chriſt in the fleſh, being about 12 years old at his Crucifixion: The occaſion of his Apprehenſion was this, Trajan returning from the Parthian war, commanded gratulatory ſacrifices to be offered in every City; and when he came to Antioch, Ignatius was required to be preſent at thoſe Sacrifices; but he, before Trajans face did juſtly and ſharply reprove their Idolatry; for which cauſe he was delivered to ten Souldiers to becarried to Rome. He was Paſtor at the Church at Antioch next after the Apoſtle Peter. His courage

His zeal. As he passed through Asia strictly guarded with that troop of Souldiers, he confirmed the Congregations through every City where he came, Preaching the Word of God to them, and giving them wholsome exhortations; especially charging them to avoid the Heresies lately sprung up, and which at that time over-flowed the Church: Requiring them stedfastly to cleave to the Traditions of the Apostles, and to their Doctrine.

When he came to Smyrna where Polycarp was Bishop, he wrote an Epistle to the Church at Ephesus, making mention of Onesimus their Pastor; and another he wrote to the Church of Magnesia on the River Meander, wherein he forgetteth not Dama their Bishop: Another he wrote to the Church at Trallis whose Pastor at that time he mentioneth to be Polybius, to which Epistle he prefixed an exhortation to them not to refuse Martyrdom, lest thereby they should lose the hope that was laid up for them: For which end he useth these expressions:

His sufferings. From Syria saith he, even till I came to Rome, I had a battel with Beasts, as well by Sea as by Land, night and day, being bound amongst ten cruel Leopards, (so he called the 10 souldiers that guarded him) which, the more benefits they received at my hands,

His patience. became so much the worse to me: But I, being exercised, and now well acquainted with their injuries, am taught every day more and more to bear the Cross, yet hereby am I not justified. Would to God I were once come to the Beasts that are prepared for me, which I wish also to fall upon me with all their violence: whom also I will provoke, that without delay they may devour me, and not abstain from me, as they have from some others, whom for fear they have left untouched: and if they be unwilling to it, I will compel them to fall upon me: Pardon me, I pray you, I know well how much this will avail me. Now do I begin to be a Disciple of my Master Christ, I neither regard things visible,

His invincible courage so I may gain Christ. Ignis, crux, Bestiarum, conflictationes, ossium distractiones, &c. i. e. Let Fire, Cross, breaking of my bones, quartering of my members, crushing my body, and all the torments that man and the Divel can invent fall upon me, so I may enjoy my Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

A faithful Pastor. Writing to Polycarp, whom he knew to be a holy man, he commends to him the Congregation at Antioch, praying him to be careful of the business there, and especially for the election of a godly Bishop in his room; thereby proving himself to be a sincere and right Pastor, taking such care of his flock, not onely whilest he lived, but even after his death. When his Martyrdom approached, he said, Frumentum Dei sum; dentibus ferarum molar, & mundus Dei panis inveniar: I am God's corn; when the wilde Beasts have ground me to powder with their teeth, I shall be his white-bread. He was so humble,

His humility. that he disdained not to learn of any: He suffered Martyrdom the Eleventh year of Trajan at Rome, Anno Christi, 111.

His Sayings. His usual saying was, Amor meus crucifixus est. My Love is crucified, meaning either Christ the Object of his love: or that his affections were crucified to the world, as Gal 6. 14.

Nicephorus reports, that when Ignatius was a child, our Saviour would take him up in his arms, and shew him to his Disciples. It may be, he was one of those little Children that were brought to Christ that he should touch them; or that little child whom Jesus took, and set in the midst of his Disciples to learn them humility: He saw Christ after his Resurrection, as himself writes in one of his Epistles,

He saw Christ in the flesh. Ego vero, & post resurrectionem in carne eum vidi, &c. Truly I did see him after his Resurrection in the flesh, and do believe that it is he, &c.

He used to say, Nihil præstantius est pace bona conscientiæ: that there is nothing better then the peace of a good conscience.

That good and wicked men are like true and counterfeit mony, the ones seems to be good, and is not, the other both seems and is good.

That the Lyons teeth are but like a Mill, which though it bruiseth, yet wasteth not the good Wheat, only prepares and fits it to be made pure Bread. Let me (saith he) be broken by them, so I may be made pure Manchet for Heaven.

Parents duty. Parents ought to afford these three things to their children; Correction, Admonition and Instruction, both in humane Arts, and Gods Word: all which preserves them from idleness and folly, gives them Wisdom, and learns them subjection and obedience to their Superiours.

Other

Other Graces are but parts of a Chriſtians Armour: as the ſhield of Faith, the ſword of the Spirit, &c. But Patience is the Panoply or whole Armour of the man of God: The enemy foils us without it: but we foil him by it.

Grace flowing from the bleſſed Spirit of God, makes the Soul like a Fountain whoſe water is pure, wholeſom and clear: For Grace beautifies, cleanſeth, and ſo ſaveth the whole man.

His works.

He wrote divers Epiſtles: To St. John: To the Epheſians: To the Magneſians: To the Trallians: To the Romanes: To the Philadelphians: To Polycarp, &c. Concerning which the learned Scultetus ſaith: Inter dubia & incerta numero Epiſtolas Ignatii, & Polycarpi. Nondum enim inter Orthodoxos convenit ſintne Epiſtolæ iſtæ celeberrimorum Martyrum Ignatii & Polycarpi, an aliorum: For which he gives his reaſons.

POLYCARPVS

The Life of Polycarp, who dyed Anno Chriſti 170.

His zeal againſt Hereticks.

Polycarpus was Diſciple to St John, and Biſhop of Smyrna: he going with S. John to a Bath at Epheſus, and eſpying Cerinthus the Heretick in it, ſaid, Fugiamus ocyus, &c. Let us depart ſpeedily, for fear leaſt the Bath wherein the Lord's adverſary is, do fall upon us; as one of the Fathers made haſt out of the houſe of a wicked man, which ſoon after fell to the ground.

Gods judgement againſt Hereticks.

The Hiſtory of his Martyrdom is excellently ſet forth in an Epiſtle written by his own Church at Smyrna, to the Brethren of Pontus, out of which, ſo much as concerns this matter, I ſhall tranſcribe.

The Hiſtory of his Martyrdom.

The Congregation which is at Smyrna, to the Congregation which is at Philomilium, and to all the Congregations throughout Pontus; mercy to you, peace, and the love of God the Father, and of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be multiplyed, Amen. We have written unto you (Brethren) of thoſe men which have ſuffered Martyrdom; and particularly of bleſſed Polycarp, who by ſheding his blood, hath (through God's mercy) put an end to this perſecution; the manner whereof we ſhall now relate to you: This holy man hearing of the cruel perſecution abroad, was therewith nothing terrified, but retained the immoveable tranquility of his minde, and continued ſtill in the City, till at length he was perſwaded through the importunity of his friends, to betake himſelf to a certain Farm-place, not far from the City: where he rem , with a fewother, exerciſing himſelf night and day in prayer, making humble ſup ications, as his usual manner was, for the peace, and tranquility of all the Churches in the world. Having been in Prayer, three days before his apprehension, and now faln asleep, he saw in a Vision by night the pillow under his head set on fire, and suddenly consumed to ashes, which when he awaked, he interpreted to them that were present, to fore-signifie that his life was neer an end, and that his body should be Burned for the testimony of Christ.

His courage

His Vision foretelling his Martyrdom

When the Searchers were now at hand, and all the people cryed out, Quæratur Polycarpus: Let us search out Polycarp; at the earnest entreaty of his friends, he removed to another Village, unto which the Searchers coming, caught two boys, and scourged them, till one of them confessed, and led them to Polycarps lodging: Yet might he easily have escaped; but he would not, saying, the will of the Lord be fulfilled: and so coming to them, he communed with them very cheerfully; so that it was wonderful to see, those which a little before knew not the man, now beholding and viewing his comly age, and his grave and constant countenance, lamented that they had so imployed themselves for the apprehension of so worthy a person: But he on the contrary commanded that the Table should be presently spred for them, intreating them to eat, and dine well, requesting but one hours space to make his prayers unto God, to which they assenting to, he arose, and went to prayer, and being repleniſhed with the grace of God, he so poured out his soul, that all that heard him praying, were astonished at it, yea many of his enemies were sorry that so holy, honest, and aged a man should be put to death.

Flight refused.

He feasts his persecutors.

The hour being now come wherein he was to set forwards, they set him upon an Ass, and brought him to the City of Smyrna upon a solemn Feast day, and there met him Herod the Justice of Peace, and his Father Nicetes, who receiving him into their Chariot, said unto him, What harm is it to say, Lord Cæsar, to sacrifice, and so to be saved? At first he answered nothing, but when again they urged him, he said, I will not do according to your counsel: They perceiving that he would not be perswaded, gave him very rough language, and at last tumbled him out of their Chariot, whereby he brake his shins: But he, as though he had received no injury, nor hurt at all, went bolt upright, cheerfully and apace towards the Theater: And being come thither, a voice came down from Heaven (though by reason of the great tumult few heard it) Be of good cheer, O Polycarp, and Play the man: The speaker no man saw, but the voice was heard by many of us.

His Tentations.

Cruelty.

He is encouraged from Heaven.

The multitude was in a rage, and the Proconsul demanded of him whether he were that Polycarp? yet withal, beckoning to him to deny it, he said, Have respect unto thine age: tender thy self: swear by the Fortune of Cæsar: Repent of what is past, and say, Remove the wicked. But Polycarp looking about upon the multitude with a stedfast countenance, and casting up his eyes towards Heaven, said, Remove O Lord these wicked. Yet the Proconsul urged him again, saying, Swear, and I will let thee go: Blaspheme, and defie Christ, and thou shalt be safe: To whom Polycarp answered Octoginta sex annos illi jam inservivi, &c. Fourscore, and six years have I served Christ, neither hath he ever offended me in any thing, and how then can I revile my King that hath thus kept me? The Proconsul still urged, and said, Swear by the Fortune of Cæsar; Polycarp replyed, If thou requirest of me this vain glory, that I should protest the Fortune of Cæsar, pretending that thou knowest not what I am: Know then that I am a Christian: And if thou desirest to know the Doctrine of Christianity, appoint a day, and thou shalt hear it. Perswade the people unto this, said the Proconsul. Truly said Polycarp, I thought it my part to make this tender unto you, Because we are commanded of God to give unto Governours and Powers whom he hath ordained, the honour, and obedience which is due unto them, and not hurtful unto us: but as for these people, I deem them not competent judges, and therefore will not purge my self before them: Then said the Proconsul, I have wilde Beasts to devour thee, unless thou repent. Polycarp answered, Bring them forth: for we have determined with our selves not to repent, nor to turn from the better to the worse: Its more convenient for you to turn from evil to that which is good, and just. I will, said the Proconsul, tame thee with fire, if thou set naught

His Tentations.

His Courage.

An excellent speech.

His invincible Courage

He fears not Threatnings.

naught by the wild Beasts, and wilt not repent: To which Polycarp answered, you threaten me with fire which shall last but an hour, and is quickly quenched; but thou art ignorant of the everlasting fire at the Day of Judgment, and of those endless torments which are reserved for the wicked. But why make you all these delays? appoint me to what death you please. Whilest he spake these things, he was replenished with joy, and boldness, and his countenance appeared so full of grace, and gravity, that it was evident, that he was nothing troubled with the cruel threats of the Proconsul: but on the contrary, the Proconsul himself began to be amazed and sent for the Cryer, commanding him in the midst of the Theater to cry three times: Polycarp hath confessed himself to be a Christian. Hereupon the multitude both of Jews, and Gentiles, inhabiting Smyrna, cryed out in a great rage, Iste Asiæ Doctor, &c. This is that Doctor of Asia, the Father of the Christians, the Overthrower of our gods, who hath taught many that our gods are not to be adored: and thereupon they cryed to the Proconsul, that a Lyon might be let loose to devour him: But he told them that he might not do it, for that the game of Beasts was now finished: Then they cryed with one voice, that Polycarp should be burned alive: To which, when the Proconsul had assented, the multitude forthwith carried logs, and wood, out of their Shops & Booths; especially the Jews, after their wonted manner, were very forward herein.

The Jews And Gentiles rage against him.

The pile being prepared, Polycarp put off his apparel, the faithful assisting, and contending amongst themselves; who should touch his body at his farewell: Being thus made ready, when they would have nailed him to the stake, he said; Nay, suffer me even as I am: for he that hath given me strength to come to this fire, will also give me patience to persevere therein without your fastning of my body with nails, Then they bound his hands behind him, which done, he prayed thus.

He refuseth to be nailed to the stake

O Father of thy Wel-Beloved and blessed Son Jesus Christ, through whom we have known thee; O God of Angels, Powers, and of every living creature, and of just men which live in thy presence: I thank thee that thou hast graciously vouchsafed this day, and this hour, to allot me a portion amongst the number of Martyrs, to drink of the Cup of Christ, unto the Resurrection of everlasting life, both of Body and Soul, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, amongst whom I shall this day be received into thy sight for an acceptable Sacrifice; And as thou hast prepared, and revealed this before hand, so thou hast now accomplished and fulfilled the same, O thou most true God, which canst not lye; wherefore for all these things I praise thee, I bless thee, I glorifie thee, through the everlasting Bishop and Shepherd of our Souls Christ Jesus: to whom with thee, and the Holy Ghost, be all Honour, and Glory, world without end: Amen.

His prayer.

Having ended his Prayer, the tormentors kindled the fire. The flame vehemently flashed about; which was terrible to the beholders. But the flame framing it self after the manner of a vault, or sail of a Ship, with the blustering blasts of wind, touched not the holy Martyrs Body, which sent forth a fragrant, and sweet smell like unto Frankincense, or such like pretious Perfume: But the cruel Persecutors perceiving that the fire touched not his body, called for a tormentor, charging him to thrust him into the side with a spear; which being done, their issued out such abundance of blood as quenched the fire, to the great astonishment of the beholders.

The fire will not burn him.

He is slain.

Then did the Jews stir up Nicetes, the Father of Herod, and his Brother Dalces to move the Proconsul, that his body might not be delivered to the Christians; least (say they) leaving Christ, they fall to worship him: This they said through their ignorance, not knowing that we can never forsake Christ, which dyed for our Salvation, to worship any other. For we worship Christ as the Son of God: the Martyrs we love as the Disciples, and followers of the Lord, and that worthily, for the invincible love which they bear to their King and Master, &c. Hereupon the Proconsul caused his body (to satisfie the Jews) to be laid upon a pile of wood, and burned.

The Jews malice

His body burned.

Irenæus being young, was acquainted with him, and writeth of him, that Anicetus being Bishop of Rome, Polycarp went thither, and questioned with him about the celebration of Easter. He saith also, that there is extant an Epistle of Polycarps unto the Philippians, very profitable for such as are careful for their Salvation: where they may know the true character of Faith, and the right rule of Doctrine.

It is said of him, that he was testis fidelis, constansque veritatis: A faithful and constant witness to the Truth: Nay, by his Wisdom, Zeal, and Piety, he recalled many from Heresies, and Errors.

His zeal against Heresies.

He so detested Hereticks, that when Marcion (of his former acquaintance) met him at Rome, and wondering that he took no notice of him, said, Dost thou not know me Polycarp? Yea, said he, I know thee well, thou art the eldest son to the Devil.

His manner was to stop his ears if at any time he heard the wicked speeches of Hereticks, and to shun those very places where such speeches had been uttered. He suffered Martyrdom in the seventh year of Verus, Anno Christi, 170, of his Age 86.

His Prayer in the fire.

In the midst of the flames he made this excellent Prayer. O God the Father of thy Beloved Son Jesus Christ, through whom we have received the knowledge of thee: O God the Creator of all things, upon thee I call, thee I confess to be the true God: Thee I glorifie. O Lord receive me, and make me a companion of the resurrection of thy Saints, through the merits of our great High Priest, thy Beloved Son Jesus Christ; to whom with the Father and God the Holy Ghost be honour, and glory for ever, Amen. He was a Bishop about 63. years.

Hierom writing of him, saith, that he was in great esteem through all Asia, for that he was Scholar to the Apostles, and to them that did see and were conversant with Christ himself; and therefore his authority was of great credit, not only with his own Church, but with all other Churches about him

His works.

There is extant an Epistle of his to the Philippians, but Scultetus judgeth it spurious.

The Life of Dionysius Areopagita, who dyed Anno Christi 96.

His Parentage and education.

Dionysius Areopagita was born at Athens of eminent Parents, he was very studious: He travelled into Egypt to get skil in Astronomie: At the age of 25 years, at Heliopolis, whilest he lived with Apollophanes the Philosopher, he saw that general Eclipse of the Sun at our Saviours passion, and as one amazed, said, Aut Deus naturæ patitur, aut mundi machina dissolvetur: Either the God of Nature now suffers, or the frame of the World shall be dissolved: And to another, Ignotus in carne patitur Deus, &c. God, unknown in the flesh, doth suffer, for whose sake the Universe is covered with this thick darkness.

His speech At Christs death.

Saint Paul coming to Athens, Act. 17. and espying an Altar there with this inscription, Ignoto Deo, took occasion from thence to Preach of the true God, of the Resurrection, and Judgement to come: whereupon by the great Philosophers of that City, he was accounted a wicked, and sacrilegious person, for which he was carryed by them to Mars his hill, where the Court of the Areopagites sat, which was the chiefest Judicatory in that City: But before those Judges he preached with such Divine eloquence, and forcible arguments, that through Gods mercy he converted this Dionysius, the chief President of the Judges, with Damaris his wife, who used Paul very courteously, and were instructed by him in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. At which the whole City was much amazed: for all men accounted Dionysius a very wise and judicious man; But now he was not ashamed of a Master to become a Scholar: so that within there years space, he became an admirable instrument to propagate the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Dionysius converted.

He is made Pastor at Athens.

He goes to Rome.

And into France.

Then was he by Paul ordained Pastor of the Church at Athens, where for a good while he preached the Word of God with great wisdom, zeal and diligence; and as a wise Harvest-man brought in many Sheaves of Corn into Gods Barn. Afterwards he went to Ephesus to visit S. John, and S. Paul: by whose perswasion (leaving one Publius to look to his flock at Athens) he went to Rome, at which time Clemens governed that Church. And having conversed a while with Clemens, he intreated him to go into France to preach the Gospel there, and to give knowledge of Salvation to that Nation: This he willingly undertook; and judging Paris to be the fittest place to reside in, he so laboured amongst them, that in a short space, through Gods blessing, he brought many Sheep into the fold of Christ, and that not only of the meaner sort, but many Rich, Noble, and Great Persons, who overthrowing the Temples of their false gods, erected new places for the service of the true God. But this progress of the Gospel being envied by Satan, the enemie of Christs Church; he stirred up the Idolatrous Priests, who suborned many to dispatch Dionysius: but there was such a gracious lustre, and radiancy in his countenance, that when they beheld him, some of their hearts failed them: others were so affrighted, that they fled away.

The success of his Ministry.

Satans malice

Gods mercy

Shortly after, Sisinius the Præfect, gave command that Dionysius, with his fellows, should be apprehended; and when he was brought before him, he sharply reproved him, for that he had preached against the Worship of their gods, who, by reason of his Sermons, had lost their former honour and esteem: He therefore required him to confess his error, & to stop up that breach which he had made, leaving off those novelties, and unheard of Doctrines, that by his recantation the people might see how vainly they had been seduced, and so return to their antient Rites and Customs again.

His Apprehension.

To this Dionysius with great zeal, wisdom, and eloquence, answered: That they were no gods whom they worshipped, but Idols, and the works of mens hands, and that it was through meer Ignorance, Folly, and Idolatry that they adored them: Adding, that there was but one true God, according as he had preached: At which words Sisinius was exceedingly incensed, commanding him to be laid upon an hurdle, and a gentle fire to be made under him to roast him. Some others relate, that he was thrown to hungry wild Beasts, which yet would not tear him: Then that he was put into an hot Oven, which would not burn him. Whereupon he was the second time brought before Sisinius, who caused him publikely to be beaten with many, and cruel blows by his Officers: and when this prevailed not, he standing up, said: Seeing thou hast contemned our gods, derided the Emperours Edicts, and by Magick hast wrought many Miracles to delude the people, whereby thou hast seduced them from the obedience of the Emperor, I will therefore that thou shalt be forthwith beheaded. Dionysius nothing terrified herewith, told him that he worshipped such gods as would perish like dung upon the Earth; but as for my self (said he) Come life, come death, I will worship none but the God of Heaven and Earth.

His Zeal, & Courage.

Miracles.

Persecutors Cruelty.

A brave speech.

This so enraged the Præfect, that he commanded him presently to be executed: whereupon he was haled out of the City to the top of an high Mountain, and delivered to the Officers to be tormented, which was accomplished with all the cruelty that could be: Then lifting up his eyes and hands to heaven he said, O Lord God Almighty, thou only begotten Son, and Holy Spirit: O sacred Trinity, which art without beginning, and in whom is no division: Receive the soul of thy servant in peace, who is put to death for thy Cause and Gospel: Which Prayer being ended, he was beheaded with a sword which was made dull on purpose that his pain might be the greater.

His Prayer at death.

His Martyrdom.

He suffered Martyrdom in the reign of Hadrianus, Anno Christi 95. and of his own Age 110.

He used to say, that he desired these two things of God: first, that he might know the truth himself: Secondly, that he might preach it as he ought unto others.

His saying.

He wrote sundry Epistles, (as some affirm) and some other works: all which Scultetus for very good reasons rendred by him, judgeth to be spurious.

The

JVSTIN MARTYR

The Life of Justin Martyr, who dyed Anno Christi 139.

His Parentage & educations.

Justin Martyr was born at Neapolis in the Country of Palestine: His father was Priscus Bachius, by whom in his youth he was set to school, where he profited so much, that in a Short time he became a famous Philosopher: For being exceedingly inflamed with a desire of knowledge, he would not be satisfied in his minde, till he had gotten Instructors singularly seen in all kinds of Philosophy. First he applyed himself to be a Scholar to a certain Stoick: but finding that by his help he nothing profited in Divine knowledge, after a time he left him, and went to one of the Sect of the Peripateticks: with whom after he had been a while, he demanded of him a stipend for his teaching: whereupon Justin accounting him no Philosopher, left him, and departed. And being not yet satisfied in mind, but desirous to hear of further learning, he adjoined himself to one that professed the Pythagorean Sect, a man of great fame, and one that highly esteemed of himself: whom after he had followed a time, his Master asked him, whether he had any skil in Musick, Astronomy, and Geometry, without the knowledge whereof he said, he could not be apt to receive the knowledge of virtue and felicity: for that his mind must be drawn from the knowledge of sensible matters, to the contemplation of things intelligible. He spake much in commendation of these Sciences, how profitable and necessary they were: and because Justin declared himself to have no skill therein, he turned him away; which much grieved Justin, who considering with himself, what time was requisite for the learning of these Sciences, and purposing to defer it no longer, betook himself to the Sect of the Platonists for the great fame that ran of them: Wherefore choosing to himself a singularly learned man of that Sect, that was lately come into those parts, he remained with him, profiting not a little in contemplation of supernatural things, and invisible forms: Insomuch as he hoped ere long through the sharpness of his wit, to attain to the comprehension and contemplation of God, which is the end of Plato's Philosophy.

His study of Philosophy.

His conversion, and the occasion of it

And thus he imployed his Youth: But afterwards being grown to riper years, he was converted to the knowledge and profession of Christianity by this means: Beholding the Constancy, Courage, and Patience of the Christians in their torments, and sufferings, he was wonderfully moved therewith, which made him thus to reason; that it was impossible for that kinde of people to be subject to any vice, or carnality, which that it was impossible for that kinde of people to be subject to any vice, or carnality, which would certainly disable them to sustain such sharp adversity, and much more the bitterness of death.

Hereupon (naturally affecting Knowledge) he began to love and embrace the Christian Religion. This himself testifies in the end of his first Apologie; telling us moreover, that being afflicted in minde about finding out the truth, he resolved for more privacy to retire himself unto a Grange neer the Sea-side, where he might be free from the concourse of people; whither as he went, there met him a grave ancient Father, of a comly visage, and gentle behaviour, who began to reason with him; & after long disputation, told him plainly that there was no knowledge of the truth amongst the Philosophers, who neither knew God, nor were directed by the Holy Ghost: He also further reasoned with him of the immortality of the Soul, of the reward of the godly, and of the punishment of the wicked: So that Justin, being convinced by his arguments, voluntarily assented to him, and demanded of him by what means he might attain to the knowledge of the true God? The old man counselled him to read, and search the Word of God; and to adjoin Prayer thereto. But what man (quoth Justin) shall I use for my instructor therein? And who shall be able to help me, if these Philosophers (as you say) lack the Truth, and are void of the same? To which the old Father answered: There have been (saith he) before these Philosophers others more ancient then they, who were just men, and beloved of God; and who spake by the Spirit of God: fore-seeing, and fore-Propheſying of those things which we now see are come to pass, and therefore they are called Prophets. These only have known the Truth, and revealed it to men, neither fearing, nor respecting the persons of any. They were seduced with no opinions of mans invention, but only spake, and taught those things which themselves both heard, and saw, being inspired with the Holy Spirit of God, whose Writings and Books are extant, out of which the Reader may receive great profit, and knowledge of many things: As of the first Creation of the World, and of the end of the same, with all other things that are necessary for us to know. Neither in their teachings do they use any demonstrations: the things taught being of themselves more certain then that they need any such demonstration: the accomplishment of their Propheſies which we see fulfilled, constraining us of necessity to believe the words and Doctrine which they have taught: Their Doctrine also hath been confirmed by Wonders and Miracles, which induce us to give credit to it. They preached of God the Creator, and Maker of all things: They propheſied also before of Christ the Son of God, sent to be the Redeemer of the World, which the false Prophets, seduced by false and wicked Spirits did not, but only took upon them to work certain prodigious wonders, for men to gaze at that thereby they might gain belief to their false and unclean opinions: But remember before all things to make thy Prayers to Almighty God, that he will open a gate of light to thee: for otherwise the knowledge of these things cannot be attained to by every man, but they are revealed only to such to whom God and his Christ give understanding.

He is instructed by an old man.

The old Father having declared these, and many other things to Justine, departed from him, exhorting him carefully to follow those things which he had spoken: after which he saw him no more. But Justine was presently wonderfully inflamed in his minde to know and study the Prophets, in comparison of which, all other Philosophy now seemed vain, and unprofitable to him, and so in time he became a Christian, and was baptized.

His conversion.

His Baptism.

After this he became an earnest defender of the Truth, travelling up and down, and disputing against all those which were enemies, and opposers of it, fearing neither peril of life, nor danger of death, so that he might maintain the Doctrine of Christ against the malitious Blasphemers of the same, and also increase the number of Christian Believers, as may appear by his vehement disputations against the Heathen Philosophers, and by the long disputation of his at Ephesus against Tripho, and also by his confutations of Hereticks: Yea and by his Apologies which with great zeal and courage

His zeal & courage.

he exhibited to the Emperour and Magistrates against the Persecutors of the Christians, and in their just defence: all which do sufficiently testifie the same.

His Apology for the Christians to the Senate.

The first Apologie which he wrote, was to the Senate of Rome, in which he wrote with great liberty, telling them, that of necessity he was compelled thus to utter his minde unto them: For that in persecuting the Christians they neglected their duty, and highly offended God, of which they had need to be admonished: This Apology he also sent to Antoninus Pius the Emperour: Writing also to Urbicius, Leiutenant of the City, he told him, that he put men to torments, and death, for no offence committed, but only for the confession of the name of Christ; which proceedings (saith he) neither becometh the Emperour, nor his Son, nor the Senate. In the same Apology he also defended, and purged the Christians from those crimes which were falsely charged upon them by the Ethnicks.

His Apologie to the Emperour.

In his second Apology writing to Antoninus the Emperour, and his successors, with like gravity, and freedom of speech, he declareth unto them how they had the name and repute of vertuous Philosophers, maintainers of Justice, lovers of Learning, &c. But whether they were so indeed, their Acts declared. As for himself he professeth that neither for flattery, nor for favour he wrote unto them: But that he was constrained to sue unto them for righteousnes in their judgements, and sentences: For (saith he) it becomes Princes to follow uprightnes, and piety in their judgements, not Tyranny, and violence: He also in plain words chargeth, as well the Emperour as the Senate with manifest wrong; for that they did nor grant to the Christians that which was not denyed to all other Malefactors, but judged them to death, not convicted: but out of an hatred to their name. Other men (saith he) which are appeached in judgement, are not condemned till they are first convicted: But for us, you take the name for a sufficient crime; whereas indeed you ought to see justice done rather upon our accusers. So that if a Christian that is accused, deny his name, him you release, being not able to charge him with any other offence: But if he stand to his name, you condemn him: Whereas it were your duty rather to examine their manner of life, and so according to their demerits to see justice done upon them.

Injustice used to the Christians.

And in another place: You examine not the Causes, but hurried on with rash affections, as with the spur of fury, you slay & murther the innocent without any respect of justice: And if any will say, some of them have been taken in evil doings: I answer, that you use not to enquire after those things: but condemn them before due examination of their offences, for the cause above mentioned: Hereby it appears that you degenerate from the goodnes of your predecessors, whose examples you follow not: For your Father Adrian, of famous memory, caused to be proclaimed, that Christians accused before the Judge should not be condemned, unless they were found guilty of some notorious crime, &c.

In the same Apologie he also proves, by firm and strong arguments, that Christians ought not at the sole will and command of the Emperour and Senate to offer Sacrifice to Idols, for which if they be condemned, they suffer open wrong: He affirms moreover, that the only true Religion, is the Religion of Christians, whose Doctrine and Conversation hath no fault. And although by these, and such like persvasions he could nor prevail with the Emperour to love their Religion, and to become a Christian; yet thus much he obtained, that the Emperour wrote to his Officers in Asia in the behalf of the Christians, requiring and commanding them, that those Christians only that were found guilty of other crimes, should suffer, and that none for the bare name of a Christian should be punished, as hitherto they had been. By this it is apparent with what zeal, and faith Justine strove against the persecutors of his time, who (as he used to say) could kill, but could not hurt.

He prevails for favour to the Christians.

He goes to Rome.

At last he went to Rome, where he had many open disputations, and publique conferences with some Philosophers, especially with one Crescens, who was of the Sect of the Cynikes, from whom he alwayes bore away the Bell, which tended to the shortning of his life, as himself foresaw, and foretold in these words.

A prediction.

I look for no other end then this, that I be betrayed by some one of them called Philosophers: or knocked on the head with a club by Crescens, no Philosopher indeed, but a proud proud boaſter. For it is not meet to call him a Philoſopher, which ignorantly reporteth that the Chriſtians are impious, and irreligious, to the end that he may flatter, and pleaſe ſuch as are over-ſhadowed with the miſt of error, and ignorance. For if he impugn the Doctrine of the Chriſtians, having never read, nor known the ſame, then is he full of malice, and far worſe then Idiots, that ſometimes fear to reaſon of unknown matters, leaſt they ſpeak falſely: Or if he hath read them, yet he underſtands not the Myſtery, and Majeſtical meaning thereof: Or if in any thing he underſtands them, yet is he afraid to confeſs the Truth, leaſt he ſhould be taken for one of them, and then he is far more wicked, & malitious, yea the bonſlave of vain glory, and brutiſh fear. I deſire that you may underſtand the Truth, I have propoſed certain Queſtions and Interrogatories to him, whereby I have found that he knows nothing: So that if you knew what I propounded, and what anſwer he made thereto, you would certainly give ſentence that he is altogether ignorant in our Doctrine, &c.

His Martyrdom.

And according to this his prediction, he was ſlain by the procurement of Creſcens: being beheaded An. Chriſti 139. Suffering Martyrdom with much cheerfulneſs under Verus the Emperor: or as Epiphanius ſaith, under Adrian.

Tatianus, a learned man, writeth thus of it; Creſcens (ſaith he) being in Rome, paſſed all men in that filthy and unnatural ſin of Sodomie, defiling himſelf with mankinde; inferiour alſo he was to no man in covetouſneſs. He taught, that death was not to be feared, yet himſelf was ſo extreamly fearful of it, that he procured Juſtins death, as it were for a great evil: Becauſe that he preaching the Truth, reprehended the Philoſophers as gluttonous and deceitfull perſons.

His zeal againſt Hereſies.

He confuted Marcian the Heretick; and the Valentinians: He complained to the Emperor Antoninus Pius of the cruelty of the Proconſul in Aſia againſt the Chriſtians, who forbad them to read any Books that ſpake of Chriſt.

His Sayings

His uſual ſaying was, That which the Soul is in the Body, that are Chriſtians in the World: for as the Soul is in, but not of the Body: ſo Chriſtians are in, but no part of the World.

Alſo, It is beſt of all not to ſin: and next to that, to amend upon the puniſhment.

Again, That it is the greateſt ſlavery in the World to be ſubject to ones own paſſions.

His Zeal.

He was one that did not only ſuffer in his Saviours Cauſe: but took great pains in defending it againſt all oppoſitions in his times. He gat much repute for his conſtant zeal againſt Idolatry, and Superſtition, and perſwading the Gentiles to leave it, as a vain and unprofitable ſervice: declaring unto them the excellency and benefit of the true Worſhip of God: So that he was a bleſſed Inſtrument to bring many out of that miſerable condition, cheerfully to imbrace the Faith of Chriſt crucified.

His Works.

His works are theſe: A Dialogue with Triphon the Jew: An Apology to the Senate of Rome: Another to Antoninus Pius: An Oration to the Gentiles, with ſome Epiſtles: One Ad Zenam, & Serenum: Altera ad Diognetum. Paranetica Oratio ad Græcos.

The life of Irenæus, who dyed An. Chriſti. 182.

His birth & education.

Renæus was born in Aſia, of Greek Parents, as both his name and writings do declare. In his younger years he was a ſcholar to, and a conſtant hearer of Polycarp, Biſhop of Smyrna. In his riper years he went into France, and was Ordained Miniſter by Photinus Biſhop of Lyons, and ſome other Presbyters.

Ordained Miniſter.

His zeal againſt Hereſies.

At this time the Church of Chriſt was in great trouble, both by reaſon of the Perſecution raiſed by forraign Enemies, but eſpecially by reaſon of Errors, and Sects which then ſprung up in that time, againſt which he diligently laboured, and wrote much. His Nature did well agree with his Name, for he was a great lover of Peace, and endeavoured to the uttermoſt to procure Unity when Controverſies aroſe in the Church: And therefore when the great controverſie about keeping Eaſter day was renewed, & Victor the Biſhop of Rome would have excommunicated the Eaſtern Church as Schiſmaticks, for diſagreeing with him therein: Irenæus, with other Brethren of the French Church, being ſorry to ſee contentions amongſt Brethren for ſuch a trifle, met together in a Council, and by common conſent wrote Letters unto Victor, ſubſcribed with their names, intreating him to alter his purpoſe, and not to proceed to Excommunicate his Brethren for that matter; and although themſelves agreed with him in obſerving the ſame time, yet by many ſtrong arguments and reaſons, they exhorted him not to deal ſo rigorouſly with thoſe who followed the cuſtom of their Country in obſerving another day. He wrote alſo diverſe other Letters abroad concerning the ſame contention, declaring the Excommunication of Victor to be of none effect.

He was ſtudious of peace.

He is made Biſhop of Lyons in France.

After the Martyrdom of Photinus, he was made Biſhop of Lyons, where he continued about the ſpace of 23 years: By his frequent, faithful, and powerful Preaching, and by his holineſs of life, he brought moſt of that City from Gentiliſm to the knowledge and ſervice of the true God. But the common Enemy of mankinde, envying the progreſs of the Goſpel, and the ſalvation of ſo many Souls, beſide the publick Perſecution, ſtirred up a ſpi[rit] Error, and falſehood in ſome Hereticks, (as Montanus, Theodoſius, Alcibiades, [a]nd Maximilla) whereby he greatly diſturbed the Peace of the Church. Hereupon Irenæus, and his fellow-Laborers, to ſhew their care of the Brethren, ſent abroad large Epiſtles of things done amongſt them: They ſent alſo the Tenets of Montanus into Aſia with their judgements upon them. They wrote wrote likewiſe Letters to Eleutherius, then Biſhop of Rome, deſiring him heartily to endeavour to keep the Church in unity; and when they could find no fitter a perſon for ſo weighty a buſineſs, they made choice of Irenæus for his holineſs, gravity, and ſincerity, whom they knew to be willing to undergo all travel, danger, and labour for Chriſts cauſe, and the Churches good: Him therefore they ſent to Rome, writing by him in this manner: He is ſent to Rome.

Father Eleutherius, We wiſh you health in all things and always in God: We have requeſted Irenæus our Brother, and fellow-Laborer, to deliver theſe Letters, whom we pray you to accept of as a zealous follower of the will of Chriſt, &c.

His Writings.

This Irenæus wrote five Books againſt the Hereſies of his times, which are yet extant; in the firſt of which, dilating upon the infinite profundity of matters invented by Valentinus, mixed with many Errors, he diſcloſeth openly the malice of the Heretick, being cloaked, and concealed, as it were a Serpent hid in his den: For revealing their profane Ceremonies, and deteſtables myſteries, he writeth thus: Some (ſaith he) prepare their Wedding Chamber, and accompliſh the ſervice to be ſaid over them that are to be conſecrated with charmed words: And having thus done, they call it a Spiritual Marriage, conformable to the celeſtial copulation. Some bring them to the water, and in Baptizing, ſay thus: In the Name of the unknown Father of all things, In the Truth, Mother of all things, and in him which deſcended upon Jeſus. Some others pronounce Hebrew words, to the end that young Converts might be the more amazed. And in his third Book, he wrote that Valentinus came to Rome, in the time of Hyginus, ninth Biſhop in ſucceſſion after the Apoſtles: And alſo Cerdon another Heretick, who ſometimes proteſted the true Faith, and privily taught the contrary: Afterward he confeſſed his error, and yet again, being reprehended for the corrupt Doctrin which he had taught, he refrained the company of the Brethren: He taught that God who preached in the Law, and Prophets, was not the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. That Chriſt was known, but the Father of Chriſt was unknown, &c.

The prophaneneſs of Hereticks.

The Immutability of Cerdon.

After him ſucceeded Marcion of Pontus, a ſhameleſs Blaſphemer, which encreaſed this Doctrine.

He tells us alſo in his ſecond, Book that the working of Miracles was frequent in his time. Some of the Brethren (ſaith he) and ſometimes the whole Church of ſome certain place, by reaſon of ſome urgent cauſe, by Faſting, and Prayer, have brought to paſs that the ſpirits of the dead have returned into their bodies; and ſo by the earneſt Prayers of the Saints, they have been reſtored again to life, and have lived with us many years. Some by the like means have expelled Devils, ſo that they which were delivered from evil ſpirits, have embraced the Faith, and were received into the Church: Others have the Spirit of the Propheſie to fore-know things to come: they ſee Divine Dreams, and Prophetical Viſions: Others cure the ſick, and diſeaſed, and by laying on of their hands reſtore them to health. For the gracious gifts of the Holy Ghoſt are innumerable, which the Church, diſperſed through the whole World, having received, diſpenſeth daily in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, crucified under Pontus Pilat, to the benefit of the Gentiles, &c.

Miracles continued in the Church.

Whilſt he was Biſhop of Lyons, the ſtate of the Church was very unquiet, troubleſome and full of danger, becauſe the Roman Emperour had not called in the Edicts of the fourth Perſecution: But in this dangerous time, Irenæus was valiant, laboured exceedingly by Prayer, Preaching, Diſputing, Inſtructing, and Reproving with patience and wiſdom: Seeking the loſt, ſtrengthening the weak, recalling the wandring, binding up the broken hearted, and confirming thoſe that were ſtrong: Whereupon Tertullian ſaith, Tanta vitæ integritate, & Doctrinæ ſinceritate gregi is preſidet, &c. He governed the flock of Chriſt with ſuch integrity of life, and ſincerity of Doctrine, that he was loved exceedingly by his own, and feared by others: But in the latter end of Marcus Antoninus Verus, God ſent Peace to his Church, ſo that the Chriſtians lived ſecurely: held Councels, and did Preach freely: as alſo in the raign of Commodus, who ſucceeded him: But in the raign of Severus the next Emperor, he being a bloody and cruel man, was raiſed the fifth Perſecution againſt the Church, to the Martyrdom of many thouſands: but eſpecially it raged at Lyons, in ſo much as the blood of the ſlaughtered slaughtered Christians ran down the streets: and at last this blessed Saint, with many other of his flock, were carried between two hills, where was a Cross on the one hand, and an Idol of the other, where they were put to their choice, to go either to the Cross to suffer, or to the Idol to live; but they chose the Cross, where they all constantly suffered Martyrdom, about the year 182. Irenaus being about the age of 60 years; or as some say 90.

His Martyrdom.

His Sayings

He used to compare the Hereticks and Schismaticks of his time to Æsops Dog, that lost the substance of Religion, whilst they gaped too earnestly after the shadow.

Considering the vanity of all earthly things, he said, What profit is there in that honour which is so short-lived, as that perchance it was not yesterday, neither will be to morrow? And such men as labor so much for it, are but like froth, which though it be uppermost, yet is unprofitablest.

Erasmus thinks that he wrote in Latin: but Hierom reckons him amongst the Greek Fathers: and even till this day some of his Works are extant in Greek, which shews him to be a Grecian.

TERTVLLIAN

The Life of Tertullian who dyed Anno Christi 202.

His Birth & Education.

TErtullian was born in Carthage, his father was a Centurion of the Proconsular Order. He was carefully educated in all manner of learning, wherein he profited so much, that Lactantius saith of him, he was in omni genere doctrinæ peritus, skilled in all kind of Learning: Hierom saith, that his Works contained cunctam seculi Doctrinam, all sorts of Learning. Vincentious Lyrinensis saith, Inter Latinos omnes hic facile princeps judicandus, that amongst the Latine Fathers he was of chiefest account. His Works which he hath left to us, shew that he was excellently versed in Physicks, Mathematicks, and History. He was emnient for his study of, and knowledge in the Civil Law. Afterwards falling to the study of Divinity, he attained to such excellent skill therein, that at Rome he was made a Presbyter, where he remained to the middle of his age.

His excellent Learning.

He is Ordained Presbyter.

He flourished under the Emperor Severus, Anno Christi 183. And burning in holy zeal, he became a great opposite to the Hereticks of those times, Marcion, Valentinian, Praxea, Hermogenes, &c. He was very expert both in Greek and Latin, and had great acuteness in disputing, and writing eloquently, as his Books do do ſufficiently declare: So that Vincentius Lyrinenſis ſaith, that the force of his arguments was ſuch, that whom he could not perſwade, them he compelled to conſent to him. God raiſed him in the time of a great Perſecution, to be as a pillar or ſtay to his poor afflicted Church: For when the Chriſtians were vexed with wrongs, and falſly accuſed by the Gentiles, Tertullian taking their cauſe in hand, defended them againſt their Perſecutors, and their ſlanderous accuſations, ſhewing that they never intended any ſtirs, or rebellions, either againſt the Empire, or Emperors of Rome, for ſo much as the manner of Chriſtians was to pray for the proſperous eſtate of their Governors. And whereas they were falſely accuſed to be enemies to mankind, how can that be (ſaith he) when as the proper Office of Chriſtians is to pray for all men, to love their Enemies, never requiting evil for evil, whereas all others do profeſs only to love their friends, and ſcarcely them? And as touching the horrible ſlander of murthering Infants, how can that be true (ſaith he) in the Chriſtians, whoſe cuſtom is to abſtain from all blood, and things ſtrangled, ſo that it is not lawful for them when they feed at their Tables to meddle with the blood of any Beaſts? And as for filthy copulations, no ſort of men are more free then they, who have ever been the greateſt obſervers of chaſtity, & if they could, have choſen to live in perpetual Virginity all their lives long; if they could not, their manner is to contract Matrimony for the avoiding all Whoredom, and Fornication. Neither can it be proved, that the Chriſtians do Worſhip the Sun; which falſe ſurmiſe (ſaith he) ariſeth only from this, Becauſe they uſe to pray towards the Eaſt. Much leſs was there any of them ſo mad as to Worſhip an Aſſes Head, the occaſion of which ſlander aroſe from the Jews worſhipping the Jaw bone of an Aſs, from the ſtory of Sampſon, which therefore was falſely and wrongfully charged upon the Chriſtians. Likewiſe againſt all other lyes and ſlanders raiſed by the Heathen againſt the Chriſtians, he clearly purgeth them, and evidently proves that they were perſecuted not for any deſerts of theirs, but only out of an hatred to their name and Profeſſion.

He defends the Chriſtians.

He ſheweth alſo that by thoſe grievous perſecutions, the Religion or number of Chriſtians was nothing impaired but increaſed rather. The more (ſaith he) we are mown down by you, the more we riſe up. The blood of the Chriſtians proves the ſeed of the Church. For what man (ſaith he) beholding the painful torments, and the perfect patience of the Chriſtians, will not ſearch and enquire into the cauſe? and when he hath found it out, will not conſent, and agree to both? and when he agreeth to it, who will not be willing, and deſirous to ſuffer for it? So that this Profeſſion can never be extirpated, ſeeing the more it is cut down, the more it encreaſeth. For every man ſeeing, and wondering at the ſufferings of the Saints, is moved thereby the more to ſearch into the cauſe; and in ſearching he finds it, and in finding, he follows it.

Perſecution increaſeth Religion.

And as Tertullian thus beſtirred himſelf in defending the innocency of the Chriſtians, ſo he compiled many excellent and fruitful Works, whereof ſome are extant, others are not to be found. By theſe excellent Apologies of his, he perſwaded the Emperour Severus to favour the Chriſtians, who prayed for his proſperity, and imputed the ſlaughter of his Subjects at Bizantium, as a juſt judgement upon them for the effuſion of ſo much Chriſtian blood.

His learned works.

Having written excellently againſt the Hereticks of his time, in the end of his Book he made a Catalogue of all the Hereticks that then tore the Bowels of the Church: Yea he continued theſe labours when the Perſecution was at the hotteſt, not hiding his head, though the times were ſo dangerous.

This was counted an unparalleld crime in Mr. T. Edwards

Once in great triumph, all the Emperour Severus his Souldiers, for the greater pomp, were to put on Crowns of Bayes; but one Chriſtian Souldier there was amongſt them, who wore it on his Arm; and being demanded the reaſon, he boldly anſwered, Non decet Chriſtianum in hac vita Coronari, that a Chriſtian ought not to wear his Crown in this life: upon which occaſion Tertullian wrote his Book De Corona Militis. Cyprian when he would read Tertullian, uſed to ſay, Da Magiſtrum, give me my Maſter. His manner was conſtantly to pray thrice a day, at the third, ſixth, and and ninth hours. Writing De quatuor noviſſimis, of Death, Judgement, Heaven, and Hell, he ſaith, Hæc nos aliquando riſimus, cum de vobis fuimus: fiunt, non naſcuntur Chriſtiani. I ſometimes ſcoffed at theſe things when I was a Heathen; I now perceive that we are not born, but made Chriſtians. He was converted by reading the Scriptures, and the labours of other learned and holy men. In reading the Scriptures, he found them full of Majeſty, and truth: And ſaith he, Quicquid agitur, prænunciabatur: What ſoever is done, was in them foretold; and after his converſion, he was taken up night and day in the reading of them, and did with great pains get much of them by heart, and that ſo exactly that he knew each period. He highly commended Severus, for that, knowing many Noble men and women to be Chriſtians, he did not only not puniſh them, but greatly praiſed them, and did publickly withſtand ſuch as were their enemies. Yet notwithſtanding the great Learning, and famous Vertues of this worthy man, through envy (as it is conceived) at the Roman Clergy, he fell into the Error of Montanus: ſo that, though the glory of ſome of his writings was darkned by his Errors, yet his Learning ſhewed in thoſe very writings is admired by all Poſterities; in ſo much as Cyprian, that excellent Martyr, would let no day paſs without reading ſome part of him. He dyed in Peace about the 63 years of his age, Anno Chriſti 202.

Some of his uſual ſayings were theſe,

The Life of Clemens Alexandrinus, who flouriſhed, Anno Chriſti, 196.

Cultetus ſaith, that the Parentage, Country, Birth, Breeding, and manner of Converſion of Clemens are uncertain, ſome would have him to be born at Athens: But certain it is, that he was the Diſciple of Pontenus, who moderated in the Catechiſtical School at Alexandria, and after his death Clemens ſucceeded in that Office, whence he was called Alexandrinus. He moſt flouriſhed about the year of Chriſt, 196. He was endowed with all manner of Polite Learning, and was ordained Fresbyter in Alexandria, where, by his fervent zeal and piety he much propagated the Chriſtian faith.

His Learning and Ordination.

Photinus ſpeaking of his writings, ſaith thus of them; Dictio eſt florida, quæq; aſſurgit in Majeſtatem cum ſua vitate conjuncta, in quibus etiam eſt eruditio multa, & decens. That the language is flouriſhing, & ariſeth into a certain majeſty joined with ſweetneſs, wherein is much Learning in a comly manner adorned and ſet forth. He was an excellent Hiſtorian, and a zealous Confuter of the Hereſies of his times.

His zeal againſt hereſies.

He

He wrote many Works, moſt of which are periſhed with time, to the great prejudice of the Church, and grief of the Learned: Only three remain, Προτρεπτικὸς ad Gentes: Pædagogus: & Stromata. In the firſt, he exhorts the Gentiles and Heathens to embrace the Chriſtian Faith. In the ſecond, he informs thoſe which were newly converted how to carry themſelves. In the third, he directs grown Chriſtians in the Doctrines which were fit for them in that eſtate. He complains much of the decay of zeal and of the want of the power of godlineſs amongſt Profeſſor in his time. His writings.

He was Maſter to Origen, who alſo ſucceeded him in his place in Alexandria. He was excellently verſed in the Holy Scriptures, and very careful to preſerve the Doctrines which he had received from his Predeceſſors in purity; whereupon in his firſt Book entituled Stromatôn, he thus writeth: This preſent Tract of mine is not made for any Oſtentation, but theſe Monuments are laid up as helps againſt weakneſs of memory in my old age, that it may be to me a plain Image and Portracture of that effectual and lively Doctrine which I was thought worthy to hear, &c. The time and manner of his death is uncertain.

His ſayings

He uſed to ſay, That ſuch as adorn themſelves with gold, and think themſelves bettered thereby, are worſe then gold, and not Lords of it, as all that have it ought to be.

Out of the depth and bowels of the Earth hath God diſcovered and ſhewed gold unto men, and they have made it the occaſion of all miſchief and wickedneſs.

Gold to many men is much dearer then their Faith and honeſty: and the love of it makes many ſo covetous, as if they were to live here for ever.

Avarice is not the vice of gold, but of men which uſe it wickedly.

ORIGEN

The Life of Origen, who dyed Anno Chriſti 220.

ORigen was born Anno Chriſti 189 His Father, Grand-Father, and Great Grand-Father were Chriſtians. His birth

He was by his Father Leonides trained up from his Infancy in the Chriſtian Religion, & other good Literature, but eſpecially in the knowledge of the ſacred Scriptures, who demanded of him daily a certain task, and cauſed him to rehearſe the ſame: and he (though a childe) reſted not in the bare words of the Scripture, but ſought farther into the profound ſence, and meaning of them, ſo that divers times he would gravel his His parentage and education.

Father in the queſtions which he propounded to him: For this his Father checked him to his face, admoniſhing him not to ſearch beyond the capacity of his years, nor beyond that the plain letter gave to underſtand: Yet inwardly he rejoyced greatly, yielding unto God hearty thanks, who had made him the Father of ſuch a ſon: Yea, he many times uncovered the Breaſt of his Son as he lay aſleep, and kiſſed it, as the Temple wherein the Holy Ghoſt had taken up his reſidence: He was called Origen Adamantius: The firſt name was given him for his ſublime and Divine ſpeculations, who by ſweet and melliſluous Allegories carries his Readers affections from terrene to heavenly meditations and contemplations: The ſecond name he had from the nature of the Adamant, whoſe luſtre and hardneſs giveth it renown: for ſuch was this mans Noble and Generous minde, that he was not daunted, nor affrighted with any dangers, or afflictions whatſoever.

His early deſire of Martyrdom

When he was but ſeventeen years old, his Father being carried to Priſon, he had ſuch a fervent minde to ſuffer Martyrdom with him, that he would have thruſt himſelf into the Perſecutors hands, had it not been for his Mother, who in the night-time privily ſtole away his cloathes, and his very ſhirt alſo: whereupon more for ſhame to be ſeen naked, then for fear to die, he was conſtrained to remain at home: Yet when he could do no more, he wrote a Letter to his Father in Priſon, in which he exhorted him thus, Vide Pater, ne quid mea cauſa ſecus facias: See, O Father, that you do not change your reſolution for my ſake.

He encourages his Father.

After the death of his Father, and the confiſcation of all his goods to the Emperor, he with his poor Mother and ſix Brethren were brought to ſuch extream poverty, that he was forced to ſuſtain himſelf and them by teaching a Grammar School, till at length, being weary of that Profeſſion, he wholly betook himſelf to the ſtudy of the Scriptures and Divinity: He alſo ſtudied the Languages, and profited very much in the knowledge of Hebrew, and other Tongues, comparing the Hebrew Text with the Septuagint, as alſo with other Tranſlations of Aquila, Symachus, and Theodoſion: and thus caſting himſelf upon the Divine Providence for his ſubſiſtence, it pleaſed God, that he was entertained by a religious and rich Matron, together with his Mother, and Brethren.

His ſtudies.

God provides for him.

This Gentlewoman had alſo in her houſe at the ſame time a certain man of Antioch, a notable Heretick, who ſo plauſibly demeaned himſelf, that ſhe entertained him as her dear friend and ſon: Origen being by this means neceſſitated to frequent his company, ſhewed forth a manifeſt proof of his cleaving to the right and true Faith: For when as a great multitude not only of Hereticks, but of the Orthodox alſo frequented the Lectures of this Paulus (for ſo was his name) being counted a wiſe and profound man, yet Origen would never be perſwaded to join with him in Prayer, deteſting his Heretical Doctrines.

His hatred of Hereſie.

During this time he applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of Rhetorick & other humane Learning, wherein he profited exceedingly: and ſo being well accompliſhed with Learning, and the Catechiſt-School at Alexandria being void at that time, every one being forced away by the Thunderbolt of Perſecution, he ſet upon Preaching there, being now about 18 years old.

Unto his Lectures many of the Gentiles reſorted, and were, by Gods bleſſing upon his Miniſtry, converted, as one Plutarch, who was afterwards crowned with Martyrdom, and Heracles his Brother, who afterward ſucceeded Demetrius in the Biſhop-rick of Alexandria, and many others. In this imployment he proſpered exceedingly, and purchaſed to himſelf a famous name amongſt all the faithful, in that he cheerfully imbraced and incouraged all the Martyrs, not only of his acquaintance, but even ſuch as were unknown unto him. He viſited ſuch as were in deep Dungeons and cloſe Impriſonment, encouraged them when they were to receive their laſt ſentence, and after their ſentence pronounced: yea he accompanyed them to the place, of Execution, putting himſelf often into great danger thereby: He boldly imbraced, and kiſſed them at their farewel, ſo that once the Heathens in their furious rage had ſtoned him to death, if the Divine power of God had not marvellouſly delivered him. And the ſame Divine Power and Providence of God did at many other times protect and defend him, even ſo oft as cannot be told, being aſſaulted by the Adverſaries for his prompt minde, and invincible courage in publiſhing the Doctrine of Chriſt.

The Gentiles hated him extreamly.

Yea, ſo extreamly was he hated by the Infidels, that Souldiers were oft fain to be hired to watch about his houſe by the multitudes of thoſe that repaired to him to be inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith; and the Enemies rage was ſo vehemently bent againſt him for this cauſe, that he could not paſs ſafely in the ſtreets of Alexandria; he was alſo forced oft to change his lodging, thereby to prevent the purſuers. As he taught, ſo he lived; and as he lived, ſo he taught: and Gods Grace working exceedingly with and by him, multitudes were converted to the Chriſtian Faith by his Miniſtry: Hereupon Demetrius the Biſhop, divolved the whole charge and care of the School upon him alone, and he judging the reading of Humanity to be out of ſeaſon, wholly applyed himſelf to Divinity-Lectures: and afterwards (his neceſſities being urgent) upon the advice of his friends he ſold all his Authors of Humanity, which he had diligently peruſed, and now lay by him, to one, upon condition that he ſhould allow him two pence a day for his maintenance, wherewith he contented himſelf: And to cut off all occaſions of youthly concupiſcence, all the day long he ſpent in the forenamed exerciſes, and a great part of the night he ſpent in meditating upon the holy Scriptures, taking his reſt only for a few hours, and that not in his bed, but on the bare ground: He uſed alſo faſting often, and expounding the ſaying of our Saviour literally, would not wear two Coats, neither Shooes, but went bareſoot, not taking care for the time to come with a greedy or a covetous deſire. He inured himſelf to cold and nakedneſs, and abſtinence from Wine, even to the amazement of his familiar friends, and to the offence of many who would willingly have relieved his neceſſities: By theſe means he was in great danger (through weakneſs of limbs, and faintneſs of body) to have deſtroyed and caſt away himſelf: Yet this his ſtrict courſe of life won many, not of the common people only, but of the wiſe, learned and rich, to become zealous followers of his Doctrine; many of which in thoſe times of Perſecution ſuffered for the ſame, as you may ſee more at large in my General Martyrologie.

The fruit of his Miniſtry.

His Chaſtity

He gelded himſelf.

Having many Matrons and Virgins, who upon ſundry occaſions reſorted to him, to prevent temptations to uncleanneſs, miſtaking thoſe words of our Saviour Chriſt, There are ſome that make themſelves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven ſake, he gelded himſelf, the rather to prevent ſuch ſlanderous reports as might be raiſed of him, to the ſcandal of the Goſpel.

He is ordained a Presbyter.

The Church of Achaia being at this time vexed with divers Hereſies, Origen was ſingled out, and being furniſhed with Letters Teſtimonial from the Church, was ſent to confute them. As he paſſed through Paleſtine, he was by the Biſhops ordained a Presbyter, that thereby he might be armed with the more Authority againſt the Hereticks: wherein he did not run before he was ſent.

He is envyed by his great friend

But his Life and Doctrine grew ſo renowned and eminent, as ſtirred up envie in the hearts of ſome againſt him, eſpecially in Demetrius the Biſhop, who had formerly loved and preferred him: So that now on the contrary, he did all he could to darken and obſcure his fame: Hereupon he ript up Origens faults, and by his Writings publiſhed them to the World, upbraiding him eſpecially with that raſh and inconſiderate act of diſmembring himſelf, for which he judged him unfit for the Miniſterial Office: Thus in the height of Origens fame theſe things were divulged, and his adverſary was potent, and thereupon he was forced to give way to the ſtorm, and to yield to the importunity of his enviers, and ſo left Alexandria, yet always retained his conſtancy and courage, Preaching the Goſpel with all diligence and painfulneſs, ſtriving to convert many to Chriſt, not troubling the Church with Schiſm, nor yet requiting his Adverſary with ill language, but on the contrary, ſpeaking well of his ſlanderers. The principal place wherein he taught was Cæſarea of Paleſtine, where he inſtructed many in the Faith, and ſaw the fruits of his labours in the Converſion of many to God, which afterwards proved famous in the Church of Chriſt. Mammæa alſo the Mother of Alexander Severus the Emperour hearing of his fame, ſent for him to Antioch, and after ſhe had been inſtructed by him in the Chriſtian Faith, diſmiſſed him honourably.

He is forced to leave Alexandria.

He inſtructs the Emperours Mother.

He reclaimed Ambroſe.

After this he wrote a learned Epiſtle to Philip the Emperour, who was deemed the firſt Chriſtian King of the Romans. He reclaimed Ambroſe from the Hereſie of the Marcionites. He never affected wealth, but contented himſelf in a low condition, whereas having ſo many and great friends, he might have abounded in wealth if he had pleaſed.

Afterwards he returned to Alexandria again, and laboured hard in the affairs of the Church, ſo that he continued above the ſpace of 52 years in Teaching, Writing, Confuting, Exhorting, and Expounding the Scriptures, even to the time of Decius and Gallus.

His perſecutions.

Divers and great perſecutions he ſuſtained, and ſometimes was ſo eagerly purſued, that ſcarce any ſhifting of Place or Country could preſerve him. In the Reign of Decius, for the Doctrine of Chriſt he under-went bands and torments in his body, rackings with bars of Irons, Dungeons, beſides terrible threats of death and burning; and divers and ſundry other torments which he manfully and conſtantly ſuffered for Chriſt. At length hearing that ſome Chriſtians were carried to an Idol-Temple to force them to Sacrifice, he out of his zeal, ran thither to encourage and diſſwade them from it. This was the opportunity which his Adverſaries expected, and therefore, letting go the other, they laid hold upon him, putting him to his choice, whether he would offer Incenſe to the Idol, or have his body defiled with a fowl and ugly Black-More, which they had prepared for the purpoſe. Origen being in a miſerable ſtraight, at laſt choſe rather to offer Incenſe then to have his chaſt body polluted by ſo filthy a creature; Then did they preſently put Incenſe into his trembling hands, and whileſt he demurred upon it, they took his hands and cauſed him to throw it into the fire: whereupon they preſently cryed out, Origen hath ſacrificed, Origen hath ſacrificed. After which fact he was excommunicated by the Church; and ſo being filled with ſhame and ſorrow, he left Alexandria and went into Judea, and when he came to Jeruſalem, being well known for his learned Expoſitions, and gift of Utterance, he was intreated by the Miniſters to beſtow a Sermon upon the People in the Church and open Aſſembly, and after much importunity, being in a manner conſtrained thereto, he ſtood up, took his Bible, opened it, and the firſt place that he caſt his eye upon was this portion of Scripture; Unto the wicked ſaith God, Why doſt thou Preach my Laws, and takeſt my Covenant into thy Mouth? Which Text ſo ſoon as he had read, he clapſed the Book, ſat down, and burſt out into abundance of teats, the whole Congregation weeping with him alſo, ſo that he was unable to ſay any more unto them. After this he wandred up and down in great grief and torment of Conſcience, and wrote this Lamentation:

He is Excommunicated.

A ſpecial Providence.

Pſal. 50. 16.

His torments of Conſcience.

His Lamentation.

In the bitterneſs and grief of mind, I go about to ſpeak unto them which hereafter ſhall read this confuſed writing. But how can I ſpeak when my tongue is tyed up, and my lips dare not once move or wag? My tongue doth not his office, my throat is dryed up, and all my ſenſes and inſtruments are polluted with iniquity.

He means the living Saints.

But I will proceed, and firſt I will fall to the ground on my bare knees, and make my humble ſupplication unto the Saints that they will help me, filthy wretch, which by reaſon of my ſins dare not crave ought at the hands of God. O ye Saints and bleſſed of God, with wateriſh eyes, and wet cheeks ſoaked in dolour and pain, I beſeech you to fall down before the Seat of Almighty God, for me miſerable ſinner. Wo is me becauſe of the ſorrow of my heart: wo is me that my Soul is thus afflicted, wo is me that I am compaſſed thus on every ſide, and ſhut up in my ſin, ſo that there is no health in me. Wo is me my Mother that ever thou broughteſt me forth, for a skilful Lawyer to be overthrown in his unrighteous dealing, for a religious man to fall into extream impiety. Wo is me my Mother that broughteſt me forth, a righteous man to be converſant in unrighteouſneſs; an heir of the Kingdom of God to be now an inheritor of the Kingdom of the Devil: A Miniſter to be found wallowing in impiety: A man beautified with honour and dignity, to be in the end blemiſhed with ſhame and ignominy, yea beſet with many evils, and choaked with infamous doings. Wo is me my Mother that broughteſt me forth a lofty Turret, yet ſuddenly thrown to the ground: a fruitful Tree, yet quickly withered; a burning light, yet forthwith darkned: a running Fountain, yet by and by dryed up. Wo is me that ever I was decked with Gifts and Graces, and now ſeem pityfully to be deprived of all: But

But who will miniſter moiſture to my head? and who will give ſtreams of tears unto mine eyes, that I may bewail my ſelf in this my ſorrowful plight? Alas O my Miniſtry, how ſhall I lament thee? O all ye my friends tender my caſe, and pitty my perſon that am ſo dangerouſly wounded? Pity me, O ye all my friends, who am now become an abject perſon. Pity me O ye my friends, for that I am now with ſorrow come to naught. Pity me, O ye my friends, for that I have now troden under foot the Seal and Cognizance of my Profeſſion, and joined in league with the Devil. Pity me, O ye my friends, for that I am rejected, and caſt away from before the Face of God: It is for my lewd life that I am thus polluted and branded with open ſhame. The Lord hath made and engrafted me into a fruitful vine, but inſtead of pleaſant cluſters, I have brought forth pricking thorns, inſtead of grapes I have brought forth brambles.

But let the Wel-ſprings of tears be ſtirred up, and let my cheeks be watered: let them flow upon the Earth and moiſten it, for that I am born in iniquity, and ſoaked in ſin, &c. Alas! what have I felt, and how am I faln? Alas! how am I thus come to naught? There is no ſorrow comparable to my ſorrow; there is no affliction that exceedeth my affliction; no bitterneſs that paſſeth my bitterneſs: no lamentation more lamentable then mine; neither is there any ſin greater then my ſin, and there is no ſalve for me.

Where is that good Shepherd of Souls? Where is he that went down from Jeruſalem to Jericho, which ſalved and cured him which was wounded by the Thieves? Seek me out O Lord, that am faln from the higher Jeruſalem: which have broken the vow I made in Baptiſm: which have prophaned my Cogniſance in that I dealt injuriouſly with thy bleſſed Name. Alaſs! that ever I was Doctor, and now occupie not the room of a Diſciple! Thou knoweſt O Lord, that I fell againſt my will: whereas I went about to enlighten others, I darkened my ſelf: when I endeavoured to bring others from death to life, I brought my ſelf from life to death. When I minded to preſent others before God, I preſented my ſelf before the Devil. When I deſired to be found a friend and favourer of godlineſs, I was found a foe and furtherer of iniquity; when I ſet my ſelf againſt the Aſſemblies of the wicked, and reproved their doings, there found I ſhame, and the moſt peſtilent wound of the Devil. Some promiſed me that they would be Baptized: but after that I departed from them, the Devil the ſame night transformed himſelf into an Angel of Light, and ſaid unto me: When thou art up in the morning, go on, and perſwade them, and bring them to God: But the Devil, going before me prepared the way by whetting their wits to deviſe miſchief againſt me, ſilly wretch, ſowing in their mindes hypocriſie, diſſimulation and deceit. But I (O unhappy creature) skipping out of my bed at the dawning of the day, could not finiſh my wonted Devotion, neither accompliſh my uſual Prayers, deſiring that all men might be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the Truth, whileſt in the mean time I wrapped my ſelf in the ſnares of the Devil. I gat me to thoſe wicked men; I required of them to perform the Covenant made the night before, I ſilly ſoul, not knowing their ſubtilty, and we came to the Baptiſm.

O blinded heart, how didſt thou not remember? O fooliſh minde, how didſt thou not bethink thy ſelf? O witleſs brain, how didſt thou not underſtand? But it was the Devil that lulled thee aſleep, and in the end ſlew thy unhappy and wretched Soul. He bound my power and might, and ſo wounded me. I anſwered but in a word, and became reproachfully defamed. I ſpake without malice, yet felt I ſpite. The Devil raiſed an aſſembly about me, and pronounced againſt me that unjuſt ſentence, Origen hath ſacrificed. O thou Devil, what haſt thou done unto me? How haſt thou wounded me? I bewailed ſometimes the fall of Sampſon, but now have I faln worſe my ſelf: I bewailed formerly the fall of Solomon, but now have I faln far worſe my ſelf: I have bewailed formerly the ſtate of all ſinners, yet now am I plunged into ſin my ſelf: Sampſon had his hair cut off; but the Crown of glory is faln off my head. Sampſon loſt the carnal eyes of his body; but my ſpiritual eyes are put out. It was the wilyneſs of a woman that brought confuſion upon him: but it was my tongue that brought me into this ſinful condition: And as he afterwards wanted the comfort of his Earthly poſſeſſions: ſo my tongue by this wickedneſs hath deprived me of thoſe ſpiritual gifts, which ſometimes have flowen into me with heavenly riches: And as he endured thoſe things by leaving the Iſraelities, and cleaving unto forreiners; So I going about to ſave notorious ſinners, made my ſelf Captive to Captives, and a bondſlave unto ſin. Alaſs!

Alaſs my Church liveth, yet I am a Widdower. My Sons be alive, yet I am barren: Every creature rejoyceth, and I alone am deſolate and ſorrowful, &c. Bewail me, O ye bleſſed people of God, who am baniſhed from God: Bewail me who am deprived of all goodneſs. Bewail me who am deprived of the Holy Ghoſt. Bewail me, who am thruſt out of the Wedding Chamber of Chriſt. Bewail me, who was once thought worthy the Kingdom of God, but am now altogether unworthy. Bewail me, who am abhorred of the Angels, and ſevered from the Saints of God. Bewail me, for that I am condemned to eternal puniſhments. Bewail me, for that I am here on earth, and yet am tormented with the prick of conſcience. I do fear death for that I am wicked. I do fear the dreadful Day of judgement for that I am damned for ever. I do fear the puniſhment, for that it is eternal. I do fear the evil Angels that overſee the puniſhment, becauſe they are void of mercy. I do fear out of meaſure all the torments; and what I ſhall do I wot not, being thus on every ſide beſet with miſery. If there be any man that can, I beſeech him now to aſſiſt me with his earneſt prayers and ſorrowfull tears. For now it behoveth me to ſhed infinite tears for my great ſin: who knoweth whether the Lord will have mercy upon me, and whether he will pitty my fall? Whether he will tender my perſon? Whether he will be moved with my deſolation? Whether he will ſhew mercy unto me? Whether he will have reſpect to my humiliation, and incline his tender compaſſions towards me?

I will proſtrate my ſelf before the threſhold and porch of his Church, that I may intreat all people both ſmall and great, ſaying unto them, Trample and tread me under foot who am the unſavory ſalt; tread upon me, who have no taſte nor ſavour of God: tread upon me, which am fit for nothing. Now let the elders mourn, for that the ſtaff whereon they leaned is broken. Now let the young men mourn, for that their School-maſter is fallen. Now let the virgins mourn, for that the advancer of virginity is defiled. Now let the Miniſters mourn, for that their Patron and Defender is ſhamefully fallen. Wo is me, that I fell ſo lewdly: Wo is me that I fell moſt dangerouſly, and cannot riſe again. Aſſiſt me O holy Spirit, and give me grace to repent. Let the fountains of tears be opened, and guſh out into ſtreams, to ſee if that peradventure I may have the grace worthily & throughly to repent, and to wipe out of the Book of my conſcience the accuſations Printed therein againſt me. But thou O Lord, think not upon my polluted lips, neither weigh thou the tongue that hath uttered lewd things: but accept of my repentance, affliction, and bitter tears, the dolour of my heart and heavineſs of my ſoul, and have mercy upon me, and raiſe me up out of the mire of corruption, for the puddle thereof hath even choaked me up.

Wo is me, that was ſometimes a pearl gliſtering in the golden garland of glory, but now am thrown into the duſt, and troden in the mire of contempt. Wo is me that the ſalt of God now lieth on the dunghill. But how great ſtreams of lamentations ſhall cleanſe and purifie my humble heart? Now I will addreſs my ſelf, and turn my talk unto God; Why haſt thou lifted me up and caſt me down? For as thou haſt exalted me with the Divine word of thy heavenly wiſdom, ſo me thinks, I ſtick in the depth of ſin which my ſelf hath wrought. I had not committed this impiety, unleſs thou hadſt withdrawn thine hand from me. But it is thy pleaſure (O Lord) which art good to do all things graciouſly, and I on the other ſide, being a fool have fooliſhly fallen. But why, O Lord, haſt thou ſhut my mouth by thy holy Prophet David? Have I been the firſt that ſinned? Or am I the firſt that fell? Why haſt thou thus forſaken me being deſolate, and rejected and baniſhed me from amongſt thy Saints, and aſtoniſhed me when I ſhould preach thy Laws? What man is he that is born of a woman, that ſinneth not? What man is he that was ever converſant here on earth, and did no iniquity? This I ſay, becauſe thou haſt forſaken me. David himſelf, who hath ſhut up my mouth, ſinned too bad in thy ſight, yet upon his repentance thou receiveſt him to mercy. Peter that was a pillar, after his fall, wiped it away with ſalt tears, not continuing long in the puddle of his infidelity. But they in favour were thought worthy of mercy. Wo is me that I fell moſt wickedly. Wo is me that my adventure in this thing proved ſo unfortunate: But now I humbly beſeech thee O Lord, call me back, for that I tread a moſt perilous and deſtructive way. Grant me that good Guide and Inſtructer, the Holy Ghoſt, that I be not made a pricking Hedg-hog, and become an habitation of Devils:

but that I may tread under foot the devil that trod upon me, and overcoming his ſleights, may be again reſtored to the joys of thy ſalvation. Remember not, O Lord, the iniquity of thine humble ſuiter. Remember not, O Lord, mine iniquity, who made anſwer with wicked language.

Now all ye which behold my wound, tremble for fear, and take heed that ye ſlumber not, nor fall into the like crime: but rather let us aſſemble together and rend our hearts, and provoke ſtreams of tears to guſh out of our heads; for when theſe run and flow upon the earth, there will follow remiſſion of ſins; the pains will be avoided, and the torments ſhall not be felt. I mourn and am ſorry from the heart-root, O ye my friends that ever I ſo fell: I am fallen and am bruiſed, ſo that there is no health in me: Let the Angels lament over me, becauſe of this my dangerous fall. Let the Aſſemblies of the Saints lament over me, for that I am ſevered from their bleſſed ſocieties. Let the holy Church lament over me, for that I am wofully declined. Let all the people lament over me, for that I have my deaths wound.

I ſee the clouds in the skie ſhadowing the light from me, and the Sun hiding his bright beams: You all do now ſee that the Prophet David hath ſhut my mouth, I was conſtrained by the Biſhops to ſpeak ſome words of Exhortation, and taking the Book of Pſalms into my hands, I prayed, and opened the Book; and I lighted upon this ſentence which I am aſhamed to repeat, yet compelled to pronounce, Unto the wicked, ſaith God, Why doſt thou preach my Laws, and takeſt my Covenant in thy mouth? But bewail me, and lament this my bitter ſorrow: bewail me that am in the like caſe with the reprobate Jews; for that which was ſaid unto them by the Prophet, now ſoundeth alike in mine ears. What ſhall I do that am thus beſet with manifold miſchiefs? Alas O death, why doſt thou linger? Herein thou doeſt ſpite and bear me malice. O Satan, what miſchief haſt thou wrought unto me? How haſt thou pierced my Breaſt with thy poyſonous dart? Thinkſt thou that my ruine will avail thee any thing at all? Thinkſt thou to procure to thy ſelf any eaſe or reſt whilſt that I am grievouſly tormented? Who is able to ſignifie unto thee whether my ſins be not wiped and done away? Whether I have not eſcaped the pains which I grievouſly feared? Who is able to ſignifie unto thee, whether I ſhall not again be coupled with and made a companion to the Saints? O Lord, I fall down before thy Mercy-ſeat, have mercy upon me who mourn thus out of meaſure, becauſe I have greatly offended: I ſhed many ſalt and bitter tears, and every living creature hath lamented my miſerable condition. Why haſt thou broken down my hedge and ſtrong holds? The wild Boar out of the Wood hath deſtroyed me, and the wild Beaſts of the field have eaten me up. Rid my ſoul, O Lord from the roaring Lyon. The Aſſembly of the Saints doth make interceſſion for me who am an unprofitable ſervant. Shew mercy, O Lord, to thy wandring ſheep which is ſubject to the rending teeth of the ravenous wolf: Save me, O Lord, out of his mouth; ſuffer me not to become the ſacrifice of ſin; But ſend down upon me thy holy Spirit, that with his fiery countenance he may put to flight the crooked fiend of Hell, that I may be brought home again by thy Wiſdom, that the Bill of Sin written againſt me may be blotted out, that my lamentation may ceaſe in the evening, and that I may receive joy in the morning. Let my ſackcloth be rent aſunder, and gird me with joy and gladneſs. Let me be received again into the joy of my God: Let me be thought worthy of his Kingdom through the earneſt Petitions of the Church, which ſorroweth over me, and humbleth her ſelf to Jeſus Chriſt in my behalf: To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, be all glory and honour for ever and ever. Amen.

His Studiouſneſs.

Whilſt Origen was a Catechiſt at Alexandria, finding himſelf not ſufficient, neither able alone to ſearch out the profound myſteries of the holy Scripture, neither the interpretation and right ſenſe thereof, becauſe of the multitude that frequented his School from morning till night in ſeveral companies, one ſucceeding another, ſo that he wanted leiſure for his private ſtudies, he ordained Heraclas his familiar friend, who was expert in the holy Scripture and a profound Philoſopher, to be his fellow-helper, committing to him the inſtruction of the inferior ſort which were lately come to the Faith; reſerving to himſelf the teaching of thoſe that were farther and better entred.

Having alſo a great deſire to ſearch out the deep myſteries of the holy Scriptures, he he ſtudied the Hebrew Tongue, and bought Copies that were uſed amongſt the Jews: He ſearched out alſo other tranſlations beſides the vulgar, as that of Aquila, of Symachus, and of Theodoſion: Theſe being compacted together in one Volume, and the Pages divided into ſeveral Columns, ſetting each copy againſt other, and adding the Hebrew to them, he publiſhed the ſame, and intituled it Hexapla.

His converts many.

He wrote the firſt Commentaries on the Scriptures.

When the rumour was now every where ſpread abroad of the fame of Origen, many learned men came to try the truth of his Doctrine, and to have experience of his utterance in preaching; yea many Hereticks and famous Philoſophers reſorted to him, and were converted by him. Origen was the firſt that wrote Commentaries upon the ſacred Scriptures, being earneſtly ſollicited thereto by Ambroſe, who for his encouragement made him large allowance for his neceſſary expences, furniſhing him with above ſeven ſwift Notaries, who wrote that which he dictated to them.

He goeth into Arabia

Whileſt he continued at Alexandria, there came a Souldier with Letters from the Governour of Arabia to Demetrius the Biſhop of that Sea, and to the Lieutenant of Egypt, deſiring them with all ſpeed to ſend Origen to him, which might communicate to him ſome part of his Doctrine; Hereupon he took his voyage into Arabia, and inſtructed the Governour thereof, and hearing that Beryllus Biſhop of Boſtra in Arabia taught that our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, before his incarnation, had no being, and that he had no proper Divinity but only his Fathers Divinity dwelling in him about which Hereſie many Biſhops had dealt with him by conference and diſputation, and yet could not reclaim him) Origen was ſent for, who conferred with him at firſt to find the ground of his opinion, after which, perceiving him not to believe aright, he rebuked him, perſwaded him with reaſons, convinced him by manifeſt proofs, and ſo reſtored him to the truth.

His works.

He wrote 22. Tomes upon the Goſpel of St. John, 12. upon Geneſis, five upon the Lamentations of Jeremy: Annotations upon the firſt five and twenty Pſalms; two Books of the Reſurrection; one of Principal Beginnings; ten called Stromateis. He wrote alſo Commentaries upon Iſaiah in 30. Tomes; upon Ezekiel in 25. Tomes; upon the Canticles in ten Books, &c.

Whilſt Origen executed his Paſtoral Office at Cæſarea (which was after he had left Alexandria) many flocked to his Miniſtry, not only men of that Countrey, but alſo infinite Forreiners, who forſake their Native ſoil came to be his Diſciples: amongſt whom where Theodorus and Athenodorus, two brethren, who after they had continued with him five years, profited ſo much in the holy Scripture, that they were ordained Biſhops in Pontus. And now Origen being above ſixty years old, and much worn and waſted by reaſon of his inceſſant ſtudies and painful exerciſes, at length permitted that thoſe things which he had publickly preached and diſputed of, ſhould, by his Notaries, be copied out, which before he would not ſuffer to be done. About the ſame time alſo he wrote his Book againſt Celſus the Epicure, intituled the word of truth. Then 25. Tracts upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew; and 25 upon the Minor Prophets; he wrote alſo above an hundred Epiſtles.

He reclaims Hereticks.

About this time there aroſe ſome Hereticks in Arabia, who taught, that the ſoul dyeth together with the body, and that in the General Reſurrection they ſhould ariſe together, and be reſtored to life again. For which cauſe a Synod was congregated, and Origen was ſent for, who ſo ſtrenuouſly diſputed againſt theſe Hereticks, that he withdrew their ſeduced minds from this foul errour.

He is perſecuted.

Decius ſucceeding Philip in the Romans Empire, raiſed a perſecution againſt the Church: wherein, amongſt others, Origen ſuffered grievous things: the ſpitefull Devil deadly purſuing him with his whole Troop, ſtriving againſt him with all the might and ſleight that could be poſſibly invented, ſo that for the Doctrine of Chriſt, he ſuſtained impriſonments, torments of body, ſcourging at Iron ſtakes, ſtench of dark and loathſom dungeons, and for many days, his feet lay ſtretched four ſpaces aſunder in the ſtocks; all which he patiently endured, together with the terrible threats of fire, and all that the enemy could invent againſt him. After all which he died under Gallus and Voluſianus, being 69. years old, Anno Chriſti 220.

His death.

It is to be wondred at, what pious ejaculations, comfortable prayers and zealous exhortations exhortations he made, and gave to the Christians in the extremity of his sufferings, retaining his valour and constancy to the giving up of his Ghost.

One saith of him, Origeni nulla pars ætatis periit a studiis: That Origens whole life was a continued study. And another saith, Origenis ingenium sufficiebat ad omnia perdiscenda; that he had such pregnancy of wit that he could learn any thing: that he had a wonderful faculty in expressing himself ex tempore, and that he was wondrous quick and able to explicate obscure places of Scripture. Jerome stiles him Magistrum Ecclesiarum post Apostolos. Another saith, Quis ex Scriptoribus qui post Origenem vixere, non insigniter ab eo est adjutus; Who of all the writers that lived after Origen, that was not singularly holpen by his Labours.

His sayings.

He used to say, That Gods Providence hath ordained all things for some end and purpose. He made not malice, and though he can restrain it, yet he will not For. if malice were not, vertue should not have a contrary, and so could not shine so clear. For the malice of Josephs Brethren was the means whereby God brought about many admirable works of his providence, as the story sheweth

CIPRIAN

The Life of Cyprian, who dyed Anno Christi 259.

His birth & education.

Cyprian was an African, born in the ancient City of Carthage, and being educated in the study of the Liberal Arts, he profited so much therein, that whilest he was young, he was chosen Professor of Rhetorick. Yet was he at first a Gentile, and Idolator, loose and profane in his practise, and much addicted to the study of Magical Arts: but it pleased God, who had chosen him to a vessel of mercy for his own glory, to convert him by the means and Ministry of Cecilius, a godly Presbyter of Carthage, (whose name he ever afterwards bore;) and by the occasion of hearing him preach upon the History of the Prophet Jonas:

His Conversion.

His charity.

He is made Bishop.

His modesty

Immediatly upon his conversion, he distributed all his goods amongst the poor: And the Carthagenians perceiving in him a very great zeal and ardour for the propagation of the Christian Religion, they prevailed with him to be ordained a Presbyter, in which office he so worthily demeaned himself, that not long after he was made the Bishop of the Church of Carthage; and therein gave an excellent example of Modesty, Humility, Charity, Greatness of mind and Fidelity. His modesty appeared, in that, in all great and weighty businesses, he would never determin or act any thing of himself, but by the common consent and advice of his Presbyters, yea he, many times, called in the help and assistance of the whole Church; His humility appeared, in that he was never tenacious, nor wilfull in his own judgement, but what was wholsomly advised and counselled by his brethren and Collegues, that he willingly assented to. His charity was notably seen, in that he did not only commend the care of the poor to his Presbyters; but himself also, according to his ability, was alwayes forward in ministring to them. The greatness of his minde appeared in this speech of his, Si qui sunt, &c. If there be any, saith he, that think to adjoyn themselves to the Church, not by their prayers, but by their threats; not by their humiliation and satisfaction when they have scandalized the Brethren, but by their great words and menaces: let all such know, that the Church of the Lord will oppose them, and that the Tents of Christ will prove immovable, and not to be conquered by them. His fidelity will notably appear by his Epistles, wherein he excellently comforts the afflicted, recalls such as were faln, or commends the care of them to other Bishops of the Church, vigorously opposeth the Heretick and Schismaticks. Neither was he only a Spectator of the Martyrdom of others; but suffered himself to be proscribed, yea chose death rather then to betray the truth of the Gospel, or to approve of the least defection to the impious worship of the Gentiles.

His humility.

His charity.

His magnanimity.

His Fidelity

His Courage

By these means his fame increased so exceedingly, that he was not so much the Bishop of Carthage, as of all Africk, yea of Spain, the East, West and Northern Churches. Yea, he was judged the Father of all Christians.

And to the further setting forth (to the praise of Gods grace) of his glorious vertues wherewith he was endued, appearing as well in his own works, as described by other worthy Writers: he was courteous and gentle, loving and full of patience, and therewithal severe and impartial in his office. Furthermore he was most affable and kinde towards his Brethren, and took much pains in helping and releiving the Martyrs: Yea, he wrote Letters to the Elders and Deacons of his Bishopwrick, that with all study and endeavour they should gently entertain, and do all the Offices of love that possibly they could to the Martyrs in his absence. He was very prudent and circumspect: of a marvellous liberal disposition towards the Brethren that fled for refuge from other Countries: and so often as he had cause of absence, he committed the care of those poor men to his fellow Officers, writing to them that of their own proper goods they should help their banished Brethren to that which was necessary for them.

His Charity to Exiles.

He had also great skill in the fore-knowledge of future events. He was of so communicative a disposition, that he concealed nothing which he knew, but with meekness and willingness uttered it to others. He maintained Ecclesiastical Peace and Concord with those that differed from him in smaller matters. Lastly, he neither circumvented, nor did prejudice to any man: But did that which always seemed good in his judgement. He much addicted himself to reading; and would let no day pass wherein he read not some part of Tertullians Works, and when he called for him, he used to say, Da Magistrum, Give me my Master. He chiefly studied to keep his body continent, and clean from fleshly lusts, saying, That then his heart would be truly fit to attain to the full capacity and understand of the Truth, if once he could trample down Concupiscence.

His studiousness.

His Chastity.

A great Persecution being raised against the Church of Christ by Æmilianus, President of Egypt and by Paternus, and Galerius Maximus, Proconsuls of Africk, Cyprian, sheweth the true causes thereof in his fourth Book, Epist. the fourth, in these words.

We (saith he) must acknowledge and confess, that this turbulent oppression and calamity which hath wasted for the most part all our Churches, and doth dayly more and more consume it, ariseth chiefly from our own wickedness and sins whilst we walk not in the the way of the Lord, nor observe his Precepts left unto us for our instruction. Our Lord Christ observed the will of his Father in all points; but we observe not the will of the Lord, having all our minde and study set upon lucre and possessions: we are given to pride:

Sin the forerunner of Persecution

pride: full of emulation and diſſention: void of ſimplicity and faithful dealing: renouncing this World in word only, but not in deed; every man pleaſing himſelf, and diſpleaſing all thers; and therefore are we thus ſcourged and that worthily; for what ſtripes & ſcourges do we not deſerve, when as the Confeſſors themſelves, who formerly endured the trial of their Faith, and ought to be an example to the reſt in well doing, do now obſerve no Diſcipline? And therefore for their ſakes who proudly brag with ſwelling words of their former Confeſſion and Sufferings, theſe tormments come, even ſuch as do not eaſily ſend us to the Crown, except by the mercy of God, ſome being taken away by a quick death, do prevent the tedioufneſs of puniſhment. Theſe things do we ſuffer for our ſins and deſerts, as by the Lords threatning we have been forewarned, where he ſaith, If they ſhall forſake my Law, and will not walk in my Judgements, If they ſhall prophane my Inſtitutions, and will not obſerve my Precepts, I will viſit their iniquities with the rod, and their tranſgreſſions with ſcourges. Theſe rods and ſcourges we juſtly feel who neither pleaſe God with our good deeds, nor repent of the evil; wherefore (ſaith he) let us pray from the bottom of our hearts, and with our whole minde, and let us intreat his mercy who promiſeth that his loving kindneſs ſhall not be wholly taken away. Let us ask and we ſhall obtain, and though we be delayed, yet ſeeing we have grievouſly offended, let us continue knocking; for he hath promiſed that to them that knock it ſhall be opened: therefore with our Prayers, ſighs and tears, let us ſtill knock, and we ſhall be ſure to ſpeed, &c.

And in another part of his Epiſtle, he ſhews what vices were principally reigning amongſt the Chriſtians, viz. grievous diviſions and diſſentions amongſt the Brethren. For although theſe words were ſpoken to them in a Viſion, Petite & impetra bitis: Pray, and yet ſhall obtain: yet afterwards when it was required of the Congregation to direct their Prayers unto God in the behalf of certain perſons aſſigned to them by name, they could not agree about the perſons that were to be prayed for, but diſagreed in their Petitions, which thing did greatly diſpleaſe God, that ſpake unto them, Pray, and ye ſhall obtain, becauſe they were not uniform in voice and heart, neither was there one joint conſent amongſt the Brethren. Upon which occaſion Cyprian moveth them to Prayer with mutual agreement. For (ſaith he) if it be promiſed in the Goſpel, that whatſoever two or three ſhall agree upon to ask upon Earth, it ſhall be granted in Heaven, what ſhall then be done when the whole Church agree together? Or what if this Unanimity were amongſt the whole Fraternity? which Unanimity if it had been amongſt the Brethren, Non veniſſent fratribus hæc mala ſi in unum fraternitas fuiſſet animata, i. e. Theſe evils had not befaln the Brethren, if they had joined together in brotherly Unanimity. The ſins of Profeſſors.

Cyprian having thus deſcribed the cauſes of this Perſecution, ſets down a Viſion, wherein was ſhewed unto him by the Lord before the Perſecution came, what ſhould happen: The Viſion (ſaith he) was this; There was a certain aged Father ſitting, at whoſe right hand ſat a young man very ſad, and penſive, as one that with indignation is ſorrowful, with his hand upon his Breaſt, and an heavy countenance. On the other hand ſat a perſon having a Net in his hand, wherewith he threatned to catch the people that ſtood about; and as Cyprian marvelled hereat, it was ſaid unto him; The young man whom thou ſeeſt ſit on the right hand is ſad and ſorrowful, becauſe his Precepts are not obſerved: But he on the left hand danceth and is merry, for that occaſion is hence given to him to get power from the ancient Father to afflict men. This Viſion was ſeen long before this tempeſt of Perſecution happened, wherein was declared, that the ſins of the Chriſtians were the cauſe why Satan in this and in all other Perſecutions, did then, and ſtill doth get ſuch power, with his Net of deſtruction to rage againſt the blood of Chriſtian men: and all (ſaith Cyprian) becauſe we neglect Praying, and are not ſo vigilant therein as we ſhould be: wherefore the Lord, becauſe he loveth us, corrects us: corrects us to amend us: amends us to ſave us, &c. And further ſpeaking about this Viſion, he ſaith; To the leaſt of his ſervants, both ſinful and unworthy, hath God of his tender goodneſs vouchſafed to reveal theſe things: And tell him, ſaid God, that he be quiet, and of good comfort, for Peace will come, albeit there be a little ſtay for a while, for that ſome remain yet to be proved and tryed. A Viſion.

Another Vision. He had also another Vision, wherein he was admonished to use a spare dyet, and to be sober in his drink, lest his minde given to heavenly meditations, might be drawn away with worldy allurements, or oppressed with too much surfeiting upon meats and drinks, and thereby should be less apt and able to Prayer and spiritual Exercises.

He vindicates the Christians from scandals. Furthermore, whereas the Christians were charged by the Heathens as the causes of all publike calamities; he tells them that it was long before propheſied of by Christ, that towards the end of the World there should be Famine, Wars and Pestilences, which was rather to be imputed to their impious Idolatry, and contempt of the true God, then to Christians: which evils (saith he) are increased by the wickedness of men: For, Famem majorem facit rapacitas, quam siccitas. Famine comes more by the Avarice of men then by the drought of the Ayr: but the special cause thereof proceeds from the sheding of so much Christian blood. And whereas the Christians were condemned for not worshipping their Idols: he shewed that those Idols were no true Gods, but Images of certain dead Kings, which could neither save themselves from death, nor such as worshipped and trusted in them.

He goes into exile. In the beginning of this Persecution, Cyprian went into voluntary banishment, lest (as himself saith) he should do more hurt then good to the Congregation: And from the desolate places of his abode, where yet he was often sought after, he wrote to the Churches, shewing thereby the beseeming vertue of a faithful Pastor in that he took no less care of his Flock in his absence then when he was present.

A faithful Pastor.

He is again banished. After the death of the Emperour Decius, he returned to his place, but not long after he was again banished by Paternus, the Proconsul of Africa, into the City of Thurben. But when Paternus the Proconsul was dead, he came back again, and Galienus Maximus succeeding in the Office of Paternus, found Cyprian in a Garden, whereupon he caused him to be apprehended by his Sergeants, & to be carried before the Idols to offer Sacrifice; which when he would not do, the Proconsul brake forth into these words, saying, Long hast thou lived in a sacrilegious minde, and hast gathered together men of a wicked conspiracy, and hast shewed thy self an enemy to gods of the Romans, and to their holy Laws, neither could the sacred Emperours Valerianus and Galienus revoke thee to the Sect of their Ceremonies; wherefore I condemn thee to have thy head cut off: To this he answered joyfully; Do fully what belongs to your Office: and thereupon putting off his Apparel, he gave it to his Deacons, wishing them to give his Executioner 25 peices of gold in testimony of his love to him, and so kneeling down he covered his Eyes, and willingly submitted his Neck to the stroke of the Sword, suffering Martyrdom, Anno Christi, 259.

His apprehension.

His Martyrdom.

His courage. He was undaunted in the time of Persecution, so that neither his wives dissuasions, nor the Worlds frowns, nor the Malice of his Adversaries could affright him: He never turned Widdow emptie from him: He was the blinde mans Eyes, the lame mans Legs, the naked mans Garment: He called Cæcilius that converted him, Novæ vitæ parentem, the Father of his Christian life: His carriage was such, as it was hard to say, whether he was more loved or feared: He tells that the Church having enjoyed long Peace, all men studied their private wealth, so that Devotion, Religion, and good Discipline were quite neglected, and all estates were fearfully corrupted: Ergo sivit hoc flagellum Deus, therefore (saith he) God suffered this scourge of Persecution to reform it: In the time of a Pestilence he shewed much piety and charity, comforting some, administring to the wants of others, and stirring up others to do the like: He suffered under Valerianus and Gallienus.

His charity

His charity

Some of his usual sayings were these;

His sayings Ne dormiat in Thesauris tuis quod pauperi prodesse potest. Let not that sleep in thy Treasury that may be profitable to the Poor.

Duo nunquam veterascunt in homine, cor semper novas cogitationes machinando; Lingua vanas cordis conceptiones proferendo. Two things never wax old in man: the heart ever imagining new cogitations; the tongue ever uttering the vain conceptions of the heart.

Quod aliquando de necessitate amittendum est, sponte pro Divina remuneratione distribuendum est. That which a man must necessarily sometime part with, it's wisdom for a man to distribute it so that God may everlastingly reward him. Integritas

Integritas ibi nulla eſſe poteſt ubi qui improbos damnent deſunt, & ſoli qui damnentur occurrunt. There can be no integrity, whereas they which ſhould condemn the wicked are ever wanting, and they only which ſhould be condemned are ever preſent.

Sericum & purpurum indutæ, Chriſtum induere non poſſunt: Women that pride themſelves in putting on ſilk and purple, cannot lightly put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Fœminæ crines ſuos malo præſagio inficiunt: capillos enim ſibi flammeos auſpicati non metuunt: They which colour their locks with yellow and red, begin betimes to prognoſticate of what colour their hair ſhall be in Hell.

Qui ſe pingunt in hoc ſeculo aliter quam creavit Deus, metuant ne cum venerit reſurrectionis dies, artifex creaturam ſuam non recognoſcat. They which love to paint themſelves in this world otherwiſe then God created them, may juſtly fear that at the Reſurrection, their Creator will not know them.

Qui Pauperi elemoſynam dat, Deo ſuavitatis odorem ſacrificat, He that gives an alms to the Poor, offers a ſweet ſmelling Sacrifice unto God.

Contemnenda eſt omnis injuria præſentium malorum, fiducia futurorum bonorum: All injurie of evils preſent is to be neglected, for the hope of good things to come.

Nihil prodeſt verbis proferre virtutem, & factis deſtruere: To ſet out vertue in words, and by deeds to deſtroy the ſame, is nothing worth.

Cyprian in another Book mentioneth twelve abſurdities in the life of man, which are theſe;

Sapiens ſine operibus: A wiſe man without good works.
Senex ſine Religione: An old man without Religion.
Adoleſcens ſine Obedientia: A young man without Obedience.
Dives ſine Elemoſyna: A rich man without Alms.
Fœmina ſine Pudicitia: A woman without ſhamefaſtneſs.
Dominus ſine Virtute: A guide without Vertue.
Chriſtianus contentioſus: A contentious Chriſtian.
Pauper ſuperbus: A poor man that is proud.
Rex iniquus: A King that is unjuſt.
Epiſcopus negligens: A Biſhop that is negligent.
Plebs ſinæ Diſciplina: People without Diſcipline.
Populus ſine Lege: Subjects without Law.

The Life of Arnobius, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 330.

Arnobius was a famous Profeſſor of Rhetorick in a City of Africk, called Sicca; About the year 330 being converted to the Chriſtian Religion, he came to ſome Biſhops, earneſtly deſiring to be admitted into the Church, and Baptized; but they ſuſpecting, ne vir ſeculari eloquentia tumens, &c. leſt a man ſwelling and puffed up with ſecular wiſdom, and who had always hitherto oppoſed the Chriſtian Religion, ſhould make a mock both of them and it, therefore they rejected him; whereupon he offered unto them thoſe ſeven Excellent Volumes of his Diſputations againſt his former Gentiliſm, which they ſeeing, with great joy received him: He was Maſter to Lactantius He uſed to ſay; that Perſecution brings Death in one hand, and Life in the other: for while it kills the Body, it crowns the Soul. He flouriſhed under Diocleſian between Anno Chriſti 300. & 330. The Life of Euſebius, who dyed Anno Chriſti. 340.

THe life of Euſebius was written by Acatius, his Diſciple, and ſucceſſour in the Biſhoprick of Cæſarea, which being loſt, I can meet with no Author, that gives us any account either of his Parents, Maſters, or his firſt courſe of life: But Euſebius is commended to the Chriſtian World, not for his Parents and Maſters ſake, but for his excellent wit, and great variety of Learning: So that S. Baſil ſaith of him, Euſebius Paleſtinus eſt fide dignus propter multiplicem experientiam. Euſebius of Paleſtine is worthy to be credited for his great experience. S. Hierom ſaith, Euſebius in Divinis Scripturis ſtudioſiſſimus, & Bibliothecæ Divinæ cum Pamphilo Martyre diligentiſſimus perveſtigator. Euſebius was a great ſtudent of the ſacred Scriptures, and together with Pamphilus the Martyr, a moſt diligent ſearcher of the Divine Library. Evagrius ſaith, Euſebius vir ſane cum in aliis rebus diſertiſſimus, tum in ſcribendo tantum pollens, ut poſſit lectores ſuorum librorum, etſi non efficere perfectos Chriſtianos, ita tamen perſuadendo impellere ut Chriſtianam Religionem lubenter colant. Euſebius truly was a man, as in other things moſt Eloquent, ſo, in writing, of ſuch prevalency, that though he could not make the Readers of his Books perfect Chriſtians, yet he could inforce them by his perſwaſions willingly to embrace the Chriſtian Religion.

His commendations

He was Biſhop of Cæſarea Paleſtina, and for his great love to Pamphilus, ſir-named Pamphilus: A moſt learned man, of whom Conſtantine the Great uſed to ſay, that he was worthy to be Biſhop not of one only City, but of the whole World: and for his eloquence, Hierom ſtiled him, Romani eloquii Tubam: the Trumpet of Roman Elocution.

Conſtantines eſteem of Euſebius.

About this time Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch was depoſed from his Biſhoprick, as ſome ſay, for the Sabellion Hereſie, whereupon there was kindled in Antioch ſuch a fiery flame of Sedition, that in a manner the whole City was therewith turned upſide down. Amongſt the common ſort of people, ſome cleaved to this ſide, ſome to that; The Garriſon-Souldiers alſo were ſo divided, and ſet one againſt the other, that if God, and the Allegiance they owed to the good Emperour Conſtantine the Great, had not been called to remembrance, they had lamentably murthered one another. But the Emperour by his Letters appeaſed the Tumult, and Sedition, that was raiſed amongſt them: the cauſe whereof was this; One party of them choſe Euſebius Pamphilus for their Biſhop, and would bring him in; the other party would have their former Biſhop Euſtathius again: But Euſebus refuſed to come to them, whereupon the Emperour Conſtantine highly commended him for his wiſdom and moderation.

A ſedition in Antioch.

Afterwards a Synod being gathered at Tyre, to determine the controverſies which were ſprung up amongſt the Biſhops, Conſtantine ſent Euſebius thither to take cognizance of their differences, where this memorable thing fell out. Potamon (one of the Biſhops) ſeeing Euſebius to ſit as a Judge, and Athanaſius ſtanding, and pleading his cauſe before him, being overcome with ſorrow, and weeping for thoſe things, which he ſaw the Profeſſors of the Truth to ſuffer, with a loud voice he inveighed againſt Euſebius, ſaying: Thou ſitteſt there Euſebius, and innocent Athanaſius ſtands to be judged by thee: Who can endure ſuch things? Tell me, Euſebius, Was thou not in Priſon with me in the time of Perſecution? and I truly loſt one of my Eyes for the Truth-ſake, but thou haſt nothing mutilated in thy Body, neither didſt thou give any teſtimony for thy Confeſſion; thou liveſt and haſt had no member cut off. How gateſt thou out of Priſon, but becauſe thou either madeſt a promiſe of ſubmiſſion to our Perſecutors, or elſe didſt that which was abominable? Euſebius hearing theſe things, grew into great choller, and diſſolved the Aſſembly, ſaying, If you come hither, and now ſpeak ſuch things againſt us, ſurely your Accuſers ſpeak nothing but the truth. For if you go about to exerciſe a Tyranny here, much more will you do it in your own Country.

A Synod.

There

There is much conteſt amongſt Divines both Ancient and Modern what Euſebius Faith was about the perſon of the Son of God: Some charge him with Arianiſm for denying the Deity of Chriſt. But Athanaſius ſaith, that he recanted it in the Nicæne Council. Euſtathius of Antioch accuſed him for innovating the Nicæne Creed, when as himſelf profeſſed that he reſted ſatisfied therewith, Hierom nameth him for an open defender of the Arian impiety. On the contrary Socrates, out of Euſebius his writings, endeavours to vindicate him from that charge.

Learned Scultetus thus reconciles them, Arius (ſaith he) denyed two things: The Eternity of the Son of God, and his Co equality with the Father. Euſebius doth every where profeſs the Eternity of Chriſt: But his Co-equality he never ſeriouſly believed.

He uſed to ſay, That Moſes wrote the Old Law in dead Tables of ſtone: but Chriſt did write the perfect Documents of the New Teſtament in living Souls: He flouriſhed under Conſtantinus Magnus and Conſtantius.

His Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory is well known, beſides which he wrote ſome other Books, as Libri Præparationis Evangelicæ 15. Libri Demonſtrationis Evangelicæ decem, and ſome others which are loſt.

Lucius Cælius was an Italian by birth, and from his Country Firmia was called Firmianus, & a lacteo dicendi genere was called Lactantius; He ſometime lived at Rome, where he was ſcholar to Arnobius, under whom he profited exceedingly, and became ſo famous for his Eloquence, that he far ſurpaſſed his Maſter therein. His birth & education.

Wimphelingus contends to have him a German by birth, and ſaith, that there is till this day a famous family of the Firmiani in Germany, who boaſt themſelves to be the Progeny of Lactantius.

Having perfected his Studies at Rome, he went into Bythinia, where he taught Oratory under the raign of Diocleſian and Conſtantine; and when he ſaw the Chriſtian Religion to want ſome Eloquent Defenders of it, he took pen in hand, and beſides divers others writings which are periſhed, he wrote his ſeven Books of Inſtitutions againſt the Gentiles; a Book De Ira Dei, of the Anger of God: and another of Gods Workmanſhip: Alſo an Epitome of the Divine Inſtitutions. Other things that are fathered upon him are ſpurious, ſaith the Learned Scultetus. His works.

About the nineteenth year of Diocleſian, there was an horrible Perſecution raiſed againſt the Church of Chriſt, wherein the Chriſtian Churches were demoliſhed, the Sacred Scriptures, and other godly Books were burnt, the Chriſtians themſelves were dragged to moſt inhumane tortures and torments; yea, where any were found that conſtantly adhered unto Chriſt, they were cruelly matyred; yet it pleaſed God to hide Lactantius in this great ſtorm, though he retained his Piety, fearing no torments, but reſolved both in Life and Death to cleave cloſe unto Chriſt. A great perſecution.

He Dedicated moſt of his Works to Conſtantinus Magnus. Hierom ſaith of him, Lactantius quaſi quidam fluvius Tullianæ Eloquentiæ: Lactantius flowed with Eloquence, yea, was as a bounding as Tullie himſelf, &c. In his old Age, for his rare Parts, he was appointed Tutor to Criſpus, Conſtantine's Son: He was ſo far from ſeeking after riches, that he died very poor. Gods Providence. His contentation.

The

ATHANATIVS

The Life of Athanaſius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 375.

His birth & education.

Athanaſius was born in Alexandria, and by the care of his Parents was brought up in all ſorts of Learning both Humane and Divine: Being a boy, upon a ſolemn Feſtival day, he was playing amongſt other Boys, who would needs imitate the Church in her Sacred Offices, and for that end they choſe Athanaſius for their Biſhop, who acted his part well, examining other Boys about the Principles of Religion to prepare them for Baptiſm. It fell out that whileſt they were at their ſport, came by Alexander, the Biſhop of Alexandria, and obſerving the manner of their paſt-time, he called them before him, examining every Boy what part he had acted, thereby gathering their diſpoſitions for future imployments: Then did he cauſe them all to be carefully educated in good Learning: But above all he took a love to, and was exceeding careful of the education of Athanaſius, for his ingenuity, diligence, and towardlineſs: and when he came to ripeneſs of years he made him Deacon, and finding him a nimble, & good Diſputant, he took him with him to the Council of Nice, ſummoned by Conſtantine the Great againſt the Arians, to aid and aſſiſt him in his Diſputations, which procured him much hatred and trouble from the Arians, as afterwards we ſhall hear.

He goes to the Council of Nice.

Alexander having by long familiarity with him, gained experience of his Piety, Parts and Zeal in defending the Truth againſt the Hereticks of thoſe times, when he lay upon his death bed, was directed by God to chooſe Athanaſius for his ſucceſſor in his Biſhoprick; which Athanaſius having intelligence of, hid himſelf, that he could not be found. Yet did Alexander call for him, and when he came not, being now near death, he ſaid, O Athanaſius, Thou thinkeſt that thou canſt eſcape, yet ſhalt thou not eſcape this Office.

His zeal againſt Hereſies.

He is made Biſhop of Alexandria.

He is perſecuted by the Arians.

After the death of Alexander he was ſearched out, and made his Succeſſor. This ſo irritated the Arians (who had now crept into favour with the old Emperor) that they ſought by all means to caſt him out of Alexandria, and for that end they accuſed him to the Emperour as the Author of much Sedition, and of many tumults in the Church; They charged him with keeping many out of the Church which deſired to return into the Unity of it, by which means Peace and Concord was prevented: They procured many Biſhops and Presbyters to atteſt the truth of theſe things to the Emperour, profeſſing themſelves to be Orthodox, and accuſing Athanaſius and the Biſhops that adhered to him, to be the Anthors of the murthers, bonds, unjuſt ſtripes, wounds, and burnings in the Church: Athanaſius on the contrary wrote to the Emperour perour, that thoſe Arians were the Authors of unlawful Ordinations, and of innovating the Decrees of the Council of Nice, of corrupting the Faith, of Seditions, and of proſecuting the Orthodox with unjuſt contumelies and reproaches. The good old Emperour in theſe various informations, knew not whom to believe: but the Arians being about him, having his Ear at command, they procured the Emperour to write to Athanaſius, to require him to prohibit none from entring into the Church, and that if he ſhould do otherwiſe, he threatned to drive him out of Alexandria, and to place another Biſhop in his room. Hereupon Athanaſius wrote back to the Emperour, labouring to convince him, that the Arians ought not to be admitted to communicate with the Catholick Church. Euſebius (one of the chiefeſt of theſe Arians) perceiving that he could not this way prevail againſt Athanaſius, intended ſecretly to make him away, but not finding how to effect it, he ſpake with the Miletians (other Hereticks) promiſing, that if they would accuſe Athanaſius, to the Emperour, he would ſo far prevail with him and ſome other great perſons about him, that their cauſe ſhould be heard: Hereupon they put in a charge againſt Athanaſius, that he had impoſed a Tribute of Linnen Garments upon the Egyptians, affirming that he had alſo gathered the ſame. He is accuſed to the Emperour.

But it pleaſed God that by chance there were preſent Alippius and Macarius, two Presbyters of Alexandria, who eaſily refelled and wiped off this falſe charge: yet they ſo far prevailed, that Athanaſius was ſent for, and then they charged him with ſending a ſum of Gold to one Philumenus, to make away the Emperour. But Athanaſius eaſily cleared himſelf from this aſperſion alſo: whereupon the Emperour ſuffered him to return home again in peace. He wrote alſo by him to the people of Alexandria, aſſuring them of the ſingular Modeſty, and ſound Faith of Athanaſius, with whom he had had much comfortable conference, and found him to be a truly Divine man, and one that had been accuſed by his adverſaries out of envy, and not for any juſt cauſe that they had againſt him. He is cleared by Conſtantine.

Yet for all this the Miletian Hereticks, becauſe they were fruſtrated in their former endeavours, invented two other grievous accuſations againſt Athanaſius; Firſt, that he had broken the Holy Chalice. Secondly, that one Arſenius being ſlain, he had cut off his Arm, and kept it to practice Magick withall. This Arſenius was a Presbyter, who having committed a great fault, hid himſelf, fearing leaſt his Biſhop [Athanaſius] ſhould call him to an account, and puniſh him for it: which the Miletians having intelligence of, they diligently ſought him out, and having found him, they ſpake him fair, promiſed him much favour and ſecurity, perſwading him to retire himſelf to one Prines, a friend of theirs, and a Presbyter of a certain Monaſtery, and prevailing with him, they hid him there. He is again accuſed. The falſehood and ſubtilty of Hereticks.

Then did they every where diſperſe rumors in the ſtreets, and at the meetings of the Magiſtrates, that Athanaſius had privily murthered Arſenius: yea they ſuborned a certain Monk called John, to charge Athanaſius with this grievous crime: Hereupon, the rumor of this abominable fact being ſpred abroad, came at laſt to the Ears of the Emperour Conſtantine. Athanaſius perceiving, that though happily he might defend himſelf againſt ſo falſe an accuſation, yet that it would be a difficult thing for him to anſwer for himſelf before the Judges whoſe minds were prepoſſeſſed with thoſe falſe rumors; therefore for the full clearing of himſelf before all, he endeavoured that the truth might not be concealed: yet withal, he judged it almoſt impoſſible to defend and clear himſelf, ſo long as Arſenius could not be found: and thereupon he imployed one of his Deacons, a moſt faithful man, to ſearch out Arſenius. This Deacon going into Thebais, by conferring with certain Monks, learned where Arſenius was hid. But when he came to Prines houſe, Arſenius could not be found: for Prines having had intelligence beforehand of the Deacons comming, had ſent him away into the lower Egypt: Hereupon the Deacon ſeized upon Prines, and together with him, upon one Helias, his intimate friend, who was ſaid to have conveyed away Arſenius, and carried them along with him to Alexandria: When they came thither, they were carried before the Governour of the Egyptian Souldiers, unto whom upon examination they confeſſed that Arſenius was alive, that he had formerly been hid His prudence.

with them, and that now he was hidden in Egypt: This Confeſſion of theirs Athanaſius deſired to be ſent to the Emperour, and obtained it; whereupon the Emperour wrote back to him, that he ſhould go on diligently in his Office, that he ſhould be careful in inſtructing the people, and promoting Piety amongſt them; and that he ſhould not at all value the ſnares of the Miletians: For (ſaith he) I know ſufficiently, that being ſtirred up by envy, they have invented theſe falſe and forged accuſations againſt you, and thereby raiſed tumults in the Church, I have therefore decreed that ſuch wickedneſs ſhall not go unpuniſhed, but that Judgement ſhall be executed according to the Civil Laws, and that except they be quiet they ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed, as ſuch as lay ſnares to entrap the innocent, as diſturbers of the Peace, and right order of the Church, and as deſtroyers of true Piety.

He is again cleared by by the Emperour.

This his Epiſtle he commanded to be publikely read before all the Congregation, whereby all the people might be informed of his minde. Hereupon the Miletians, being ſtricken with fear, carried themſelves peaceably, being very fearfull of the Emperours diſpleaſure. And the whole Church of Egypt being quieted and governed by ſo worthy a Biſhop, flouriſhed exceedingly, and daily increaſed, many of the Gentiles and of other Sectaries being converted to the true Faith.

The Church proſpers under him.

Yet not long after, his reſtleſs adverſaries began again by cunning and ſubtile deviſes to diſturb his peace, to carry new complaints againſt him to the Emperour, and to ſuborn ſuch a multitude of accuſers, that the good Emperour by their importunity was forced to call a Council at Cæſarea Paleſtinæ: to which Athanaſius was ſummoned to appear. But when he heard that Euſebius Biſhop of that City, and Euſebius of Nicomedia, and other Arian Biſhops, his Adverſaries, ruled all the roaſt there, he refuſed to appear, fearing that he ſhould have no equal dealings at their hands. They again and again ſent for him, and greatly urged his coming, yet he deferred it about 30 Months ſpace: But afterwards, when they ſtill urged his appearing, he went to Tyrus, where many of the Oriental Biſhops were met, who commanded him to anſwer to the crimes objected againſt him. For Callinicus a Biſhop, and Iſchirion (an Arian) had accuſed him for breaking the holy Chalice, for overthrowing the Seat, and for that he had often impriſoned this Iſchirion, being a Presbyter. As alſo for that he had falſely accuſed him to Hyginus the Præfect of Egypt, for throwing ſtones againſt the Images of the Emperour, whereupon he had been bound with chains. Furthermore, for that he had removed Callinicus, the Biſhop of Peluſium, and had committed the government of the Church to one Mark, a Presbyter of the ſame, cauſing Callinicus to be kept by Souldiers, to be beaten, and brought before the Judgement-Seat.

He is again accuſed, and cited to a Council of Arians.

His charge.

Forgeries againſt him.

Some other of the Arian Biſhops accuſed him alſo for cauſing them to be beaten. in brief, all of them objected againſt him, that he had obtained his Biſhoprick by the perjury of certain men, whereas all the Biſhops had proteſted that none ought to be ordained to that Office before he had cleared himſelf from ſuch crimes as were objected againſt him; for which cauſes they had refuſed to communicate with him, and yet inſtead of clearing himſelf from the cimes wherewith he was charged, he ſought by force of Bonds and impriſonment to compel men to join with him. To theſe things, they renewed alſo the charge againſt him about the matter of Arſenius, and as commonly it falls out where ſnares are purpoſely laid to entrap a man, on a ſudden, ſome that formerly ſeemed to be his friends, ſtood up to be his accuſers: Letters alſo were produced, and read, that the people of Alexandria had made many out-cries againſt him, and for his ſake had refuſed to come to the publike Aſſemblies of the Church.

His anſwer

Athanaſius being commanded to anſwer for himſelf, often came into Judgement, eaſily wiping off ſome of theſe charges, and requiring ſometime for the clearing himſelf from the reſt. Yet he was very doubtful what to do, when he ſaw his accuſers wholly to frame themſelves to the will and beck of his Judges: as alſo that they had gotten many witneſſes againſt him, partly of the Arians, and partly of the Miletians, which grievouſly calumniated him; and though the crimes objected were falſe, and he had eaſily refuted them, yet the falſe accuſers went away with impunity: eſpecially in the great buſineſs about Arſenius, whoſe arm they ſaid he had cut off to practiſe

Ma-

Magick with: they accused him also for giving gifts to a certain woman, that he might satisfie his lust upon her; yea, that one night he had lien with her against her will: Both which accusations were plainly ridiculous and full of falsehood. For whereas they brought the woman into the Council before them to justifie this charge, Timothy a certain Presbyter of Alexandria standing by Athanasius (according to their former agreement) spake thus to the woman: Did I lie with you by force? Yes, said she, did you not? and withal told them the time and place where it was done. Athanasius also produced Arsenius in the midst of them, and shewed them both his arms safe and sound, requiring withall that his accusers should shew the arm that was cut off. For it pleased God that Arsenius being again hidden by them, hearing that the good Bishop was in danger by reason of him, stole away in the night, and hasted to Tyrus, and came to Athanasius two days before he was to be judged for that cause. By these means Athanasius was so cleared from both the crimes wherewith he was charged, that he thought he needed not any other purgation. Gods providence.

In the records of the Council there is no mention made of the first of these charges, the business being so fowl and ridiculous that they were ashamed to make mention of it: But for the latter, his accusers thought it sufficient to say, that Plusianus, one of the Bishops that was under Athanasius, by the command of Athanasius had set Arsenius his house on fire, bound him to a pillar, and whipt him, and afterwards shut him up in his house, but Arsenius escaping out at a window, had hid himself for his own security, and he no where appearing, it gave just cause of suspition that he was murthered; for which cause the Arian Bishops pretended that they had diligently sought after him as a worthy Person and Confessor, and when they could not find him, had brought his cause before the Magistrate.

Athanasius perceiving their violence, began to be afraid, and justly to suspect, least his Adversaries should watch an opportunity privily to murther him. The Council having many meetings after this, and all things being filled with Tumult, Athanasius his adversaries still crying out against him, that he was a Jugler, a violent man, a man that was unworthy of his Ministry, and worthy to be punished with death; they which were appointed by Constantine to see businesses regularly mannaged in this Council, began greatly to fear, least a tumult being raised (which they had just cause to suspect) Athanasius should be murthered amongst them; whereupon they secretly conveyed him out of the Council. Athanasius also finding certainly that he could not safely remain at Tyrus, and that it was not possible for him to contend with such a multitude of accusers before such Judges as were his professed Enemies, he fled to Constantinople: Hereupon the Council, without rendering any reason, condemned him, cast him out of his Bishoprick, and Decree that he shall no more return to Alexandria, least, (say they) by his presence there, he stir up and occasion Seditions and tumults; and withall, they and absolved the Arians, all others which had been censured by him, as if he had done them much wrong therein; whereupon they did not only restore them to Communion again, but to all those places and offices from whence they had been justly ejected. He goes from the Council. He is unjustly deposed.

They also signified these Decrees to the Emperor, and wrote to all other Bishops that they should hold no Communion with Athanasius; that they should by no means write to him, nor receive any letters from him: Because (say they) having sundry great crimes proved against him before us, partly by his flight, and partly by refusing to plead his cause before us, he hath declared himself to be guilty. Furthermore they declared, that they proceeded to pass such a sentence upon him, because when the Emperour the former year had called together the Bishops of the East to meet in a Council at Cæsarea for the hearing of his cause, he never came at them, and thereby had tired the Council, and despised the Emperours Command: And that when many Bishops were met together at Tyrus, he came to them with a great multitude of persons, raising tumults in the Council; one while refusing to answer before them; another while loading the Bishops with reproaches: sometimes when he was called before them, he refused to hear them, and other sometimes refused to stand to their judgement: As also because it plainly appeared to them that he had broken the holy Chalice: for witness whereof they had produced The- And complained of to the Emperour.

ognis, Bishop of Nice: Maris Bishop of Chalcedon: Theodore, Bishop of Heraclea: besides Valence, Ursacius and Macedonius, whom (said they) we have sent into Egypt to examine the matter, and when they came into a certain Village, they found the Chalice broken.

Dissenters in the Council.

By such cunning and slie Allegations they sought to traduce Athanasius; yet there were many Presbyters present in that Council, who altogether disliked their proceedings as unjust: whereupon Paphnutius a Confessor, took Maximus Bishop of Hierusalem by the hand, saying, Come let us rise, and be gone hence; for it doth not become us that have lost our Eyes, and have been lamed for the Truth of Christ, to be present, or to communicate with such wicked men in their sins.

But Athanasius (as we said before) being gone to Constantinople, complained to the Emperour of the unjust judgement that the Bishops had passed upon him; whereupon the Emperour sent for them to appear before him, to give an account of their proceedings: who as soon as they came, perceiving that their false and unworthy dealings were fully discovered, leaving those former fictions, they now accuse Athanasius to the Emperour for threatning to restrain the coming of corn out of Egypt to Constantinople, as it used to do; to which accusations the too credulous Emperour giving heed, was so much incensed against Athanasius, that he banished him to Triver in France.

Athanasius banished by the Emperour.

Presently after his departure, Arius with his complices returned to Alexandria, where he made such factions and divisions, that he cast the whole City into disorder and tumults: the people of Alexandria were much grieved and offended, that Arius with his companions had that liberty granted them of returning thither; but especially, because they understood that their godly reverend Bishop was driven into Exile by their means. But when the Emperour understood of the perverse minde, and unquiet behaviour of Arius, he sent for him to Constantinople, to give an account of the tumults and seditions that he had raised at Alexandria.

Seditions raised by Arius.

At this time there was one Alexander, a godly and worthy man, Bishop of Constantinople. He in the dimication which arose about Arius, shewed himself a very prudent and pious man: For as soon as Arius came to Constantinople, he presently raised divisions amongst the people there also, so that great tumults ensued whilest one part of the people stood for the Faith confirmed by the Nicene Council: another part of them said, that the opinion of Arius was most consonant and agreeable to reason: Hereupon Alexander fell into a great perplexity, especially because Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, often and grievously threatned him, that he would depose him from his Bishoprick, if he would not receive Arius and his companions into Communion with him. But Alexander was not so solicitous about his own Deposition, as he was careful for to maintain the Nicene Faith, and the Doctrine established by that Council. For esteeming himself bound to be a Patron of the Decrees of that Council, he thought that it was his duty to the uttermost of his power to see that they might not be broken, nor made invalid: Being therefore ingaged in this contestation, he laid aside humane arguments, and betook himself to the help and assistance of God; and thereupon, shutting himself up in the Church, he fell to Fasting and Prayer, and night and day with tears he begged of God, that if the opinion of Arius was true, he might never see the day appointed for the trial; but if his own Faith were the truth, that then God would inflict some visible judgement upon Arius, the Author of all those mischiefs.

Alexander prays against Arius

In the mean time the Emperour, desirous to find out the opinion of Arius, sent for him to his Pallace, and asked him whether he did agree to the Decrees of the Council of Nice? He without delay willingly and chearfully subscribed them: whereas in the mean time he cunningly and fallaciously evaded those things which were determined about matters of Faith. The Emperour wondering at it, required him to swear to them, which he also did, but with the like fraud as he had before subscribed them. For having written privately his own opinion, he put it into his bosom; and then swore that he did truly, and from his heart believe according as he had written. The good Emperour giving credit to his Subscription and Oath, commanded Alexander the Biſhop of Conſtantinople to receive him into Communion. This was on the Saturday, and Arius expected the next day to be admitted into the Communion of the Church, but God prevented it. For Arius going out of the Pallace with Euſebius, and a great number of his followers in great pomp and pride, as having gotten the victory of his adverſaries. He no ſooner came to the chief Market place in the City, but his Conſcience began to accuſe and terrifie him for all his deceit and wickedneſs: through the violence whereof his belly was looſened, whereupon he asked, whether the Jakes was not nere, and being informed that they were hard by, he turned aſide into them, and whileſt he was eaſing Nature, firſt his Fundament came forth, then abundance of blood, and at laſt he voided his Bowels, together with his Spleen, and his Liver, and thereupon he immediately dyed.

Arius his equivocation and perjury

His wretched death.

Some of his company thinking him long, went in to ſee the cauſe of his ſtay, and found him dead in this miſerable manner. Hereupon Euſebius and all his rout were ſtricken with a wonderful terror: The fame of Arius his accurſed death preſently flew all over the City, yea almoſt over all the World: Every one as they went by, pointed at the place where he made this wretched end, and ſhunned the uſe of it: Yet his Aſſociates gave it out, that his adverſaries by the help of Magick had thus deſtroyed him. And whereas many reſorted to ſee the place of his death, whereby it became very infamous; At length a certain rich Citizen that was an Arian, bought it, and pulling down the Jakes, built an houſe in the room of it, that ſo the thing, in proceſs of time, might be wholly forgotten.

Heretical lyes.

Athanaſius being throughly informed of theſe things, writes thus of them, "Arius "(ſaith he) the Prince and Author of his Sect, and the companion of Euſebius, was by "the art and induſtry of the Euſebian Faction ſent for to Conſtantinople by the Em- "perour of bleſſed memory, who commanded him to write his Faith: & this cunning Fox "wrote it indeed: but (after the manner of the Devil in quoting Scripture) he craftily "ſuppreſſed, and left out the impudent words of his impiety. And when Conſtantine urged him, that if he had no other opinion which he kept ſecret in his minde, he ſhould ſubſcribe, and ſwear to the truth; withal, telling him, that if he forſwore himſelf, God would find him out, and plague him for it; this miſerable wretch ſwore that he held no other opinion, nor thought otherwiſe then he had written: Whereupon (ſaith he) going forth from the Emperour, Gods hand preſently fell upon him, and like Judas, dying, he burſt in ſunder, and his bowels came forth. And though death be common to all men, ſo that no man, no not our Enemy is to be reproached after death: yet the death of Arius being ſo ſtrange, and differing from the death of other men, is not to be paſſed over in ſilence. For when Euſebius and his followers, threatned to bring Arius the very next morning into the Congregation, and Alexander by Prayer had ſought unto God to prevent it. It pleaſed God, who was now made the Judge, that very day, to bring him to ſuch a fearful end.

Athanaſius his judgement of Arius's death

Conſtantine being informed hereof, wondered at it, aſſuring himſelf that Arius had been guilty of perjury.

But ſhortly after it pleaſed God to take away that good Emperour: After whoſe death Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, and Theognis Biſhop of Nice, ſuppoſing that now they had gotten a fit time, endeavoured by all means poſſible to take away the Nicene Creed out of the Church, wherein was the clauſe of One Subſtance, and in the room thereof to ſettle the deteſtable hereſie of Arius: But this they knew they could never effect, if Athanaſius returned from Exile to Alexandria: Wherefore they made uſe of a certain Arian Prieſt to carry the laſt Will and Teſtament of Conſtantine to Conſtantius his ſon, together with the Legacies bequeathed to him. Conſtantius finding in the Will that which he greatly deſired, viz. that the Empire of the Eaſt was left to him, made very much of the Prieſt, granted him great liberty, charged him to uſe his Pallace freely and bodly at his pleaſure. Hereupon this cunning ſeducer inſinuated himſelf into acquaintance with the Empreſs, and with her Eunuchs and Chamberlains: and whereas one Euſebius was chief of the Eunuchs, through the perſwaſions of this lewd Prieſt, he became an Arian, and infected the other Eunuchs that were of his Company: Yea the Empreſs alſo by the enticements of this Prieſt, and her Eunuchs nuchs fell into the peſtilent Hereſie of Arius. Yea a while after the Emperour himſelf began to favour that opinion, and ſo by little and little it was ſpread every where; firſt the Emperours Guard took it up: Then it buſied the mindes of the multitude in the City: the Emperours Chamberlains in the very Pallace began to contend with women about it: And this woful effect followed the countenancing of this Hereſie, that in every Houſe and Family through the City, they brawled and went together by the ears about it. Yea this infection ſpread it ſelf quickly through other Regions and Countries, and the controverſie, much like a ſpark of fire, kindled the mindes of the hearers with the fiery flame of diſcord and diſſention. For every one that deſired to know why they made tumults, by and by had occaſion given him to reaſon: and every one was not ſatisfied with queſtioning, but contentiouſly would argue thereof.

Conſtantines death.

Heretical ſubtilety.

The danger of ſuffering hereticks amongſt great perſons.

The danger of hereſie.

By theſe means the peaceable and quiet ſtate of the Church was turned upſide down: But in the interim it pleaſed God, that this flame kept in the Eaſt, whileſt the Weſtern Church injoyed peace and quietneſs: For by no means would they ſuffer the Canons of the Nicene Council to be violated, or made null.

After the heat of contention was blown abroad, and burned more and more, the Faction of Euſebius doubted not but it would turn to their great advantage: For they hoped that it would come to paſs that ſome Biſhop would be choſen of Alexandria that would favour and advance their opinion. But at the very ſame time Athanaſius returned unto Alexandria, carrying along with him Letters from Conſtantine the Younger, who was one of the Emperours, The tenour whereof was this.

Athanaſius returns to Alexandria

Conſtantines Letter to the people of Alexandria.

Conſtantine Cæſar to the People of the Catholick Church of Alexandria ſendeth greeting: I hope it is not unknown to your diſcreet wiſdome, that Athanaſius the Profeſſor of ſacred Divinty, was for a time baniſhed into France: leaſt that through the miſchievous dealing of lewd men (for blood-ſuckers and cruel Beaſts ſought to bereave him of his life) he ſhould privily be ſlain: wherefore that he might be ſheltred from the malice of thoſe deſpiteful men, he was taken out of their jaws, and was commanded to live under my Dominion, where I took care that he might be fully furniſhed with all things needful, as if he had been in the City where formerly he lived. And when as our Lord and Father of famous memory, Conſtantine the Emperour, had intended to reſtore him to his Biſhoprick again, he was prevented by death before he could accompliſh his deſires; I thought it my part and duty, therefore to execute the intent of ſo godly an Emperour: With what eſtimation and reverence I have entertained the man, he ſhall report with his own mouth at his return to you: neither is there any marvel that I ſhewed him ſuch courteſie: For me thought, that I ſaw in him the great longing ye had for him, and I beheld alſo the Fatherly reverence and gravity of the man himſelf; all which moved me not a little thereunto. God of his goodneſs (Well-beloved Brethren) have you in his tuition.

Athanaſius upon the confidence of theſe Letters, returned unto Alexandria, whom the people received with moſt willing mindes: But ſuch in that City as were infected with the Leproſie of Arianiſm, conſpired againſt him, ſo that many tumults and skirmiſhes were raiſed, which gave occaſion to the confederates of Euſebius to accuſe Athanaſius falſely to the Emperour, that of his own private ſpirit, without the conſent of the Aſſembly of the Biſhops, he had ſetled himſelf in that Church: This odious accuſation ſo far incenſed the Emperour Conſtantius, that he ſent one Gregory, an Arian, to be Biſhop of Alexandria, and with him Syrianus a Captain, with five thouſand Souldiers to drive out Athanaſius, and to ſettle Gregory in his room; the Arians which were in the City, joyned themſelves with them to help them: It was then even-tide, and the people were aſſembled in the Church to prepare themſelves for the Sacrament, which was the next day to be adminiſtred.

The Arians raiſe tumults againſt Athanaſius.

The Captain drew nigh, ſet his Souldiers in Battail array, and beſet the Church: Athanaſius underſtanding the danger, deviſed how the people might take no harm for his ſake: whereupon he commanded his Deacon to read the Collects to the people, and after that to ſing a Pſalm: and as the Pſalm was ſweetly and harmoniouſly ſung, all the people went out at one of the Church doors, and it pleaſed God that the Souldiers had no power to meddle with them, and Athanaſius in the midſt of the Singers eſcaped alſo without any harm: and Gregory took poſſeſſion of the Church; whileſt whileſt Athanaſius being thus (through Gods mercy) delivered, went in all haſt to Rome. Athanaſius flies to Rome.

A ſpecial providence.

About this time Conſtantine the younger was ſlain by the ſouldiers, and Conſtance the youngeſt of the three Emperours, remained Emperour of the Weſt. Athanaſius coming to Rome, complained to the Biſhop Julius of the great wrong which was done to him: the like did divers others of the Eaſtern Biſhops, who were unjuſtly thruſt out by the Arians: Hereupon Julius wrote freely unto the Biſhops of the Eaſt, requiring them to reſtore thoſe Biſhops to their places again, ſharply rebuking ſuch as had raſhly and unjuſtly procured their depoſition.

The wronged Biſhops truſting to Julius his Letter, returned every man to his own Church, conveying the Letters unto thoſe to whom they were written: who, when the Letters came to their hands, took it very hainouſly that Julius ſhould interpoſe in that cauſe, and thereupon ſummoned a Council at Antioch. In the mean time Athanaſius being come to Alexandria, there was great ſtir, and many tumults were raiſed by Gregory, and the Arians againſt him: they alſo forged, and divulged this ſlander, viz. That whereas Conſtantine the Great had given certain grain for Alms to Relieve the Poor of the Church of Alexandria; this (ſay they) Athanaſius hath ſold, and converts it to his own private lucre: the Emperour takes this ſlanderous report for truth, and threatneth him with death, which Athanaſius hearing of, fled, and hid himſelf in a ſecret and obſcure place: At length Julius Biſhop of Rome being informed where he lay hid, ſent for him, and when he was come to Rome, he acquainted the Emperour Conſtance with all the injuries which were done to him: This good Emperour being much affected with that ſad relation, wrote to his Brother in the Eaſt, requeſting him to ſend to him three men that would juſtifie the accuſations againſt Athanaſius. Accordingly there were ſent Narciſſus the Cilician, Theodore the Thracian, Maris the Calcedonian, and Marcus the Syrian: But when they came to Rome they would by no means reaſon with Athanaſius, only they exhibited to the Emperour a certain Form of Faith, and ſo took their leave without reaſoning of any other matter.

His return to Alexandria.

Hereticks falſehood.

Athanaſius flyeth.

Not long after the Weſtern Biſhops aſſembled in a Council at Sardis, where Athanaſius was acquit from the crimes charged upon him, and thereupon Conſtance wrote to his Brother to acquaint him therewith, and to requeſt him that Athanaſius might be reſtored to his Biſhoprick: But when Conſtantius deferred from day to day to anſwer his deſire, Conſtance wrote to him the ſecond time, giving him in choiſe either to reſtore Athanaſius, and ſo account of him as his friend, or elſe to hear the Proclation of open War, and ſo finde him his deadly foe. The Emperour of the Eaſt, hearing this, was wonderful ſad and penſive; and calling together many of the Eaſtern Biſhops, layeth before them the choiſe his Brother had given him: demandeth of them what was beſt in this caſe to be done? they anſwered, that it was far better to reſtore Athanaſius, then to make that an occaſion of mortal and deadly Wars: Hereupon the Emperour wrote this Letter unto him:

Conſtance defendeth him.

Conſtantius the Puiſſant and Noble Emperour, unto Athanaſius the Biſhop ſendeth greeting. Our ſingular and wonted clemency will no longer ſuffer thy Fatherhood to be turmoiled and toſſed with the ſurging waves of the Seas; the Piety which we have always in great price, will no longer permit thy Holineſs, now baniſhed out of thy Native ſoil, bereaved of thy ſubſtance, barred of all proſperity, to wander through crooked and croſs ways, through Deſarts and dangerous Countreys. Although we have lingred now a great while from ſending our Letters, whereby we might ſignifie unto thee the concealed ſecreſie of our minde, hoping that of thine own accord thou wouldſt repair unto us, and with humble ſute crave remedy and redreſs of thine injuries: Yet nevertheleſs (fear peradventure hindering thee of thy purpoſe) we ſent preſently our gracious Letters unto thy Grave Wiſdom, that with all celerity thou come unto us, whereby thou ſhalt ſatisfie thy longing deſires, thou ſhalt have trial of our wonted clemency, and be reſtored to thine own See, and Native ſoil. For to this end I have entreated my Lord and Brother Conſtance, the Puiſſant & noble Emperour, that he would license thee to return unto us, whereby thou mighteſt by the means of us, both enjoy thy Country, and have this token for trial of our ſingular clemency, and good will towards thee. But

Conſtantius his letter to Athanaſius

But whileſt Athanaſius doubted and feared to go unto Conſtantius, by reaſon of the falſe and ſlanderous reports that were raiſed of him, and the implacable malice of his Enemies, Conſtantius wrote this ſecond Letter to him.

His ſecond letter to Athanaſius

Conſtantius the Puiſſant and Noble Emperour, unto Athanaſius the Biſhop ſendeth greeting. Although by our former Letters we have ſignifieth to thy wiſdom after the plaineſt manner, that with a ſecure minde and ſafe conduct, thou ſhouldſt come unto our Court, becauſe we were fully determined to reſtore thee to thy former dignities: We have notwithſtanding ſent theſe Letters alſo to thy Holineſs, that thou hire a common Waggon, and removing all timorous thoughts from thy diſtruſtful minde, thou ſpeedily repair unto us, to the end thou mayeſt the ſooner enjoy thy long wiſhed deſires.

Preſently after he wrote again this third Letter for his further ſatisfaction.

His third letter to Athanaſius.

Conſtantius the Puiſſant and Noble Emperour, unto Athanaſius the Biſhop ſendeth greeting: Being lately at Edeſſa, where alſo were ſome of thy Presbyters then preſent, it ſeemed good unto us to ſend one of them unto thee, that thou ſhouldſt haſten unto our Court, & after thy coming into our preſence, without delay return unto Alexandria: And foraſmuch as it is now a great while ago ſince thou receivedſt our Letters, and haſt deferred thy journey, therefore now alſo we thought good to put thee in remembrance, that without delay thou come unto us, and ſo thou ſhalt poſſeſs the liberty of thy Country, and thy long wiſhed eaſe & quietneſs. And that thou mighteſt fully perſwade thy ſelf of all the promiſes, we have ſent unto thee Achetas the Deacon, by whom thou ſhalt underſtand, both what our purpoſe is, and alſo how that thy hearts deſire ſhall prevail.

Athanaſius being at Aquileia when he received theſe Letters, immediately poſted to Rome, and ſhewed them to Biſhop Julius; whereby the Church of Rome rejoyced much, conceiving that Conſtantius the Eaſtern Emperour was of the ſame Faith and opinion with themſelves; whereupon Julius wrote this Letter to the People of Alexandria in the behalf of Athanaſius.

Julius his Letter in the behalf of Athanaſius.

Julius Biſhop of Rome, unto the Presbyters, Deacons, and Wel-beloved Brethren of Alexandria, ſendeth greeting in the Lord: I do greatly rejoyce with you (Wel-beloved Brethren) that henceforth you may behold with your Eyes the fruit of your Faith: For that is to be ſeen in my Brother and fellow Biſhop Athanaſius, whom God hath reſtored unto you, partly for his ſincere and godly life, and partly alſo by the means of your Prayers. Hereby it may be eaſily conjectured what pure and fervent Prayers you have always poured out unto God: for when you called to minde the heavenly promiſes, and the intire affection which you bare unto them, all which you learned of my foreſaid Brother, you underſtood plainly, and through the right Faith ingrafted into your mindes, you were fully perſwaded that Athanaſius, (whom in your godly mindes you beheld as preſent) ſhould not be always ſevered from you: wherefore I need not to uſe many words unto you, for whatſoever I can ſay, the ſame hath your Faith prevented: and whatſoever you all heartly deſired, the ſame (through the Grace of God) is now fully come to paſs. And that I may repeat the ſame again, I do greatly rejoyce with you, that you have continued ſo firm and ſtedfaſt in the Faith, that by no means you could be withdrawn from it. Moreover I do no leſs rejoyce for my Brother Athanaſius, who notwithſtanding the manifold calamities, and ſundry miſeries which he endured, yet remembred almoſt every hour your intire love, and great longing for him: And though for a ſeaſon he ſeemed to be abſent from you in body, yet lived he always as preſent with you in the Spirit. I think verily (Wel-beloved Brethren) that all the temptations and pains which he endured are not void of their commendations or profit: For by this means both his Faith and yours have been made manifeſt to the whole World. If he had not been tried with ſuch great and lamentable temptations, who would ever have thought, or known that your minds had been ſo unmovably fixed upon ſo worthy a Biſhop; or that he was the man that excelled in ſuch rare gifts, by means whereof he is made partaker of the hope that is laid up for him in Heaven: wherefore he hath attained to a notable teſtimony of his Faith, not only in this life, but of that which is to come: For by his patient ſuffering of much adverſity both by Sea and Land, he hath trampled and trod under foot all the malitious treacheries of Arian adverſaries: Oft-times by reaſon of their ſpite, he ſtood in great hazard of his life, yet made he no account of death; but through the Grace of Almighty God, and power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, he eſcaped their hands, whereby he conceived good hope that in the end he ſhould quit him of his adverſaries, and be reſtored to the comfort of you all, and bear away, together with you, the victorious garland of well-doing, in that he is already famous even to the ends of the World: highly commended for his good life: renowned for his free and conſtant perſeverance in the defence of the Chriſtian and Heavenly Faith, and regiſtered by the cenſure of you all to immortal memory, for the ſingular love and affection he ſhewed towards you; wherefore he is returned unto you bedecked with greater excellency and renown then before his departure. If the purity of fine and pretious mettal, as of gold and ſilver be exquiſitely tried in the fire; what can be ſpoken of ſo excellent a man in reſpect of his worthineſs, who after the quenching of ſo many flaming fires of Sedition: after the recovering of ſo many dangerous perils, and grievous downfals, is now reſtored to you, and found innocent, not only by our determination, but by the Decree and cenſure of the whole Council? Entertain therefore (Wel-beloved Brethren) your Biſhop Athanaſius, and alſo ſuch as have been partakers of his afflictions, with all reverence, joy and gladneſs: Rejoyce in that you have obtained your deſires: in that you have (as it were) fed and quenched the thirſt of your Shepheard, hungring and thirſting in his abſence after your godly zeal: For thereby, during his abode in Forreign and far Countrys, you comforted him not a little, and whileſt he was toſſed to and fro with the ſtorms of Perſecution, and intangled with the ſnares of his malicious adverſaries, you mitigated his grief and ſorrow by ſending to him tokens of your faithful and fervent mindes towards him; When that I think with my ſelf, and caſt in my minde the conceived joy of you all at his return: The flocking multitude full of Religion and godlineſs: The ſolemn Feaſt of ſage Perſons aſſembled together: what kinde of day the return of my Brother unto you is like to be, I cannot but conceive with wonderful joy; eſpecially becauſe the Schiſm and diſcord which reigned heretofore will then be plucked up by the roots: For that his honourable return according to your own hearts deſires hath repleniſhed you with incredible joy and gladneſs: So that the joy for the greatneſs thereof hath reached unto us, to whom it is given from above to have acquaintance and familiarity with ſo excellent a man. It ſeemeth good that we end our Epiſtle with a Prayer;

God Almighty, and his Son our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, give you always of his Grace, and grant you of his Mercy the reward of ſo noble a Faith which you have ſhewed towards your Biſhop, with ſo worthy a teſtimony: That both you and yours may not only in this World, but alſo in the Life to come enjoy far more excellent gifts, which neither Eye hath ſeen, nor Ear hath heard, neither the Heart of man conceived the things which God hath prepared for them that love him through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to whom with Almighty God be glory for ever and ever. Amen. God have you in his tuition, Wel-beloved Brethren.

Athanaſius having received theſe Letters went into the Eaſt, and though the Emperour Conſtantius, at that ſame time, received him not unwillingly, yet giving ear to the crafty ſleights of the deſpiteful Arians, he thus reaſoned with him. Athanaſius goeth into the Eaſt.

Although thou art reſtored to thy Biſhoprick by the Decree of the Council, and our determination: yet becauſe there are in Alexandria certain people differing in opinion from thine, and ſevering themſelves from thy Communion, my requeſt is, that thou permit them one Church by themſelves: Athanaſius made anſwer to this requeſt very wittily, and ſaid, O Emperour, It lieth in thee to do as pleaſeth thee beſt: to command, and execute the Commandment: I alſo will crave of thee another thing by way of recompence, and my humble requeſt is, that thou grant it me: And when the Emperour anſwered, that with moſt willing minde he would condeſcend thereunto: Athanaſius immediately ſaid: My humble ſute is, that I may obtain that which thou wouldſt have at my hand, viz. That thou wouldſt grant one Church through every City for ſuch as will not Communicate with the Arians. The Arians perceiving that the requeſt of Athanaſius was not unreaſonable, made anſwer, that they would defer the anſwer unto another time, and conſider better of it; That they hindred not His Prudence.

the Emperour, but suffered him to do what pleased him best: wherefore the Emperour restored Athanasius to his Bishoprick again, writing Letters to the Bishops, Clergy, and People of Alexandria, that they should receive him lovingly and willingly: the tenor whereof was as followeth; Constantius his Letter to the Alexandrians in the behalf of Athanasius.

Constantius the Mighty, Noble, and Puissant Emperour, unto the Bishops and Presbyters of the Catholick Church, sendeth greeting: It appeareth evidently that Athanasius the Reverend Bishop was not destitute of the grace and goodness of God, but though by the judgement and censure of men he was dealt injuriously withal, and unjustly condemned for a little while: yet the Divine Providence of Almighty God, the beholder of all things, pronounced for him the just sentence of Innocency, so that by the will of God, and our Decree, he recovered both his Native Soil and proper Church, where the Holy Ghost hath assigned him Governor. He is to receive at your hands such things as our clemency, being led by right and reason, shall think convenient for him: so that all, whatsoever hath been heretofore decreed against such as communicated with him, be henceforth quite forgotten, that all suspition raised of him be henceforth removed, and that his Clergy (reason so requiring) may enjoy such liberty, freedom, and priviledges as they have done in times past. Moreover of our Soveraign benignity towards him, we have thought good to add this also, That as many as are allotted to the Sacred Senate of the Clergy may understand of truth, that we have granted safety and good leave to as many as cleave unto him, be they Bishops, or of what other degree soever of the Clergy. Every ones firm and sure consent in this behalf shall be a sufficient sign or token of his faithful minde and purpose: We have commanded that such as embrace his Communion, addicting themselves to the sounder opinion and better sentence, all alike now by our permission, as heretofore by the Providence of God, may enjoy the benefits bestowed upon them from above.

He wrote also to the Governour this Epistle.

His Letter to the Governor of Alexandria.

Constantius the Puissant and Noble Emperour, unto Nestorius sendeth greeting. If any thing be found decreed and recorded to the prejudice, hurt or damage of such as communicate with Athanasius the Bishop, our will is, that the same be wholly abrogated and disanulled. Our pleasure is moreover, that his Clergy shall enjoy their like Franchises and liberty as in times past: we will have this commandment put in ure, that as Athanasius the Bishop is restored to his See, so all the Clergy of his Communion may recover, and possess the like liberty with other Ecclesiastical persons, that so they may live at hearts ease.

Athanasius having received these Letters, passed through Syria, and came to Palestine: and arriving at Hierusalem, he opened unto Maximus the Bishop, both the Decrees of the Council of Sardis, and also the Emperour Constantinus his agreement and consent therein, and procured a Synod of Bishops to be assembled there: which being gathered together, Maximus gave to Athanasius the Communion, and assigned to him his Dignity, and the Council signified by their Letters to the people of Alexandria, and to the Bishops of Egypt and Lybia, all their Decrees and Canons touching Athanasius, and so dissolved.

Athanasius is restored by a Council.

Hereupon all the adversaries of Athanasius cryed out against Maximus, because that aforetime he had subscribed to this Deposition; But now repenting of his folly, he became of his Faith, and awarded to him both the Communion and his Dignity.

When Ursacius and Valence, who formerly had been earnest followers of Arius, heard of these things, they condemned their former doings, and gat them to Rome, there to exhibit their Recantation to Julius the Bishop, subscribing also the Creed that contained the clause of One Substance, writing also to Athanasius, that thenceforth they would communicate with him.

Athanasius travelling through Palestine towards Alexandria, preached in every City where he came, exhorting them to eschew the Arians, and to embrace such as confessed the Faith of One Substance: and in divers of the Churches also he Ordained Ministers, which gave occasion to his adversaries to accuse him again for presuming to make Ministers in other mens Provinces.

Not long after it pleased God, that Constance the Emperour of the West dyed, and Constantius made challenge unto all the Dominions of his Brethren, and being proclaimed Emperour of the West, he made an expedition against Magnentius & Bre-

Bretanion, two Tyrants that had usurped the Government there. The Adversaries of Athanasius supposing that now they had gotten a fit opportunity, invent, and charge him with new hainous offences: Informing the Emperour that he had perverted all Egypt and Lybia: also they urged against him his late Ordination of Ministers in other mens Dioceſs. Athanasius in the mean time came to Alexandria, convened divers Councils of the Bishops of Egypt, where they agreed to the Decrees of the Council of Sardis, and of that held at Jerusalem. He is again accused by the Arians.

The Emperour upon this occasion, who aforetime was addicted to the Arian Heresie, wrested all things that he had lately decreed on the contrary part, and first he banished, Paulus, the Bishop of Constantinople, whom the guides that were to conduct him into exile, very lewdly stifled at Cucusum in Cappadocia. Marcellus was expulsed. Lucius Bishop of Adrianople was clapt up into Prison, and there choaked with stink. But above all, the Emperour was most incensed against Athanasius, giving commandment, that he should be executed where-ever he could be taken: He charged also that Theodulus, and Olympius, Bishops of Thrace should be put to death, and Arians were placed in all these Bishops rooms. Bishop Paulus murthered. Others persecuted.

But it pleased God that Athanasius was made privy to these Bloody Decrees of the Emperour; whereupon he fled from Alexandria, and escaped the danger. This the Arians, rejoyced at, and grievously traduced him for it: which Athanasius hearing of, Apologized for himself, making a relation of the horrible practises committed at Alexandria by Georgius the Arian. Athanasius flyeth.

"There came (saith he) to Alexandria certain persons that sought us out to Execution: The Souldiers unawares beset the Church, and instead of devout serving of "God, took in hand their bloody swords, Georgius also joyned with them: Then were "the Virgins haled, and clapt up into Prison: The Bishops were bound, and led away "by bands of Souldiers: The Fatherless and Widows were dispossessed of their Hou-"ses: whole Familes were rifled: The true Christians were violently trailed and lugged "out of their Habitations: their doors were nailed up: The Clergy mens Brethren "were in great danger for their Brethrens sake: These things were very grievous, but "that which followed was far worse. The Week after Whitsontide the people did Fast, "and met in the Church-yard to Pray, because they abhorred the Communion of "Georgius: But when this passing lewd man heard of it, he stirred up against "them one Sebastian, a Captain, who also was a Manichee. He immediately with a "great Troop of Souldiers, all in Armour, and with naked Swords in their hands, "and Bows and Arrows prepared, ran upon the people as they were Praying upon "the Sabbath, and finding there but a few, (for the hour being past, the greater "part was gone home) he committed such hainous acts as very well became his person. "He set on fire a great company of faggots, he made the Virgins stand nigh the burning flame to scorch them: He endeavoured thereby to enforce them to confess the "Arian Faith: But when he perceived that they would not, and that they despised "the burning heat of the raging fire: He stripped them stark naked: buffetted them "about the head aud face, so that for a long time after they were scearce known of "their own friends. He also took forty persons, and plagued them with a new kind "of torment uever heard of before: He took Palm-twigs newly plucked off from the "Trees, and stripping them, scourged them therewith, and the twigs, having on their "pricking knobs, so rent them that by reason of the stumps sticking in their flesh, "they were fain to repair to Chirurgeons to be dressed of their wounds: Others of "them not being able to endure such terrible pains, dyed of their wounds: And "such Men and Virgins as remained alive, he sent away by the Souldiers into exile. "The dead carkasses not yet fully cold, were denyed to their friends being thrown "here and there, and lying unburyed (for that liked them best) the Souldiers insulting over them, as though they had not been faulty in committing such horrible "crimes: This did they, having their mindes besotted with the furious rage of frantick Heresie. And when as the dear and familiar friends of the dead rejoyced at "the bold aud constant Protestation of their Faith, yet mourned, because that their "corpses were not covered with Earth, the savage impiety & beastly cruelty of these "Souldiers revealed it self with greater shame and infamy. His Apology for it. The wicked practises of the Arians. Their cruelty against the Orthodox.

"Moreover, they baniſhed forthwith ſundry Biſhops of Egypt and Lybia, and ſome "of the Presbyters: and having bereaved them of their Native Soil, they uſed them "ſo mercileſly, that ſome of them dyed by the way, and others in Exile. They put "to death alſo above thirty Biſhops. They followed the ſteps of wicked Ahab, imploy- "ing all their art and induſtry to root out the Truth from off the face of the Earth.

Conſtantius his Armies having overcome and ſlain the Tyrants, he preſently removed to Rome, there to celebrate the Triumphs for his victories: and hoping that he might by one means or other draw the chief diſſenting Biſhops to an agreement in the Faith, he ſummoned a Council to meet in Italy: about which time Julius the Biſhop of Rome dyed, having been Biſhop 25 years, and Liberius ſucceeded him. Whereupon thoſe Biſhops which were againſt the Nicene Faith, perſwading themſelves that they had gotten a fit time to diſperſe their calumnies againſt the Orthodox, laboured by all means with the Emperour, that all thoſe Orthodox Biſhops, whom they had depoſed, might not be again reſtored to their Churches, both becauſe they maintained a Form of Faith contrary to theirs, as alſo for that in the life time of Conſtance, they had endeavoured to ſow the ſeeds of contention betwixt the two Emperours. And this odious ſuggeſtion they made, becauſe of Conſtance his Letters formerly mentioned in the behalf of Athanaſius; But their chiefeſt ſpleen was againſt Athanaſius: Whereupon about thirty of theſe Arian Biſhops meeting together at Antioch, they wrote to all other Biſhops, that Athanaſius had returned to Alexandria againſt all the Laws of the Church: Not by the decree of a Council, but by the contention of ſome that were of his own opinion: whereupon they commanded that none ſhould communicate with him, neither write to him, but that they ſhould hold Communion with Biſhop Georgius whom they had Ordained.

A Councell. ſummoned in Italy.

Athanaſius condemned by a Conventicle.

But Athanaſius little eſteemed theſe their doings, expecting to meet with far greatter afflictions afterwards. For Conſtantius being now the ſole Emperour of Rome, laboured by all means to draw the Weſtern Biſhops to agree with them that denyed Chriſt to be conſubſtantial with the Father: yet at firſt he attempted not this by force, but ſought rather to effect it by fraud, and fair means, endeavouring to perſwade them to agree with the Eaſtern Biſhops in that ſentence which they had pronounced againſt Athanaſius: aſſuring himſelf, that if by this means he could but remove Athanaſius out of the way, he could compoſe matters of Religion according to his own mind.

A Council therefore being called to meet at Millain, few of the Eaſtern Biſhops came to it, ſome being hindred by ſickneſs, and others by the length of the journey: But of the Weſtern Biſhops there appeared above three hundred.

The Eaſtern Biſhops which were there, required that Athanaſius might be condemned, and depoſed from his Biſhoprick: and of the Weſtern Biſhops, ſome (through fear,) others being circumvented by fraud, and another part being ignorant of former proceedings, aſſented to it: Only Dionyſius Biſhop of Alba, Euſebius Biſhop of Verſelle, Paulinus Biſhop of Trevir, and Rhodanus and Lucifer proteſted againſt ſuch proceedings; For (ſay they) if ſuch things be ſuffered, this evil will not reſt here, but the Decrees which are rightly and truly eſtabliſhed concerning God, and the Nicene Faith will be utterly ſubverted, and we diſcern that all the care of the Emperour and of the Arians is to bring this to paſs: But becauſe theſe men ſpake ſo freely in the Council, they were all of them baniſhed: and the event ſhewed that they did not miſs the mark.

For ſhortly after there was another Council gathered at Ariminum, and another at Seleucia, both which laboured to introduce new things againſt the Decrees of the Council of Nice.

His prudence.

In the mean time Athanaſius perceiving that ſnares were laid for him in the Emperours Pallace, and that he could not come thither without apparent danger, he appointed five Biſhops of Egypt, amongſt whom Serapion was one, a man eminent for Piety, and holineſs of life, and alſo very Eloquent, to go to the Emperor, who was yet in the Weſt: And with them he ſent three of his own Presbyters to ſee if by any means they could reconcile the Emperor to him, and vindicate him from the calumnies which his his enemies had caſt upon him, as alſo to tranſact other buſineſſes which much concerned the good, both of him and his Church.

But as ſoon as they were gone from Alexandria, he received Letters from the Emperour, requiring his preſent coming to the Court. This much troubled Athanaſius and all his people, much doubting what the iſſue might be: For they knew that he could neither ſafely aſſent to the Emperour, who defended a contrary Faith, neither yet could he without apparent danger croſs him therein. Hereupon Athanaſius reſolved to abide at Alexandria, and ſent him back who had brought the Emperours Letters. He is ſent for to the Emperour.

The Summer after came another meſſenger from the Emperour, who with the aſſiſtance of the Governors of Egypt forced Athanaſius to depart out of Alexandria, and grievouſly moleſted the Clergy of his Church: But when the Meſſenger ſaw the people to be extreamly offended with theſe proceedings, and that they betook themſelves to their weapons, he went his ways without effecting what he came about. He is again baniſhed.

Shortly after the Forces which were called the Latine Legions, were commanded to aſſemble out of Egypt and Lybia, and to go to Alexandria, and the Captain of them, being informed that Athanaſius lay hid in one of the Churches, he took a Company of Souldiers, and Hilarius that brought the Emperours command, and going to the Church, they environed it, and brake in at the windows, ſearching every corner, yet found not Athanaſius. For it had pleaſed God by a Divine Revelation to warn him of his dangers, (as in many other ſtraits he had formerly done): Whereupon he had a little before conveyed himſelf out of the Church, and thereby eſcaped. The like alſo had happened once before, when being grievouſly threatned by Conſtantius, in the life time of Conſtance, he had retired himſelf to a friend, and there lay hid in a Cave, that formerly uſed to be full of water: In that place he continued long, and a certain Maid uſed to Miniſter to his neceſſities: But the Arians, making diligent enquiry after him, had by their large promiſes corrupted this Maid to betray him: But God diſcovering the danger to him, a little before they came to apprehend him, he had conveyed himſelf to another place. A ſpecial providence.

The like alſo happened at another time: for Athanaſius being forced to fly from Alexandria, he entred into a Pinnace, and went up the River Nilus, which his Adverſaries being informed of, ſent a Captain and Souldiers in another Ship to purſue him: This being revealed to him by God, he required the Maſter of his Pinnace to turn again towards Alexandria, and ſo having the ſtream with him, he ſwiftly paſſed by his purſuers, and returning to Alexandria, he hid himſelf in his friends houſes, and by reaſon of the multitude of people was eaſily concealed, thereby eſcaping the danger. For theſe, and ſuch like miraculous eſcapes, his Adverſaries, the Arians and Gentiles accuſed him as dealing in the Magical Art.

Athanaſius being thus (as we ſaid before) eſcaped, his Clergy and people enjoyed the liberty of his Churches, for a ſhort time, viz. till the Governour of Egypt and the Captain of the Souldiers caſt all that adhered to Athanaſius out of the ſame, and delivered thoſe Churches to ſuch as longed for the return of Georgius the Arian: who ſhortly after came to Alexandria, and carryed himſelf very ſternly towards all, but cruelly towards all the friends of Athanaſius, caſting both men and women into bonds, and cruelly ſcourging them, ſo that every one looked upon him as a Tyrant: Yea he grew into ſuch hatred of the multitude, that on a time they roſe up againſt him whilſt he was in the Church, and he hardly eſcaped from being torn in peices by them: which ſo affrighted him, that he immediately fled to the Emperour: Hereupon the friends of Athanaſius recovered their Churches again, but they kept them but a while, for the Præfect of the Egyptian Souldiers drave them out, and reſtored the Churches to the followers of Georgius: The Emperour alſo ſending his Secretary to Alexandria, he grievouſly puniſhed many of the people, whipping and ſcourging them in a cruel manner: and ſhortly after him, came Georgius, and for the aforementioned cauſes was far more terrible to them then formerly he had been: which procured him their implacable hatred, both for incenſing the Emperour againſt them, and for his Heretical opinions, and cruel uſage of them. The cruelty of the Arians,

Georgius slain by the Gentiles.

But not long after, in a tumult raised by the Gentiles, Georgius was pulled out of the Church by the Ears, tyed to a Camel, torn in peices, and burned to ashes together with the Beast: Constantius the Emperour also dyed, and Julian the Apostate succeeded him: about which time Athanasius returned to Alexandria, and was lovingly and chearfully entertained by his people: The Arians were banished, and the Church was restored to the Government of Athanasius.

But the Arians took occasion from his former flight exceedingly to reproach, and traduce him, whereupon he made this Apology.

Athanasius his Apology for his flight

"Behold (saith Athanasius) the lewd practises of wicked persons: Although they "are privy to the hainous offences committed against me, yet are they nothing asha- "med of them: but charge me with a foul spot (in their opinion) and blemish of "infamy for escaping the hands of cut-throats and blood-suckers; yea they beshrew "themselves that they dispatched me not out of the way: Moreover, that they may "stain my credit and estimation, they fall to accuse me of faint-heartedness, and a "timorous disposition, being forgetful, that whilest they blaze these things to my "dispraise, they cause the shame to light upon their own pates. For if it be a discre- "dit to fly the hands of a Tyrant, how much more for them to persecute a man to "death? He that flyeth, seeks means to save his life: But he that persecuteth, go- "eth about to procure anothers death.

"That we should fly in such cases the Scripture doth warrant us: but in thirsting "after the blood of our brother, the command is broken, and the Author thereof is "found the chief cause of the flight. If they blame me forgiving them the slip, "they are worthy of far greater shame, and reprehension themselves: For let them "cease from persecuting, and threatning with death, and then will I cease from run- "ning away. But their spite and malice hath no end: They do nought else but de- "vise snares to bring men to destruction: Yea and that, though they know full "well; that the flight of the persecuted is a foul shame to the Persecutors. For no "man flieth from the gentle and meek: but from the cruel and wicked man. They "that were far indebted to others gave Saul the slip, and fled unto David. Where- "fore these men go about to dispatch such as convey themselves out of their way, "least the lewdness of their Bishops should be manifestly known. Herein also they "seem to be stark blind: For look how evident the flight is, far more apparent will "their slaughter and banishment seem unto the World. If they murther men, "death no doubt lifteth up her voice, and soundeth out their cruelty. If they ba- "nish them, therein they set up monuments for the remembrance of their wicked do- "ings. Had they been in their right wits, they might have perceived their own "folly, and seen themselves overthrown in their own devices. If they reproachful- "ly charge them with hiding themselves from such as seek their lives, and accuse them "for flying from the hands of their Persecutors; what have they to say, when they "read that Jacob fled from the face of his brother Esau? and that Moses for fear of "Pharoah conveyed himself to Madian? what have these contentious quarrellers to "say unto David, who fled from Saul, which sent some of his Guard to slay him, "who hid himself in a Cave, counterfeited his person untill he had subtilly past A- "bimelech the Priest, and avoided their laying of wait for him? what answer can "these rash bablers give, when they see that the great Prophet Elias, who so devout- "ly called upon the name of God, and raised the dead, was fain to flie from, and to hide "himself from Ahab, and run away because of the threats of Jezebel? The sons of the "Prophets also in those days, being sought for, hid themselves, and through the "help of good Obadiah, were sustained in Caves. Have they not read these ancient "stories? Are they ignorant also of what the Evangelists have written? For the "Disciples fearing the Jews fled, and were scatrered abroad in divers Countries. "Paul also being at Damascus, and sought for by the Governor of that country, was "let down over the wall in a basket, and so escaped the danger. The Scripture "therefore having shewed us these things, what colour can they find to cloak their "impudent cavils?

"If they charge them with timerousness and fear, the fault recoils, and lights up"on

" on their own diſtempered brains. If they ſay it is contrary to the Will of God, " then are they found altogether ignorant of the Word of God: For its commanded " in the Law, that Sanctuaries and Cities of Refuge ſhould be appointed for ſuch as " were purſued to death, where they might live in ſafety. Yea, what ſaith Chriſt, " When they ſhall perſecute you in one City, fly into another; And again, (ſaith Chriſt) " When you ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, mentioned by the Prophet Daniel, " ſtanding in the Holy place, then let them that be in Judæa, flie into the Moun- " tains: He that is on the Houſe top, let him not come down to take ought out of " the Houſe: and let not him that is in the Field return home for his rayment. Holy " men having learned theſe things, framed their lives thereafter. Yea the Word of " God being made man, ſticked not to hid himſelf, as we commonly do, when he " was ſought for; he fled to avoid the conſpiracies of Herod, and afterwards of the " Phariſees which perſecuted him. For as by his patient ſuffering of hun- " ger and thirſt, and ſuch miſeries, he ſhewed himſelf to be true man, ſo alſo by " flying away from the face of his Adverſaries. And as in his childhood he fled in- " to Egypt from Herod, ſo when he heard that Archelaus reigned in his Fathers ſtead, " it pleaſed him to go aſide into the parts of Nazareth. Afterwards when he mani- " feſted himſelf to be God, and healed the withered hand, the Phariſees went out, and " took counſel how they might diſpatch him, but Jeſus perceiving their conſpiracy, " conveyed himſelf from amongſt them.

" Again, when he reſtored Lazarus to life, they took counſel how they might put " him to death: Jeſus therefore after that time ſhewed himſelf no more openly amongſt " the Jews, but departed into a ſolitary place neer to the Wilderneſs. Again, when our " Saviour avouched, Before Abraham was, I am, the Jews took up ſtones to throw at " him: but our Lord hid himſelf, and went out of the Temple, and paſſing through " the midſt of the throng, eſcaped away. When they ſee theſe examples, and be- " think themſelves of theſe preſidents, are they not inwardly pricked in their conſci- " ences, when they preſume thus to ſit in judgment upon the ſayings and doings of " our Saviour? So alſo when Jeſus heard of the beheading of John the Baptiſt, the Text " ſaith, that he took Shipping, and went aſide into a Deſert place. I would to God that " theſe men would now at length be aſhamed of their doings, and preſently ceaſe from " ſlandering true Profeſſors, and proceed no further in their furious dealings, charging " even our Saviour himſelf with timerouſneſs and fear, thereby Blaſpheming the Ma- " jeſty of his bleſſed Name. But no man can away with ſuch perſons as are wholly " given over to all manner of ungracious behaviour. It may eaſily be proved, that " they are altogether ignorant of what the Evangeliſts have left us in writing: The " cauſe that moved our Saviour to fly and go aſide, (being laid down in the Goſpel) " was moſt agreeable unto reaſon; and was therefore an example for all his Saints: " For whatſoever things are written to have happened unto him after the manner of " men, the ſame is to be referred unto all mankind, inſomuch as he took our nature " upon him, and lively expreſſed in himſelf the humane affections of our frail conſti- " tutions: He ſuffered not himſelf to be taken before his hour came, neither yet hid " himſelf when his hour was come, but yielded himſelf to the Enemy. In like ſort the " bleſſed Martyrs in the great heat and troubleſome ſtorms of Perſecution, which " often fell out, being purſued by men, fled away, and hid themſelves in ſecret and " ſolitary places: but being taken, they valiantly encountred with their Adverſa- " ries, and ended the combate with Martyrdom.

His return to Alexandria.

Though this valiant Champion of Chriſt, Athanaſius, in the beginning of Julians Reign returned to Alexandria, yet long could he not reſt in quiet: For his Adverſaries forged falſe accuſations againſt him, complaining unto the Emperour that he had ſubverted Egypt, and the whole City of Alexandria, ſo that it ſtood with the Empe-perours intereſt to baniſh him the City: Upon theſe ſuggeſtions the Emperour wrote to the Governor of Egypt, and greatly incenſed him againſt Athanaſius, which he being informed of, ſaid to ſome of his familiar friends; My friends, let us go aſide for a ſeaſon, Nubecula eſt, & cito tranſibit, this is but a little cloud, which will quickly vaniſh away, and accordingly taking Ship, he fled away into other parts of Egypt:

He is baniſhed by Julian.

The

Gods providence over him.

The Enemy hearing of it, made haſt to overtake him: But when they approached (God revealing the danger to him, as was ſaid before) his friends in the Ship gave him counſel to haſte to the ſhore, and to fly into the Deſert; But he on the contrary required the Pilot to ſail back to Alexandria, and when they met the Purſuers, they enquired of them if they had not ſeen Athanaſius; to whom the other anſwered, that if they made haſt they might overtake him, and ſo let them go: But Athanaſius returning to Alexandria, hid himſelf amongſt his friends till the ſtorm of Perſecution was blown over: And indeed, moſt of that time he lay hid in the houſe of a moſt beautiful, chaſte, and godly Virgin, who was very careful to ſupply him with all neceſſaries, and to borrow ſuch Books for him as he ſtood in need of: & when news came of Julians death, Athanaſius that very night appeared in his Church, to the great rejoycing of his Friends, and the aſtoniſhment of his Adverſaries, who wondred how he could ſo ſuddenly be there, when he had been ſo diligently ſought after by the Magiſtrates, and could not be found.

Athanaſius in Alexandria.

Not long after, hearing that Jovianus the Chriſtian Emperour was come to Antioch, Athanaſius, conſulting with his friends, thought good to viſit him: Some ſay that this good Emperour ſent for him, craving his advice for the eſtabliſhing of the true Orthodox Religion, which when he had done, he was to return to Alexandria: But Euzoius the Arian Biſhop of Antioch, joyning with him Probatius an Arian Eunuch, and ſome others of that Faction, went to the Emperour, and made grievous complaints againſt Athanaſius, as that all the time ſince he was made a Biſhop, he lay under great ſcandals, for which by the former Emperours he had been often condemned and exiled: as alſo that he had been the Author of much diſcord in Religion, and of great tumults amongſt the people; whereupon they prayed that another Biſhop might be appointed for Alexandria. But the good Emperour knowing that theſe were malicious forgeries, would by no means hearken to them, commanding Probatius and the reſt, as they loved their own eaſe and good, to give over ſuch malicious proceedings, adding threatnings in caſe they obeyed not: And as for Athanaſius, whom he highly eſteemed for that worth which he found in him, he ſent him back into Egypt, bidding him Govern his Church as he ſaw beſt. Commending him highly for the Vertue, Piety, and Prudence which he found in him.

He is again complained of to Jevianus.

He returns to Alexandria.

Not long after it pleaſed God to take away this good Emperour by an immature death in Bythinia, as he was going to Conſtantinople, having reigned only eight moneths: and the Army coming to Nice in Bithynia, choſe Valentinian a good and worthy man for their Emperour, who when he came to Conſtantinople, choſe his Brother Valence for his Companion in the Empire. Theſe, though they were Brethren, yet did they differ in their Religion; For Valentinian was Orthodox, and Valence an Arian. Valence Raigning in the Eaſt, ſent his Mandate to the Magiſtrates, that ſuch Biſhops as had been depoſed in the time of Conſtantius, and returned to their Seats under Julian, ſhould be again baniſhed and expelled from their Churches. Hereupon the Magiſtrates of Egypt took occaſion to endeavour the expulſion of Athanaſius out of Alexandria. For the Emperours Letters grievouſly threatned ſuch Magiſtrates with great mulcts and corporal puniſhments, that ſhould neglect to obſerve them. But the multitude of Chriſtians meeting together in Alexandria, deſired the Preſident that he ſhould not raſhly nor inconſiderately go about to drive away their Biſhop Athanaſius from them; but rather ſeriouſly to conſider what the ſcope of the Emperours Letter was: For (ſay they) they extend only to ſuch as were baniſhed by Conſtantius, and returned under Julian: But Athanaſius though he was baniſhed by Conſtantius; yet was he by him called back again, and reſtored to his place: and Julian, whereas he called from Exile all the other Biſhops, yet Athanaſius alone was by him driven into Exile, whom Jovian again reſtored to his Seat.

See the Life of Jovian in my ſecond Part.

When the Preſident would not be perſwaded by theſe arguments, the people reſiſted him, and would not ſuffer their Biſhop to have any violence done to him: Hereupon the people being aſſembled from all parts, a great tumult was raiſed, ſo that every one expected a Sedition to enſue: The preſident ſent preſently to the Emperour to acquaint him with theſe proceedings, and in the mean time ſuffered Athanaſius to remain in the City.

Many

Many days after, when the Sedition was well appeased, Athanasius privily stole out of the City, and went and hid himself in a certain secret place. The night after the President and Colonel of the Souldiers went to his house which joyned to the Church, and there sought every corner for him, but not finding him, they lost their labours: For they thought that now the people were quieted, and feared no such matter, they might easily apprehend him, and so execute the Emperours command: But when Athanasius could not be found, every one much wondered at it, believing that God had discovered the danger to him, and thereby preserved him from it. Others say, That Athanasius mistrusting the heady and rash motion of the common people, fearing that if any mischief were wrought by them, it would be laid to his charge, retired privily and hid himself for the space of four months in his Fathers Monument. But in the mean time the Emperour Valence, considering how many friends Athanasius had, which by reason of his absence might happily raise commotions, to the great prejudice of the Empire; and withall considering that Valentinian, who was an earnest Defender of the Nicene Faith, might take the banishment of Athanasius very hainously; Hereupon he wrote very loving Letters to the people of Alexandria, signifying that his pleasure was, that Athanasius should quietly, according to their hearts desire enjoy his Bishoprick. Yet in other places a great Persecution was raised against the Orthodox, who were driven out of their Churches, and Arians placed in their rooms, only the Churches of Egypt enjoyed Peace all the life time of Athanasius, whose death fell out not long after, when having endured many skirmishes in the quarrel of the Church, and having been Bishop 46 years, in which time he had often been in great hazard of his life, yet at the length through the goodness and mercy of God, he dyed in peace in his own City of Alexandria, leaving behind him Peter, a godly and zealous man to succeed him Anno Christi 375. It was said of him, Non solum Episcopi, &c. Not only Bishops, but Emperours, Kingdoms, Nations, and Armies, opposed him: whereupon he used to say: Though an Army should encamp about me, yet would I not fear.

The Life of Hilarie, who flouriſhed An. Chriſti 355.

Hilarie Biſhop of Poictiers, was nobly deſcended, and of excellent gifts: He was frequent in Preaching, exemplary in Life: a great oppoſer of the Arian Hereſie: whereupon the Biſhops, Valence and Urſacius, procured the Emperour to baniſh him into Phrygia: Afterwards, the Emperour commanding many Biſhops to aſſemble at Seleucia to give their opinions about the Arian Hereſie, Hilarie carried himſelf ſo well there, that he was reſtored to Poictiers. After which he travelled over Italy and France, diligently inſtructing the Biſhops of both thoſe countries in the Canons of the Catholick Faith: He was a very Eloquent man, and wrote many things in the Latine tongue, amongſt which he wrote 12 Books of the Trinity, expounded the Canon containing the clauſe Of One Subſtance, proved it ſufficiently, and confuted the arguments of the Arians. He was a very Heavenly man both in his Life and Doctrine, and by his means, eſpecially, the Faith confirmed in the Nicene Council, was propagated and defended in theſe Weſtern parts of the World all his life time. He wrote alſo againſt the Emperour Conſtantius, one Book. Two Books to the Emperour, againſt Auxentius the Arian. Commentaries on Matthew: Epiſtles to S. Auguſtine, &c. He dyed in peace under Valentinian and Valence.

CYRIL

The Life of Cyril, who dyed Anno Chriſti 365.

Cyrillus, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, was, at the firſt an Arian, and therefore by that faction was made Biſhop of Hieruſalem: but ſhortly after, he was accuſed in a Council, for certain hainous crimes, by whom he was depoſed from his Biſhoprick, and being often called by them to purge himſelf from thoſe crimes, he ſtill abſented himſelf for the ſpace of two years, thinking thereby to eſcape, and the crime to be forgotten; as ſoon as he was depoſed he ſent an appellation in writing to his Depoſers, appealing from them to the Judges of the Higher Court.

He is depoſed.

Conſtantius the Emperour admitted his appellation, ſo that Cyril was the firſt and the only man that brought in this preſident, ſo prejudicial to the Eccleſiaſtical conſtitutions. At length he came to Seleucia to have his cauſe heard, where his Depoſition was confirmed for his communicating with certain Heretical Biſhops: and Herennius was ſubſtituted, in his room, Biſhop of Hieruſalem, and after him Heraclius, and after him Hilarius;

His appeal.

Theſe

These continued the Government of that Church, till the reign of Theodosius senior: At which time. Cyril having reformed his former miscarriages, was again placed in the Bishoprick of Hierusalem by that good Emperour, and he proved an eminent instrument of God's glory, and his Churches good: Insomuch as one saith of him, that he was Magnæ sanctimoniæ vir, a man of great Sanctity, Learning and Wisdom; He endured many heavy things for the testimony of Faith and a good Conscience, being often forced to forsake his place by the rage of the Arians: He was very charitable, insomuch that in a great Famine many poor people resorting to him for relief, he gave them all he had, and that not sufficing, he took the Vessels, and Church Ornaments, and sold them to relieve their wants: When Julian the Emperour had given command to re-edifie the Temple at Jerusalem in his time, one night there was such a terrible Earth-quake, that it parted the very stones of the foundation, and so all the upper buildings fell down; and when many Jews came together to behold what was done, suddenly there came fire from Heaven that comsumed all the tools and instruments of the workemen.

His reformation.

His patience.

His charity.

God's judgment on the Jews.

Epihanus gives him this testimony: He not only not feared to encounter Acacius the Arian, but did Christianly and faithfully oppose divers other Heretical Bishops. Hierom also saith thus of him; Cyril that valiant Soldier and Combatant for Jesus Christ, that most constant maintainer of the Orthodox Faith, for many years together strove for the propagation of Divine Truth, suffered various and heavy Persecutions: being exercised in such dangers from almost the beginning of Constantius his reign to the reign of Theodosius; yet all this while in the midst of these manifold afflictions he kept his first resolution, and dyed in the Faith at last, Anno Christi 365.

Testimonies of him.

His death

He used to say, Some come to the Church to see fashions, others to meet their friends; yet its better to come so, then not at all: in the mean time the Net is cast out, and they which intended nothing less, are drawn into Christ, who catches them, not to destroy them, but that, being dead, he may bring them to life eternal.

He wrote divers Treatises, which are called his Catechismes upon the principal Heads of Divinity.

The Life of Ephrem Syrus, who dyed Anno Christi 404.

Ephrem Syrus was born in Nisiba, and by the care of his Parents was educated in Learning, in the study whereof he was exceeding industrious, insomuch that without the help of an instructer, he attained to an excellent skill in the Syriack tongue: He was also a great Philosopher, and a very good Orator, so that he far excelled most of the Greek writers. Basil Bishop of Cæsera in Cappadocia, did wonderfully admire and commend him for his Learning. He is said to have written three hundred thousand verses, which were much esteemed in those times, many endeavouring to imitate his Learning therein; amongst whom were Abbas, Zenobias, Abraham Meras, and Symeon, all of them famous amongst the Syrians, and amongst all such as diligently study that language.

His birth & education.

His excellent learning.

But besides his exquisite Learning, he also gat great honour and commendations for his many good works, and exact course of life. He was very grave and severe in his carriage, and living a single life, that he might prevent all calumnies and scandals, he shunned the sight of a woman: For the report goes, that a certain woman dissolute in life and manners, and of an impudent face, either on purpose to tempt the man, or else being hired thereto by some others, on purpose met him in the City gate, and earnestly stared in his face: Ephrem taking notice of it, sharply rebuked her, and bade her look down upon the ground: But the woman answered, How can I do that, who am not made out of the Earth, but of thee? Its more meet that thou shouldst look upon the ground from whence thou hadst thy original, but that I should look upon thee, form whom I was procreated. Ephrem wondering at the woman, went his ways, and wrote a Book of these passages betwixt them, which the learned in the Syrian tongue do much esteem.

His Chastity.

His patience.

Its alſo recorded of him, that though by nature he was very cholerick, and all his Youth, could not bridle his anger; yet after he entred into this ſtrict courſe of life, he was never ſeen to be angry with any man.

His humility.

Having faſted divers days, one of his Servants that was bringing him his ſupper, let the Earthen Pitcher fall wherein it was,& brake it,and Ephrem ſeeing him overwhelmed with fear and ſhame, ſaid to him: Be of good cheer, let us go to our ſupper, ſince it will not come to us, and ſo ſitting down by the fragments of the pot, did eat his ſupper. He was very humble, full of ſelf-denyal, and a great enemy to vain-glory, as will notably appear by this example.

Upon a time he was voted to an Epiſcopacy, and they that had choſen and deſigned him thereto, ſought him out to bring him to the place where he was to be created Biſhop, which as ſoon as he underſtood, he ran into the Market place, and there by ſundry ſigns made ſhew as if he was crack-brained; ſo that they that came for him, thinking him to be beſides himſelf, took further counſel what to do: by which means he having gained time, fled privily away, and concealed himſelf, till he had heard that they had choſen another Biſhop to that place.

His charity.

Another notable example of his charitable diſpoſition will appear by this inſtance: Upon a time there was a very great Famine in Edeſſa, whereupon Ephrem coming out of his houſe, and calling many rich men together, he grievouſly accuſed, and complained of them, that the poor were almoſt ſtarved, whileſt they in a covetous manner, kept their riches by them, which (ſaith he) will in the end turn to your own great loſs, and to the torment of your ſouls, whereas you ought to preſer the wealth of your ſouls not only before all your riches, but before your very bodies themſelves: They hearing this, were much affected with his words, and ſaid thus unto him: Truly we care not much for our riches, but we know not whom to commit them to, to be faithfully diſtributed amongſt the Poor, ſeeing that almoſt every man is infected with the deſire of lucre and gain, and they uſe to make merchandiſe and advantage to themſelves upon ſuch occaſions: Then ſaid Ephrem to them, What do you judge of me? To whom they anſwered, We judge you to be a very faithful, good, and upright dealing man, as every man eſteems you to be. Well (ſaid he) and for your ſakes I will undertake this great and troubleſome work; and ſo receiving their money, he cauſed three hundred beds to be provided, and laid in the cloiſters, placing in them ſuch as were ſick by reaſon of the terrible Famine, for whom he made convenient Proviſion, and not only for them, but alſo for ſtrangers, and for all ſuch as were driven by the Famine out of the Villages to ſeek relief in the City. And thus he continued till the Famine being ceaſed, he returned into his retired houſe again, and not long after he quietly ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 404.

His care for the poor in a Famine.

His death.

He was a great oppoſer of Sabellius, Arius, Apollinarius,& other Hereticks: So chaſte, that he repelled the ſhameleſs behaviour of a lewd woman, which being inſtigated by the Devil, thought to have enticed him to luſt; but with grave Exhortations, Admonitions, and Divine ſpeeches, he caught and overcame the tempter: ſo that by his Fatherly advice ſhe proved a grave, modeſt, and religious Matron: In his Will he commanded that they ſhould ſing no verſes in his commendation, bury him in no fine linnens, nor with ointments, raiſe no monuments for him: for (ſaith he) I am a ſtranger and ſojourner, &c. He was very merciful to the poor, as in part we have heard before, and having not of his own to give, by his ſweet and attractive Sermons, he ſtirred up the hearts of others to relieve them.

An enemy to Hereticks.

His chaſtity

His humility.

His charity

His ſayings. The benefit of perſeverance.

He uſed to ſay, That the reſolute Traveller knows that his journey is long, and the way dirty, yet goes on in hope to come to his houſe: ſo let a Chriſtian; (though the way to Heaven be narrow, though it be ſet with troubles and perſecutions) yet let him go on till he hath finiſhed his courſe with joy, for Heaven is his home. And again, He that feaſts his body, and ſtarves his ſoul, is like him that feaſts his ſlave and ſtarves his wife. He dyed under Valens.

The

BASIL

The Life of Basil, who flouriſhed An. Chr. 370.

Baſil was born in Pontus, of noble and religious Parents: his Grand-Father, and great Grand-Father, ſuffered Martyrdom under Galerius Maximus. He was called Baſilius Magnus, for as one ſaith of him, he was great in wit, great in eloquence, great in wiſdom, great in defending, great in propagating Gods glory, great in convincing Hereticks, &c. His birth.

When he was grown up to years of diſcretion, he went to Cæſarea of Cappadocia, which was then the moſt famous City of Aſia for learning; In which place in a ſhort time he made ſuch a proficiency in his ſtudies, that he excelled all his equals in all ſorts of Learning: From thence he went to Conſtantinople, where having ſtudyed a while, he went to Athens, where he heard thoſe famous Rhetoricians Hymerius and Proæreſius; At which place alſo he fell into acquaintance with Gregory Nazianzen, and joining ſtudies together, they continued in firm amity all their life after: He was of an excellent conſtitution, but by much watching, praying, faſting, reading, and ſpare dyet, much weakned his body. His education.

Afterwards he went to Antioch, in Syria, where he frequented the School of Libanius, and became an excellent Orator. So that he was thought worthy to deliever to the World the Precepts of Philoſophy, and was much ſolicited thereunto by many excellent men: Others perſwaded him to become an Orator: But neither of theſe imployments ſuted with his purpoſe: wherefore having ſufficiently profited in Philoſophy under Libanius, he provided for himſelf the Commentaries of Origen (who then was famous throughout the World) and learned out of them to interpret and expound the Sacred Scriptures: Then did he valiantly encounter with the Arians, and when as they alleadged Origens Books for the confirmation of their Heretical opinions, he refuted their ignorance, and ſhewed by plain demonſtrations, that they underſtood not the minde and meaning of Origen. Yea Eunonius, a favourer of that Sect, and as many Arians as were of greateſt reputation, and accounted the profoundeſt Scholars, when they diſputed with him and Gregory Nazianzen, proved themſelves fools and and unlearned perſons. His zeal againſt Hereſie.

He was at firſt Ordained Deacon by Meletius Biſhop of Antioch, afterwards Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia where he was born: after which he gave himſelf wholly to benefit and profit the Church: And when he greatly feared that the new device of Arius his brain would creep thoughout the Province of Pontus, in all haſte he gat him into thoſe parts, inſtructing the ignorant, and confirming the wavering minds of weaklings in the Faith. A little before, ſome difference aroſe betwixt Euſebius Biſhop of Cæſarea, and Baſil, about their different opinions, which Valence, the Arian Emperour hearing of, haſted thitherward, and when he came into Cappadocia, according to his uſual manner, he grievouſly afflicted the Orthodox, thruſting them out of their Churches, and placing Arians in their rooms: and he hoped eaſily to do the like when he came to Cæſarea, becauſe of the enmity that was betwixt Euſebius and Baſil. But it fell out far otherwayes; For Baſil and Pontus, hearing of the Emperours proceedings in Cappadocia, haſted to Cæſarea, and preſently was reconciled to Euſebius, and by his Miniſtry ſeaſonably ſtrengthened the Church: So that when Valence came thither, finding his hopes fruſtrated, he returned without effecting what he came about.

to

A good Paſtor. Not long after Euſebius dyed, and Baſil was choſen and ordained Biſhop in his room; where he performed the Office of a worthy Shepheard to his flock, as well by duly and truly feeding them with the ſincere milk of God's Word, as by driving away all Hereticks, that like Wolves, ſought to devour his Sheep.

A ſpecial providence. At laſt came back the Emperour Valence into Cappadocia, fully purpoſing to drive Baſil out of Cæſarea: but the Lord prevented him by this means. The very night after he attempted this wickedneſs, his Wife was grievouſly troubled with dreadful dreams about him, and his only Son Gallates fell ſick of a ſharp and violent Feaver, ſo that the Phyſitians, deſpairing of his recovery, gave him up for dead: His Wife alſo told him of thoſe ugly ſhapes, and fearful viſions of Devils and wicked Spirits which ſhe had ſeen in her ſleep: adding that their child alſo was viſited with that ſickneſs, becauſe of the evil and miſchief which he had purpoſed againſt Baſil.

The Emperour marking diligently the words of his Wife, and muſing with himſelf, caſt in his mind what to do, and at length reſolved ro ſend for Baſil, and when he came, ſpake thus unto him; If thy Faith and Opinion be true, pray that my Son dye not of this diſeaſe. To whom Baſil anſwered; If thou wilt promiſe me to believe as I do, and if thou wilt bring the Church into unity and concord, thy child, no doubt, ſhall live: But the Emperour would by no means agree unto this: Then ſaid Baſil, Let the Lord deal with the child as pleaſeth him, and ſo departed, and immediately after, the child dyed.

His charity. He was very charitable, inſomuch as in a great Famine, he ſold his lands and all his other goods to relieve the Poor, and ſtirred up other rich Merchants, by Scripture, and ſweet ſpeeches, to contribute to their neceſſities: He was alſo careful to ſee the ſick provided for: and cauſed publick places to be erected for their maintenance, and would often, not only viſit them, but alſo adminiſter to them. Julian the Emperour having formerly known him at Athens, ſent, and deſired him to write to him,

His zeal. which he refuſed to do, becauſe of his Apoſtaſie: Nay Valence the Emperour, when he perſecuted the Orthodox, and had put eighty Presbyters into a Veſſel, thinking to have burnt them at Sea, yet meeting Baſil, he ſpake him fair, and ſent alſo to him by many meſſengers to win him to that Hereſie; yet neither threats, nor promiſes could

His courage & conſtancy once move him; for when the meſſenger gave him good language, and promiſed him great preferment, he anſwered, Alas Sir, theſe ſpeeches are fit to catch little children that look after ſuch things: but we that are taught, and nouriſhed by the Holy Scriptures,

His zeal. are readier to ſuffer a thouſand deaths, than to ſuffer one ſyllable, or tittle of the Scriptures to be altered: And when Modeſtus the Præfect asked him, Know ye not who we are that

His courage command it? No body (ſaid Baſil) whileſt you command ſuch things: Know ye not (ſaid the Præfect) that we have honours to beſtow upon you? To which he anſwered, They are but chargeable, like your ſelves: Hereupon in a rage he threatened to confiſcate his goods, to torment him, to baniſh or kill him: to which he anſwered, He need not fear confiſcation that hath nothing to loſe; nor baniſhment, to whom Heaven only is a Country: nor torments, when his body would be daſht in peices with one blow:

nor death, which is the only way to set him at liberty: The Præfect told him that he was mad; to whom he replyed, Opto me in æternum sic delirare, I wish that I may for ever be thus mad: yet the Præfect gave him that night to resolve what to do; but he was the same man the next morning: whereupon the Præfect related all to the Emperour, who went to Church with intentions to have disturbed him in his holy duties; but seeing his reverend carriage, he was so convinced that he made a large offering, which Basil refused, as coming from an Heretick. An excellent speech. His zeal.

At another time the Præfect sending for him, commanded him to comply with the Emperour in his opinion, or else threatned him with death: whereupon Basil unfeignedly and freely spake his minde about the Emperours opinion, withall highly commending the Faith Of One Substance: and whereas (saith he) you threaten me with death, would it would fall out so well on my side, that I might lay down this carkass of mine in the quarrel of Christ, and in defence of his Truth, who is my Head, & Captain. Then said the Præfect: Be not so rash in thy answer, second thoughts may prove better, and therefore I give thee this day and night to consider further of it, and to morrow I will expect thy answer, desiring that thou mayst not wilfully cast away thy self: Whereupon Basil replyed; I have no need to take further Counsel about this matter: Look what I am to day, the same thou shalt find me to morrow; but I pray God that thou change not thy mind: For since I am a creature my self, I can never be perswaded to Worship one that is like me, and to acknowledge him for God; or to conform my self to thine, and the Emperour's Religion. For though you be Illustrious Persons, and command a great part of the World, yet must not I submit to your wills, being but men; nor obey you, with the neglect of my Faith in God, which, God assisting, I will never betray, though you confiscate my goods, though you banish me, or torment me to death: Seeing none of these things will trouble me at all: As for riches, truly I have none besides my torn garments, and a few Books, and I so dwell here in this World, as one that is always ready to leave it: and as for my body, it is so weak, that one only blow will make it insensible both of grief and torments. This resolute answer caused the Præfect to dismiss him. Death desired for Christ's cause. His courage and constancy.

Yet after this the Arians prevailed again for his banishment; but when the writing was brought to Valence to be confirmed, the pens would not write the least title, being often tried; and when the Emperour (being mad with rage) still endeavoured to confirm the Edict for his banishment, he was struck in his right hand with a great trembling: So that at last, being terrified with these judgements of God, he tore the paper in pieces. A Miracle.

So having been Bishop at Cæsarea and Cappadocia eight years and an half, he departed this life with these words, Into thine hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit. His death.

He used to say, To know thy self is very difficult: for as the Eye can see all things but it self; so some can discern all faults but their own. And again, Divine Love is a never failing treasure: he that hath it is rich; and he that wanteth it, is poor: When he had read the Bible over, he said, It's a Physicians shop of Preservatives against poysonous Heresies: a pattern of profitable Laws against rebellious spirits: a treasury of most costly jewels against beggarly elements: and a fountain of most pure water, springing up to eternal life. His sayings Love. Scriptures.

Erasmus saith, that he rather deserved the name of Maximus, then of Magnus: Concerning whose Eloquence (saith he) I take it to be a great disgrace to him, if I should compare him with any of those whom the Grecians most admired, and endevoured to imitate. For which of all those great Orators did so excel in Eloquence, wherein something was not either wanting or offensive? Did Pericles Thunder and Lighten in his Orations? yet it was without Art. Lysias was frozen in his Attick subtilty. Phalereus had much sweetness, but wanted gravity. Isocrates was but the shadow of an Orator. Demosthenes, whom Tully maketh the compleat example of an exquisite Orator, yet wanted affections, and urbanity in his Orations: But S. Basil was an incomparable man, in whom was wanting neither Nature nor Art, nor Exercise: He was not only an excellent Orator, but a great Philosopher, and exactly skilled in all kind of Learning. But as I said before, its a disgrace to compare such a Christian Erasmus his Testimonie of Basil.

Christian with any of the Heathens: It's fitter therefore to compare him with Christians, like himself; and truly that Age produced many excellent men, famous both for their Learning and Piety; as Athanasius, Gregory Nazianzen, John Chrysostom, and Gregory Nissen. And each of these excelled in their several gifts: Athanasius for excellent teaching: Nazianzen for his florid and acute Orations: Chrysostome, though he answered his sir-name by reason of his golden mouth, yet he hath many superfluous words, and was immoderate in his digressions. Nissen was content with his pious simplicity. But I know not what the most Critical Reader can desire more then he shall find in Basil. He shall find in him a simple and natural form of speech flowing from his most holy Breast, drained of all humane passions: whatsoever Art can do, is to be found in him, yet without the appearance of Art. There thou mayst find the knowledge of mundane Philosophy, without the least ostentation of it: there thou mayst discern his skill in the Liberal Sciences, & amongst them of the Mathematicks; and yet he makes them all handmaids to Piety. In his discourses he doth exquisitely mingle Divine testimonies of Scripture, that they are like to precious stones not sowed to, but bred in purple clothes.

GREGORI NAZIANZEN

The Life of Gregory Nazianzen, who flourished, Anno Christi 370.

His Character.

His Education.

Gregory Nazianzen was first Bishop of Sasima, then of Nazianzum in Cappadocia, and lastly, of Constantinople: He was a living Library of Philosophy and Divinity: exceeding Eloquent: A defender of the poor and oppressed; and a comforter of the afflicted. In his younger days he became acquainted with Basil, and joyned studies with him: So that with with him at Athens, he heard thoſe famous Rhetoricians Hymerius and Proæreſius. At Antioch in Syria he frequented the School of Libanius, and by theſe means he became an excellent Orator. His education.

By reading the Commentaries of Origen, he learned to expound, and interpret the Sacred Scriptures. In diſputation he foiled and overthrew the moſt learned amongſt the Arians: and fearing leaſt thoſe Errors ſhould infect the Churches of Cappadocia; he got him thither to oppoſe them, where he was made Biſhop of Nazianzum, a mean City of Cappadocia, whereof his Father had been Biſhop before him. His zeal againſt Hereſie. He is made Biſhop of Nazianzum

What inſight he had into mens diſpoſitions by their Phyſiognomies, may appear by that which he wrote concerning Julian the Apoſtate, in his ſecond Oration againſt the Gentiles, where he thus writeth, I foreſaw (ſaith he) long ago in Julian that which is now come to paſs, when I knew him at Athens: For he came thither when the Empreſs had procured Licenſe of the Emperour for his voyage, and when his Brother Gallus had conſpired the death of the Emperour Conſtantius. There were two cauſes that moved him to repair to Athens: The firſt was tollerable, the ſecond had ſmall honeſty in it: The firſt was to ſee Greece, and the Schools that flouriſhed therein: The ſecond (which was more ſecret, and was known unto few) was to conſult with Southſayers, and Sacrificers, about his affairs in time to come, becauſe it was not permitted openly for the Authors of ſuch impiety to practiſe ſuch divelliſh inventions. And I my ſelf in conjecturing of him at that time, (although I am not of the number of Prophets) yet was not much deceived: For his wavering mind and frantick diſpoſition made me a Prophet good enough. I ſaw not one ſign in him that gave me any hope that ever he would become an honeſt man. His judgment on Julian.

He had a running head: his ſhouldiers did never leave waging: He had winking eyes that continually rouled in his head: His countenance was ſtaring: He had a ſliding and limping pace: His viſſage was ſcornful. He had a fleering face of his own, the which, his immoderate laughter, and continual ſcorning did declare. His manner was without all honeſty, to ſay and unſay: His words came tumbling out with vehemency and ſtops, the ſentence broken in the midſt: His queſtions and objections were raſh and fooliſh: His anſwers were little better, which oftentimes followed one after another, and as there was little hold of them, ſo were they propoſed without order. But what need I to run over all particulars? I foreſaw in him before he was created Emperour, that which afterwards proved to be moſt true. If there were any of my familiar friends preſent which heard me thus divining of him, I am ſure they would teſtifie this to be no otherwiſe then what I do report it: In whoſe hearing alſo at the foreſight of theſe things, I uttered theſe words; O good God, what a Monſter the Empire of Rome doth nouriſh? When I had uttered theſe words, I deſired of God, that in this matter I might be found a lyar. For that had been far better, then that the whole World ſhould have been viſited with ſo many miſchiefs, or then that ſuch a Monſter ſhould have been ſeen amongſt men, the like unto whom had never been remembred before: For in his time happened many deluges, and flouds over-flowing the Countries, the which both young, and old, do at this time remember: Beſides great loſſes by fire, terrible Earth-quakes, and gapings of the ground: Men alſo of a ſtrange ſhape were born into the World, of mixt and compound natures, being half Men, half Beaſts: But he purchaſed to himſelf ſuch an end as his frantick diſpoſition juſtly deſerved: Theſe things did Gregory report of Julian. A deſcription of Julian

Not long after, in the reign of Theodoſius ſenjor, Gregory was tranſlated from the City of Nazianzum to govern a little Church within the walls of Conſtantinople, unto which the Emperour afterwards annexed a goodly Temple, called the Reſurrection: But Gregory being a famous man, and excelling in vertue and godlineſs all that flouriſhed in his time, when he perceived that ſome murmured, and objected to him, that he was a ſtranger, and foreigner, although he rejoyced at the Emperours coming, yet was utterly refuſed to continue any longer at Conſtantinople.

He had ſuch a dexterity of wit, that which way ſoever he turned himſelf, he could happily effect it: In opening the Myſteries of the Sacred Scriptures he was an excel- His excellent parts.

lent Teacher, diligent, cautious, plain, and without offering violence to the Text. Nature ſeemed to have framed him for Panegyrick Orations, yet did he ſo temper his ſpeeches therein to the mindes, and ears of the multitude, that he was very plain to the ignorant, and yet at the ſame time to be admired by the learned. In his diſputations againſt Eunomius, he ſhewed admirable acuteneſs, yet never receded from his perſpicuity of ſpeech: and ſo contained himſelf within the bounds of defence of the Catholick Truth, that he never brake forth into reproaches extravagant from the cauſe.

His modeſty.

His excellent gifts.

Neither was he unlike himſelf in his work to Amphilocus about the Holy Ghoſt. But what argument ſoever he handled, wholſome and pleaſing ſpeeches were never wanting to him, and thoſe not acquired, but natural. According to his name in all his works there appears a certain Kingly Majeſty, mixed with admirable humanity. He ſo inveighed againſt the evil manners of men, that they could not but love him whileſt he chid them. And look what his Doctrine was, ſuch was his life.

By this dexterity of his wit, when Euſebius Biſhop of Cæſarea, by his ambition ſtirred up Sedition, of an æmulus he made him his very good friend. By this he ſo contented Modeſtus, the Emperour's Præfect, that he drew that wicked man by the ſhining of his virtue to admire him. By this, when the Emperour Valence himſelf entred into his Church, he firſt aſtoniſhed him, and afterwards by his diſcreet conference, deterred him from his cruelty, yea, reclaimed him from the faction of the Arians, though afterwards thoſe wicked men prevailed to bring him over to them again. He had always a mind ſo prepared for Martyrdom, that he deſired it as a great favour.

His deſire of Martyrdom.

In all his writings there is ſuch a peculiar grace, and excellency, that he never tires his Reader; but always diſmiſſeth him with a thirſt after more. One ſaith of him, that the true beauty of his ſoul did ſhine forth in his Eloquence, Rhetorick being both his companion and ſervant. Hierom was his ſcholar. He was of ſuch Authority in the Greek Churches, that whoſoever durſt oppoſe his teſtimony, was ſuſpected for an Heretick. He ſo loved ſolitude that when for his excellent Learning and Sanctity, he ſhould firſt have been made a Biſhop, he retired himſelf into obſcurity; but being diſcovered, the people choſe him for their Biſhop. At laſt, growing old, and unfit for his publick imployment, he conſtituted another Biſhop, and returned to his former ſolitude. He flouriſhed under Theodoſius.

Eloquence.

His ſaying. Preaching.

He uſed to ſay, That in a great multitude of people of ſeveral Ages, and Conditions, (who are like an Harp with many ſtrings) it is hard to give every one ſuch a touch in Preaching, as may pleaſe all, and offend none. He wrote divers works both in proſe, and verſe.

The Life of Epiphanius, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 370.

His birth and education.

Epiphanius Biſhop of Salamine in Cyprus, was born in Paleſtine, in an obſcure Town called Baſanduces, of poor and obſcure parents; his Father dying when he was young, he was adopted, and brought up by one Tryphon a Jew, whereby he attained to an excellent knowledge in the Hebrew: He was converted to the Chriſtian Faith by one Lucianus, famous for his Learning, and Virtue: Lucianus put him to Hilarion to learn, under whom he profited exceedingly.

His Converſion.

Hereticks ſeek to enſnare him.

Whileſt he was a boy, certain Hereticks, called the Gnoſticks, cunningly ſought to inveigle him, and to draw him over to their opinions: But it pleaſed God to preſerve him from the temptation, and to keep him in the Truth. In his riper years he was famous in the Church for his Piety, Holineſs of Life, and for the Sincerity of his Doctrine, and Elegancy of his Stile, as his Books witneſs, which ſhew their Author to be a man of great reading, skilful in the Tongues, well acquainted with Controverſies,

verſies, prudent in aſſerting the Truth, and acute in confuting Errors; whereupon Melanchthon ſaith of him; We have no fuller an Hiſtory of thoſe ancient affairs of the Church then the writings of Epiphanius do contain, in which, whileſt he intends the Confutation of Hereſies, he inſerts many Hiſtorical paſſages: So that out of this Author may be collected almoſt a continued Hiſtory of the ancient Church, if any would with prudence joyn his Narrations together: and I wiſh that ſome Prince would take care to ſee ſuch a work done.

He was of a very liberal, and charitable diſpoſition, inſomuch as he ſpent all his eſtate in relieving the Poor. Being afterwards choſen Biſhop of Salamine in Cyprus, he at firſt modeſtly refuſed that dignity, but importunity prevailing with him, he ſo lived, that vitam doctrinâ, doctrinam vitâ comprobaret, his Doctrine approved his Life, and his Life defended his Doctrine: He was ſemper Hereticorum acerrimus oppugnator, always a ſharp oppoſer of Hereticks: He purged all Cyprus, defiled and ſlurried with divers Hereſies: and having gained an Edict from Theodoſius the Emperour, he caſt all the Hereticks out of the Iſland.

Made Biſhop of Salamine.

Preachers pattern.

His zeal againſt Hereſies.

About this time Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, having upon ſome falſe ſurmiſes conceived diſpleaſure againſt John Chryſoſtom Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he ſought cunningly to thruſt him out of his Biſhoprick: whereupon he ſent Letters to the Biſhops throughout every City, concealing his principal driſt, and only pretending that he miſliked the Books of Origen: Epiphanius alſo being at this time very old, Theophilus wrought upon his weakneſs, and prevailed with him to call a Council in Cyprus: In which Council the Biſhops Decreed, that thenceforth none ſhould read the works of Origen: and by the inſtigation of Theophilus, they wrote alſo to Chryſoſtom, exhorting him to abſtain from the peruſing of thoſe Books, requeſting him to ſummon a Council at Conſtantinople, and to ratifie that Decree with the uniform conſent of all.

Epiphanius abuſed by Theophilus.

Origens books condemned.

After this, Epiphanius went to Conſtantinople, contrary to the Canons of the Church Ordained ſome Miniſters there, and adminiſtred the Sacrament: Yet Chryſoſtom honoured him highly, went with the reſt of his Clergy to welcome him to the City; invited him to lodge at his own houſe, and to make uſe of his Church during his abode there: But Epiphanius, being prepoſſeſſed with prejudice, anſwered that he would neither lodge in his houſe, nor joyn with him in Prayer, except he would condemn the Books of Origen, and drive away Dioſcorus with his aſſociates from him, who were favourers of Origen. But Chryſoſtom anſwered, that it would be great injuſtice to condemn men before their cauſe was heard; eſpecially conſidering that the time for adminiſtration of the Sacrament was now near: and with this anſwer he left him.

Epiphanius his weakneſs.

Preſently after the Enemies of Chryſoſtom came to Epiphanius, and perſwaded him, publickly before all the people, to condemn the Books of Origen, and alſo Dioſcorus & his followers, and withall to tax the Biſhop of the City for favouring theſe perſons: Epiphanius being of too facile a diſpoſition, went out the next day to perform theſe things, which Chryſoſtom hearing of, ſent Serapion, who met him not far from the Church, and proteſted, that if he did theſe things, he would do that which was neither juſt nor equal, nor convenient for himſelf: For that hereby he might bring himſelf into danger, if any tumult ſhould be raiſed amongſt the people. Hereupon he deſiſted; yet privately he called together ſome Biſhops that ſtayed in the City, and ſhewed them the Decrees which condemned the Books of Origen, and drew ſome of them to aſſent to the ſame: but the greateſt part refuſed, and Theotymus, Biſhop of Scythia, blamed him to his face for it, and told him that it was altogether unlawful thus to calumniate and aſperſe a man that was dead long ſince, eſpecially being of ſo great worth, and his writings approved of by their Predeceſſors, &c.

At laſt he reſolved to return into Cyprus, and for a farewel to Chryſoſtom, he ſaid, I hope that thou wilt not dye a Biſhop: To which Chryſoſtom replyed, and I hope thou wilt never return into thy own Country: Both which came to paſs: For a while after, Chryſoſtom was caſt out of his Biſhoprick: and Epiphanius dyed upon the Sea: and when he found himſelf mortally ſick, he called his friends, and ſaid to them,

Two Predictions.

His death. Salvieſtote filii, &c. God bleſs you my children, for Epiphanius ſhall ſee your faces no more in this life; and ſhortly after he dyed, aged 115 years, having been Biſhop 55 years, His loſs was exceedingly lamented at Salamine.

His ſayings. Hatred cured. He uſed to ſay, That he never let his adverſary ſleep; not that he diſturbed him in his ſleep; but becauſe he agreed with him preſently, and would not let the Sun go down upon his wrath.

His works. His Works are printed together, being moſt of them againſt the Hereſies of his time, the names are.

AMBROSE

The Life of Ambroſe, who dyed Anno Chriſti 397.

His birth. Ambroſe was Biſhop of Millain; His Father was a Præfect in France:

A Prodigy. when Ambroſe was an Infant, a ſwarm of Bees (as he lay in his Cradle) ſetled on his Face, and flew away without hurting of him, whereupon his Father ſaid, Si vixerit infantulus iſte, aliquid magni erit, if this child live, he will be ſome great man.

His Education. Afterwards he went to Rome, and gained great knowledge in the Liberal Arts, and was excellently accompliſhed with Eloquence, and ſweet behaviour, whereupon he was made Governor of Inſurbia, and ſo went to Millain, where he was made Lieutenant, and being made Lieutenant thereof, about the ſame time this ſtrange act happened; When Auxentius, whom the Arians had choſen to be Biſhop of that Sea, dyed, all was there on an uprore about the Election of another Biſhop, and great ſtrife there was, whil'ſt ſome would prefer this man, and ſome others that man unto the Biſhoprick. The tumult being raiſed, Ambroſe the Lieutenant of the City, who alſo was a Conſul, fearing greatly leſt that Schiſm would breed miſchief in the City, came purpoſely into the Church to appeaſe the Seditions: And his preſence prevaling very much with the people, after he had given them many notable exhortations,

A ſpecial providence. and thereby mitigated the rage of the heady and raſh multitude; All on a ſudden, with one voice, and, as it were, with one mouth, nominated Ambroſe for their

Biſhop

Biſhop, hoping hereby that all things would be reconciled, and that all would embrace one Faith and Opinion.

The Biſhops that were preſent, thought verily that the uniform voice of the people was the voice of God himſelf: Wherefore, without any further deliberation, they took Ambroſe (who was but a Catechumeniſt) and Baptized him, purpoſing alſo to enſtal him in the Biſhoprick: Ambroſe came willingly to Baptiſm, yet denyed utterly to be a Biſhop; whereupon the Biſhops made the Emperour Valentinian privy to their doings: He wondering at the conſent and agreement of the people, judged that which was done to be the work of God himſelf: he ſignified therefore to the Biſhops, that they ſhould obey the Will of God, and create Ambroſe Biſhop, ſaying, that God, rather then men, preferred him to this dignity.

Ambroſe baptized.

He is made Biſhop.

Thus Ambroſe being made Biſhop, the Citizens of Millain, who aforetime were at diſcord amongſt themſelves, thenceforth embraced Peace and Unity. Whereupon the good Emperour publickly returned thanks unto God in theſe words; I give thee humble thanks O Omnipotent God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that whereas I had committed the Government of their Bodies to this man, thou haſt alſo committed their Souls to his care, and thereby haſt declared that my ſentence was juſt in appointing him to ſuch a place.

Not long after Ambroſe ſpake very freely to the Emperour, complaining of divers things which were ill adminiſtred by ſundry of the Magiſtrates: To whom that worthy Emperour anſwered; I knew long ago that thou waſt a free-ſpoken man, for which cauſe I was ſo far from reſiſting thine Ordination to the Biſhoprick, as that I gave my free and full conſent to it; wherefore according to the rule of Gods Holy Word, do thou prepare a medicine for our erring mindes.

His fidelity and courage

This good Emperour a whlle after dying, Juſtina his Wife; being infected with the filth of Arianiſm, yet whileſt her husband lived, ſhe could no kind of way moleſt thoſe that embraced the Faith of One Subſtance: But after his deceaſe, removing to Millain, together with her young ſon, ſhe raiſed ſuch tumults againſt Ambroſe, the Biſhop, that in the end ſhe prevailed for his baniſhment: But the people, who bore ſingular love and affection to Ambroſe, withſtood her Act, and hindred their force that went about to convey him into exile; and it pleaſed God, that juſt at the ſame time, news came that Maximus a Britain had Rebelled, and that Gratian the Emperour was ſlain in France by Andragathius the Captain of Maximus: Which news ſo cooled the heat of Juſtina's ſpleen, that ſhe was content to let Ambroſe alone.

The people reſiſt her.

Juſtina's malice,

Yet did ſhe proceed to work upon the tender and flexible minde of her young ſon Valentinian junior, and to inſtil into him the Principles of Arianiſm, and the young man, deceived by the enticements of his Mother, too greedily drank in the poiſon thereof, whereupon at length he began to communicate his minde to Ambroſe, ſuppoſing that if he could but draw him to his opinion, he could eaſily overcome the reſt: But Ambroſe began to minde him of the Piety and Sincerity of his Father, exhorting him to defend the Truth which he had received from him, as he would defend his Empire: He alſo opened to him the difference between thoſe two opinions, ſhewing him, how that of the Arians was directly contrary to the Doctrine of Chriſt, and his holy Apoſtles, and that of the Orthodox was moſt conſonant thereunto: But the young man, as a young man that was blinded with the Error of his Mother, was ſo far from hearkening to the good counſel of Ambroſe, that on the contrary, being inflamed with wrath, he compaſſed the Church where Ambroſe was, with a great number of armed Souldiers, thinking thereby to terrifie him.

The Emperour enraged againſt Ambroſe.

But when he ſaw that this valiant Champion and Souldier of Chriſt was no whit affrighted, he grew into ſuch a rage, that he commanded him to come forth of the Temple: To whom Ambroſe anſwered: That will I never willingly do, neither will I betray the Sheepfold of my Sheep to the Wolves, nor deliver up this Temple of God to the Authors of blaſphemy: but if thou pleaſeſt to kill me, here is my breaſt, peirce it either with thy ſword or ſpear as thou pleaſeſt, for I deſire and am willing to embrace ſuch a death: This his reſolute anſwer made the Emperour to withdraw.

His courage and conſtancy.

A little before this time, Theodoſius the great, reigning in the Eaſt, there fell out a great Sedition in the City of Theſſalonica, which ſome of the Magiſtrates coming to quiet, by the furious people, they were not only greatly reproached, but ſtoned to death: The news hereof being carried to Theodoſius, he was ſo grievouſly incenſed againſt the Citizens of Theſſalonica, that he ſent an Army againſt them, and ſlew ſeven thouſand of them, even the innocent amongſt the guilty, without ever examining the fact, and proceeding judicially againſt the nocent: And preſently after he went into the Weſt againſt the Tyrant Maximus (whereof you may read the ſtory in my ſecond Part of the Marrow of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, in the life of Theod. ſenior). And having obtained a wonderful victory, he went to Millain; But as he was about to enter into the Church, Ambroſe met him at the door, and ſaid unto him: "Its very likely "(O Emperour) that you know not the greatneſs of that murther that was committed "by you, neither after your anger was appeaſed, did you, by reaſon, weigh the great- "neſs of your crime. For it may be the greatneſs of your Imperial Dignity would "not ſuffer you to acknowledge your ſin; but your Power blinds your Reaſon: For you "ought to conſider the weakneſs and frailty of our Humane Nature, and to bend your "Eyes upon our Mother Earth, from which you had your Original, and into which "you muſt return: neither ought you by reaſon of the ſplendor of your Purple gar- "ments, to be ignorant of the weakneſs of that body which is ſhrowded in them: "Conſider further that you rule over thoſe who are partakers of the ſame Nature "with you, and therefore are your fellow-ſervants. For God, the Creator of the "Univerſe, is Lord and King of all men: With what eyes then can you behold his "Temple who is Lord of all? With what feet can you tread in his Courts? How dare "you (I pray you) ſtretch forth before him, thoſe hands which are defiled with "murther, and unjuſt blood-ſhed, and with the ſame receive the Holy Sacrament "of Chriſts Body? Or how dare you put his Holy Blood into your mouth, which be- "ing inflamed with anger, commanded unjuſtly the ſpilling of ſo much blood? De- "part therefore, and do not increaſe your former ſin by adding a new one to it, but "embrace that Bond which the Lord of all doth from Heaven impoſe upon you: which "Bond truly hath force to cure you of the diſeaſe of your Soul, and of reſtoring you to "health.

A paſſionate act of Theodoſius.

Ambroſe his ſpeech to Theodoſius.

He excommunicates Theodoſius.

The godly Emperour willingly ſubmitted to him (for having been religiouſly trained up, he knew full well what was the duty of Gods Miniſters, and what was proper for Kings to do in ſuch caſes) and accordingly returned to his Palace full of ſighs and tears. About eight moneths after, the Feaſt of Chriſts Nativity being to be celebrated, the Emperour ſate ſtill in his Palace, giving himſelf to lamentations, and pouring out abundance of tears: which Ruffinus the Maſter of his Hall taking notice of, being very dear unto the Emperour, went to him, and asked him the cauſe of his weeping: Then the Emperour mourning more bitterly, & pouring out more abundance of tears, ſaid; Surely Ruffinus thou doſt but mock me! or knoweſt not with how great miſery I am afflicted: For I ſigh and bewail my calamity, whilſt I conſider in my minde how open the Church is to my ſervants, yea to Beggars, who have free leave to pour out their Prayers before God: But not only that place, but even Heaven it ſelf is ſhut up againſt me: For that ſaying of our Saviour comes into my minde, Whoſe ſins you bind on Earth ſhall be bound in Heaven: To this Ruffinus anſwered, Therefore if it pleaſe you, I will run to the Biſhop, I will intreat, beſeech, and perſwade him to free you from this Bond. But I fear (ſaid the Emperour) that he will not hearken to you. For I know that Ambroſe's ſentence is ſo juſt and equal, that he will not violate the Law of God for fear of the Imperial Power. But when Ruffin was not yet ſatisfied, promiſing that he would prevail with Ambroſe, the Emperour bade him run quickly: and himſelf, hoping that Ruffin might prevail, immediately followed him.

Theodoſius his humility

He ſeeks for abſolution.

"But as ſoon as Ambroſe ſaw Ruffin, he ſaid unto him: Thou ſeemeſt unto me "(Ruffin) to imitate the impudency of dogs: For although, by thy perſwaſion, that cru- "el ſlaughter was committed, yet thou haſt ſo ſteeled thy Face, that thou art not a- "ſhamed, neither art thou grieved, that by ſo great madneſs thou ragedſt againſt "the Image of God: But when Ruffin had earneſtly entreated him to be pacified, and told him that the Emperour would preſently be there, Ambroſe being kindled with an holy zeal, ſaid, I profeſs, Ruffin, that I will forbid him entrance into the Church, and if he will turn his power into Tyranny, I am willing to be ſlain by him. Ruffin hearing theſe things, preſently ſent a meſſenger to the Emperour, intreating him to ſtay in his Palace. The Emperour meeting with this meſſage in the Market place, ſaid, Yet I will go that I may undergo his juſt reproofs which are due to me: And when he came to the Church door, he entred not, but went to the Biſhop, deſiring him to abſolve him from his Excommunication. But Ambroſe told him, that his coming was Tyrannical, and that he was enraged againſt God, and trampled his Laws under his Feet. To whom the Emperour anſwered: I do not oppoſe thoſe Laws with an obſtinate mind: neither do I deſire wickedly to enter into the Church, but I intreat thee to abſolve me, and to ſet before thine eyes the clemency of him who is Lord of all things: neither ſhut thou thoſe doors againſt me which he opens to all that truly repent of their ſins. The Emperour's mildneſs.

To which Ambroſe anſwered: What repentance doſt thou ſhew after ſo grievous a ſin committed? What medicines haſt thou applyed for the healing of ſuch great wounds? It is thy part (ſaid the Emperour) to prepare the medicine, and to apply it, and when the wound is cured, to remove it: It's my part to follow thy directions. Then ſaid Ambroſe; "Becauſe thou gaveſt way to thy anger, and didſt not temper it with "reaſon, but pronouncedſt ſentence with an inflamed mind, I deſire that thou make "a Law, that all ſentences pronounced in anger ſhall be void: and that in all cau- "ſes which concern death, or confiſcation of goods, thirty days intervene between "the ſentence and execution, that ſo if there be juſt cauſe, the ſentence may be re- "voked: and that at the end of the thirty days they which wrote thy ſentence, ſhew it "to thee, that ſo, laying aſide all anger, thou mayſt weigh the cauſe with judgment, "and ſo either eſtabliſh it or make it void. How to prevent ſinful anger.

The Emperour judging this moſt prudent counſel, willingly imbraced it, and preſently commanded a Law to be Enacted, which he confirmed by his ſubſcription: which being done, Ambroſe abſolved him, and the Emperour preſently entring the Church, fell proſtrate, pronouncing that verſe of the Pſalm; My ſoul cleaveth to the duſt, quicken me according to thy Word; and then with many tears and teſtimonies of ſorrow, he begged pardon, and afterwards was made partaker of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Theodoſius abſolved.

Upon a time a certain Witch ſent his Spirits to kill Ambroſe; but they returned anſwer, that God had hedged him in as he did Job: Another came with a ſword to his bed-ſide to have killed him; but he could not ſtir his hand, till repenting, he was by the prayer of Ambroſe reſtored to the uſe of his hands again: Special providences.

When Eugenius was Emperour, Flavianus the Præfect deſired leave of him to build the Altar of Victory at Millain, which Ambroſe hearing of, departed from thence to Bononia; But after a while (Eugenius and Flavianus going to war againſt Theodoſius) he returned to Millain again: But before they went, they ſent word, that when they returned Conquerors, they would make the great Church in Millain a Stable for Horſes: but God prevented them: For Eugenius was ſlain by his own Souldiers, and Theodoſius got the victory. Profaneſs puniſhed.

This Ambroſe was very abſtinent, full of watchings and prayer, diligent in writing, never dining but on the Sabbaths: He was very couragious for the Truth, and merciful to the Poor, and Captives: he would weep when he heard of the death of any godly Miniſter. Falling ſick, he appointed Simplicianus, a godly old man to ſucceed him, and continuing inſtant in Prayer, he departed this life the third year after Theodoſius, Anno Chriſti 397. His charity. His death.

He uſed to ſay, When gold is offered to thee, thou uſeſt not to ſay, I will come again to morrow and take it, but art glad of preſent poſſeſſion: But Salvation being profered to our Souls, few men haſt to embrace it: And again, It is not ſo much to be enquired how much thou giveſt, as with what heart: It's not liberality, when thou takeſt by oppreſſion from one, and giveſt it to another: And again, A clear Conſcience ſhould not regard ſlanderous ſpeeches, nor think that they have more power to condemn him, then his own Conſcience Repentance not to be delayed. True charity. Conſcience

Death. ſcience hath to clear him: And again, Death is the burial of all vices; for it is the progreſs and accompliſhment of the full mortification of all our Earthly members, wherein that filthy flux of ſin is dryed up in an inſtant: It is a voluntary ſacrificing of the whole man, Soul and Body to the Lord, the greateſt and higheſt ſervice we can do him upon Earth.

His works His works are printed in five Tomes.

The Life of Gregory Niſſen, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 480.

His parentage. Gregory was ſirnamed Niſſenus from the City whereof he was Biſhop; He was born in Cappadocia in the fourth age after Chriſt. His Fathers name was Baſil, his Mothers Emmelia: His Brothers names were Baſil Biſhop of Cæſarea, and Peter Biſhop of Sebaſtia. He had a Siſter called Macrina.

His learning From his childhood he was much affected with the ſtudy of Rhetorick, wherein he grew as famous as any of the ancient Fathers. He affected not that ſolitary life which his Brother Baſil did, but imployed himſelf in inſtructing others. Firſt he was a Profeſſor in a School of Rhetorick: Afterwards he became a Reader of Divinity in the Church: Yet, after a while, he return to his Rhetorick-School again, but was reduced to his former work of reading Divinity by Gregory Nazianzen. Suidas ſaith, that he was Vir inſignis, omnique Doctrina exuberans; A famous man abounding with all manner of Learning: Neither was he leſs ſignal for his Piety, and Holineſs of Life, as Nicephorus teſtifies. For his great worth he was preferred to the Biſhoprick of Nyſſa, a chief City in Cappadocia.

He is made Biſhop.

He is baniſhed. He was baniſhed by the Arian Emperour Valence, and from the ſeventh to the fifteenth year of his Reign, he wandred up and down; yet ſtill went to ſuch places where the neceſſity of the Church required his preſence, and where he might do moſt good; In which godly imployment he was much encouraged by Gregory Nazianzen.

His zeal to do good.

He lived under Conſtantius, Julian, Jovian, Valentinian, and Valence, Gratian, and Theodoſius, the Great: in which time, together with Gregory Nazianzen, he was Preſident in the Univerſal Council of Conſtantinople againſt the Macedonian Hereticks, Anno Chriſti 492. When Hierom wrote his Catalogue of Illuſtrious men, he was a live; But the year of his death is not expreſſed by any Author. He was admired for his Eloquence, and one calleth him pervigilem Antiſtitem, the faithfull and vigilant Prelate: He uſed to read the Scriptures with all diligence, reverence and ſtrictneſs, having a ſpecial regard to the genuine ſenſe of them: He was a ſtrong oppoſer of Eunomius his Hereſie: By the Oecumenical Council of Conſtantinople he was appointed as a man moſt fit to viſit the Churches planted in Arabia.

Scriptures.

After the deceaſe of his brother Baſil, he finiſhed his Commentaries which he had left imperfect upon the Six days works. He alſo preached at Conſtantinople a Funeral Sermon upon the death of Miletius Biſhop of Antioch. He wrote an admirable Book againſt Eunomius, and another, no leſs famous, of the Creation of Man, beſides many Excellent Sermons which he made: But the Treatiſe Of the Soul, which he wrote to his ſiſter Macrina, deſerves the praiſe of Learned men in all ſucceeding Ages.

His works. Many things are fathered upon him, but judicious Scultetus owneth only theſe; Exegetica Scripta in Eccleſiaſten. In Cantica Canticorum. In Pſalmos. De Occurſu Domini. De Deo & Trinitate. De Creatione. De Providentia. De Chriſto διανοίγοντι. De Baptiſmo. De cultu Dei in genere. De cultu Dei in ſpecie. viz. De Peregrinatione ad loca ſancta: De Oratione. De Pauperum Amore. De Beatitudinibus. De Fornicatione fugienda. De iis qui ægre ferunt reprehenſiones. De iis qui temere alios damnant. De Uſuariis. Funebres Orationes ſive de morte piorum. De Reſurrectione mortuorum. De Theologia Univerſa in Oratione Catechetica magna.

He

He compared the Uſurer to a man giving water to one in a Burning-Feaver, which doth him no good, but a great deal of miſchief: ſo the Uſurer, though he ſeem for the preſent to relieve his brothers want, yet afterwards he doth greatly torment him: He gave this Character of an Uſurer, He loves no labour but a ſedentary life: The Pen is his plough: Parchment his field: Ink his Seed: Time is the Rain to ripen his greedy Deſires: His Sickle is calling in of Forfeitures: His Houſe the Barn where he winnows the Fortunes of his Clients: He follows his Debtors as Eagles and Vultures do Armies, to Prey upon the dead Corps: And again, Men come to Uſurers as Birds to an heap of Corn; they deſire the Corn, but are deſtroyed in the Nets: And again, There is no excuſe for hard-heartedneſs; for where can a rich man caſt his eyes but he may behold objects of his charity? &c. He dyed under Valentinian and Valence. His ſayings. Uſury.

The Life of Theodoret, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 420.

Theodoret Biſhop of Cyrus, was born at Antioch, of Noble and Religious Parents: His Mother, before ſhe had him, was much grieved in mind, becauſe ſhe was barren, and without hope of iſſue to inherit their large poſſeſſions, whereupon ſhe with her husband, reſolved to bequeath all their Revenues to the maintenance of Poor Chriſtians: Yet at laſt God was pleaſed to anſwer her requeſts, giving her a ſon which ſhe named Theodoret, The gift of God: His Parentage. His birth.

He proved of great acuteneſs, and in a ſhort time profited ſo in Piety, and in Letters, that he was made a Biſhop whileſt he was yet a young man: and ſhortly after he ſet forth that excellent work which he called The Hiſtory of the Lovers of God: He was a great oppoſer of Hereticks, and wrote much againſt them, and reduced many round about him that were Marcionites, even to the hazard of his life: He was wondrous charitable, viſiting and refreſhing the bowels of the poor: He was a careful imitator of Chryſoſtom, whom he always propoſed as a worthy pattern for his ſtyle in his writings: and by this means he proved very fluent and eloquent, which his learned Works do plainly declare: His learning. His zeal againſt Hereſie. His charity.

His Commentaries upon the Scriptures are very excellent, wherein he reſolved many of the hardeſt queſtions in the Old Teſtament. He ſhewed much learning in his Divine Treatiſe Of Gods Providence: He very ſtrongly opened and confuted the fond conceits of abundance of Hereticks: as of Simon Magnus, Menander, Baſilides, Carpocrates, &c. A Synod being appointed at Epheſus to ſtop the Hereſie of Neſtorius, and Cyril coming firſt thither, (not knowing that the Biſhops of Syria were coming alſo) he of himſelf condemned Neſtorius, which afterward cauſed much contention, eſpecially between Theodoret and Cyril: but Theodoſius junior calling them together to Conſtantinople, by his care and wiſdom healed this breach, and Theodoret and Cyril were wondrous loving each to other ever after. His works. Theodoſius his wiſdom.

In that famous Councll of Chalcedon, wherein were above ſix hundred biſhops, he was ſtiled by their unanimous conſent, Catholicus & Orthodoxus Eccleſiæ Paſtor, & Doctor ſincerus. A Catholick and Orthodox Paſtor of the Church, and a ſincere Teacher of the Truth. Gennadius teſtifieth of his writings that they were ſtrengthened with impregnable and undeniable Arguments, by which with Reaſons and Teſtimonies of Scripture, he proves and confirms that Chriſt was truly incarnate of the Virgin Mary. Bellarmine ſtiles him Virum plane doctiſſimum, An abſolute learned man. He wrote an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory which is of great uſe to the Church: He dyed in the reign of Theodoſius junior, being not very old; but rather ſpent with labors and ſtudies then with age. His death.

He uſed to ſay, That the delights of the Soul are to know her Maker, to conſider his Works, and to know her own Eſtates. His ſayings.

His Works were printed in two Tomes, at Collen Anno Chriſti 1617. Which beſides his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, contain Expoſitions upon many portions both of the Old and New Teſtament. His works.

JEROM

The Life of Hierom, who dyed Anno Christi 422.

His birth & parentage.

Ierom was born in a Town called Seridon in the confines of Dalmatia and Pannonia, Anno Christi 331. His Fathers name was Eusebius, a pious and godly man, who, before his Country was over-run and sacked by the barbarous Goths, (who about this time laid all waste before them) he was a man of a middle and competent estate, and very careful of the education of this his Son: His Mother also was a religious Woman: and therefore from his infancy he was trained up (like another Timothy) in the knowledge of Christ and of the sacred Scriptures, and as he grew in years, so did he also in learning; and when he was a Boy, he was by his parents sent to Rome, at that time the most famous place both for Piety and Religion, in the West, where he was brought up in the study of the Liberal Sciences. For they seemed to fore-see that they had begotten a son for the good of the World, and therefore in his Education they did not indulge their private affections, but sought to promote the publick good:

His education.

He goes to Rome.

His studies

He quickly, by reason of his ingenuity, became very expert both in the Greek and Latine Tongues: He also became a very good Grammarian and Rhetorician, having an excellent Wit, and being of an indefatigable disposition. And it was his hap to have excellent School-masters: Donatus for the Grammer, and Victorinus for Rhetorick, who were at that time famous men in Rome.

Afterwards being grown riper, in years, he fell to the study of Philosophy of all sorts, as Aristotles, Platoes, the Stoicks, &c. Yet he spent not too much time herein, but proceeded to the study of History, Cosmography, and Antiquities: And because he perceived that even to that time amongst the Latines, Theology was but an Infant, whereupon many abhorred reading of Divinity Books, he therefore thought, that if a man could attain to set forth the Dignity of Theology with excellency of speech, it would come more into request: Besides, he thought by this means to stop the mouths of the Ethnicks, who reproached Christians as barren and Barbarous persons.

He had for his fellow Students, Pammachius of Noble Parentage, a man of such Learning and Integrity, that he Was solicited to be Bishop of Rome: Bonosus; who who alſo proved very famous: Heliodorus whoſe vertue advanced him to a Biſhoprick.

Having now ſufficiently profited in the knowledge of Humane Arts, he proceeded to more grave and weighty ſtudies, and after the example of other worthy men, for the further poliſhing of his minde with Wiſdom and Experience, he travelled all over France, procuring the acquaintance of, and familiarity with the moſt worthy men of that Country: Bonoſus alſo was his companion in theſe travels: He was very diligent in ſearching the Libraries in every place where he came: and at Trevir he wrote out with his own hand, a great Volume of Hilary de Synodis; and having much profited himſelf, not only in Learning, but Religion alſo, after a long time, he returned to viſit his Countries, both where he was born, and where he was new born [Rome.] His travels.

Then did he begin to conſider what courſe of life to betake himſelf to, and in what place to fix his habitation; knowing that it would much conduce to his comfort, if he undertook ſuch a courſe with judgement as was moſt ſutable to his Genius. He ſeriouſly conſidered that Rome was as yet over ſpread with Paganiſm, and that it was not ſafe for a young man to be in a place of ſo much pleaſure, which himſelf ſometimes called Babylon: He alſo conſidered, that his own Country was corrupted with Barbarous pleaſures, as himſelf ſomewhere notes in one of his Epiſtles: Whereupon he conſulted with ſome of his intimate friends, reſolving to depart to ſome place where he might with more privacy follow the ſtudy of Divinity, and wholly dedicate himſelf to Chriſt. He conſiders what courſe of life to chooſe.

It was alſo a great trouble to his mind, to conſider how Chriſtians and Pagans were intermixed together, whence it neceſſarily came to paſs, that many who profeſſed Chriſt, were Chriſtians rather in name then in truth. He conſidered further, that in marriage, beſides other incumbrances, he ſhould loſe his freedom; And that in the life of Miniſters and Biſhops there was a great deal of danger; that will he, nill he, he muſt be intangled with riches, honours, and cares of the World, and thereby be caſt upon many temptations: Beſides, the lives of many of them diſpleaſed him, ſeeing the ancient Piety of the Miniſtry to begin to degenerate into Pride and Tyranny. All theſe things ſeriouſly conſidered, he began to be in love with a Monaſtick life, which in thoſe times did far differ from their lives in future Ages, being afterwards intangled with many Ceremonies and Superſtitions. For in thoſe times they had liberty to change their condition when they pleaſed, to go whither they pleaſed; they had a great deal of freedom to attend their ſtudies, and to betake themſelves to Faſting and Prayer; They were not bound under any humane conſtitutions. Their Apparel was mean, yet not enjoyned, but left to every ones free will, not which was noted for prodigious novelty, ſo that every one might point at them with the finger, but which was moſt agreeable with Chriſtian ſimplicity; They were tyed by no Vows but ſuch as every true Chriſtian ought to be ſubject to.

Having reſolved upon this courſe of life, his next endeavour was to aſſociate ſome companions to him therein: But Pammachius, who hitherto had been his chamber-fellow, and fellow-ſtudent, for his courſe of life was wholly of another diſpoſition: The greateſt freedom was moſt pleaſing to Hierom, and a married life to Pammachius. Bonoſus having ſetled his affairs, forſaking his Country, Parents and Friends, and only accompanyed with his Books, was departed into a ſolitary Iſland; and therein had out-run Hierom, extricating himſelf from the ſnares of the World to enjoy more freedom in the ſervice of Chriſt.

Not long after, Hierom having ſetled his affairs, and provided things neceſſary for his journey, eſpecially a fair Library, he ſailed into Syria, having Heliodorus for his companion, who having remained a while with him in Syria, diſliking that courſe of life, left him. Yet did not Hierom at all break off his good eſteem of him for the ſame. Then did Hierom go to Hieruſalem, veiwing all the obſervable places about that once famous City: But ſhortly after, by reaſon of the change of Ayr and Country, he fell into a grievous ſickneſs, at which time Evagrius entertained him into his houſe, and ſhewed much kindneſs to him. Hierom goes into Syria. His ſickneſs

Having recovered his health, he was inflamed with an earneſt deſire of proſecuting his former reſolution for the manner of his life, and thereupon retiring himſelf into a Deſart between the Syrians and Saracens, he had no company beſides wilde Beaſts and Serpents, and here and there a Monks Cell that had betaken himſelf to the ſame courſe of life, as Hierom now did. But before his fixing in this Wilderneſs, he ſpent ſome time in Antiochia, which yet he ſtayed not long in, partly by reaſon of the celebrity of the place, and partly becauſe of a Schiſm that was in their Church: Neither could he ſtay long in Chalcis, becauſe of the neighbour-hood of ſome Arians, which moleſted him: and indeed this holy man was grievouſly vexed by their wicked practiſes, who daily cited him before them to give an account of his Faith. In brief, he met with ſo many moleſtations, that many times he repented his coming into Syria. And thereupon at length he ſhut up himſelf far from the commerce of men in that forenamed Deſart, thinking it far better to live amongſt Thieves, and wilde Beaſts, then amongſt ſuch Chriſtians. And continuing there four years together, he only converſed with Chriſt, and his Books, ſeriouſly buſying himſelf according to his former purpoſe.

His troubles by the Arians.

His retreat into the wilderneſs.

His carriage there.

And having in his youth fallen into ſome looſneſs, the firſt thing he did was with ſhowers of tears to bewail his ſins, and to endeavour to make his peace with God; Then by abſtinence, watchings, and incredible auſterity of life to beat down his body, and to bring it into ſubjection to his ſpirit, that ſo he might be freed from all temptations to fleſhly luſts: And leſt his carnal affections ſhould impede his heavenly life, he preſcribed and exacted of himſelf a daily task wherein he was imployed.

His induſtry.

He diſtributed his time into two parts, one for his ſtudies, the other for meditation and prayer, wherein alſo he ſpent a good part of the night: He allowed himſelf the leaſt part for ſleep, leſs for his food; and none for idleneſs: when he was aweary of ſtudy, he betook himſelf to Prayer, or ſinging of a Pſalm: and then preſently returned to his ſtudies again. He read over all his Library, and then rubbed up his old ſtudies: He learned moſt of the Scripture by heart. He meditated much upon the Prophets, labouring to find out the Myſteries of their Propheſies: He extracted Chriſtian wiſdom out of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtolical Writings, as out of moſt pure Fountains. For it is the firſt ſtep to Piety, to acquaint our ſelves with the Truths of God.

His ſtudy of the Scriptures.

Then he read over the Works of ſuch as had Commented thereon, with great Judgement, not pretermitting the Works of Ethnicks and *Heretick*s. For he knew how to gather Gold out of a Dunghil, and Honey out of Weeds, leaving the Poyſon to Spiders: Then did he collect what he could out of the Egyptian Writers, endeavouring to beautifie the Houſe of God by the ſpoils of his Enemies: And for the help of his Memory, and to make him more prompt, he digeſted all that he read into certain heads and common places. But eſpecially he read over Origens Works, whom he called Suum, his own: and ſome of whoſe Homilies whileſt he was a young man, he had turned into Latin: His reading alſo he mixed with writing.

About this time he interpreted the Propheſie of Obadiah Allegorically, becauſe he knew not the Hiſtory, as himſelf afterwards confeſſed in his Preface to his ſecond Interpretation of that Propheſie, in which he makes amends for his former youthly precipitation. In brief, he pretermitted nothing that might make him an admirable Doctor of the Church, and a moſt accompliſhed Divine: that ſo nothing might be wanting in his Learning: nothing amiſs in his Life, which might any whit tend to the diminiſhing of the credit of his Doctrine.

His ſtudy of the Hebrew and other Eaſtern languages.

Afterwards alſo, finding by experience, that many ſecrets could not be underſtood, nor handled as they ought to be, without learning thoſe Languages wherein they were firſt written, and taught, by hard ſtudy and induſtry he overcame the difficulties which are in the Hebrew tongue; Yea, he did not only labour for the knowledge of it, but to give the right ſound & pronountiation to ſome barbarous and ſtrange Languages which he ſtudied. And for his perfecting in the Hebrew, he did with great charges hire the moſt learned of the Jews to inſtruct him; emptying his Purſe to enrich rich his Soul with Learning. He alſo learned the Chalde, becauſe the Books of Daniel, and ſome other Portions of the Old Teſtament, though they were w in Hebrew, yet much uſe of the Chaldean Language is made therein. He ſtu alſo the Syriack, becauſe through their commerce with the Hebrews, their ſpeec nere of kin to it.

In theſe holy labours, though he ſpent ſome years, as alſo in his rigorous courſe Life, yet he profeſſeth that he took much pleaſure therein: For that which at fi ſeemed difficult and troubleſome, by degrees became eaſie and familiar to him, and that which was beſt in its own nature, became moſt pleaſant alſo. Yea, he was ſo far from prizing and deſiring the delights of Rome, that living in a Wilderneſs, he ſeemed to converſe with Angels. Sometimes his friends viſited him, and ſometimes himſelf viſited his neighbour Monks, and by intercourſe of Letters he enjoyed the ſociety of his abſent friends. And though he could have deſired all his life long to enjoy this pleaſing retiredneſs, yet it much conduced to Gods-glory, and the good of the Church, that this Champion of Chriſt ſhould at laſt appear in publick, and that this excellent Light ſhould no longer be hid under a Buſhel: and therefore, though he ſeemed unwilling thereto, yet Divine Providence ſo ordered it, that at laſt he was drawn back to Rome, and that by the means of Epiphanius Biſhop of Salamine in Cyprus, and Paulinus Biſhop of Antiochia, by whom he was formerly Ordained a Presbyter. At Rome he became acquainted with ſome Noble Matrons, and amongſt the reſt with Marcella: all whom he inflamed with the deſire of ſtudying the Sacred Scriptures, yea himſelf became an Interpreter thereof unto them, eſpecially to Marcella, who ſo profited under him, that afterwards when any controverſie aroſe about the teſtimony of Scripture in ſuch and ſuch points, they repaired to her to be a Judge therein.

His return to Rome.

His imployment.

By theſe means the fame of Hierom grew ſo great, that every one judged him worthy to ſucceed Damaſus in the Biſhoprick of Rome. But as there is never a ſhadow but when the light is preſent, ſo the eminency of this holy man wanted not envy. There were not ſome wanting who calumniated him for his firſt departure into Syria, and in his abſence wounded him with the darts of their virulent tongues: Notwithſtanding which he was very dear to, and highly prized by Damaſus the preſent Romane Biſhop, and living three years in ſtrict friendſhip with him, and Paula a Noble Matron, he procured the greater envy to himſelf thereby, which at length brake forth into open burning. For certain of the Arian Faction were cloſely crept into Rome, who the better to conceal themſelves, had taken upon them the name of Origeniſts; Theſe men that they might the better ſtrengthen themſelves, ſcrewed themſelves, into familiar acquaintance with ſundry Noble Matrons, amongſt whom they ſecretly ſpred the poyſon of their Doctrines: and becauſe Hierom was much taken with Origens wit, and had highly commended him, they ſought to make him a partner of their Faction: Being ſo much the more dangerous by how much under a pretence of friendſhip they plotted his ruine, ſo that he began to conſult about leaving Rome, of which himſelf in a certain place ſpeaks thus. I was accounted a ſcandalous perſon, a turn-coat and inconſtant, a lyar, & one that deceived many by Satans artifices. They kiſſed my hands, whileſt like Vipers, they detracted from me behinde my back; They ſeemed to grieve for me with their lips, whileſt in their hearts they rejoyced at my hurt. One jeared at my gate, another at my laughter, another, under my ſimplicity, ſeemed to fear ſome miſchief.

He is envyed by ſome.

The ſubtility of the Arians.

Their diſſimulation.

He had many reaſons to induce him to leave Rome: The remembrance of his former eaſe and freedom from the troubles and diſtractions of the City as alſo the troubleſome celebrity of the City, the more troubleſome delights, together with the pride and luxury which attended the ſame.

For about this time the riches of the Church increaſing, Chriſtian ſimplicity began to decreaſe: Alſo the malice and envy of the Origeniſts againſt him grew daily more violent: eſpecially Ruffinus who living in the City at this time, as he never was a ſincere Friend to him, ſo now he was a ſecret, yet peſtilent Adverſary againſt him.

Upon

His return into Syria.

Upon theſe and ſuch like reaſons, Hierom left Rome, and went back to Syria: concerning which journey, himſelf thus writes; When (ſaith he) I touched at Cyprus, I was entertained lovingly by the venerable Biſhop Epiphanius: when I came to Antiochia I enjoyed the ſociety of that excellent Confeſſor Paulinus, and departing from him in the midſt of Winter, the weather being extream cold, I came to Hieruſalem, where I viewed all things, and ſaw thoſe places with mine Eyes which I had only read, or heard of before. From thence I went into Egypt, where I ſaw Aſps lurking in the Monks Cells: Laſtly, I returned to Bethlehem. I ſaw alſo the famous Lake: neither did I indulge my ſelf, but by travelling up and down, learned many things which before I knew not.

His travels and ſtudies.

Aſphaltites.

In this journey he grew acquainted with Gregory Nazianzen, whom he calls his Maſter, and profeſſeth, that he learned much out of the Scriptures by his aſſiſtance. He alſo often heard Apollinarius at Antioch, and had much familiar ſociety with him; by whoſe perſwaſion he went to Alexandria, and there compleated his ſtudies in Divinity by the help of Didymus. Laſtly, by the help of Barhanina a Jew, he perfected his ſtudies of the Hebrew Tongue.

Thus by long experience having got much Wiſdom, and by the ſociety of many Learned and Excellent men, having attained to a great meaſure of Learning, he buckled himſelf to the handling of Divinity. Undertaking the Office of a Divine: ſetling himſelf at Bethlehem, which place, by his Vertues and Writings, he made famous all over the World; and in which place he lived a very quiet and comfortable life in the company of ſome godly, learned, and faithful friends, ſpending his time in Singing Pſalms, Tranſlating the Bible, and Preaching to his Auditors.

His labors at Bethlehem.

Very many reſorted to him out of all Countries, all whom according to his ability, he entertained lovingly and bountifully, driving none from his houſe but ſuch as were branded for Hereſie: He wrote much againſt the Hereſies of thoſe times, ſo that there was no chief Heretick but looked upon Hierom as his great Adverſary: And indeed there were never any times more full of Sedition, and Confuſion then thoſe, wherein the Hereticks had ſo diffuſed their Errors, that it was a peice of great Art to be Orthodox. Eſpecially the Arians by their writings, weapons, and countenance of the Emperours, had not only diſturbed the Peace of the Eaſt, but almoſt of all the World: And when that Hereſie was in ſome meaſure lulled aſleep, it revived in the Origeniſts, who were crept into Rome it ſelf, and there ſecretly and cunningly ſpread abroad the poyſon of their Doctrines: The Captain of whom was Ruffinus of Aquileia, who in his childe-hood had been very intimate with Hierom: But afterwards theſe great friends became great enemies: though the firſt breach betwixt them was peiced up by the Prudence of Hierom, who ſaw, and yet connived at his ſecret devices and clancular detractions: But when Ruffin began to charge the Truth with Hereſie, and to make Hierom a partner in his impious Opinions, the Holy man could bear no longer, but breaking the bands of friendſhip, they wrote moſt bitterly one againſt another, Hierom thinking that all forbearance towards a Heretick was impiety, not a vertue.

His zeal againſt Hereſie.

The Increaſe of Arianiſm.

His great troubles.

Many were ſtirred up by Ruffinus means to write againſt Hierom, and to charge him with many and foul aſperſions both in his Life and Doctrine; But he, like to an old and well rooted Oke, brake the windes that aſſaulted him on every ſide: He remained in all theſe ſtorms unbroken, and unconquered, and was ſo far from departing from that which was honeſt; That the more his Enemies barked againſt him, the more he was provoked to the ſtudy of Piety. And againſt the violence and fraud of Hereticks, he was ſomewhat holpen by Epiphanius and Theophilus, Biſhops of Alexandria: At Rome, he had Pammatius and Chromatius to take his part.

By reaſon of theſe troubles his Life was a continual Martyrdom: He ſpent whole Thirty years in the ſtudy of the ſacred Scriptures and Divinity, and to extream old age continued in Teaching and Writing: He was of a very weak conſtitution, and conflicted with many painful diſeaſes, before old Age came upon him: which diſeaſes he procured by the great auſterity of life, and his nightly ſtudies: But eſpecially by his indefatigable labours in writing ſo many great Volumes, for which cauſe it was that ſometimes he was forced to make uſe of Notaries: And at laſt having worn out himſelf with his great pains, and continual labors, he quietly ſlept in the Lord in the ninty firſt year of his Age, Anno Chriſti, 422. Honorius and Conſtantine being Emperours. His death.

His holy Life and his Books ſtuffed with ſo much Learning and Eloquence, procured him ſo much credit and authority, that Learned Greece, which uſed to undervalue the Learning of all Nations but their own, took care that his Commentaries ſhould be tranſlated into Greek. He was ſo famous in his Life time, that if any difficulty did occur in Expounding Scriptures, all men had recourſe to him as to the Oracle of the Chriſtian World. Frequent Letters and Meſſengers were ſent to him out of Italy, Spain, France, Germany, and Africa: He was conſulted with by Biſhops, by Noble men, by Matrons, and by the chiefeſt of all ſorts: Many from all parts repaired to Bethlehem, not ſo much for Religion ſake, as to ſee and conſer with Hierom. Auguſtine held a ſtrict bond of friendſhip with him, and was willing to learn of him as of his Maſter. Paulus Oroſius the Hiſtoriographer learned many things by conference with him. His induſtry was admirable, whence Eraſmus ſaith of him; Minima pars vitæ dabatur ſumno, minor cibo, nulla otio. Et Sacras literas ad verbum ediſcebat. His uſual Prayer was; Lord, let me know my ſelf, that I may the better know thee the Saviour of the World. His great eſteem.

He uſed this excellent ſaying, If my Father ſtood weeping on his knees before me, & my Mother hanging on my neck behinde, and all my Brethren, Siſters, Children, and Kinſfolk howling on every ſide to retain me in a ſinful life, I would-fling my Mother to the ground, run over my Father, deſpiſe all my Kinred, and tread them under my feet that I might run to Chriſt. His ſaying. Chriſtian fortitude.

Eraſmus ſaith of him, Quis docet aptius? quis delectat urbanius, &c. Who teacheth more diſtinctly? who delights more modeſtly? who moves more effectually? who praiſes more candidly? who perſwades more gravely? and who exhorts more ardently? Trithemius ſaith, Vir in ſecularibus valde eruditus, &c. He was a man well ſeen in Secular Learning, but in Divinity he was inferiour to none of the Doctors of the Church, and famous for his skill in the Languages: a rooter out of Hereticks, and a defender of the Truth. Love of Chriſt.

He uſed to ſay, Dead fleſh is to be cut off for fear of a Gangreen: Arius at firſt was but a ſpark, but being not ſuppreſſed betimes, he proved the Incendiarie of the whole Church: And again, You muſt be a Dove, and a Serpent: one, not to do hurt to others; the other, not to be hurt by others: And again, That woman is truly chaſte, that hath liberty and opportunity to ſin, and will not. The danger of Hereſie. Chaſtity.

What ever he did, he ſtill thought that that voice was in his Ears, Surgite mortui, & venite ad judicium, Ariſe you dead, and come to judgement: And again he ſaid, All vertues are ſo linked together, that he that hath one, hath all; & he that wants one, wants all. Judgement. Vertue.

He tranſlated the Bible out of the Originals into Latine.

His Works were printed in nine Tomes at Paris, Anno Chriſti 1534. with Eraſmus his Scholia upon them: where he alſo ſhews which of them are genuine, which doubtful, and which ſpurious. His works.

The

CHRYSOSTOM

The Life of Chryſoſtom, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 400.

His parentage.

John Chryſoſtom was born in Antioch, a City of Cœloſyria; his Father was called Secundus, his Mother was Anthuſa: He deſcended of the Noble Race of Senators: He was the Diſciple of Libanius the Sophiſt, and the Auditor of Androgathius the Philoſopher: His firſt purpoſe was to apply himſelf to the ſtudy and practice of the Law, and to handle the publick affairs of the Common-wealth: But when he perceived how lewd and unrighteous a trade of life they led which buſied themſelves therein, he left that troubleſome and dangerous courſe, and betook himſelf to a quiet and more retired manner of life: and ſo changing both his habit and behaviour he addicted himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of the Sacred Scriptures, deviſing with himſelf how he might be moſt uſeful and profitable to the Church of Chriſt.

His ſtudies.

He perſwaded Theodorus and Maximus his fellow-Students, who, together with him, had frequented the School of Libanius, to forſake that trade of life, which was wholly ſet on lucre and gain, and to follow that which was contented with a little. He alſo aſſociated himſelf with Baſil, and was a partner in his ſtudies; After which he was made Reader in the Church of Antioch by Zeno Biſhop of Hieruſalem, and a while after was made Deacon by Meletius, and afterwards, for three years ſpace, he lived a retired life, ſevered from all the troubleſome affairs of the World: at the end whereof he was made a Preſbyter by His Ordination.

Evagrius, then Biſhop of Antioch.

His Character.

He was a man of marvellous great temperance, very auſtere in life, and rather harſh then curteous in his deportment: He had no great forecaſt, made no account of the World, and becauſe of his plain and ſimple meaning, was ſoon deceived: He was very copious and free of ſpeech with all ſuch as had any conference with him. In his Miniſtry he was very diligent and painful, endeavouring all that poſſibly he could to reform the lives and manners of his Auditors: and he had an excellent faculty in perſwading, wherein he excelled moſt men of that age. He was very frequent and earneſt in reproving ſin, not only in his publick Miniſtry, but by going to the houſes of ſuch as were ſcandalous, and dealing privately vately and plainly with them, laying to heart the diſhonour done unto God, as if himſelf had been perſonally wronged by them:

By this means he became very grateful to the common people: but moſt ungrateful to great and rich men, who uſually take moſt liberty in ſinning. Hereupon his fame ſpread all over the Roman Empire: Such as knew him, prized his great experience; ſuch as knew him not, were drawn by the fame of his great Learning: Inſomuch as the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople being void, he of all others was thought moſt worthy to ſucceed therein: and thereupon he was unanimouſly choſen both by the Clergy and Laity; the Emperour himſelf approving well of their choice, and ſending ſome meſſengers to fetch him. In the mean time alſo the Emperour convocated a Synod, that by that means his Ordination to the Biſhoprick might be better approved of. He is choſen Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

Aſterius the Præfect of the Eaſt, having received the Emperours Letters, ſent to Antioch for John, as if he meant to confer with him about ſomething: But as ſoon as he came, taking him up in his Coach, he carryed him to Pagra, where he delivered him to the Emperours Meſſengers: and this he did becauſe he knew the tumultuous diſpoſition of the Antiochians, who would have raiſed ſome Sedition rather then have parted with him, and would never but by force have ſuffered him to have gone from them.

When he came to Conſtantinople, the Clergy were called together: But Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria oppoſed his Ordination; endeavouring to prefer to that place one of his own Presbyters called Iſidore, who had been his Inſtrument in an action very prejudicial to the Emperour. But when Eutropius one of the Courtiers had told him, that except he conſented with the reſt for the choice of John, he ſhould be queſtioned for that former fact, he alſo gave his ſuffrage for him.

Thus John being ſetled in the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople, his firſt ſtudy and care was to reform the lives of his Clergy, and making a diligent Inquiſition into their converſation, their dyet, and other carriages, he reproved, corrected, yea and caſt ſome of them out of the Church. For John being of a cholerick and haſtly Nature, and now armed with Authority, would not indulge their faults, but laboured throughly to reform them: And this he did, not only to the Clergy of his own Church, but being of a great ſpirit, and inflamed with zeal, he endeavoured the Reformation of all within his Juriſdiction. And finding alſo a great Rent and Schiſm between the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches, he did all that poſſibly he could for the healing and making up of the ſame, and prevailed ſomewhat therein, though he could not perfectly attain his deſire. He reforms his Clergy. He endeavours the peace of the Church.

His Government and Miniſtry (through Gods mercy) proved, very effectual in Conſtantinople, ſo that he converted many Pagans to Chriſtianity, and reduced many Hereticks from their Errors. Many flocked dayly to him, ſome for the profit and benefit which they got by his Doctrine; others for the tempting of him, all whom he held Captive, and prevailed with them to agree with him in matters of Religion. So great a confluence of people reſorted to his Sermons, with an inſatiable deſire after them, that they were ready to ſtifle one another whileſt every one crowded to come neereſt to him. The great ſucceſs of his Miniſtry.

About this time Chryſoſtom was informed that the Churches in Aſia were generally governed by unworthy Biſhops, who either for affection or Bribes preferred unfit perſons to the Miniſtry, whereupon he went to Epheſus, and examining theſe things, he depoſed thirteen Biſhops, ſome in Lycia, ſome in Phrygia, and the reſt in Aſia, placing more fit perſons in their rooms. At Epheſus finding the Biſhop to be lately dead, he placed there Heraclides, born in Cyprus, and ſometimes a Diſciple of Evagrius. His zeal.

But upon the removal of theſe Biſhops, they with their adherents raiſed many ſlanders againſt Chryſoſtom, accuſing him every where as a violator of their Country Laws: and amongſt others, they ſtirred up Eutropius, an Eunuch in the Emperours Court againſt him, who was in great favour, and was eſteemed as the Father of the Emperour, and made one of the Conſuls of the City. This Eutropius procured a Law to be Enacted, that Malefactors taking Sanctuary in the Church, ſhould be drawn thence and puniſhed according to their demerits. Shortly after himſelf was He is hated for it.

accuſed for uſing the Emperours wife unworthily, whereupon he fled to the Church, and there lay under the Communion-Table: And Chryſoſtom, being to Preach the next day, took occaſion to ſpeak againſt the Pride and Inſolency of Great men, and to ſhew the vanities and uncertainty of all worldly glory: and afterwards Eutropius, according to his own Law, was fetched out of the Church and beheaded.

The ſubtilty of the Arians.

About the ſame time alſo the Arians, who by the Emperour Theodoſius were driven out of all the Churches within Conſtantinople, held their Conventicles in the Subburbs, where firſt they met together in the night-time, and made certain ſongs and reſponſories in favour of their own Hereſies, and in diſgrace of the Catholicks, and at laſt they grew ſo bold, that they went about the ſtreets every morning, eſpecially on the firſt and laſt days of the Week, ſinging them as they went. John Chryſoſtom ſuſpecting leaſt ſome of his people might be ſeduced by theſe means, ſtirred them up to the like practice: whereupon the Hereticks being enraged, fell upon the Orthodox, ſo that ſome of both ſides were ſlain; which ſo incenſed the Emperour againſt them, that he forbad all the Conventicles of the Arians: by which means the people were more in love with John, both for his Prudence and profitable Preaching.

Chryſoſtom counterplots them.

Yet many of the Great, Rich men, and of the Clergy hated him, becauſe he was ſo free and impartial in his reproofs: for as oft as any of his Clergy offended, he puniſhed them: and ſuch as abuſed their Riches to Pride, Luxury, and diſhoneſt Pleaſures, he laboured by all means to reduce them to Virtue. Some of the Clergy, joyning with ſome Monks, reproached him as a cholerick and implacable man; and endeavoured to alienate the affections of the people from him by ſuggeſting that he was unſociable, never inviting any man to his Table, nor going to any Feaſt when he was invited: whereas the true reaſon of it was, becauſe of his great temperance, and by reaſon of his hard ſtudies he was troubled with Rhumes and Headach, which made him ſhun ſuch meetings.

The danger of riches.

Ignorant Monks

About this time there aroſe a great contention amongſt the Monks in Egypt, whileſt ſome of the more ignorant and illiterate held God to have a body like unto man; others denyed it: Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria held with, and favoured the former, laying ſnares to entrap ſome of the latter, who thereupon went to Conſtantinople to complain of him to the Emperour, and to John: Theſe he received very courteouſly, and admitted them to the Prayers of the Church, but not to the Sacrament till their cauſe was heard before the Emperour. But a rumour being ſpread in Alexandria, that he had admitted them to the Sacrament, Theophilus was extreamly offended with him, and ſought to put him out of his Biſhoprick: Whileſt he meditated theſe things, he wrote to all the Biſhops thereabouts that they ſhould condemn the Books of Origen: and conſidering that it would much advance his affairs, if he could draw Epiphanius Biſhop of Salamine in Cyprus, a man famous for his Life and Learning, to ſide with him, he wrote very flattering Letters to him, whereby he made him his friend.

Epiphanius his weakneſs.

Then did he perſwade him to call a Synod in Cyprus to condemn the Works of Origen, which the good man too eaſily aſſented to: and calling a Council, they condemned them: Then did Epiphanius write to Conſtantinople to John, to call a Council and to condemn them likewiſe there. Theophilus in the mean time, conſidering that he might ſafely do what ſuch a famous man as Epiphanius had done, he alſo ſummoned a Council of all the Egyptian Biſhops, where they alſo condemned the Books of Origen. But John thought that this buſineſs did not deſerve the calling of a Council, and therefore neglected it, ſhewing to his friends the Letters ſent him by Theophilus and Epiphanius: Hereupon the Clergy, and the Rich and Great men who were angry with him for the reaſons aforeſaid, perceiving that the purpoſe of Theophilus was to remove John from his Biſhoprick, they ſtudyed how they might promote the ſame, and ſo far prevailed with the Emperour, that a very great Council was ſummoned to meet at Conſtantinople, which Theophilus much rejoycing at, preſently commanded all the Biſhops of Egypt to repair thither: He wrote alſo to Epiphanius, and to all the Eaſtern Biſhops that they ſhould haſten to Conſtantinople, himſelf following them.

A Council called.

Epiphanius

Epiphanius was the firſt that arrived, and in a Town near to Conſtantinople he went into the Church, were he made publike Prayers: From thence going to the City, John with all his Clergy met him with all the reſpect that might be: But Epiphanius ſhewed by his carriage, that the calumnies raiſed againſt John, had made too deep an impreſſion in him: For when he was invited to the Biſhops houſe, he refuſed to go in, and ſhunned to have any ſociety with John: Yea more-over calling pivately together ſuch Biſhops as were at Conſtantinople, he ſhewed what they had Decreed againſt the Books of Origen, and prevailed with ſome to give their ſuffrage to the ſame, though the greater part protracted the doing of it. And Theotinus Biſhop of Scythia, blamed him to his face for it, ſaying that it was altogether unlawful thus to condemn a man that was dead ſo many years before; & that it was not without Blaſphemy thus to calumniate the judgment of our Anceſtors, and to reject thoſe things which they had Decreed: and withall plucking forth a certain Book of Origens, he reads part of it. and ſhews how uſeful and profitable it was for the Church: ſaying further, They that diſcommend theſe things, ſhew their great folly, and its to be feared that in time they may condemn the Scripture it ſelf, about which theſe Books are written.

Origens books condemned.

Notwithſtanding theſe things, John did much reverence Epiphanius, intreating him to partake with him both in his Houſe and Table; yea and in the Church too: But he returned anſwer, That he would neither come into his Houſe, nor Communicate with him at Church, except he would condemn the Books of Origen, and drive away Dioſcorus with the reſt of the Monks his companions: John thought this very unequal thus to drive them away before their cauſe was heard, the rather becauſe he had appointed a Sacrament in the Apoſtles Church. Then did the Enemies of John ſuborn Epiphanius, that he ſhould come forth in publick, and before all the people condemn the Books of Origen, with Dioſcorus and his companions, for holding the ſame opinions, and that withall, he ſhould tax the Biſhop John for favouring of them; The deſign of theſe men which thus ſet him on, was to alienate the affections of the people from their Biſhop. Accordingly two days after Epiphanius went to the Church to accompliſh theſe things: at which time John hearing of his purpoſe, ſent Serapion, one of his Presbyters to meet him, and to proteſt to him that he was going about that which was neither juſt nor ſafe for himſelf: for that hereby he might bring himſelf into danger if any Tumult or Sedition ſhould ariſe amongſt the people, whereof he would be judged the Author: This cooled his heat, and made him deſiſt from his purpoſe.

Johns meekneſs.

About this time a young ſon of the Emperours fell ſick, whereupon the Empreſs ſent to Epiphanius, requeſting him to pray for him. Epiphanius anſwered, that the childe ſhould live, and do well, if ſhe would forſake Dioſcorus and his Heretical Aſſociates. Nay (ſaid the Empreſs) I leave my childe in the hands of God; Let him do with him as he pleaſeth, he gave him me, and he may take him away again, But for thy part, if thou canſt raiſe the dead, why didſt thou ſuffer thy Arch-Deacon Criſpion to dye, who was ſo dear unto thee? Shortly after Epiphanius departed towards Cyprus, and as he went down to the Heaven to take Shipping, he ſaid to John, I hope thou ſhalt never dye a Biſhop: And John anſwered him again, I hope thou ſhalt never come alive into thy Country: Both which came to paſs: Epiphanius dying by the way in the Ship, and John being depoſed and baniſhed, as afterwards we ſhall hear.

Epiphanius reproved.

Two Predictions.

After the departure of Epiphanius, Theophilus came to Conſtantinople; but none of the City Clergy went to meet and entertain him, becauſe they knew that he was an Enemy to their Biſhop; yet ſome Mariners of Alexandria which were then at Conſtantinople, met him, ſinging ſongs in his praiſe, and ſo he went to the Emperours Palace, where a lodging was provided for him: He alſo cunningly found out many which hated John, and were ready to accuſe him, whereupon he went to Quercus, a Suburb of Chalcedon, where he gathered a Council, and there again condemned the Books of Origen. The Council alſo ſent to Conſtantinople to ſummon John, and ſome of his Presbyters to appear before them, and to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be objected againſt them. John anſwered, that he refuſed not to come to his trial, if first he might know his Accusers, and the crime objected against him, and he brought before a free Council: But (said he) I am not such a fool as to appear before such Bishops as are my professed Enemies, and to suffer them to be my Judges.

Most of the Bishops were much incensed at this answer; only Demetrius, and some few that favoured John, departed out of the Council: Then did the rest cause Iohn to be called four times, and because he appeared not, but had appealed to an Oecumenical Council, they deposed him. When tidings hereof was brought to Constantinople, the whole City was on an uproar, and they watched his house all night, lest he should be thrust out of the City: They cryed out also, that he should have been heard before a fuller Synod: But the Emperours command was that he should be carryed into Exile: Hereupon John, the third day, after his deposition about noon, unknown to the people, (for he was loth there should be any ado for his sake) yeelded himself into the hands of his Adversaries, and so privately went away; This being known, the people were all in a Sedition, and many that hated him before, changing their minds, pittied his case; yea some that before desired to see his deprivation, now cryed out that he was falsly accused, & craftily dealt withall. Many cryed out against the Emperour, but more against the Council, and most of all against Theophilus, whom they knew to be the Author of all this mischief.

John condemned by the Council unjustly.

He is banished.

Hereupon in all haste, the Emperour caused John to be sent for again; The Messenger was an Eunuch of the Empresses, who found him at Prenetum, a Mart Town over against Nicomedya, and brought him to Constantinople: Yet Iohn though he was thus brought back from Exile, resolved not to enter into the City till his innocency was cleared, and he were acquitted by the sentence of higher Judges, and thereupon he stayed in the Suburb called Mariana: But because he returned not into the City, the people fell a rayling upon the Magistrates, which necessitated him to come home. As he came into the City multitudes of people met him, brought him to the Church with great reverence, requested him to continue their Bishop, and thenceforward, after the usual manner, to pray for the peace and prosperous estate of the Church of God.

And recalled.

Shortly after a Silver Picture of Eudoxia the Empress was made and erected upon a Marble Pillar near to the Church called Wisdom, and common Plays and Shews were celebrated at the same time: and Iohn, believing that these things were very scandalous and dishonourable to the Christian Religion, not forgetting his wonted audacity and liberty of speech, sharply reproved the Authors and Abettors of such vanities: whereupon the Empress, applying these things to her self, and supposing that they were spoken in disgrace and reproach of her, she caused another Council of Bishops to be called together against him. John being informed hereof, in his Sermon used these expressions; Herodias rageth afresh, stomacketh anew, danceth again, seeketh the head of John in a Platter, which Sermon more enraged the Empress against him.

His sharp reproof.

Then did divers Bishops meet together, as Leontius of Ancyra in Galatia, Ammonius Bishop of Laodicea, Briso Bishop of Philippi, Acatius Bishop of Berœa, &c. who called the late accusers of John before them, to accuse him again: John trusting to their just dealing, requested only that the accusations against him might be equally and indifferently examined: In the mean time the Emperor sent John word that he would not communicate with him before he had cleared himself from the crimes laid to his charge: But the accusers being stricken with shame, could prove nothing; so that the Bishops then present, affirmed that they ought not to examine any other offence, saving whether after his Deposition he had not of himself assumed his Bishoprick again without the admission of a Council? To this John answered, That he had the consent of fifty Bishops which communicated with him. Leontius replyed that there were more against him. Again, John said that that Canon belonged not to their Church, for that it was made by the Arians at Antioch against Athanasius: But they making no account of this answer, proceeded ed to paſs ſentence againſt him, not conſidering that they which were Authors of this Canon, were alſo Depoſers of Athanaſius. He is condemned.

Upon this, the Emperour ſent John word that he had no Authority to go into the Church, for that he was depoſed, whereupon he kept himſelf in his houſe, till, by the Emperours command, he was carryed into Exile: But God ſuffered not this wickedneſs to go long unpuniſhed; for Cyrinus Biſhop of Chalcedon, who had railed upon him, had a ſore brake forth in his Leg, ſo that he was forced to ſaw it off, yet then did the ſore grow in his other Leg, which he was forced to cut off alſo: and preſently after ſo great a hail fell in the Suburbs of Conſtantinople, as the like was never ſeen; and four days after dyed the Empreſs: Baniſhed. Gods judgments on his perſecutors.

John was carryed to Cucuſus in Armenia: and divers Miniſters that adhered to him, were carryed to Chalcedon, and there caſt into Bonds: and his Enemies going about Conſtantinople ſought out as many as were favourers of him, dragging them to priſon, and forcing them to curſe John, John whileſt he was at Cucuſus in Armenia grew very famous; For having much money ſent him by his friends, he wholly imployed it for the Redemption of Captives, and for the relief of the Poor: He alſo by his Miniſtry gat him many friends, ſo that he had great reſort to him, not only of the Armenians, but out of Syria and Cilicia, which ſo incenſed his Enemies at Conſtantinople, that they gat a new Order from the Emperour to carry him to far remoter parts, which alſo they put in practice: But by the way, he being grown weak, and not able to endure the ſcorching of the Sun in thoſe hot Countries, made an end of his Earthly Pilgrimage, to receive his Crown in Heaven. His charity. His death.

Chryſoſtom was ſo ſtiled ob venuſtatem Eloquii, for his graceful Eloquence: He was Diſciple to Euſebius: of an admirable wit in framing his Homilies; Beloved and reverenced of all men: Sophronius teſtifies numquam eum mentitum fuiſſe, &c. that he never told Lye, never curſed any, never ſpake any ſcurrilous matter, and never admitted of vain ſports: His ſtyle was neither too lofty, nor too mean, but fitted to the profit of the hearers: Holineſs and Scholarſhip are joined in one, his works throughout: He ſtudyed not aures titillare, but corda pungere, to tickle the Ears of his hearers, but to prick and raviſh their hearts: He uſed to tell his Auditors, That they were not only to learn, but exerciſe themſelves in practiſing and ſearching the Scriptures, to avoid idleneſs: He contemned Riches, and hated vices: was full of ſweet ſimilitudes: Why ſo called. Lying abhorred. Preachers pattern.

Theodoret ſtyles him Eximium orbis terrarum luminare, The eminenteſt light of the whole world. By authority from the Emperour, he imployed ſome to throw down and demoliſh all the Idols, and their Temples throughout all Phenice, and reformed all the Churches in Aſia, ſtirring up the Miniſters to the ſtudy of Piety: He ſent many Miniſters and Deacons into Scythia, which was over-run by the Arian Hereſie, reducing many thereby to the Orthodox Faith. Hearing alſo that the Scythian Nomades by the River Iſther thirſted after the knowledg of Chriſt, he ſent ſome to bring the glad tidings of the Goſpel to them: And whereas ſome of the Marcionites had infected the parts about Ancyra with their Errors he procured an Edict from the Emperour, which he ſent to the Biſhop of Ancyra, to expel them out of their places: Alſo, whereas one Gainas a great man in Scythia, of an Inſolent and Tyrannical ſpirit, had importuned the Emperour for a Church for himſelf and his followers being Arians; the Emperour acquainted Chryſoſtom with it, telling him that he durſt not ſay him nay: Chryſoſtom deſired to ſpeak with this Gainas before the Emperour, where, in his preſence he ſo daunted the proud Tyrant with his ſtout and reſolute ſpeeches, that he cauſed him to be aſhamed of his requeſt, and to be content without it: Yea he afterwards ſo prevailed with Gainas, that when he had invaded ſome parts of the Empire, he brought him not only to make peace with the Emperour Arcadius, but alſo to ſet his Priſoners free. He ſtoutly told Eudoxia, the Empreſs, that for her covetouſneſs ſhe would be called a ſecond Jezabel: ſhe thereupon ſent him a threatning meſſage, to which he anſwered, Go tell her, Nil niſi peccatum timeo, I fear nothing but ſin. Yet when ſhe, confederating with ſome others, his Enemies had procured his baniſhment into Hieron as he went forth of the City, he ſaid, None of theſe thing His Zeal. His zeal againſt Hereſie. His Magnanimity. His Courage trouble me; but I ſaid within my ſelf, If the Queen will, let her baniſh me; The Earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof If ſhe will, let her ſaw me as under; Iſaiah ſuffered the ſame: If ſhe will, let her caſt me into the Sea, I will, remember Ionah: If ſhe will, let her caſt me into a burning fiery Fornace, or amongſt wilde Beaſts; the three Children and Daniel were ſo dealt with: If ſhe will, ler her ſtone me, or cut of my head; I have S. Steven and the Baptiſt my bleſſed companions: If ſhe will, let her take away all my ſubſtance; Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither again. He was ſo beloved, that on a time when he was like to be ſilenced, the people cryed out, Satius eſt ut Sol non luceat, quam ut non doceat Chryſoſtomus, We had better want, the ſhining of the Sun, than the Preaching of Chryſoſtom.

He uſed to ſay, As a great ſhowr of rain extinguiſheth the force of fire: ſo meditation on Gods Word puts out the fire of luſt in the ſoul: And As a Boat over-laden ſinks: ſo much wealth drowns men in perdition. And, A bulkwark of Adamant is not more impregnable, then the Love of Brethren. And, As a rock, though windes and waves beat againſt it, is unmovable; ſo Faith grounded on the Rock, Chriſt, holds out in all temptations, and ſpiritual combates. And, the Divels firſt aſſault is violent; reſiſt that, and his ſecond will be weaker: and that being reſiſted, he proves a coward.

AVGVSTINVS

The Life of Auguſtine, who dyed An. Chriſti. 430.

His birth & parentage.

Auguſtine was an African by birth, of Thagaſta, of pious parents, Patrius and Monica, who by breeding their ſon in Learning much weakned their eſtate: He attained to ſingular skill in the liberal Arts, wherein he was much holpen by the bountiful contribution of Romanian, a Noble Gentleman.

In his youth, he was vitious in maners, and erroneous in judgement; tainted with the Error of the Manichees. He firſt taught Grammer in his own City where he was born: Then Rhetorick in the Regal City of Carthage; Afterwards he went to Rome, and from thence to Millain, where he was Tutor to Valentinian the Fifth; And by the Doctrine rine & Wiſdom of Ambroſe, he was reduced from his Error, and Baptized: After which, he wholly ſet his heart to ſeek the Lord, regarding neither honour nor riches, being then about thirty years old. He is reclaimed by Ambroſe.

This much rejoyced Monica his Mother, then a Widow, who was more glad that her ſon devoted himſelf to the Service of God, then ſhe would have been of having Grand-children by him: He alſo gave over reading of Rhetorick, leaving his Scholars to ſeek them a new Maſter. After this he returned into Africa, ſpent his time in Watchings, Faſtings, and Prayer, ſerving God both day night, and at laſt was choſen Miniſter in Hippo, where he Preached both by Life and Doctrine diligently. Preachers pattern.

But before this, it fell out, that a certain Great man at Hippo, hearing the fame of Auguſtine, both for his Life and Learning, was very deſirous to ſee and ſpeak with him, promiſing to himſelf that he ſhould eaſily be perſwaded to forſake the World with the allurements of it, and all the luſts of the fleſh, if he could but once hear the Word of God taught by him: which when Auguſtine was informed of by faithful witneſſes, being deſirous to deliver a ſoul from the perils of this life, and eternal death hereafter, he haſted to Hippo, where he viſited and often preached to the man, exhorting him to remember his promiſe, and to perform his Vows to God; yet he deferred the performance of it from day to day; neither did Auguſtine at that time ſee his deſires accompliſhed. His zeal.

At this time one Valerius was Biſhop of Hippo, who (the neceſſity of the Church requiring it) was very ſolicitous to procure a Miniſter for that place: whereupon, when the Congregation was aſſembled, he exhorted and perſwaded them, ſeeing they now had experience of the Life and Doctrine of Auguſtine, to make choice of him: Auguſtine not ſuſpecting any ſuch matter, was preſent amongſt them. Hereupon the people laid hold of him, and preſented him to the Biſhop, all of them with one heart and mouth earneſtly deſiring that he might be their Miniſter. At this Auguſtine wept very much, which ſome of them miſinterpreting, laboured to comfort him, ſaying, that though he deſerved a better place, yet being called to the Miniſtry, he was in the next degree to a Biſhop: whereas indeed the cauſe of his weeping was, becauſe he foreſaw how many and great perils hung over his head by undertaking the Government of that Church. His humility.

Thus being made a Presbyter for that place, he aſſociated to himſelf ſome others which might live with him according to the example of the Primitive Church, having all things in common. Valerius the Biſhop being a very godly man, rejoyced exceedingly, and gave thanks to God for anſwering his Prayers, by ſuch a ſpecial Providence ſending him one ſo able by his Doctrine to edifie the Church of Chriſt: and this he did the rather, becauſe himſelf, being by Nation a Grecian, was not ſo fit nor able to inſtruct that people as was Auguſtine; and contrary to the uſe and cuſtom of the African Churches, he permitted, yea urged Auguſtine often to Preach in his own preſence; for which ſome other Biſhops reproached him: But this Venerable and good man, knowing that it was uſual in the Eaſtern Churches, and ſeeking the glory of God and the good of the People, regarded not the reproaches of evil tongues, whileſt his Miniſter did that which himſelf was leſs apt and fit to do. By this means Auguſtine, like a bright Candle ſet in a candleſtick, gave light to all that were in the houſe. The fame of this thing flying abroad, was the occaſion that many Presbyters, being allowed by their Biſhops, Preached the good Word of God to the People in the Biſhops preſence. He is made a Presbyter in Hippo. His diligence.

At this time the Manichæan Hereſie had infected many, both Citizens and Strangers in the City of Hippo, who were deceived by a certain Peſtilent Heretick, by name Fortunatus, a Preſbyter, remaining in that City: Hereupon many of thoſe Citizens and Strangers, both Catholicks and Donatiſts came to Auguſtine, requeſting him to confer and diſpute with this Manichæan Preſbyter (whom they judged a learned man) about his opinions: Auſtin willingly imbraced the motion, being ready to render a reaſon of the Faith, and Hope, that was in him, to every one that ſhould ask it; being able alſo, not only to exhort with wholeſome words of ſound Doctrine; but to convince the gain-ſayers: Only he enquired whether Fortunatus was willing to do the like? Hereupon they haſted to Fortunatus, exhorting, perſwading, and earneſtly intreating him to imbrace the motion. But truly Fortunatus was very fearful to encounter with Auguſtine, whom he had formerly known at Carthage infected with the ſame Error. But being overcome by their importunity, and aſhamed to decline the encounter, he promiſed to give Auguſtine a meeting, and to diſpute with him.

He diſputes with a Donatiſt.

The time and place being appointed, multitudes flocked to it; publick Notaries were appointed to write down what paſſed, the Diſputatiou continued two days: The event was, that this Maſter of the Manichees was neither able to overthrow the Catholick Faith, nor to defend his own Erroneous opinions: and ſo wanting an Anſwer, he which before was accounted a great and learnen man, was now judged of no value nor ability to defend his Errors; which did ſo fill him with confuſion and ſhame, that preſently after he forſook Hippo, and never after returned again. And ſo, through the bleſſing of God upon Auguſtines labors, many who before were infected with that Error, were reclaimed, and imbraced the true Catholick Faith.

The ſucceſs of it.

His zeal againſt Hereſies.

Auguſtine continued to Preach the Word of Truth frequently, both in the Church and from houſe to houſe, confuting the Hereſies of the times, eſpecially the Donatiſts, Manichees; and Pelagians: The ſame alſo he did by his writings, the Chriſtians wonderfully admiring and rejoycing in it: ſo that, through Gods bleſſing, the Catholick Church in Africk began to lift up her head, which formerly had been wonderfully corrupted and dejected by reaſon of Hereticks, eſpecially through the Rebaptizings of the Donatiſts, whereby they had infected and ſeduced many.

Auguſtines Books alſo and Tractates, being diſperſed, filled with Learning and the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, ſo prevailed, through the Grace of God, that not only the Catholicks, but many Hereticks flocked to Hippo to hear him: and every one that could write, or get others to do it for them, wrote forth his Notes for their future benefit ſo that the ſweet ſmell of the Doctrine of Chriſt was by this means diſperſed all over Africk, which the Churches beyond-Sea hearing of, much rejoyced therein: For as when one member ſuffers, all the Members ſuffer with it, ſo when one member is honoured, all the members rejoyce with it.

He diſputes in a Synod.

At the ſame time the African Biſhops holding a Synod at Hippo, by their command Auguſtine, being yet but a Presbyter diſputed before them of Faith, and the Creed, which he performed to the joy of them all, eſpecially of the good old Biſhop Valerius, who gave much thanks to God for his mercy vouchſafed to him therein: and fearing leaſt ſome other City which wanted a Biſhop ſhould chooſe Auguſtine, and ſo get him away from him (which indeed had come to paſs unleſs Valerius hearing of it, had cauſed Auguſtine to go to another place, and there hide himſelf, ſo that when they ſought him he could not be found) wherefore this good old man, fearing the like again, and finding himſelf much weakned by Age, wrote privately to the Primate of Carthage, alleadging the weakneſs of his body, and the infirmities of his old Age, and therefore deſired that Auguſtine might be made his Coadjutor in the Biſhoprick of Hippo, which by his importunity he alſo obtained: So that the Primate coming to viſit the Church of Hippo, and bringing ſome other Biſhops with him, Valerius before them all, and before all the people which were aſſembled together, declared publickly his deſires; which they all approved very well of, and the People earneſtly deſired that it might be effected: But Auguſtine refuſed the Biſhoprick, being contrary to the cuſtom of the Church whileſt his own Biſhop lived. But many perſwaded him that it was not ſuch an unuſual thing, producing many examples both of the forreign and African Churches for it, ſo that he was forced to yeeld his conſent, and was ordained to the charge of the Biſhoprick.

He is made Biſhop of Hippo.

When he was thus ordained a Biſhop, he Preached the Word of Life more frequently, fervently, and with greater authority then he did before, and that, not only in his own City and Country, but in all places where he was requeſted. whereby the Church of God exceedingly encreaſed: Many alſo of the Donatiſts frequented his Sermons, took Notes, and carryed them to their Biſhops, which when they had read, they uſed to contradict; but they that carryed them, either anſwered them themſelves, or elſe carryed their anſwers to Auguſtine, who with much meekneſs and gentleneſs confirmed the Truth, and refelled their Errors.

his

He alſo wrote many private Letters to the Biſhops and many principal Lay-men of the Donatiſts, admoniſhing and exhorting them that they would either reform their Errors, or come to a publick Diſputation: But they, diſtruſting their own cauſe, would never write back to him again, but being enraged with anger, uſed to exclaim againſt, and both publickly and privately to rail upon Auguſtine as a deceiver of ſouls, and that, as a Wolf, he ought to be ſlain in defence of the Flock and without all ſhame, neither fearing God nor men, they proclaimed that whoſoever would murther him ſhould without all doubt have all their ſins remitted unto them. The malice of the Schiſmaticks.

Theſe Donatiſts had in their Churches a perverſe and violent kinde of men, who went up and down under the pretence of chaſtity, who were called Circumcelliones; and there were very great numbers of theſe who were diſperſed through all the Regions of Africk: Theſe being inſtructed by evil Treachers, were ſo inflamed with Pride, and grew to ſuch audacious boldneſs, that many times, they neither ſpared their own nor other men, requiring them to do things againſt all right and reaſon; and if any one oppoſed them, he was ſure either to be ſoundly beaten, or baſely murthered by them, they being uſually armed with ſundry weapons, raging up and down through Villages and Countries, having no fear to ſhed blood. The Circumcellians.

But whileſt the Word of God was diligently Preached, and Peace was endeavoured to be held with theſe haters of Peace, they committed many Acts of hoſtility: And whil'ſt the Truth was made known againſt their Erroneous opinions, they which were Lovers of Truth ſhunned their ſociety, and endeavoured to preſerve the unity of Truth in the bond of Peace. Hence it came to paſs that theſe men, ſeeing their number to be diminiſhed, and envying the encreaſe of the Church, being incenſed with extream anger, raiſed intolerable perſecutions againſt the true members of Jeſus Chriſt, often ſetting upon the godly Miniſters both night and day, and many times robbing them of all they had; and not contented therewith, they often murthered them: and often threw Lime and Vinegar into their Eyes to blinde them: For which cauſe theſe Rebaptizing Donatiſts grew hateful to their own Diſciples: And (through Gods mercy) the Word of God prevailed the more in Hippo by the Miniſtry of Auguſtine and his Colleagues: and the fame thereof ſpreading abroad, many Cities ſent to chuſe their Biſhops out of that Society, which exceedingly conduced towards the furtherance of the Peace of the Church. They perſecute the Orthodox, eſpecially Miniſters.

He Preached and writ alſo very learnedly againſt the Donatiſts, Pelagians, and other Hereticks, whereby the African Churches recovered their ancient ſplendor. He went not ſo willingly to a Feaſt as to a conference to reduce any that erred. He would not receive gifts to the Church from thoſe which had poor kindred of their own.

Auguſtines Books alſo being diſperſed, and ſome of them tranſlated into Greek, and ſent beyond-Sea into the Eaſtern Churches, were a means of very much good. But theſe things ſo much the more enraged the Circumcellions, inſomuch as when Auguſtine went abroad to Preach to, and to viſit his Churches, which he frequently uſed to do, they often lay in wait for him by the way to have murthered him, and had certainly one time effected it, but that the perſon who was his guide, by a ſpecial Providence of God, miſtook his way, and ſo led him by a By-way to the place whereby he eſcaped their hands, as afterwards came to his knowledge, for which he praiſed God as his only deliverer: But theſe men in the mean time neither ſpared Miniſters, nor Lay-men. The malice of Schiſmaticks. A ſpecial providence.

One notable example we have of their wickedneſs which is not to be paſſed over in ſilence: One of Auguſtines Society, being called to be Biſhop at Calamen, was very careful and Induſtrious to propagate the Truth, and to beat down Hereſies: but whil'ſt he was going from Town to Town about this buſineſs, he fell into the hands of the Rebatizing Donatiſts who lay in wait for him; Theſe men took away the Beaſts The cruelty of Schiſmaticks.

both from him and his company, and all their neceſſaries, beating the Biſhop very cruelly: Hereupon the Proconſul, being made acquainted with it, ſent for Criſpin the Biſhop of the Donatiſts in that place, and ſet a fine upon him according to the wholeſome Laws made againſt Hereticks. But Criſpin denyed himſelf to be an Heretick, whereupon a Diſputation was appointed at Carthage between theſe two Biſhops, which was to be in the preſence of Auguſtine, and the Eyes of all Africk were fixed upon the event of it: To be brief, the Biſhops met, and after three days Diſputation Criſpin was overthrown, and by the Proconſul was adjudged and condemned for an Heretick: but he, not ſtanding to this ſentence, appealed to the Emperour, who patiently heard all the cauſe, and at laſt concluded that the Donatiſts were Hereticks, that they ought not to be ſuffered in any Publick places, and that the Laws againſt Hereticks ſhould be put in Execution againſt them: whereupon Criſpin was fined in two pounds of Gold: But the Catholick Biſhops, and eſpecially Auguſtine ſo prevailed with the godly Emperour that the rigour of his ſentence was taken off from them: which Piety and Charity of theirs much conduced to the encreaſe of the Church.

The Donatiſts condemned for Hereticks,

A Council at Carthage

Not long afte[illegible] was a Council held at Carthage by the appointment of the good Emperou[illegible] who ſent thither a Tribune, and a publick Notary to ſupply his own [illegible]uncil conſiſted of the Biſhops both Catholicks and Donatiſts: whe[illegible]ſts being heard to the full whatſoever they could ſay for the defence o[illegible] opinions, were fully confuted by the Catholicks, and condemned for their Errors, and by the Emperours Judge were declared to be Hereticks: Their Perſecutions alſo againſt the Catholicks were declared even to the cutting off their members, & taking away of their Lives to the great diſturbance of the Peace of the Church? But after this Council was diſſolved, many of their friends reported that they were not ſuffered to ſpeak all they could for themſelves and their cauſe, becauſe that the Judge, appointed by the Emperour, was too favourable to the Catholicks: which yet appeared to be but a poor ſhift to excuſe the weakneſs of their cauſe, ſeeing that they knew him to be a Catholick before the Diſputation began, and yet never excepted againſt him.

A Council at Caſarea.

Not long after there was another Council aſſembled at Caſarea, a chief City in Mauritania, for the ſetling of other affairs of the Church. In this City was Emeritas the Biſhop of the Donatiſts, a chief defender of his Sect, and one whom they moſt relyed upon: Him therefore Auguſtine ſingled out, and in the Publick Congregation challenged him to a Diſputation. Deſiring him now to produce what he had further to ſay for his Opinions, ſeeing his friends gave out that formerly he could not be ſuffered to do it at Carthage; but now he had full liberty & ſecurity, being in his own City, and environed with his friends: Notwithſtanding which, neither by his Exhortation of Auguſtine, neither by the Inſtant requeſt of his Parents and Friends, could he be perſwaded to it, though they told him that they would all be of his Communion, though they loſt their Eſtates, or underwent any other temporal puniſhment, if he could overthrow the Catholick aſſertions: yet nothing would prevail with him, having indeed nothing to ſay more then he had ſpoken before: which diſtruſt of his cauſe, through Gods mercy, turned to the great advantage of the Church, which was much encreaſed and confirmed hereby.

Manichees converted.

At another time at Carthage, many Manichees being brought before him, of thoſe whom they called Elect men, and Elect women, Auguſtine who had formerly known that execrable Sect, produced their damnable Blaſphemies out of their own Books, and at length brought them to an acknowledgement of their Blaſphemies: and thoſe Elect women alſo confeſſed what filthy things had been (according to their cuſtoms) committed amongſt them: all which things exceedingly redounded to the benefit of the Church, and to the ſecuring of the flock againſt ſuch Thieves.

The craft of an Arian.

There was alſo a certain Noble man called Paſcentius, an Arian, by whoſe authority the tribute was exacted with much rigour, the Catholick Faith was much oppoſed, and many godly Miniſters were much moleſted and troubled; Auguſtine tine coming to Carthage where he was, profered to diſpute with him in the preſence of many Noble men: But this Heretick, though he accepted the challenge, would by no means ſuffer any thing to be written which paſſed betwixt them: and his pretence was, leaſt that which was written might be made uſe of againſt him to his prejudice becauſe of the Law: Hereupon Auguſtine conſented privately to diſpute with him without Notaries; yet withall, he foretold that after the Diſputation, every one would take liberty to make what reports of things never ſpoken, becauſe there was nothing ſet down in writing to refel them. Auguſtine in the conference declared his Faith and Judgement, requiring an account of the ſame from the other; Alſo By Arguments and Authority of the Scriptures he confirmed his own, and refelled the Errors of the other; which ſo enraged this Arian that he brake up the conference, and when he departed, he falſly reported that he had overcome Auguſtine, and ſcattered abroad many ſuch lyes; which coming to the Ears of Auguſtine, he was compelled to write to Paſcentius, and therein to ſet down all the paſſages of the conference, which if he ſhould deny, he was able to produce many witneſſes for the proof thereof both worthy and Honorable men, who were then preſent: But he, being thus twice written to by Auguſtine ſcarce returned a ſingle anſwer, wherein alſo he rather railed, than [illegible]ed his Opinions. Hereticks, Lyars.

Alſo when the Goths came into Africk, there cam[illegible] them one Maximus an Arian Biſhop, who coming to Hippo, at th[illegible]ſt of many godly and eminent men, and in their preſence Auguſti[illegible]ne Liſts with him, having Notaries to write down all that paſſed be[illegible]n: His Adverſary ſhewed more ſubtilty then ſolidity, but the Truth prevailed: yet this impudent Heretick when he was returned to Carthage amongſt his own Sectaries, lyingly boaſted that he came away with the Victory: whereupon Auguſtine was enforced to publiſh in writing a Narrative of the whole Diſputation with all the Objections and Anſwers, withall ſhewing wherein Maximus failed, and to what Arguments he was able to give no Anſwer. Auguſtine confutes an Arian.

He took great pains alſo by the ſpace of ten years againſt the Pelagians, who were ſubtle Diſputants, & publiſhed their Hereſies by a very cunning way, endeavouring to propagate them, not only in Publick but from houſe to houſe: Againſt theſe Auguſtine wrote many Books, and often diſputed with them in the Congregation, both to reduce them, and preſerve others from the infection of their Errors. He was the Author alſo of calling many Councils in Africk againſt them; He wrote to the Biſhop of Rome that that Hereſie was abominable, and to be condemned by all that adhered to the Catholick Faith: whereupon the Godly Emperour Honorius taking cognizance of it, condemned it by his Laws, and appointed the holders of it to be reckoned amongſt the Hereticks; whereby many of them, forſaking their Errors, returned to the true Church again. Thus was this holy man of God Auguſtine very ſolicitous about, and careful of the ſafety of the whole Church; and truly God gave him much comfort and occaſion of rejoycing in the fruit of his labors even in this life: Firſt in Hippo and the Country there-abouts, which was more immediately under his charge, the Churches thereof enjoying much Unity and Peace: Then in other more remote parts of Africk, which either by his labors, or by the labors of ſuch of his Society as were called forth to be Biſhops and Miniſters in other places, were very much eſtabliſhed in the Truth; many Manichees, Donatiſts, Pelagians, and Pagans being converted from their Errors, & rejoycing that they were now made Members of the true Church. He was very patient towards all men: He bore with the infirmities of the weak, mourned for the ſins of the wicked, that both of ſuch as were within and without the Church, rejoycing when any were gained to the Lord, and weeping when any were loſt. His zeal againſt Pelagians. The ſucceſs of his Miniſtry. His patience.

So many things were dictated and publiſhed by him, ſo many Diſputations held in the Church, ſo many things written againſt Hereticks, and ſo many Books of Sacred Scripture expounded by him for the edification of the godly, that a ſtudious man all his life long can ſcarcely know and read over. And knowing the duty impoſed by Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 6. 1. &c. of endeavouring to decide His great labors.

Controverſies, he was very forward whenſoever he was requeſted either by Chriſtians, or by men of any other Sect to compromiſe and decide their Controverſies, with much patience and prudence hearing both parties, that ſo he might paſs a righteous ſentence; and that he might the more fully take cognizance of the cauſe, he uſed ſometime to ſpend a whole day faſting to hear the ſame; always taking advantage thereby to do what poſſible good he could to their ſouls. Like a good Steward, Preaching the Word in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, Exhorting, Inſtructing and Reproving with all long ſuffering and Doctrine, endeavouring to inſtruct the Ignorant, and to quicken thoſe that were remiſs in the way to Heaven. Many Letters he wrote to ſuch as ſought to him for counſel and direction in their ſecular affairs: But this he thought a trouble to him, and an hinderance from better imployments, and therefore he always thought beſt of thoſe who would either write or ſpeak to him about Heavenly buſineſſes. He ſeldom was abſent from the Councils which were often held in divers Provinces, yet always ſeeking therein the things which were of God, and not his own advantage: His endeavour was that the Faith of the Holy Catholick Church might be preſerved inviolate: That ſuch Miniſters as were unjuſtly Excommunicated might be abſolved: That ſuch as were wicked and obſtinate might be caſt out. In the Ordination of Miniſters he always judged that the conſent of the godly ſhould concur in it, and that the cuſtom of the Church ſhould not be violated.

His humility.

Upon a time, Auguſtine, forgetting the Argument which he firſt propoſed to proſecute, fell upon a confutation of the Manichees: and one Firmus a rich Merchant, and a Manichee, hearing him, was ſo convinced, that he came to him after, and with tears, on his knees, confeſſed his Errors, and promiſed Reformation. Alſo one Felix a Manichee, coming to Hippo to ſpread his Hereſie, in a Diſputation with Auguſtine after the third time, was ſo convinced, that he recanted his Errors, and was joyned to the Church.

A ſpecial Providence.

He was termed Hereticorum Malleus, The hammer againſt Hereticks. He won alſo many Pagans to embrace the Truth. He took much pains in ending differences. His Apparel was neither ſumptuous nor ſordid: his Diet uſually was Broth and Roots, (He uſed to ſay, Non ego immunditam obſonii timeo, ſed immunditiam cupiditatis. Scio enim Noe omne genus carnis quod cibo eſſet uſui manducare permiſſum, & Heliam cibo carnis refectum, &c.) Though for his Gueſts and ſick-folks, he had better: His Diſhes for his meat were of Earth or Wood, or Marble: His Table was rather for Diſcourſe and Diſputation then for rich Banquetting, and it had Ingraven upon it,

His humility.

Quiſquis amat dictis abſentem rodere famam
Hanc menſam indictam noverit eſſe ſibi.

He that doth love an abſent friend to jeer,
May hence depart, no room is for him heer.

Which rule ſome of his Fellow Biſhops upon a time forgetting, he ſharply reprehended them for it, and told them that he muſt either blot thoſe Verſes out of his Table, or ariſe from dinner, and go to his chamber.

His prudence.

He would never buy either Houſe or Land: But any thing that was given to the Church he would not refuſe it: yet he often refuſed Inheritances, when dying perſons would have given them to the Church; not but that he thought they might be profitable to the Poor: but becauſe he judged it fit and equal that their Children, Parents, or Kindred ſhould rather inherit them: often ſaying, that it was fitter that Legacies ſhould be left to the Church then Inheritances; which are troubleſome, and ſometimes chargeable; yet thoſe Legacies he would have freely given, and not begged or extorted from men.

His charity.

He was almoſt wholly taken up with heavenly affairs, wherein he laboured both day and night, with Mary, chooſing the better part, which could not betaken from him. He was very careful of the Poor, and in caſe of great want, would ſell the the Ornaments of the Church for their Relief. And when the Church ſtock was ſpent, he uſed to declare to the people, that he had nothing left wherewith to relieve the Poor, that thereby he might ſtir up their charity to contribute to ſo good a work. All his Presbyters lived with him in the ſame Houſe, fed with him at the ſame Table, and were maintained and clothed out of the common purſe. He always judged it fit that Miniſters ſhould be preſent at Marriages, both to teſtifie the mutual conſents and compromiſes, and to beſtow his Benediction upon the married perſons. He always kept Scholars in his houſe, whom he fed and clothed. He was ſo ſevere againſt Oaths, that he abated of their allowance to thoſe that ſwore. Oaths.

He never admitted women into his houſe, though of his own kindred; no not his own Siſter when ſhe was a Widdow, and had wholly devoted her ſelf to the Service of God; nor his Uncles daughter; nor his Brothers daughter; ſaying, that though they might dwell in his houſe without ſuſpition; yet they could not be without Maids, or other Women would come to viſit them, which could nor be without offence and ſcandal; and when any Women ſent to him, being deſirous to ſee or ſpeak with him, he would always have ſome of his Miniſters preſent, and would never ſpeak with them alone. He praiſed one, who when he was ſick, ſaid; I have not lived ſo, that I am aſhamed to live longer; nor do I fear to dye, having ſo good a Maſter to go to.

In his latter days he looked over all his Books: Thoſe which he wrote at his firſt Converſion whil'ſt he was a Lay-man, and thoſe which he wrote when he was a Miniſter; and laſtly, thoſe which he wrote when he was a Biſhop; and whatſoever he found in them leſs agreeing with the Word of God, and the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, he corrected, or retracted: Of which he wrote two Volumes, which he called his Retractations. He complained alſo that ſome Miniſters had gotten and divulged ſome of his Books, before he had perfected them, though afterwards he amended them. His Retractations.

Yet being prevented by death he left ſome of his Books unperfected. And being deſirous to profit all, knowing that many were deſirous to read much, which yet for want of time they could not do, out of the Old and New Teſtament he collected ſuch Precepts as concerned the rule of a Chriſtian Life; and ſuch things as were forbidden in the ſame; which he compoſed into a Book, adding a Preface to it, that ſo every one which pleaſed might read it, and thereby diſcern how obedient or diſobedient he was unto God; and this he called, A Looking Glaſs. His works.

But ſhortly after brake out (by the permiſſion of God) that hideous inundation of Goths and Vandals, and other Northern people, who were enſis Dei, God's ſword to puniſh the pride of the Romane Empire. Theſe ſailing out of Spain arrived in Africk, over-running the whole Country of Mauritania and other African Provinces and Countries, laying all waſte before them, and deſtroying all they could with Barbarous cruelty and inhumanity, filling all places with torments of all ſorts, murthers, burnings, and with innumerable and abominable depopulations, ſparing neither ſex nor age; no not the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt: The Churches Ornaments they plundered, the Churches themſelves they demoliſhed, and, like incarnate Devils, made havock of all. This holy man of God lived to ſee theſe grievous calamities, and was not affected with them only as other men were: but conſidering them more deeply and profoundly; and in them foreſeeing the great danger of ſouls, he poured forth Prayers and Tears day and night. For he ſaw Cities ſubverted, Villages deſtroyed; the Inhabitants being either ſlain or driven away: Churches deſtitute of Miniſters: holy Virgins defloured; ſome of them dying under their torments: ſome ſlain with the ſword; ſome led into captivity, in danger of having their ſouls infected with Error and Hereſie, and their bodies enſlaved under a cruel Enemy. The coming of the Goths into Africk. Their horrible cruelties. See more of it in my General Martyrology.

He ſaw the Pſalms of Thankſgiving ceaſed in the Congregations: The Temples burned: and the ſolemn Aſſemblies to be given over: The Sacraments either not to be ſought after; or none to diſpenſe them to thoſe that deſired them: And for thoſe which fled into Mountains, Woods, Deſarts, Caves of the Earth, or to any other places of refuge, they were either hunted out and ſlain, or periſhed with famine and and drought. The Biſhops and Miniſters of Churches, (which had by the goodneſs of God) eſcaped their bloody hands, being ſpoiled of all things, went about begging their bread.

He ſcarce ſaw of all the innumerable Churches of Africk, three remaining, viz. Carthage, Hippo, and Circe, which through Gods mercy, yet remained in ſome ſafety: though not long after his death, Hippo being forſaken of her Inhabitants, was burned by the Enemy. Theſe things this good man much bewailed; and that which much encreaſed his ſorrow was, that juſt now the Enemies were coming to beſiege Hippo, the Governor whereof was one Earl Boniface. This ſiege laſted fourteen moneths, wherein Auguſtine with his fellow Biſhops that were fled thither for refuge, and his Presbyters, exerciſed themſelves wholly in Prayers and Tears, intreating the Father of Mercies to be merciful to them, and to preſerve his Church from the rage of the Adverſaries. And one day as they ſate at dinner together, Auguſtine ſaid to them; You know Brethren, that from the beginning of this ſiege, my daily Prayers have been, that God would either free us from it, or give his ſervants patience and courage to undergo what he impoſeth, or to take me out of this preſent evil World; and I believe that God will anſwer my deſire. And indeed accordingly to the third moneth of the ſiege he fell ſick of a Feaver, which proved his laſt ſickneſs; neither would God defraud his ſervant of the fruit of his Prayers; Indeed he was very powerful in Prayers, ſo that ſometimes by it he hath caſt out Devils, and reſtored ſick men to their health.

His poverty

His feaver proved ſo violent, that he dyed in the ſame third moneth of the ſiege. In his ſickneſs he breathed forth moſt pious ejaculations: He made no Will, having nothing to beſtow, but only Books upon ſeveral Libraries. He dyed Aged 76. Anno Chriſti 430. having been a Miniſter 40 years.

It's written of him, that after his firſt Converſion to the Faith he was grievouſly vexed with inward conflicts againſt his corrupt affections, complaining of his inward hereditary, habitual, inveterate vices, and after long ſtrugling with them by purpoſes, vows, ſtrong reſolutions, watching, faſting, ſelf revenge, and other good means, finding ſtill his own weakneſs, and the encreaſing violence of his corruptions, as he was intentively muſing and meditating what to do more, he heard a voice ſaying, In te ſtas, & non ſtas; whereupon rightly apprehending that his own ſtrength of wit, carnal reaſon, and other powers and helps of nature could not ſerve the turn for the effecting of that which was the proper and peculiar work of Grace, he betook himſelf to his Saviour by humble, faithful, and fervent Prayer; and at laſt found ſuch aſſiſtance from the Holy Spirit of Grace, as ſtrengthned him to ſtand and make good his reſolutions with more comfort then before.

His uſual wiſh was, that Chriſt when he came might finde him aut Precantem, aut Prædicantem, either Praying, or Preaching. When the Donatiſts upbraided him unworthily with the impiety and impurity of his former Life, Look (ſaid he) how much they blame my former faults, by ſo much the more I commend and praiſe my Phyſitian.

An excellent ſpeech.

His ſayings.

He uſed to ſay, Holy Marriage is better then proud Virginity. And again, Prayer that is pure, and holy, pierceth Heaven, and returns not empty. It's a ſhelter to the Soul, a ſacrifice to God, and a ſcourge to the Divel. And again, There is nothing that more abateth ſin, than the frequent meditation of Death: He cannot die ill that lived well; and ſeldom doth he die well that lived ill. A Chriſtian at home in his houſe muſt think himſelf a ſtranger; and that his Country is above where he ſhall be no ſtranger. And again, If men want wealth, it is not to be unjuſtly gotten: if they have it, they ought by good works to lay it up in Heaven. He that hath taſted the ſweetneſs of Divine love, will not care for temporal ſweetneſs. The reaſonable ſoul made in the likeneſs of God, may here find much diſtraction, no full ſatisfaction; for, it being capable of God, can be ſatisfied with nothing but God. Not to be without affliction, but to overcome affliction is bleſſedneſs. Love is ſtrong as death; as death kils the body, ſo love of eternal life kils worldly deſires and affections. He called Ingratitude the Devils Sponge, wherewith he wipes out all the favors of the Almighty. He ſo admired and loved the ſeven Penitential Pſalms, that he cauſed them to be written in great letters, and hung within

The Life of Cyril of Alexandria, who flouriſhed, Anno Chriſti 430.

THeophilus Biſhop of Alexandria falling into a Lethargy, ſhortly after dyed; whereupon a great contention aroſe about the Election of a new Biſhop: ſome ſtanding for Timotheus the Arch-deacon, and others for Cyrillus: Abundatius the Captain of the Garriſon laboured all that he could to prefer Timothy: But the other party prevailed, and ſo Cyril was choſen and ſetled in the Biſhoprick. He is choſen Biſhop of Alexandria.

About this time Neſtorius the Heretick vented his blaſphemous opinions againſt the Deitie of our Saviour Chriſt, whom Cyril anſwered and confuted: upon this the Emperour Theodoſius minor ſummoned a Councel at Epheſus, in which Cyril was choſen Preſident, and where, with much learning and judgement, he confuted Neſtorius, and Pelagius. So that the Council after ſerious examination and deliberation, pronounced this ſentence; To omit the other abominable wickednesſes of Neſtorius, becauſe being ſent for by us, he hath refuſed to appear, neither would he receive thoſe godly and religious Biſhops whom we ſent to confer with him: being therefore forced by neceſſity, we proceeded to the examination of his wicked opinions, and finding, partly by the Epiſtles and Books that he hath written; and partly by his words which in this famous City he hath lately ſpoken, which by ſufficient witneſs have been proved before us, that he holds and publiſheth Heretical opinions contrary to the Word of God and the Canons of the holy Councils; we therefore, not without many tears, are forced to paſs this ſevere ſentence againſt him: and our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hath ſo groſly and grievouſly blaſphemed, doth by us Decree, that Neſtorius be depoſed from his Biſhoprick, and excommunicated from the holy Aſſemblies of the Miniſters of God. Which ſentence the Emperour Theodoſius did alſo approve of and confirm, and withall baniſhed him to Oaſis, & God to ſhew the ſeverity of his juſtice againſt blaſphemers, ſtrake him with an incurable diſeaſe whereby his tongue rotted, and breeding many Worms, was devoured by them, ſo that he ended his wretched life after a moſt miſerable manner. This Cyril, was by birth a Grecian, and as one teſtifies of him, was Vir doctus & ſanctus, a learned and holy man: He was Preſident in the Council at Epheſus, where with much learning and judgement he confuted Neſtorius and Pelagius: He was admirably experienced in the holy Scriptures: flouriſhed under Theodoſius junior: He was ſo famous for piety, eloquence, and wit, that the Grecian Biſhops gat ſome of his Homilies by heart, and recited them to their people. After twenty two years labor in the Government of that Church, he quietly yeelded up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 448. under Theodoſius junior. His knowledge in the Scriptures. He uſed to ſay, It's the beſt way for a rich man to make the Bellies of the Poor his Barn, to ſuccour the fatherleſs and needy, and thereby to lay up treaſure in Heaven, that he may be received into everlaſting habitations. And, Where the Scripture wants a tongue of expreſſion, we need not lend an ear of attention, we may ſafely knock at the Council door of Gods ſecrets, but if we go further, we may be more bold then welcome. And again, The Devil runs with open mouth upon Gods children to devour them: they manfully reſiſt him: he thinks to weaken their Faith, and they, by his aſſaults are made the ſtronger: he fights againſt them, but they get ground upon him; and ſo, what he intended for their deſtruction, full ſore againſt his will, makes for their advantage. He was called the Champion of the Catholick Faith. Petrus Chrysologus, so called because of his golden Eloquence, was born at Imola in France, of honest Parents; bred under Cornelius Bishop of that City, whose care it was, not only to instruct him in good Manners and Learning, but to fit him for the Work of the Ministry, that he might bring glory to God in the service of his Church: And not long after, he was made Arch-bishop of Ravenna.

Preachers pattern.

He excelled in Learning, Vertue, and all praise-worthy qualities. He was present at two Councils, the one at Ravenna, the other at Rome: and sent Letters full of Learning to the Synod of Chalcedon against Eutiches the Heretick. He was powerful in Eloquence, especially in his Sermons to the people, and very holy in Conversation, by both which he won many to the Truth. Always before he penned any thing, he would with great ardency and humility set himself to Prayer to seek unto God for direction therein. He lived long, having been Bishop about 60 years, flourished under Martian the Emperour, and dyed Anno Christi 500.

He used to say, Let not thy care be to have thy hands full, whilst the Poors are empty: for the only way to have full Barns is to have charitable Hands: And, God had rather men should love him than fear him: to be called Father then Master: he wins by Mercy, that he may not punish by Justice: If thou wilt be like thy Father, do likewise. And, Neither in the Flint alone, nor in the Steel alone any fire is to be seen, nor extracted but by conjunction, and collision: So, nor by Faith alone, nor by good Works alone is Salvation attained, but by joyning both together. And, As the Clouds darken Heaven, so intemperate Banquetting the Minde: as the violence of windes and waves sinks a Ship; so drunkenness and gluttony sinks our souls and bodies in the depth of hell. And, Vertues separated, are annihilated: Equity without goodness is severity; and Justice without Piety cruelty. And, some that lived commendably before they attained to dignity, being set in the Candlestick of the Church, turn their light into darkness: It had been better for such lights still to have been hidden under a bushel, &c.

He was a man of an Excellent Wit, and by his Ministry, and example won many to a love of the Truth.

Rosper was born in Aquitane, and preferred to be Bishop of Rhegium in France; He was Scholar to S. Augustine, famous for Learning and Piety; He learnedly confuted the Pelagian Heresie: He was assiduous in reading, especially of the Scripture: He usually had the four Evangelists in his hands: He distributed his goods freely to the Poor: His special care was to take away all strife and contentions from amongst his people. He was a Father to all ages and sexes that were in the City: He much addicted himself to Watching, Fasting, Prayer, and Meditation. He continued Bishop there twenty years: flourished under Martianus. Upon his death-bed, speaking to many of his people that wept sore, he said, The Life which I have enjoyed was but given me, upon condition to render it up again, not grutchingly, but gladly: For me to have stayed longer here, might seem better for you, but for me it is better to be dissolved, &c. His Parentage.

Unerick the Arian, King of the Vandals, having subdued Carthage, banished all the Senators thereof into Italy, amongst whom was Gordian, Grand-father to Fulgentius: And after the decease of Gordian, Claudius his son returned unto Carthage; and though his house was given to an Arian Priest, yet he recovered a great part of his Inheritance by some favour which he found at the Kings hands, and so departing to Lepte, he there setled his habitation: But shortly after dying, he left his son Fulgentius to the care of his Mother, Mariana, who was very careful to train him up in Learning, causing him to be instructed in the Greek Tongue, before he learned Latine, that thereby he might attain to the greater perfection in that Language: And as his years encreased, so did he highly profit in all sorts of Learning, to the great joy of his Mother, who exceedingly rejoyced to see his wisdom and towardness, which also much refreshed her after the loss of her dear husband: yea she was so well satisfied with his Prudence, that she committed to his care the government of her whole house: and he so well behaved himself therein, that he pleased his friends, silenced his ill-willers, and both by direction and correction procured an awful respect from the servants: He was also very careful to preserve his Patrimony.

His education.

His prudence in governing a family.

His Conversion.

By this his deportment he gat so much credit and esteem, that he was made the Kings Collector, and required to be rigorous in exacting the rated payments: But after a while, it pleased God, that this multiplicity and burden of worldy businesses began to be very heavy to his Soul; and the vain flattering felicity of the World yeelding disgust, by little and little the love of spiritual life seemed to take root in his Heart, and this begat in him a desire frequently to pray, and to read, and study the holy Scriptures: Then did he often resort to such men as sequestred themselves from worldly businesses, and betook themselves to Monasteries, where he learned by experience the sweet conversation of Gods Servants, those places being not yet degenerated into such superstition and profaneness as afterwards they were.

His speech.

Amongst them he perceived that as they had no worldly solace, so had they no wearines in their present condition: as they had no temporal joyes, so neither had they that vexation of spirit which other men were subject to by reason of their worldly businesses: whereupon with himself he brake out into these words. Why travel I in the World, which can yeeld me no future nor durable reward answerable to my pains? Though it be better to weep well than joy ill: yet if to joy be our desire, how much excelleth their joy who have a good conscience before God, who dread nothing but sin: study to do nothing but to accomplish the Precepts of Christ? Now therefore let me change my trade; and as before, I endeavoured amongst my Noble Friends to prove more Noble, so now let my care and imployment be amongst the humble and poor servants of the Highest, to become more poor and humble than they, and like S. Matthew, let me turn from a Publican to a Disciple.

His prudence.

Thus being resolved to renounce all terrene and worldly delights, and to make himself a partaker of that kinde of life which upon mature deliberation and examination his judgement approved as most excellent: yet withall, wisely considering that sudden changes might breed some distemperature either in body or minde, or both, he began by degrees to accustom himself to Fasting, to avoid the company and accustomed complements of his old acquaintance and familiar friends, addicting himself to solitarines, to much reading and prayer.

Hereupon all that knew him were stricken with great wonder and amazement at this sudden and unexpected change: imputing this strict demeanor in a man so delicately brought up, to proceed from necessity, and privy poverty: But he having thus made some proof of such things, wherein he conceived difficulties might occur, and now finding by experience that nothing was hard to a willing minde, as alſo lighting upon, and reading that Divine Treatiſe of St. Auguſtine upon the 36 Pſalm, his love to and longing after that more retired courſe of life much encreaſed in him, ſo that he reſolved without any further delay to put his former purpoſes into practiſe, and accordingly, going to Fauſtus, who was one of thoſe Biſhops whom the Arian Tyrant Hunerick had confined to a certain place not far from his own Country, he beſeeched him to admit him into his Monaſtery. The prudent Biſhop well knowing the worldly converſation of the young man in times paſt, gave no credit to his ſpeech, nor comfort to his requeſt, but willed him, firſt to learn to live leſs delicately before he entred upon ſo ſtrict a courſe of life: But he humbly kiſſing the Biſhops hand, earneſtly requeſted him that he would not reject him, but graciouſly admit him for one of his Diſciples; and ſo by importunity declaring his ſincere affections, he procured admittance; He retires himſelf from the world.

The fame of this thing ſpreading abroad, ſome diſpaired of his perſeverance becauſe of his former delicate life; others, conſidering the excellency of his wit, were raiſed in expectation of ſome notable and worthy conſequence. Divers of his Familiars, excited by his example, betook themſelves to the like courſe of life: only his inconſiderate and worldly-minded mother grew exceedingly diſcontented at it, as if her Fulgentius were already dead, and ſo, impatiently running to the Biſhop, ſhe brawled with him, crying out; Reſtore the Son to his Mother, the Maſter to his Servants and Houſhold: It becomes you to comfort ſuch diſconſolate Widdows, not to deſtroy my forlorn houſe. The Biſhop mildly reprehended her, but wiſely concealed her ſon; wherefore ſhe filled the Ayr with her exclamations, ever calling upon the name of Fulgentius: This violent temptation did he meet with at his firſt entrance into this ſtrict kinde of life; But having his heart fixed in Heaven, he gave no Ear to her exclamations: ſo that his Mother, verily thinking that he had not been there, ſorrowfully departed: The Biſhop having hereby had experience of the valour of his young Diſciple, judged that he that could thus overcome his natural affections, no labour would be hard, nor conqueſt difficult for the time to come. His mothers. Impatiency at it. Tentation reſiſted.

Whil'ſt he continued in this place, he wholly abſtained from Wine and Oil, and was ſo rigorous in Faſting, that it much debilitated his body, and procured ſome diſeaſes: But his heart being wholly ſet upon the working forth of his Salvation with fear and trembling, he committed himſelf to God, ſaying, The daintieſt feeders avoid not ſickneſs: and after he had a while been habituated to this courſe, he, through Gods mercy, recovered his health and priſtine beauty. His Inheritance (though he had a younger Brother called Claudius) he wholly left it to his Mother, that at her deceaſe ſhe might leave it to Claudius, if he deſerved well of her; by which means his Brother (for the Living-ſake) was made more dutiful and ſubmiſs, and his Mother by this gift received no ſmall conſolation to counterpoiſe the ſorrow of his abſence. His abſtinence. His ſickneſs and recovery. He gives away his inheritance.

Shortly after the Arians renewing their perſecution (which for a ſpace they had diſcontinued under a pretence of more moderation) Biſhop Fauſtus was conſtrained by frequent removes from one place to another, to hide himſelf, and Fulgentius had no better ſhift then to flee to another little Monaſtery governed by one Fælix, who having ſufficiently heard of his Learning and Vertue, would have reſigned the government thereof to Fulgentius; But he conſtantly refuſed it: yet at the great importunity of the Brethren, he was enforced to take part of the Government upon him: So that theſe holy men, equal in their love to God and their neighbors, equal in Vertue, and like in Conditions, mutually governed the place, each fearful of offending the other; each vigilantly attending the good of the Society. But the Perſecution growing more hot, they together with their Diſciples were forced to remove into more remote and unknown parts of Africa: and at laſt ſetled in the Territories of Sicca, where they exceeding profited the people, and gained many Souls to Chriſt. The Arians renew their perſecution His remove to Sicca.

But the old Enemy of mankinde enving their godly labours, ſtirred up an Arian Prieſt called Fælix, who not far off, had corrupted many with his Heretical opinions, to moleſt and trouble them. This fellow, great in Power and Authority, but greater Heretical malice.

in malice, fearing leſt by the means of Fulgentius (whoſe Learning now grew famous) many of his ſeduced Diſciples ſhould be reclaimed to the Truth, he cauſed all the ways to be beſet by which theſe two Fathers uſed to go to inſtruct the people; and it pleaſed God, that as theſe two walked by the way, they fell into theſe watchmens hands, who preſently loaded them with Irons, and carried them to the Arian Prieſt. Fælix when he ſaw that he was like to be apprehended, threw away ſome money into a buſh which he happened to have about him for the Brethrens ſuſtenance.

The Arian Prieſt when they came before him, uſed them very roughly, demanding of them why they came out of their own Country to ſubvert his Chriſtian hearers? And as they were about to anſwer, he would not hear them, but firſt commanded them to be ſcourged: whereupon Fælix requeſted that his Brother Fulgentius might be ſpared: For (ſaith he) he cannot endure the extremity of the torment, but in all like-lihood will breath forth his innocent Soul under your hands. But rather let your wrath be wholly wreaked upon me, who am moſt guilty of that which you charge us with: Fælix therefore was moſt cruelly beaten: but not that Fulgentius ſhould be ſpared, who being of Noble Parentage was of a tender conſtitution, and ſo the blows with the ſtaves were the more grievous to him, whereupon he earneſtly deſired to be heard having ſome what to ſay; and ſo the ſtripes and baſtinadoes being intermitted, he began with his Eloquent mouth to relate the cauſe of their travel into thoſe parts, cauſing his very Adverſaries to wonder at his Eloquence and flowing Language. So that the Prieſt had almoſt forgotten his cruelty, and ſhame of the injury, was ready to embrace his obdurate heart: Yet leaſt he ſhould appear to be overcome with his words, he cryed out; Lay him on luſtily, and multiplying your blows rend this pratler. What? Thinks he by his words to ſeduce me alſo? Hereupon he was again beaten moſt mercileſly: Then were both of them ſhaven deformedly, their clothes pulled off, and ſo they were ſent packing all naked. Forth then from the Arians houſe they departed no otherwiſe then as from a glorious combat, and as crowned with Lawrels of Victory: In their return they found the money which Falix had hidden, which was a great refreſhing to them.

Cruelty of Hereticks

He is cruelly beaten.

Rejoyceth in ſufferings for Chriſt.

The fame of this deteſtable fact gave great offence to many, and in particular to the Arian Biſhop of the Dioceſs, who had a good opinion of Fulgentius, and much favoured him, and would have puniſhed the Prieſt, if Fulgentius had deſired it of him: and indeed many urged him to ſeek revenge; but he gave them this humble denyal, ſaying, It is not lawful for a Chriſtian to meditate revenge: our Lord Chriſt well knoweth how to repay the injuries inflicted on his ſervants. If my caſe be avenged, then loſe I the reward of my patience; eſpecially ſeeing it might ſcandalize many little ones, if I, a Catholick ſhould require judgement at an Arians hand.

He ſeeks not revenge.

A while after Fulgentius having heard and read much of the ſtrict lives of the Monks in Egypt, had a great minde to ſee the ſame, and ſo leaving his Monaſtery, he took ſhipping for Egypt: But a ſtorm meeting him by the way, he was driven into the Haven of Syracuſe, the chief City of Sicily: At this time Euſalius was Biſhop there, who very curteouſly entertained Fulgentius, and upon converſe, finding his ſufficiency, enquired the cauſe of his voyage, and underſtanding by him the cauſe, he much diſſwaded him from it, and perſwaded him to continue at Syracuſe that winter: which when he conſented to, he maintained him all that time, and Fulgentius out of that little allowed him, careſully miniſtred ſomewhat to the neceſſities of others.

He ſails into Sicily.

Summer, being come, he ſailed to Rome, where, beholding the glory of the Romane Nobility, the triumphant pomp of King Theodorick, and the univerſal ſplendor and joy of the City, he was ſo far from being taken with ſuch worldly toys and delights, that it raiſed up his deſires after heavenly joys, ſaying thus to ſome of his friends that accompained him; How beautiful may the Cæleſtial Hieruſalem be, when Terreſtial Rome ſo glitteretht If ſuch honour be given to lovers of vanity, what glory ſhall be imparted to the Saints who are lovers and followers of Truth? after this he returned into Africa to the incredible joy of his Brethren; But after a while, finding the diſtractions

He goes to Rome.

Heaven more glorious.

His return into Africk.

which neceſſarily attended his abode there, partly by reaſon of his care in Government, and partly by reaſon of much reſort of Noble men, and others that dayly repaired to him (his fame being now ſpread abroad) he privily ſtole away, and went to another Monaſtery far off, amidſt the ſhelly Rocks of the Sea, deſtitute, in a manner, of all humane ſolace and neceſſaries, where being with all courteſie received, as much as he excelled others in Learning and Eloquence, ſo far ſubjected he himſelf to all in humility and obedience. He obſcures himſelf.

Many Books he there copied out fair with his own hands, and for his recreation, made many neceſſary implements for the houſe, of Palm leaves: But at laſt his old ſociety gained knowledge of the place of his abode, and preſently ſent to requeſt his return: Hereupon great contention aroſe between the two Houſes, whilſt one ſought, to retain, the other to regain him. The Controverſie at laſt came before Biſhop Fauſtus, who Decreed his return to his firſt place; and that he might be imployed for the publick good, he ordained him a Presbyter: At which time ſundry Cities wanting Paſtors (for the King had forbidden the Ordination of any more Biſhops) many of them ſought and ſued to Fulgentius to undertake that charge, and ſome proceeded to Elect him out-right; yet thought he himſelf ſecure by reaſon of the Kings prohibition, till at laſt the perſecuted Biſhops, who yet ſurvived, reſolved rather to incur the diſpleaſure of the King, than to ſuffer the people any longer to want Biſhops, and thereupon, meeting together, they Decreed that Biſhops ſhould be ordained for all the vacant places; and forth-with (leaſt the Arian King hearing of it, ſhould prevent them) they ſought out godly Presbyters whom they might appoint to this Office; But then Fulgentius, who was moſt of all ſought for, could no where be found; for he had hid himſelf to avoid that imployment, and ſo continued till all the ſolemnities were over paſſed, and then returned, hoping now to live in quiet. But it pleaſed God otherwiſe to diſpoſe of it. His great induſtry. He is ordained a Presbyter. His humility.

For it ſo fell out that the City of Ruſpa remained as yet unfurniſhed, the Citizens whereof getting inkling that Fulgentius was diſcovered, they came unto him, laid hold upon him carryed him with them, and did not requeſt, but conſtrained him to be their Biſhop: Yet in this dignity he nothing forgat his former integrity: He ſtill uſed mean and ſimple attire, went many times bare-foot, wholly abſtained from Fleſh, Wine, and Oil, and always kept about him ſome of his former aſſociates: But he with his fellow Biſhops enjoyed not long their places: for that fell out which was eaſily foreſeen to be a likely conſequent, yet was contemned in reſpect of the Churches neceſſity and want, which was, that the Arian King enraged by this act, baniſhed about 60 Biſhops into Sardinia, amongſt whom Fulgentius was one, who joyfully aſcended the Ship, being heartily glad that he had a ſhare in ſuch a glorious confeſſion: Divers of his Clergy and Friends followed him, and being arrived at Calaris in Sardinia, he there lived with them at the ſame Table, and by his Sermons converted many. He is made a Biſhop. His moderation. He is baniſhed. He converts many.

Not long after King Thraſamund, amongſt the craſty fetches, and perſecutory drifts whereby he endeavoured to allure the Catholicks to the Arian Hereſie, uſed this Policy: He feigned a deſire to become a Catholick, & ſetting down divers captious & deceitful queſtions, pretended that he could not finde any. That could ſufficiently anſwer thoſe queſtions, where-upon hearing the fame of Fulgentius, he haſtily ſent for him: who with an undaunted courage came to Carthage, & not being preſently called to the King, endeavoured ſeriouſly to confirm the Catholicks in their Faith; and with much curteſie and affability anſwered all queſtions, rejecting no man; whereby he reclaimed many from their Errors, admoniſhing them to repent of, and to bewail their fall: others he exhorted not to hazard the damnation of their Souls for temporal advantages: and whom he ſaw in danger of perdition, with mild, yet effectual words, he ſtayed and encouraged to a noble and generous reſolution, animating them to ſuffer any dangers or torments rather then to deny the Truth: and it pleaſed God ſo to bleſs his labors, that ſome, who before were ſtaggering, were now by his means imboldned plainly to reprove the weak-grounded impudence of the Arian party: And thus the Omnipotent God turned the Enimies device to the advancement of his own Glory. Hereticks. ſubtilty. He comes to Carthage. Doth good.

Then

He is sent for to the King.

Then did the King send for him, and questioned with him, and met with such solid and judicious answers, that he was forced to acknowledge that he found him every way to answer the report which he had heard of his Wisdom and Learning, and withall he proposed sundry difficult questions to which he required his answer in writing, Fulgentius having drawn up his Answer, communicated it to the most learned Catholicks, and after approbation to the people, before it was delivered to the King; Thrasamund having with great diligence perused it, praised his Wisdom, wondred at his Eloquence, commended his Humility; Yet had his heart so hardned that he could not understand and submit to the Truth.

He is envyed and complained of Fulgentius could not be suffered to stay long at Carthage, for the Arians with their clamours incensed the King, complaining that he had already gained from them some of their Ministers, and that the people fell a pace to him, so that their whole Religion stood in great hazard by his means: The King hereupon to quiet them, sent him back into Sardinia. Late in the night was he carryed aboard the ship, that his departure might be better concealed from the People: but it pleased God by contrary windes long to detain the Ship in the harbor, so that for many days, almost the whole City flocked to him to take their farewel, and many communicated at his hands: And when great lamentation was made for his departure, he took one Fuliates (a very godly man) apart, and told him he should shortly again return, and that the Church should enjoy peace; which also came to pass.

Is sent back into Sardinia.

He prophesies,

When he was requested to pray for any that were sick or in misery, he commonly used this Petition: Thou (O Lord) knowest best what will make for our Souls health: Grant of thy mercy a supply unto our necessities so far forth as shall not hinder our spiritual profit: And when God graciously answered his Prayers in their behalf, he used to say; That God did it for their sakes, not for his: He commonly said, that Miracles make not a man just or righteous, but famous.

His humility.

When he was come back to Sardinia, he returned to his former strict course of life, with his Associates, who had all things in common; and when he distributed more to one than to another by reason of sickness or weakness, he used thus to say to them; Who taketh of the common so much, becometh debtor to all, which dept he can only pay by humility. It was very pleasing to him when any of the Brethren proposed any hard question; and gladly he hearkened to the doubts of any though they were never so simple; neither would he through weariness or tediousness cease to give them answers, untill they confessed themselves to be satisfied: Though he was sometimes severe towards the obstinate, yet he remained even when he seemed most displeased and angry, nothing at all in mind troubled or disquited.

His meekness.

Thrasamund the King being shortly after taken away by death, Hilderick sceeeded him, who restored peace and liberty to the Catholicks, recalling their Bishops from Exile, & amongst the rest Fulgentius, who was received with great devotion by the Africans, no less in every City then if he had been their peculiar Bishop: Every where they met him with tokens of joy, with whom now rejoycing he rejoyced, as before with them lamenting he had lamented: Yea, their love was so great to him, that a shoure of rain falling, they held their garments over his head to keep him dry. Then did he return to his proper seat, where he would do nothing without the advice of his Clergy.

He is restored to his place.

In the Council of Vincensa, he was by the common suffrage of the Bishops chosen President: Though Bishop Quodvultdeus claimed that preheminence as belonging to his See: and though Fulgentius for the present would uot oppose this choice, yet at the next Sessions, he procured that the Bishop Quodvultdeus was restored to his right.

His humilty

A year before his death he retired, with some Brethren into the Island of Circina, and there lived a most strict life: But the necessities of his people requiring, and their importunity prevailing, he returned to them, and shortly after fell into grieveous pangs of sickness, wherein he continued sixty days, often crying out, O Lord give me patience and pardon. Physitians perswading him to make use of a Bath, he answered; Can Baths make that man who hath accomplished the course of Nature that he shall not dye? Why then do you go about to perswade me now at my last end to remit of that rigor which I have always used? Lastly, calling together the Brethren about him, he thus ſpake to them; Dear Brethren, having been carefull of your Souls health, perhaps I have been auſtere and harſh towards you: If any one be offended, I beſeech him to pardon me: and if my ſeverity have poſſibly paſſed meaſure, and due moderation, pray ye to God that he may impute it not to me. They all kneeling down acknowledged him to have been always loving, gentle, and mild towards them. Then did he pray for his people, that God would provide for them a Paſtor after his own heart: After this he called for a ſum of money, which as a faithful Steward he daily uſed to diſtribute amongſt the Poor, willing it all to be preſently divided; and recited by name the Widdows, Orphans, and Poor, he allotted to every one his portion. Soon after in the midſt of his Prayers dyed this bleſſed ſervant of God, and famous Doctor of the Church, in the 65. year of his Age, Anno Chriſti 529. having been Biſhop about 25 years.

A good Paſtor.

His charity.

His death.

He was very powerful in Prayer, as may appear by this example: Sometime before his death the Moores invaded the Territories of Ruſpa, filling all places with Rapines, Murthers, Burnings, and Devaſtations, not ſparing the Churches themſelves, but murthering ſuch as fled to them for refuge: But yet ſo long as Fulgentius lived, the City of Ruſpa remained in ſafety, and when all the reſt of the Province was under miſerable Captivity, that City alone enjoyed an happy Peace.

Prayer prevalent.

He wrote many excellent Treatiſes againſt Hereticks, beſides ſundry Sermons and Epiſtles: His moving and affectionate Eloquence was ſuch, as that the Biſhop of Carthage hearing him Preach two days together in his Church, could not refrain from tears; Rejoycing that God had given to his Church in thoſe afflicted and comfortleſs times ſuch a worthy Inſtrument of his Glory.

His works.

He uſed to ſay, Chriſt dyed for Men, and Angels; for Men, that they might riſe from ſin: and for Angels, that they might not fall into ſin. And, If they go to Hell that do not feed the hungry, cloath the naked, &c. what will become of them that take away bread from the hungry, cloaths from the naked? &c. If want of charity be tormented in Hell, what will become of the covetous?

His ſayings.

Covetouſneſs.

His Mother having committed the charge of her houſe to him in his youth, he ſo mannaged it, that he gat this teſtimony, that he was Matri præſidium, domeſticis ſolatium, &c. A ſafe-guard to his Mother, a comfort to the Family, and to all with whom he converſed, a rare example. In the midſt of his greateſt ſufferings he uſed to ſay, Plura pro Chriſto toleranda: We muſt ſuffer more than this for Chriſt.

GREGORY ✝ GREAT

The Life of Gregory the Great, who dyed Anno Christi, 605.

His birth & education.

Gregory the Great was born in Rome: his Father was a Senator, by name Gordianus; his Mothers name Sylvia, a woman Noble by birth, but both of them more Noble for their Piety. Our Gregory in his tender years was carefully educated by his Parents, being instructed both in Religion and Literature; and as he grew in years, so he encreased in Learning, which he retained with a firm Memory, whereby he was enabled afterwards to make good use of it for the profit and benefit of the Church of God.

Having gone through the study of other Arts, he spent two years in reading of Pythagoras, but finding little satisfaction therein, he at last with much diligence breathed after more Divine studies: And after his Fathers death, having more freedom in disposing of himself, and his estate, he gave all his riches towards the relief of the Poor, and betook himself to a Monastical life, first under Hillarian, and afterwards under Maximianus, who both of them were famous for their Piety and Learning.

His charity.

He turns Monk.

His studiousness.

He was very abstemious in his Dyet, frequent in Fasting and Prayer, and so studious of the Sacred Scriptures, that he could scarse find leasure to eat his food till necessity urged him thereunto: And indeed his abstinence was so great that he much impaired his health thereby: yet would he not give over his imployments, spending all his time in Prayer, Reading, Writing, or Dictating to others. His humility was very exemplary, for though he came of Noble Parents, yet had he so little respect to his discent, that with tears he would often say, That all Earthly Glory was miserable, if the owner of it did not seek after the Glory of God: He was very exact in spending his time, saying, that he was to give an account of it unto God: Neither was he less charitable to the souls of others.

His humility.

Frugal of his time.

For on a time, when many Merchants were met to sell their commodities at Rome, it happened that Gregory passed by them, and saw many young boys with white bodies, fair faces, beautiful countenances and lovely hair, set forth to sail, whereupon going to the Merchant, their owner, he asked him from what Country he brought them?

them? The Merchant answered from Britain where the Inhabitants were generally so beautiful: Then said Gregory; Are they Christians, or Heathens? Heathens replyed the other: whereupon Gregory deeply sighing said, Alas for grief! that such fair faces should be under the power of the Prince of Darkness, and that such beautiful bodies should have their souls void of the Grace of God; Then did he again ask the Merchant, By what name that people were called? He answered Angli: Truly said he, they may be called Angli, quasi Angeli, for they have Angels countenances, and its fit they were made fellow-Citizens with the Angels. Again he asked, What was the name of the Province whence they came? The Merchants answered, Deiri; well may they be of Deiri, for its fit they should be pulled De ira Dei [from under the wrath of God] & called into the grace of Christ. Again he asked him, what was the name of their King? the Merchant answered Ale; whereupon Gregory alluding to his name, said Well is their King called Alle, for its fit that Alleluja to their Creator should be sung in those parts: And so going strait to Benedict, who was Bishop of Rome at that time, he earnestly requested him to send some Ministers into Britain for the Conversion of the Inhabitants there; and when none could be found that would undertake that journey, himself would have gone if the Bishop would have permitted it: And indeed at the length, by his importunity he prevailed for leave, and set forwards on his journey: but within three days the people of Rome so complained to Benedict of the loss of Gregory, that he sent for him back, which occasioned his return (though with much sorrow) that he was hindered in so good a work.

His charity to souls.

He desires to have England converted.

Not long after he was sent, upon some Ecclesiastical affairs to the Emperour at Constantinople, where though the splendor of the Court was troublesome to him, yet intermitted he not his private studies and devotion, and during his abode there, at the request of a Bishop who was Embassador for the Visigoths, he wrote a Comment upon the Book of Job. Also whereas Eutychius Bishop of Constantinople, had taught and writ that our bodies at the Resurrection should be impalpable, more subtile then the air: Gregory confuted that Error both by Reason, and by the Example of Christs Body after his Resurrection: whereupon ensued an hot Disputation betwixt them: This the Emperour Mauritius hearing of, sent for them both to him, heard the cause on both sides, read over diligently the Book writ by Eutychius, and being convinced of the Error by that which he had heard from Gregory, he adjudged the Book to be burned. Shortly after Eutychius fell very sick, and a little before his death, retracted his Error, and acknowledged the Resurrection of our flesh.

He is sent to Constantinople.

He writes upon Job.

Confutes heresies.

Gregory having dispatched the business about which he was sent to Constantinople, returned to Rome, about which time the River Tiber swelled to such an unmeasurable height that it ran over the Walls of the City, and drowned a great part of it, and break into many great houses, overthrew divers ancient Monuments; It overthrew also the Granaries belonging to the Church, and carried away many thousand measures of Wheat: Presently after which inundation of Tiber, there came down the River an innumerable company of Serpents, with one monstrous great one, as big as a Beam, which when they had swum into the Sea, were there choaked, and their carkasses being all cast upon the shore, there rotted, which caused such an Infection of the Ayr, that presently a great Plague followed in Rome, so that many thousands dyed of it: Yea, Arrows were visibly seen to be shot from Heaven, and whosoever was stricken with them, presently dyed, amongst whom Pelagius Bishop of Rome was one: and this judgement so raged in the City, that many houses were emptyed of their Inhabitants.

His return to Rome.

Gods judgments on Rome.

After the death of Pelagius, the Clergy, Senate, and People of Rome made choice of Gregory to be their Bishop, though he opposed it all that possibly he could; crying out, that he was altogether unworthy of such an honour, fearing lest the splendor of worldly glory, which he had formerly layd aside, should in such an Office creep upon, and infect him. But the importunity of the People being so great, he seemed to consent to them: but privately under-hand wrote to the Emperour Mauritius, earnestly requesting him that he would not consent to the Election, but that by his Authority he would free him from it: But Germanus the Præfect of the City meeting with the meſſenger, took his Letters from him, and reading them, detained them, ſending word to the Emperour of the unanimous conſent of all in the Election of Gregory: Whereupon the Emperour, returning thanks to God, for that they had made ſo good a choice, confirmed the Election, ſo that Gregory could no longer evade it.

He is confirmed by the Emperour.

In the mean time, the Peſtilence raging exceedingly, Gregory called the people together, and ſhewed them the Juſtice of God in his Judgements, who uſed not to puniſh till by ſin he is provoked thereunto: telling them that they might read the greatneſs of their ſins in the greatneſs of the Plague, and thereupon exhorted them to repentance by the Precepts of God, and by the example of Nineveh, appointing them to lay all their worldly buſineſſes aſide, and to meet together the next day to ſpend it in Faſting and Prayer; which accordingly they did: yet whilſt they were together Gods hand was out againſt them, ſo that fourſcore of them fell down dead in the place: But Gregory being not diſcouraged hereby, continued his Sermon, telling them that God would at length be found of them, if they would forſake their wicked ways, and turn unto him with all their hearts, and with all their ſouls: and accordingly not long after the Peſtilence ceaſed.

He appoints a faſt to remove the judgements.

Gregory obſerving that many cuſtoms were lately crept into the Church which were not warranted by the holy Apoſtles, he firſt extirpated them out of the Church of Rome, & then calling a Council of many Biſhops, he endeavoured to root them out of the whole Church. Then, removing from about him all ſecular perſons, he choſe Presbyters and other Learned men in their ſtead, whereby Learning was much advanced in his days. He was very charitable, and much given to hoſpitality, inſomuch as when very many Inhabitants from divers parts (flying from the barbarous cruelty of the Longobards) came to him, he entertained and relieved them, inviting dayly to his houſe many of thoſe Exiles. He made alſo large diſtributions unto others, giving them Corn, Wine, Fleſh, Fiſh, Cheeſe, and many other refreſhings in their ſeveral ſeaſons. Many times alſo he ſent large relief to the ſick, lame, and impotent perſons, not only in Rome, but in many other Towns and Villages round about, inſomuch as all that he had, ſeemed to be the common Granary of the Church.

He reforms the Church.

His charity.

In the fourth year of his Biſhoprick, having in ſome good meaſure ſetled the affairs of the Church, he now began to think how he might advance the Converſion of the Engliſh, which he had formerly been ſo ſollicitous for, and which had never ſince been forgotten by him; For which end he ſent Auſtin and ſome other Miniſters from about him, to Preach the Goſpel unto them: But they had not gone many days journey before they began to be weary of undertaking ſo difficult and dangerous a task, as to go to Preach to a fierce, barbarous, and unbelieving Nation, whoſe Language they did not underſtand, whereupon they ſtopped, and ſent Auſtin back to Gregory, deſiring that they might have leave to return, that they might be freed from ſo laborious, difficult and dangerous a work.

He ſends Auſtin and ſome others into England.

Gregory having received this meſſage, wrote thus back to them again: Beloved Brethren, ſeeing it had been better that you had never begun a good work, then that you ſhould recede from it, it behoves you, through the aſſiſtance of Almighty God, to go forwards with it: Neither let the labour of the journey, nor the tongues of wicked men deter you from it: I have ſent back Auſtin whom I would have you to obey, knowing that he will counſel you nothing but what ſhall be for the good of your ſouls. Almighty God give you his grace, and grant that I may ſee of the fruit of your labors, though I cannot join with you therein. With this Exhortation Auſtin did ſo encourage his Companions, that paſſing through France, where they found kinde entertainment by the good Biſhops in every place, they at laſt arrived in Britain, and came to Ethelburg, the King of Kent, where, through Gods mercy, they did not only obtain leave to Preach, but had habitations and maintenance allowed them in Canterbury his chief City. Whoſoever deſires to ſee the ſucceſs of this buſineſs, may read it in my Engliſh Martyrologie, Pag. 11. &c.

and 10 days. He lived under the Emperour Mauritius, and dyed in the second year of Phocas. Johannes Trithemius gives him this testimony; Gregorius, Vir in Divinis Scripturis eruditissimus, & in secularibus literis utique, doctissimus: Theologorum Princeps: splendor Philosophorum, & Rhetorum lumen; vita & conversatione integer, atque, sanctissimus. His character.

He was of an acute wit, whereby he overthrew Eutiches, Pelagius, (who dyed in his time of the Plague at Rome) and divers other Hereticks. He severely reproved the Bishop of Constantinople, who would have been called Universal, which he calls, Nomen istud blaspemiæ, That Name of blasphemy.

He used to say, He is poor whose soul is void of grace, not whose coffers are emptie of money: Contented poverty is true riches: And again, God is never absent, though the wicked have him not in their thoughts: where he is not by favour, he is by punishment and terrour. He could never read those words, Son, remember in thy life time thou receivedst good things, without horror and astonishment, least having such dignities and honors as he had, he should be excluded from his portion in Heaven. It is said of him, that he was the worst Romane Bishop of all those that were before him: and the best of all those that followed him. His sayings. Spiritual poverty.

He wrote Expositions upon the greatest part of the Bible. His Works are contained in 6 Tomes. His works.

The Life of Isidore, who dyed Anno Christi 676.

ISidorus Hispalensis, by birth a Spaniard, was carefully educated by his Parents, of a quick wit, and able memory, admired for his Learning and Eloquence: He was chosen Bishop of Sivil under Mauritius the Emperour, wherein he was very painful, and could accommodate his speech fitly both to the ignorant and learned: He was full of mercy and good fruits. He was had in great honor, his fame spreading abroad far and wide, both for his Life and Learning: He so macerated his body with Labors, and enriched his Soul with Divine Learning and Contemplations, that he seemed to live an Angels life upon Earth. He dyed in the Reign of Heraclius the Emperour, about the year 675. His birth & education. His death.

He used to say, Knowledge and a good life are both profitable: yet if both cannot be obtained, a good life is to be sought rather then much knowledge. And, As the Viper is killed by the young ones in her belly, so are we betrayed and killed by our own thoughts, nourished in our bosomes, which consume and poison the soul. And, All things may be shunned, but a mans own heart: a man cannot run from himself: a guiltie conscience will not forsake him whereseoever he goes: And, The Devils have a threefold prescience: 1. By natural subtiltie. 2. By experience. 3. By supernatural revelation. And, He that begins to grow better, let him beware lest he grow proud: lest vain-glory give him a greater overthrow than his former vices. His sayings. Holiness. Sinful thoughts. Guilty conscience. Danger of Pride.

BEDE

The Life of Bede, who dyed Anno Chriſti. 735.

His birth & education.

VEnerable Bede, an Engliſh Saxon, was born Anno Chriſti 671 near to the Monaſtery of S. Peter and S. Paul in Wyrimunda. His Parents dying when he was but ſeven years old, he was bred up in that Monaſterie, under two Abbots, Bennet and Ceolfride, men famous in thoſe times for Religion and Learning; under whom he was trained up, and from his child-hood accuſtomed to Virtue and Piety. He proved very learned in Philoſophie, Aſtronomie, Muſick, and Poetrie; In Greek, Rethorick, Arithmetick, and Hiſtorie: But eſpecially he was very ſtudious of the Holy Scriptures.

He is made Deacon. And Presbyter.

Three things were familiar to him in his whole life; To Pray, Write, and Preach. He was made Deacon at nineteen years old, and a Presbyter at thirty: after which time he wholly devoted himſelf to the meditation of the Holy Scriptures. He was ſo famous for Learning and Piety, that he was ſent for to Rome by Pope Sergius, to help to ſettle the Churches peace: He was very modeſt, never hunting after preferments, ſo devout in reading the Scriptures, that he would often ſhed tears, and after he ended reading, conclude with Prayers.

His humility.

Scriptures read with devotion.

Pleaſures to be avoided.

His death.

He hated idleneſs, and would oft ſay, That there was ſo much work to do for a Divine in ſo little time, that he ought not to loſe any of it. And for pleaſures we muſt deal with them (ſaid he) as we do with honey, only touch it with the tip of the finger, not with the whole hand, for fear of ſurfeit. He finiſhed his works Anno Chriſti 731. and dyed about 735. and of his Age 70.

His ſayings

Anger.

He uſed to ſay, He is a ſluggard that would reign with God, and not labor for God: In the promiſed reward he takes delight: but the commanded combats do affright him. And, Anger doth languiſh by ſuppreſſing, but flames higher by expreſſing.

His character.

He wrote of all the Liberal Arts ſundry excellent Treatiſes. Though he lived in the uttermoſt corner of the World, yet neglected he not the ſtudy of the Greek and Hebrew Tongues: He had many excellent Scholars, whom by his counſel and example he drew to an ineſtimable love of the holy Scriptures, endeavouring to make them as famous for their Religion and Piety as they were for their Learning. He was of a very bountiful Diſpoſition, Venerable for his Knowledge and Integrity of Life; Full of Charity, Devotion, and Chaſtity.

He

He was of a comly Stature, of a grave Pace, clear Voice, Eloquent Tongue, amiable Countenance, which seemed to be composed of gravity and mildness. He was very affable to such as were good: A terror to such as were proud and wicked: yet milde and humble to his Fraternity. What he learned out of Gods Word by study and meditation, he communicated it to others without envy: He had Scholars that flockt to him out of all parts of England, desiring to be trained up in Learning and Manners under such a Master: For his Conversation was a rule of Religion, and honesty to all about him.

Anno Christi 731. and of his Age 59. he finished the Catalogue of his Writings which are many, and that upon most Books in the Old and New Testament, besides Epistles, Histories of the Saints, the History of his own Abbey, the Ecclesiastical History of his own Nation in five Books, a Martyrologie, a Book of Hymns, and many others, which are all printed at Collen, Anno Christi 1612. His works.

In his sickness he comforted himself with that of the Apostle, Heb. 12. 6. Whom the Lord loveth he chastneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. When his Scholars were weeping about him, he said in the words of S. Ambrose, Non sic vixi ut pudeat me inter vos vivere, sed nec mori timeo, quia bonum Dominum habemus. The time is come if my Creator pleaseth, that being freed from the flesh, I shall go to him, who made me when I was not, out of nothing: I have lived long, and the time of my dissolution is approaching: And my soul desireth to see my Saviour Christ in his glory. After his death one of his scholars was very desirous to have made an Epitaph: Hæc sunt in fossa Bedæ sancti, or Presbyteri, ossa, yet he could not make up the verse with those words: But in the morning this was found on his Tomb: Hæc sunt in fossa Bedæ venerabilis ossa.

The Life of John Damascen, who flourished Anno Christi 730.

John Damascen was born in Damascus, of Religious Parents, who carefully brought him up in Learning, wherein he profited exceedingly, so that he attained to the knowledg of all the Liberal Sciences. After which, going to Jerusalem, he studied the Scripture and Divinity, where he was made a Presbyter, Preached diligently, and much propagated the Faith by his Sermons and Writings: A great opposer of Hereticks he was: He flourished under Leo, and dyed in peace. His birth & education. His death.

He was a very Eloquent man, and second to none of that Age in Learning: He wrote three Books of Parallels of the Sacred Scriptures, four Books of the Orthodox Faith, besides many other Works which are printed at Paris, Anno Christi 1619. His works.

The Life of Theophylact, who flourished Anno Christi 880.

Theophylact born in Constantinople, and afterwards Arch-bishop of the same, was much imployed in visiting and reforming the Churches in Bulgarie, and when he had proved himself a painful laborer in the dangerous persecutions there, he yielded up his spirit to his Maker. His birth & imployments. His death.

He used to say, Be not troubled if this man lives in tranquillity, and thou in tribulation, God will have it so: He puts thee into the combat, thou must therefore sweat hard before thou comest off with the victory: whereas he that comes forward in the World, goes back in Grace: his estate is miserable that goes laughing to destruction, as a Fool to the stocks for correction. His sayings. Submission to Gods will. His Contentation.

He

His works. He wrote in Greek Commentaries upon the four Evangeliſts which are tranſlated into Latine by Charles Morell, and printed at Paris, Anno Chriſti 1631.

The Life of Anſelm, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 1080.

His birth & education. Anſelm, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, was born at Aoſta, or Auguſta Prætoriana, at the foot of the Alps in Italy, and therefore, as an Italian, he always favoured the cauſe of the Romane Biſhop. He was carefully brought up in Learning by his Mother Ermerburga, till he was fourteen years old; when ſhe dying, he gave himſelf a while to vain pleaſures, and his Father being ſevere to him, he reſolved to travel, in which he met with wants, ſpent three years in Burgundie and France, and then became Scholar to Lanfrancus Abbot of Beck, where being held hard to his ſtudy, he entred into a Monaſterie, and by his ſtrict carriage there, his fame ſpread abroad, and the old Abbot dying, he ſucceeded him, and after the death of Lanfrank, he was choſen Arch-biſhop of Canterbury: He received ſuch honours and encouragements from Pope Urbane, as never Biſhop received greater from a Pope. For at the Council of Barum in Apulia, the Pope placed him at his right foot above all others, which was ever ſince the place of the Arch-biſhops of Canterbury in all General Councils: Much contention was between William Rufus King of England and him, which cauſed him to leave the Kingdom till Henry the Firſt his time, when he was reinveſted again, but lived not long after his return into England before he dyed, which was Anno Chriſti 1109. and in the 9 year of the Reign of King Henry the Firſt, and of his Age 76. He was indeed the Popes Factor in England for denyal of Inveſtures to the King, and Marriages to the Miniſters: but otherwiſe he was found in the main points of our Religion; and taught many things contrary to the corrupt Tenents of the Church of Rome.

The Life of Nicephorus, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 1110.

His learning Nicephorus, a man of profound Judgment and Learning, both in Humanity and Divinity, flouriſhed under Andronicus ſenior the Emperour, Anno Chriſti 1110. He was a great light, when the World was in great darkneſs, and both by his Life and Doctrine illuminated many. He wrote his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory in eighteen Books in Greek, and Dedicated them to the Emperour Andronicus, and not long after exchanged this Life for Eternal glory.

His ſayings. The

BERNARD

The Life of Bernard, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1153.

Bernard was born in Burgundie in the Town of Fontane: His Fathers name was Tecelinus, of an ancient Family, and a brave Souldier: But that which moſt commended him was that he feared God, and loved Juſtice, and following the counſel of John the Baptiſt, he did wrong to no man, and was content with his wages. His Mothers name was Aleth, of the Caſtle called Mont-Barr, a woman eminent for Piety, Chaſtity, and Charity, bringing up her children in the fear of God: She had ſeven children, ſix ſons, and one daughter, all which ſhe nurſed with her own breaſts. His birth & parentage.

Bernard was her third ſon, whom from his Infancy (with Hannah) ſhe devoted to the Service of God, and therefore brought him not up tenderly and delicately, but inured him to courſe fare, and hardſhip; and as ſoon as he was of capacity, inſtilled into him the knowledge of the Sacred Scriptures, and inſtructed him in the Principles of Religion: and finding him to be of an acute wit, ready apprehenſion, firm memory, comely feature, of courteous and meek deportment, and much addicted to Learning, ſhe ſet him to School betimes to Caſtillion, under the care and tuition of able Schoolmaſters: and the boy being piouſly addicted, ſtudious, and of a quick apprehenſion, eaſily anſwered his Mothers deſire and expectation, profiting in Learning above his age, and out-ſtripping all his ſchool-fellows, and ſhewed withall a great contempt of all Earthly things; and indeed he was very ſimple in all worldly affairs. His educati-on.

He ſhunned company, and affected retiredneſs; was much in meditation: obedient to his Parents: grateful and curteous to all: He was exceeding ſhamefac't and modeſt; loved not to ſpeak much: Towards God very devout, that he might keep himſelf pure in his childhood: And amongſt other Learning, he was frequent in reading the holy Scriptures, that from thence he might learn to know and ſerve God: So that it cannot be imagined how much he profited in a ſhort time. His modeſty.

Whilſt he was yet a Boy, he was much troubled with a pain in his head, and lying upon his bed, and there was brought to him a woman who had undertaken to cure him with certain verſes and charms: But as ſoon as he heard her begin to utter her verſes, where- He refuſes cure by a charm.

His zeal.

wherewith ſhe uſed to deceive the ſimple, he cryed out with great indignation to have her taken away from him, ſaying, That he had rather endure the hand of God, than to be cured by the power of the Devil: And God had reſpect to the zeal of the Boy; for preſently after he was freed from his pain. What money was given him whilſt he was thus young, he privately gave it away to the Poor.

His charity.

When he was grown to be a young man, his Mother, having ſeen him to exceed her expectation, falling ſick, quietly reſigned up her ſpirit unto God: And Bernard began now to grow famous for his ſtrict courſe of life, Elegancy of feature, ſweet manners, ſharp wit, and Eloquent tongue; ſo that many opportunities were put into his hand whereby he might have attained to great dignity in the World: Hereupon the Devil, who watcheth all opportunities to do miſchief, laid his ſnares for him, ſeeking to draw him to uncleanneſs, and preſenting an object, whilſt Bernard for a time fixed his eyes too firmly upon her, he began to feel the burnings of his youthly luſts to ſtir in him: But quickly coming to himſelf, he bluſhed for ſhame, and purpoſing revenge, he preſently ran into a Pool (the weather being cold) up to the neck, where he continued till he was almoſt ſtarved, thereby quenching that inward flame which before ſcorched him: and withall, ſtudying how to avoid ſuch ſnares and temptations for the time to come, he reſolved to enter into a Monaſtery of the Ciſtercians, which was the ſtricteſt Order of Friers, perſwading himſelf that there he might live retired from the World, and enjoy the freer Communion with God: But this purpoſe of his, coming to the Ears of his Brethren and Friends, they laboured by all means to diſſwade him, exhorting rather to continue in his ſtudies of Humane Learning, which might bring him to preferment in the World.

He is tempted to uncleanneſs. How he cures it.

This tentation had almoſt prevailed with him, till the remembrance of his Mothers purpoſe and care to ſet him apart for the ſervice of God came into his minde: and then, retiring into a private place, he poured out his Prayers well watered with tears unto God, ſeeking unto him for direction and counſel, and from that day forward he was confirmed in his reſolution, and could by no means be removed from the ſame: Yea, his zeal was ſuch, that he reſted not till he had perſwaded four of his Brethren to leave the world, and all their worldly preferments, and to join with him in the ſame courſe of life: And when they had taken their leave of their Father, and were going towards the Monaſtery, they ſaw their youngeſt Brother [Nivard] a Boy, playing amongſt Boys, to whom Guido the elder Brother ſaid, Farewel Brother Nivard, behold we leave to you all our Earthly poſſeſſions: But he preſently anſwered, You will take Heaven, and leave me the Earth, this is no equal diviſion: And ſo going home to his Father, after a while he reſolved to leave all, and to enter into the ſame courſe of life with his Brethren, which he did accordingly.

He enters into a Monaſtery with his brethren.

Heaven better than the Earth.

Theſe Brethren being thus entred into the Monaſtery, lived under the government of one Steven, who was their Abbot, which was Anno Chriſti 1113. and in the 22 year of Bernards age. When Bernard entred into this courſe of life, he intended wholly to ſequeſter himſelf from the World; but God intended otherwiſe, who had prepared him to be a Veſſel of honour for his own glory: This Bernard knew not, and therefore lived privately in his Cell; ſpending his time in Study, Meditation, and Prayer, often ſaying to himſelf, Bernard, Bernard, Remember for what end thou cameſt hither?

His diligence.

He allowed himſelf very little time for ſleep, often complaining that all that time was loſt; and indeed in ſo ſparing a dyet as he uſed, there was need of the leſs ſleep: for he never indulged himſelf in either, neither eating nor ſleeping to faciety. Yea, by his rigid abſtinence he ſo weakned his ſtomach, that he was ſcarce able to retain food when he had eaten it, and that little which he did retain, ſerved rather to retard death, then to prolong his life: yet all this while he remitted nothing of his ſtudies and labors: Inſomuch as he equalled the other Monks in digging of the ground, felling of wood, and carrying it home upon his ſhoulders: and when his ſtrength failed, he buſied himſelf about meaner ſervices: and whenſoever he had any intermiſſion, he ſpent his time in Prayer, and reading the Sacred Scriptures, which afterwards in the midſt of his bodily labors he meditated over again.

His great labors.

He

He read alſo the beſt Expoſitors, yet took far more delight in the Fountain, then in theſe ſtreams, whereby he became very mighty in the Scriptures, which ſtood him in great uſe, when afterwards he became a Preacher. Shortly after Steven ſent forth ſome of theſe Brethren to build the Monaſtery of Claræval, appointing Bernard to be their Abbot. The place was in the Territory of the Lingones, not far from the River Alba, where they lived in penury, hunger, thirſt, cold, watchings, and prayer, and Bernard, underſtanding that the Miniſtry of the Word was much wanting in that Country, burning with a zeal to ſave ſouls, reſolved to ſet upon that work, and ſeeking one by whom he might be ordained Miniſter, he pitched upon the Biſhop of Catalonia, to whom when he came, and had converſed a while with him, there grew a very ſtrict bond of friendſhip betwixt them.

His love to the Scriptures.

Is made Abbot of Claræval.

His zeal.

He is ordained a Presbyter.

After his Ordination he was very frequent and fervent in Preaching the Word of God whereſoever he came, whereby he grew very famous. Yet Otho Biſhop of Friſing, who was his contemporary, blameth him for three things: 1. For his jealouſie, which carryed him away with wrong conceits. 2. For credulity, or lightneſs of belief, giving Ear to tale bearers and lyars with too much facility, which made him ſo earneſt againſt the Goſpellers, who were better men then himſelf. 3. For prejudice, eſpecially againſt Learned men, who by the help of Art ſoared aloft like Eagles beyond the pitch of his capacity. For, though himſelf had an excellent natural wit, yet he was little ſtudied in the Arts and Sciences, and whoſoever went not in the rode-way of Learning, ſubmitting his reaſon to the Dictates and Phraſes of the Roman Church, him would Bernard ſuſpect for an Heretick.

What was blame-worthy in him.

Anno Chriſti 1153. he fell ſick, and wrote this Letter to Arnold Abbot of Boneval, who deſired to know how he did in his ſickneſs. We received your love in love (ſaith he) and not in pleaſure: For what pleaſure can there be where pain and bitterneſs challengeth all unto it ſelf? Only its a little delightful to me to eat nothing. Sleep hath departed from me, that ſorrow and pain may never depart from me, by the benefit of my ſenſes lulled aſleep. The want of a ſtomach is almoſt all that I ſuffer; only it requireth often both day and night to be comforted with a very little liquor whatſoever it be: But if at any time I admit of a little more, its moſt grievous to me: my feet and thighes be ſwoln as theirs who are troubled with a Dropſie. And in all theſe things (that I may conceal nothing from my friend who deſires to know the ſtate of his friend) the Spirit is willing, but the Fleſh is weak. Pray unto my Saviour who deſireth not the death of a ſinner, not that he will defer, but that he will guard my departure by his bleſſed Angels. Take ye care that my heel, which is naked of merits, be ſtrengthened and defended by your Prayers: that he which lyeth in wait may not find where to faſten his tooth, and inflict a wound. Farewel.

His ſickneſs

His Letter to the Abbot of Boneval.

A little before his death all the Monks came and asked him, whether he did not take pity on them, and their Monaſtery? To which he anſwered, that he was in a great ſtraight, not knowing which to chooſe, Life, or Death: but left all to the Will of God: For (ſaith he) my Fatherly love moves me to pity you my children, ſo as to deſire to remain here: but on the other ſide my deſire to be with Chriſt, draws me to long to depart hence. His humility was ſuch that he called himſelf an unprofitable ſervant: a dry tree, from whom no good had come either to himſelf or others. He dyed Aug. 20. Anno Chriſti 1153. and in the 63 year of his age.

His death.

He accompanyed the Biſhop of Hoſtia [the Popes Legat] to Tholouſe, purpoſely to root out thoſe whom he called Hereticks, but indeed were the true ſervants of Chriſt: and being too facile and miſinformed himſelf, he miſreported their Opinions and Doctrines, ſhewing himſelf the Grand Factor for two Popes, viz. Innocent the ſecond, and Eugenius the third. One Adam, a Canon Regular, made this Epitath on him;

His blinde zeal.

Claræ ſunt valles, ſed claris vallibus Abbas
Clarior, his clarum nomen in orbe dedit.
Clarus avis, clarus meritis, & clarus honore,
Claruit ingenio, at Religione magis.
Mors eſt clara, cinis clarus, clarumq; ſepulchrum, Clarior exultat ſpiritus ante Deum.

His opinions differing from the Church of Rome.

He had many opinions differing from the Church of Rome: As that there were but two Sacraments: Denyed Transubstantiation: That the wicked receive not Christs Flesh. That we are justified by the imputation of Christs Righteousnes. That mans Righteousnes justifieth not before God. That we might be assured of our Salvation. Denyed works of Supererogation, Free-will. Would not have Traditions obstinately defended. Nor superstitiously observed. Complained that Popes and Bishops were the greatest Persecutors of Christ, &c.

His sayings.

He used to say, Ambition is a gilded misery, a secret poyson, a hidden plague, the engineer of deceit, the mother of hypocrisie, the parent of envy, the original of vices, the moth of holines, the blinder of hearts, turning medicines into maladies, and remedies into diseases. Ever when he came to the Church-door, he used to say thus to himself, Stay here all my worldly thoughts, and all vanity, that I may entertain heavenly meditations.

How to hear.

The Life of Peter Lombard, who flourished Anno Christi 1196.

His birth.

His works.

Peter Lombard was born at Navaria, and was afterwards made Bishop of Paris, was contemporary with Gratian; and as Gratian gathered Canons, and was Master of the Canons, so this Peter collected sentences out of Ambrose, Hilaria, Augustine, Cassiodore, and Remigius, and out of them, with some addition of his own, compiled his Books. He wrote Commentaries on the Psalmes, and Pauls Epistles: He was called The Master of the Sentences: in respect of them, all the famous School-Men that followed him, are called but Schollars; and when they are named together, they are thus cited, The Master and his Shollars. He dyed the thirteenth of the Kalends of August, Anno Christi 1164. He lyeth entombed at Paris, in the Church of St. Marcellus, with this Epitaph:

Here lyeth Peter Lombard, BB. of Paris, who Composed the Books of Sentences, and the Glosses of the Psalms, and Epistles.

His chiefest Works were his four Books of Sentences: whereof,

The First Book contains the Sentences of the Fathers, Concerning the Trinity, and Unity of God.

The Second Book conteins the Sentences of the Fathers, Concerning the Creation of the World, especially of the Creation of Angels and Men; And Concerning the Grace of God.

The third is concerning the Incarnation of the Word, and of Vertues, and Vices.

The fourth is concerning the Sacraments, and the Last Things.

By which Book appears that the Popery of those times, & this of our Dayes, is much different; and that many things which in his time passed for Sound Divinity, is now Cryed out against as Calvinisme and Heresie, and will not be endured, either in their Schooles or Pulpits.

His sayings.

Sin inherent.

Some of his sayings were, There can no good dwell in us that cannot will good: nor can we perfect good that cannot desire good. There are in us evil concupiscences and desires, which are the Divels Weapons, whereby, When God forsakes us, he over-throws us, and gives our souls a deadly wound. God condemns none before he sins, nor crowns any before he over-comes. Let none glory in the gifts of Preachers, in that they edifie more by them: for they are not Authors of Grace, but Ministers. The instruction of words is not so powerful, as the exhortation of Works: for if they that teach well, neglect to do well, they shall hardly profit their Audience.

The Life of Alexander Hales, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1270.

Lexander of Hales was born at Hales in Glouceſterſhire, carefully educated; of an excellent wit; and very induſtrious. He travelled into other Countries: Read a long time in Paris: He made there the Sum of Divinity, divided into four parts: A great School-Divine, and was called Doctor irrefragabilis. He was maſter to Bonaventure, and Thomas Aquinas: He writ a moſt copious and notable ſum of Theology, by the command of Pope Innocent the fourth. He wrote Marginal Notes upon the Old and New Teſtament, and Commented on moſt of the Bible. His life was full of charity and labour. He dyed Anno Chriſti 1245. His birth and education.

His ſayings were, A ſoul patient when wrongs are offered, is like a man with a ſword in one hand, and a ſalve in the other; could wound, but will heal. His ſayings. Patience.

What the Eye is to the Body, Faith is to the Soul, it's good for direction if it be kept well; and as Flies hurt the Eye, ſo little ſins and ill thoughts the Soul. Faith.

Covetouſneſs deſerves the hate of all, for ſix reaſons: 1. It's a ſin againſt Nature, making the Soul Terrene, which ſhould be Celeſtial. 2. For the many curſes againſt it in the word, Wo to them that join houſe to houſe, &c. 3. For the many evils it ſubjects us to: It's the root of all evil. 4. It makes a man a Foole: O Foole, this night, &c. 5. It cauſes ſtrifes: From whence are ſtrifes, &c. 6. It brings men into ſnares which Drown in perdition. Coveteouſneſs.

Every lye is odious, but that moſt, which is againſt points of Faith: as to ſay, Chriſt was not born of the Virgin, &c. Faith muſt be defended, not oppoſed. Lyes.

An Humble man is like a good tree; the more full of fruits the branches are, the lower they bend themſelves. Humility.

The Life of Bonaventure, who dyed Anno Chriſti. 1274.

Onaventure, was born in Etruria in Italie, of Noble and devout Parents; He was of a winning countenance, very ſtudious, and a great follower of Alexander Hales. He engravened in his ſtudy that ſaying of our Lord, Learn of me, for I am meek, &c. and to keep his mind from ſwelling, he would ſweep rooms, waſh veſſels, make beds, &c. He was very cheerful in miniſtring to the Poor: and when he met with any perſons that were troubled in mind, he would not leave them till they found comfort. His birth. His humility. His charity.

He was much in Meditation and Prayer: In Preaching he ſought to inflame the hearts of His hearers: His words were not Inflantia, but Inflamantia, not High-ſwelling, but Inflaming. He hated idleneſs: Read over the whole body of the Fathers, and out of them, made that famous piece that he cal's his Pharetra. He wrote two Bibles out with his own hand, and had moſt of them by heart. Preachers pattern. His induſtry.

After three years ſtudy in Paris he was choſen Divinity-Reader there. He was called Doctor Seraphicus, was preſent at the Council of Lions, where having ſpent himſelf in pious actions and painful ſtudies, he dyed Anno Chriſti 1274. And of his Age 53. His employment.

His birth & breeding.

THomas Aquinas was born in Italy, not far from Naples, Anno Chriſti 1223. and was bred in the Monaſterie of Caſſine: He was humble, modeſt, grave, induſtrious, and witty: zealous, and frequent in Prayer.

His ſtudiouſneſs.

His humility.

Preachers pattern.

He afterwards taught the Sciences in Paris, Rome, Bononia, and Naples. He was always either at his Book, Diſputations, or Meditations: Inſomuch that ſupping at Court with Lewis the French King, whilſt others were dicourſing of pleaſant matters, he was ſo deep in his meditation, that forgetting himſelf, he ſtroke the table with his hand, ſaying, Jam contra Manichæos concluſum eſt, That now the Manichees were foiled. He was a great contemner of worldly honors, and wealth: When promotions were offered, his uſual anſwer was, Chryſoſtomi Commentarium in Matthæum mallem, I had rather have Chryſoſtoms Commentary on Matthew. In teaching, he framed his ſpeech to the peoples capacity: In reproofs, he hated the vice, but ſpared the perſon. He dyed as he was going from Naples to a Council at Lyons, being called thither by Pope Gregory the tenth, Anno Chriſti 1274. in the fiftieth year of his Age. He was called Doctor Angelicus.

A good conſcience.

He uſed to ſay. That a day will come when fair dealing ſhall be found a Jewel: when a good Conſcience ſhall be better than a good Purſe; For then the Judge will not be put off with fair words, nor drawn aſide with hope of reward.

Time to be well imployed.

And, Make much of time, eſpecially in that weighty matter of Salvation. O how much would he that now lies frying in Hell rejoyce if he might have but the leaſt moment of time wherein he might get Gods favour.

Death.

And The young man hath death at his back, the old man before his eyes: and that's the more dangerous Enemie that purſues thee, then that which marches up towards thy face:

Repentance

Remember that though God promiſe forgiveneſs to repentant ſinners, yet he doth not promiſe that they ſhall have to morrow to repent in.

His works are many, which are well known.

JOHN WICKLIFF.

The Life of John Wicklief, who dyed Anno Christi 1384.

John Wicklief an Engliſh man born, was famous both for Life & Learning, under King Edward the third, Anno Chriſti 1371. was brought up in Merton Colledge in Oxford, profitted exceedingly in the knowledg of the Arts, & School-Divinity, every one admiring both his carriage, and abilities. He was Divinity-Reader in Oxford, and alſo preferred to a Paſtoral charge there, in which he took great pains, and proteſted that his chief end and purpoſe, was to call back the Church from her Idolatry, eſpecially in the matter of the Sacrament. His birth and education. His preferments in Oxford.

After he had now a long time profeſſed Divinity in Oxford perceiving the true Doctrine of Chriſts Goſpel to be adulterated & defiled with ſo many filthy inventions of Biſhops, Sects of Monks and Errors, with many ſecret ſighes bewailing the general ignorance of the Chriſtian World, he could no longer ſuffer, nor endure the ſame, whereupon he reſolved to do his utmoſt endeavour for the reformation thereof: But withal foreſeeing how dangerous this attempt would be, for that ſuch things as by long uſe and cuſtom had been rooted in mens minds, could not ſuddenly be eradicated and pulled out, he judged it fitteſt to attempt the ſame by little and little. Whereupon he firſt aſſailed his Adverſaries by Logical and Metaphyſical queſtions, and having made way hereby, he at length came to the matter of the Sacraments, and other abuſes of the Church. His zeal. His prudence.

But this Bile could not be touched without great grief and pain to the whole World: For firſt the rabble of Monks and begging Fryars were enraged againſt him, who (as ſo many Hornets) aſſaulted him on every ſide: After them the Prieſts, and laſtly the Archbiſhop Simon Sudbury took him in hand, who deprived him from his Benefice which he had in Oxford: yet being befriended and ſupported by the King, he remained there ſtill till about the year, 1377. His adverſaries. His friends.

But the King growing old and infirm, and his ſon called Edward the Black Prince being now dead, a Parliament was convened, wherein twelve ſage and diſcreet Lords and Peers were choſen to manage the affairs of the State (ſix at one time, and ſix at another) who remained for a certain ſpace in that employment: But they afterwards being removed, the whole Government of the Realm under the King was devolved upon John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter.

ſix

Popiſh lyes and ſlanders.

This John was a great friend to Wicklief: whereupon to diſgrace him, the Biſhop of Wincheſter reported that the ſaid John was not King Edwards ſon; nor of the Queen; who being in travel at Gaunt, had no ſon, but a daughter, which was over-laid by the Mother in Bed: whereupon the Queen fearing the Kings diſpleaſure, cauſed a man-child of a woman of Flanders, born the ſame day with her own, to be ſecretly brought to her, whom ſhe brought up, and is now called Duke of Lancaſter; and this (as the Biſhop affirmed) the Queen told him upon her Death-bed under the ſeal of Confeſſion; yet withall, enjoyning him if the Kingdom were like to fall to him, to reveal it, ſo that a falſe Heir might not be King; which ſlanderous report of the wicked Biſhop, as it favoured of a contumelious lye, ſo many apprehended that it proceeded from his zeal to uphold his Popiſh Religion; becauſe the foreſaid Duke favoured Wicklief, and thereby declared himſelf to be a profeſſed Enemy to their ſuperſtitious practiſes.

John of Gaunt favors Wicklief.

The Biſhop baniſhed.

The Duke being juſtly incenſed againſt the Biſhop for this foul ſlander, ſo perſecuted him in Parliament, that he was condemned, and deprived of all his Temporal goods: He was alſo inhibited from coming within twenty miles of the Court. But ſhortly after the Clergy made great ſuit in the Parliament in his behalf: and when a ſubſidie was asked in the Kings name of the Clergy, the Biſhops complained grievouſly for the lack of their Brother of Wincheſter, and enforced the Archbiſhop to ſend for him from Wincheſter, to appear at the Convocation of the Clergy, which he gladly did, and was joyfully received by the Biſhops; and by means of one Alice Perris a wicked Harlot, which had bewitched the Kings heart, he was reſtored to his Temporalties again.

And reſtored.

In the mean time the Duke of Lancaſter ſent for Wicklief from Oxford, who had now proceeded ſo far as to teach, that in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper the accidents of Bread and Wine remained not without the ſubſtance: proving his Aſſertion by the Authority of Scriptures and the Ancient Fathers, and withall he rejected ſuch as had written upon that Argument ſince Anno 1000. ſaying, that after that time Satan was looſed, and men was led into many Errors. For theſe things the Biſhops hated him exceedingly; yet by the favor of the Duke of Lancaſter, and of Henry Lord Percy, he was preſerved from their rage and fury, till Anno Chriſti 1376. at which time they had prevailed with their Archbiſhop Simon Sudbury (who had before deprived him, and prohibited him to meddle any more in thoſe matters) to ſend forth his Citation to have him brought before them. The Duke having notice hereof, and fearing that he being but one, ſhould be too weak for ſuch a multitude, ſent for four Batchelors of Divinity to joyn with him; and for more ſurety, when the day of his appearance was come, himſelf with the Lord Percy, Marſhal of England, went along with him.

Wicklief hated by the Biſhops.

Cited to appear before them.

Is encouraged by the Duke.

As they went along, they encouraged him not to fear the faces of the Biſhops, who (ſay they) are all unlearned in compariſon of you; neither be you troubled at the concourſe of the people, for we will defend you from them.

Being thus encouraged, Wicklief approached Pauls Church, where multitudes of perſons were aſſembled to hear what ſhould be ſpoken and done, inſomuch as the Lord Marſhal could ſcarce make way in the crowd: whereupon Courtney the Biſhop of London, ſeeing what ſtir he made amongſt the people, ſaid to him, If I had known what maſteries you would have plaid amongſt the people, I would have kept you out of this place: At which ſpeech the Duke being offended, ſaid that he would keep ſuch maſtery there, though he ſaid nay. When they came to the place where the Archbiſhop and Biſhops ſate, Wicklief preſented himſelf before them to know what ſhould be laid to his charge. Then the Lord Percie ſpeaking to him, bade him ſit down, for that having many things to anſwer to, he had need have a ſoft ſeat: whereupon the Biſhop of London, growing into a great ſume, ſaid, he ſhould not ſit there, neither (ſaid he) is it according to Law or Reaſon, that he that is cited to appear before before his Ordinary ſhould ſit down during the time of his Anſwer, but ſhould ſtand. Great contention.

This kindled ſuch a fire betwixt them, the one rating and reviling the other, that the people began all to be on a hurry: Then the Duke, taking the Lord Percies part, gave ſome haſty words to the Biſhop; but neither did the Biſhop ſpare him one jot, returning rebukes for rebukes; ſo that the Duke was aſhamed that the Biſhop ſhould out-rail him, telling him that he would take a courſe to bring down his Pride, and of all the Prelates in England: Hereupon the Londoners cryed out, that they would rather loſe their lives then ſuffer their Biſhop to be abuſed: So that all things being in a confuſion, the Aſſembly was diſſolved for that time: and the Duke with the Lord Percie returning to the Parliament, that day a Bill was put up in the name of the King by the Lord Thomas of Woodſtock, [another of the Kings ſons] and the Lord Percie, that London ſhould be no more governed by a Mayor, but by a Captain, as formerly it had been, and that the Marſhal of England ſhould have all the power in taking the Arreſts in the City, as he had in other Cities. A Bill in Parliament againſt the Londoners.

This Bill one John Philpot, a Burgeſs for London, ſtoutly oppoſed; and the next day the Londoners aſſembled themſelves together in Council to conſider what to do about it: and whilſt they were in conſultation, came in two Lords, the Lord Fitz-Walter, and the Lord Guy Brian, whom the Vulgar ſort, taking to be Spies, were ready to flye upon them, till they were enforced to ſwear that they came for no harm towards them; and that if it proved otherwiſe, they would be content to forfeit all their Goods and Poſſeſſions in the City. Then did the Lord Fitz-Walter tell them of his love to them, and of his care to preſerve their Liberties; which ſaid he, If you do not ſpeedily look to, and prevent, you will looſe the ſame: For at this time the Lord Marſhal hath one of your Citizens in priſon in his houſe, &c. This was no ſooner ſpoken, but the raſh Citizens ran to their houſes, armed themſelves, and going to the Lord Percies houſe, brake open his gates, reſcued the Priſoner, took the Stocks and burned them in the midſt of the City, ſearched and ranſaked the houſe for the Lord himſelf; whom, if they had found, they would certainly have ſlain: and when they found him not, they tore and cut his rich Beds and Hangings in pieces; and then ſuppoſing him to be with the Duke, they ran to the Savoy, where, though they were diſappointed of their cruel purpoſe, yet they took the Dukes Armes, and hung them up in a reproachful manner in they midſt of the City, as if he had been a Traitor: They alſo wounded a Prieſt that ſpake in his defence, that he dyed within a few days after; and meeting one of the Dukes men with his Armes hanging in a Plate on his Breaſt, they pulled him off his Horſe, pulled the Armes from him, and had ſlain the man but that he was ſpeedily reſcued by the Mayor. The Citizens make a tumult. Their rage.

But theſe out-rages created much trouble to the Londoners, which being beſide my purpoſe, I ſhall leave the Reader to ſearch them out in the Chronicles of thoſe times.

Shortly after the old King Edward dyed, and his Grand-ſon Richard the ſecond ſucceeded him: Upon which change, the Biſhops taking notice that the Duke and the Lord Percie had given over their Offices, living privately at their own houſes, without medling with State affairs, they thought it a fit time to revenge themſelves upon John Wicklief; whereupon they cauſed theſe Articles to be gathered and drawn up out of his Sermons againſt him.

1. That the holy Euchariſt after the Conſecration is not the very Body and blood of Chriſt, but figuratively.

2. That the Church of Rome is not the head of all other Churches in the World: nor that Peter had any more power given him by Chriſt then any other of the Apoſtles. Articles againſt Wicklief.

3. That the Pope of Rome hath no more power of the Keys then any other Preſbyter.

4. That the Lords Temporal may lawfully take away the Temporalties of the Churchmen offending habitualiter.

5. That the Goſpel is of it ſelf a ſufficent Rule both of Faith and Manners without any other rule.

6. That

6. That neither the Pope, nor any other Prelate ought to have Priſons of their own, wherein to puniſh offenders, &c.

Condemned at Rome. Perſecuted.

Theſe with ſome others, the Biſhops gathered out of his Sermons and Writings which they ſent to Pope Gregory, who condemned them for Heretical and Erroneous by twenty three Cardinals; And withall ſent his Bull to Oxford, rebuking them ſharply for ſuffering Wickliefs Doctrine ſo long to take root amongſt them, and for not wholly eradicating the ſame; which Bull being exhibited by the Popes meſſenger to the Proctors and Maſters of the Univerſity, they deliberated long amongſt themſelves whether they ſhould receive it with honor, or reject it with contempt. The Pope alſo at the ſame time ſent Letters to the Archbiſhop Sudbury, and Biſhop Courtney of London, commanding them to apprehend and impriſon Wicklief, and to admoniſh the King and Nobles of England, that they ſhould not give any Credit to John Wicklief or his Doctrine in any wiſe. He wrote alſo at the ſame time to the King, deſiring him to aſſiſt the Biſhops in the apprehenſion and impriſonment of John Wicklief.

The Biſhops reſolve to proceed againſt Wicklief.

Theſe Letters ſo encouraged the Biſhops, that they reſolved to proceed againſt him in their Provincial Council, all fear or favour being ſet a part, and that no perſon neither high nor low ſhould hinder them, neither would they be induced to favor him, neither by intreaty, threatnings, nor reward: but that they would proceed roundly with him, though it ſhould be to the hazard of their lives. But it pleaſed God by a ſmall matter to confound and overthrow their devices; notwithſtanding all their proud brags and policies: For the day of Examination being come, there came in a Courtier amongſt them called Lewis Clifford, a man of no great Birth, and commanded them that they ſhould not proceed to any definative ſentence againſt John Wicklief, where-with the Biſhops were ſo amazed and creſt-faln, that they became as mute men, not having one word to anſwer.

A ſpecial providence.

And thus it pleaſed God by his Good providence thus once more to deliver Mr. Wicklief out of their cruel hands: and one that writes this ſtory ſaith further, that whilſt the Biſhops were ſitting in the Chappel at Lambeth upon John Wicklief, not only the Citizens of London, but (ſaith he) the vile abjects of the City were ſo bold as to intreat for him, and to ſtop the Biſhops in their proceedings. And thus was Wicklief diſmiſſed, the Biſhops charging him that he ſhould Preach no more ſuch Doctrine to the offence and hurt of the Lay-people: yet being departed, he ceaſed not to proceed in his godly purpoſe, going up and down bare-footed, and in a Frize Gown, endeavouring by his Miniſtry ſtill to edifie and profit the Church as formerly he had done. And Gods Providence ſo ordered it, that about the ſame time Pope Gregory the 11. dyed: whereupon enſued ſuch a Schiſm in the Church of Rome between two Popes, and others ſucceeding after them, that it continued 39. years, even to the Council of Conſtance.

His zeal and diligence.

Other providences.

About the ſame time alſo, or ſhortly after, there aroſe a cruel commotion of the Commons under Jack Straw, where the rude multitude taking Simon Sudbury Archbiſhop of Canterbury, beheaded him, whom William Courtney Biſhop of London ſucceeded, who was very zealous and diligent againſt the Hereſies of Wicklief, (as he called them).

Wicklief again perſecuted.

Alſo in the year 1380. William Barton, being Vice-chancellour of Oxford, called together eight Monaſtical Doctors, and four others, and having the conſent of others of that Fraternity, he ſet forth an Edict under the Common Seal, threatning all under a grievous penalty, if they ſhould be ſo hardy as to aſſociate themſelves with any of the fautors of Wicklief: And to Wicklief himſelf he threatned the greater Excommunication and Impriſonment, both to him and his favorers, unleſs within three days after Canonical warning they repented and amended.

His weakneſs.

Wicklief underſtanding this, reſolved to forſake the Pope, and all his Clergy, and to appeal to the King: But the Duke of Lancaſter being now inveagled by the Biſhops, interpoſed, forbidding him not to attempt any ſuch thing, but rather to ſubmit to his Ordinary: Wicklief finding himſelf hereby in this great ſtrait, was forced to make a Confeſſion of his Doctrine, and therein to qualifie his Aſſertions after ſuch a ſort that thereby he aſſwaged the rigor of his Enimies.

Anno

Anno 1382. Archbiſhop Courtney appointed a Convocation to be held at London, principally againſt Wicklief, wherein this memorable accident fell out: When they were all gathered together at the Gray-Fryers in London, juſt at the very inſtant when they were beginning their buſineſs againſt Wicklief, there fell out a wonderful and terrible Earthquake through all England, whereupon divers of the Suffragans being frighted with the terror of it, thought good to leave off their further proceeding therein: Yet did the Archbiſhop carry on his deſign, declaring ſome of Wickliefs Doctrines to be Heretical, others Erroneous, and other Irreligious and Seditious, and, not Conſonant to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome: and not content herewith, he ſo prevailed with the young King, that he procured Letters Patents to be directed from the King to himſelf, wherein are theſe words;

He is again perſecuted.

A great Earthquake

Foraſmuch as the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury hath made his ſupplication to us for the coertion, and due caſtigation of all ſuch as ſhall henceforth obſtinately Preach and maintain any of thoſe concluſions which in the late Convocation have been adjudged Heretical, &c. requeſting that we would vouchafe to put to the arm and helping hand of our Kingly power: We therefore moved by the zeal of the Catholick Faith, whereof we are, and will be Defenders, and being unwilling that any ſuch Hereſies ſhould ſpring up within our Dominions: Give, and grant Licenſe and Authority by theſe preſents unto the aforeſaid Archbiſhop and his Suffragans, to arreſt, and impriſon either in their own Priſons, or elſewhere, all and every ſuch perſon and perſons as ſhall either privily, or openly Preach, or maintain the aforeſaid concluſions, &c. Further, charging and commanding all our Leigh-men, Miniſters and Subjects, upon their Fidelity and Allegiance neither to favor, counſel nor help ſuch Preachers or maintainers of the aforeſaid concluſions, upon pain of forfeiting all that they have; but to obey, and humbly to attend upon the Archbiſhop and his Suffragans in the execution of theſe preſents, &c.

The Kings Letters againſt him.

The like Letter the King wrote alſo to the Vice-chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, requiring him to give notice, that none ſhould be ſo bold as to entertain Mr. John Wicklief, or any of his followers into their houſes, or to Communicate with them; which if any did, that he ſhould baniſh them the Univerſity and Town of Oxford, till they ſhould prove their Innocency before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; yea, this young King, preſſed by the violent importunity of the Arch biſhop, wrote another Letter to the Vicechancellor and Proctors of the Univerſity, ſtraightly charging and commanding them to make a general Inquiſition through the whole Univerſity, as well for Wicklief and his followers, as for all others which were ſuſpected to be maintainers, receivers or defenders of thoſe perſons, or their opinions any manner of way, and all ſuch to apprehend and expell the Univerſity, and to ſend them up to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to be further proceeded againſt by him: As alſo to attach and ſeize upon all their Books, and to ſend them to the ſaid Archbiſhop: and this to do as they would avoid the forfeiting of all the Liberties and Priviledges of the Univerſity, &c. John Wicklief was hereupon either baniſhed or retired for a while to ſome ſecret place; but ere long he returned to his Parſonage of Lutterworth in Leceſterſhire, where after all theſe ſtorms, he at laſt dyed in Peace, Anno Chriſti, 1384.

The Kings Letter to Oxford.

Wicklief returns to Lutterworth

His death.

He wrote very many Books, many of which were burned at Oxford, Anno Chriſti 1410. Æneas Sylvius writes that Subincus Arch-biſhop of Prague burnt two hundred Volumes of his, excellently written, richly covered and adorned with Boſſes of Gold: One that had all his works, wrote that they were as big as the works of St. Auguſtine.

His works.

Mr. Wicklief received his firſt knowledge of the Truth from one Fryar Rainard Lollard, who brought the Doctrine of the Waldenſes into England, and from whom his Diſciples were called Lollards. Mr. Wicklief was an Eloquent man, and ſo profound a Scholar, that he drew the hearts of many Noble Perſonages to affect and favor him; whereby he was ſheltred from the rage of the Popiſh Clergy, till Pope Gregory the 11. raiſed up a Perſecution by the Monks Inquiſitors againſt him.

All his Books were commanded to be burnt; but he had before enlightned ſo great a number, who kept his Books carefully, maugre all the diligence of his Adverſaries, that they could never wholly deprive the Church of them. For the more they laboured by horrible threats, and death it self, to hinder the knowledge and reading of them, the more were many kindled in their affections to read them with ardency.

Gods providence in preserving his books.

His works.

He wrote above a hundred Volumes against Antichrist and the Church of Rome, Multos præterea in Philosophia, multos quibus S. Scripturam interpretatus est, edidit: Quorum Catalogum videre est apud Balæum in suis Centuriis. Transtulit etiam Wiclevus in Angelicum sermonem Biblia, adhibitis præfationibus, & argumentis cuiq; libro suis. Vertit & Libros 12. Clementis, Lanthonienſis Eccleſiæ Præsbyteri, De concordia Evangeliſtarum, cum multis veterum Doctorum Tractatibus.

He was a great Enemy to the swarms of begging Fryars, with whom it was harder to make war then with the Pope himself. He denyed the Pope to be the Head of the Church, and pronounced him to be Antichrist: He confuted and condemned his Doctrine about Bulls, Indulgences, Masses, &c. He affirmed the Scripture to be the Supreme Judge of Controversies, condemned Transubstantiation, &c. He was a painful and faithful Preacher under King Edward the third, who always favored and protected him against the rage of his Adversaries: By his means the Pope lost in England his power of Ordaining Bishops, the Tenth of Benefices, and Peter-pence; whereupon Polidore Virgil calls him an Infamous Heretick.

King Edward the Third favoured him.

He was buryed at his Parsonage of Lutterworth in Leicester-shire. His dead body being digged up 51 years after: viz. Anno 1428. by the command of Pope Martin the fifth, and the Council of Sene, was burned: And thus he suffered their cruelty after death, whose cruelty he had Preached against in his life. He wrote above two hundred Volumes, most of which were burned by the Archbishop of Prague.

His body condemned and burned.

This Mr. Wicklief, a couragious witness of the Truth, was first Fellow of Merton College, and afterwards Mr. of Baliol College in Oxford.

In his Book entitled, The Pathway to perfect Knowledge, he sheweth what pains he had taken in Translating the Bible into English. How he had gotten many Old Latine Bibles. For the late Books (saith he) are very corrupt. And he imployed many Learned men to assist him in his fourth Translation of it.

He taught, that the Truth of the Gospel sufficeth to Salvation without observing the Legal Ceremonies. He urged Christian Men and Women, Young and Old to study the Scriptures frequently, especially the New Testament, which (said he) is full of Authority, and gives understanding to the Simple, especially in all Points needfull to Salvation, &c. And though Kings and Lords know no more of the Scriptures, but what is written of Jehosaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah, yet may they learn thence sufficiently to live well; to Govern their People by the Law of God: To eschue all Pride, Idolatry, and other Sins.

But Alass! Alass! Alass! (saith he) whereas King Jehosaphat sent his Princes, Priests, and Levites to teach Gods Law openly in every City; Christian Lords, now adayes, send to all their Leige People, the Popes Pardons (which are open Lyes, granting many Hundred years Pardon after Dooms-day) to be preached generally in their Dominions! and if any be found to speak against the Errors of Antichrist, &c. he shall be imprisoned, and proceeded against as a Traytor to God, and his Prince. And whereas King Hezekiah busied himself in cleansing Gods House, &c. Christian Lords defile the Sanctuary of God by bringing in Symonaical Clerks, that are full of covetousness and Heresie, of Hypocrisy, and malice, seeking to hinder Gods Law from being known, and kept, and freely preached: yea, some of these great Ones keep many Prelates, and Curates in their Courts, and imploy them in Secular Offices, which is against the Lawes both of God, and men, &c.

Whereupon, its much to be feared, that Kings and Lords have sinned with Manasse: God give them to repent with Manasse. Now in England a man may be protected against the Persecution of Prelates, if he will swear needless, false, and unadvised Oaths, as By the Bones, Nails, Sides, and other members of Christ. If he will be Proud, and Lecherous, and not meddle with Gods Law, or reprove Sin, &c. But if a man abstain from needless Oaths and unlawfull; and, out of Charity to mens Souls, ſhall reprove Sin, this is cauſe enough for Prelates, and ſome Lords to ſlander them, and to call them Lollards, Hereticks, raiſers of ſtrife, and Treaſon againſt the King: How much Blood many Lords have ſhed in the Wars, by the inſtigation of Prelates, their Confeſſors, and Preachers, it paſſeth mans witt to ſet down. They alſo ſlay poor Chriſtians by withdrawing their Almes from them, which they give to Stocks, and Stones, and to Rich Clerks, and feigned Religious Perſons: They kneel and pray to dead Images, and yet beat and ſlay Chriſtian men. What honoring of God is this? &c.

But the Schiſme of the Anti-Popes gave ſome reſpite unto Wicklief, and the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury was ſlain in a diſſention between the Nobility and the Commons. But his Succeſſor [William Courtney] was more violent againſt him then the former, and prevailed with the King, to baniſh him. He procured an Act alſo in the Fifth year of this young King [Richard 2d.] for the impriſoning of Hereticks, as he called them.

Mr. Wicklief in the time of his Baniſhment, wrote to Pope Vrbane, a Confeſſion of his Faith, wherein he affirmed, That ſeeing the Biſhop of Rome called himſelf Chriſts Vicar, of all men he was moſt bound to follow the Laws of Chriſt in his Goſpel; ſeeing that the greateſt among Chriſts Diſciples conſiſted not in worldly Honors, but in their exact imitation of the Life of Chriſt and his Doctrine. He alſo therein adviſed the Pope to leave all Temporal Rule to the Secular Powers, as Chriſt did; And he prayed him, and his Cardinals, to imitate the Lord Jeſus, and faithfully to inſtruct his Flock.

But the Pope of Rome was ſo buſily imployed againſt the Pope at Avignion, that neither of them had leaſure to attend ſuch matters, and ſo Wicklief returned from his Baniſhment. And Shortly after he fell ſo ſick that there was little hope of his recovery, whereupon the Fryars ſent four of their Order to wiſh, and urge him, before his Death, to retract, and recant his former Errors. And when they had delivered their Meſſage, he deſired ſome of his Friends to ſet him up in his Bed, and then he ſaid with aloud voice, I ſhall not Die, but Live to declare the moſt wicked Acts of the Friars; And accordingly he recovered of his Diſeaſe, and wrote a Treatiſe againſt their Order, which is mentioned by Doctor James in his Book, called, Wickliefs conformity to the Church of England.

Mr. Wicklief was a Secular Presbyter, a great Enemy to the Idle and Luxurious Monks; but highly honored and eſteemed by our King Edward the Third and his Nobles, for his excellent Learning, Piety and prudence. He was ſent by the King among other Nobles, as Ambaſſadors, to the Duke of Millane, to treat about a Marriage, between Lionel, our Kings Son, and the Duke of Millanes Daughter.

He wrote about fifty Books: Some of them of other Arts, but moſt of them of Divinity. Many of which are extant in the Kings Majeſties Library at St. James's: Others of them in Bodleys Library in Oxford, and others in other Libraries.

Docter James, who printed ſome of Wickliefs works at Oxford, wrote an Apollogy in his behalf, wherein he ſaith, That he was an Orthodox Divine, and that he agreed in moſt of the Articles of Religion, with the preſent Church of England.

He was an Eloquent man, and a profound Scholar, whereby he won the Hearts of many Noble Perſonages, as of John a Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, Henry Lord Percy, The Earl of Salisbury Lord Chancellor of England, and Lewis Gifford, &c. whereby he was much ſheltred from the rage and malice of his Enemies, the Popiſh Clergy.

JOHN HVS

The Life of John Huſs, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1415.

His birth and education.

John Huſs was born at a little Town called Huſſinets, about 18. miles from Prague in Bohemia, under the Hercynian Wood, of mean but religious Parents, who carefully trained him up in Religion and Learning, and having profited much at School, he went to the Univerſity of Prague: And whilſt he was a Student there, he met with our Wickliefs Books, from whence he firſt took light and courage to profeſs the Truth.

He goes to Prague.

Anno Chriſti 1393. he Commenced Batchelor of Arts with good approbation of the whole Univerſity: and An. 1396. he commenced Maſter of Arts, about which time two godly Noble men of Prague built the Church of Bethlehem; and Anno 1400. Mr. Huſs was choſen Paſtor thereof, who fed his people with the bread of Life, and not with the Popes Decrees, and other humane Inventions.

Choſen Paſtor of Bethlehem.

His faithfulneſs therein

The year after he was choſen Dean of the Univerſity, and Anno 1409. by the conſent of the whole Univerſity, he was choſen Rector of it. He continued in the Exerciſe of his Miniſtry with admirable zeal and diligence, and faithfulneſs about the ſpace of 12 years, Preaching and Inſtructing his People in the Principles of Divinity, which he confirmed by the holy Scriptures, and adorned by an exemplary and blameleſs life. He vigorouſly oppoſed the Popes proceedings, whereupon the Devil envying the peace and progreſs of the Goſpel, ſtirred up Pope Alexander the fifth againſt him, who cited him to Rome to anſwer to ſuch Articles as ſhould be laid in againſt him: whereupon Huſs ſent his Procters to Rome, who appeared for him, anſwered the charge, and cleared his innocency; yet did the Pope and his Cardinals condemn him for an Heretick, and Excommunicate him; which cauſed the Popiſh Clergy, and ſome of the Barons of Bohemia to oppoſe Huſs, being thus excommunicated: and King Winceſlaus baniſhed him, but he was entertained in the Country, and protected by the Lord of the Soil at Huſſinets, where he preached in the Pariſh Church, and ſome places adjacent, confuting the Popiſh Doctrine of Merit of Works, and againſt the Pride, Idleneſs, Cruelty and Avarice of the Roman Court and Clergy, multitudes of perſons reſorting to his Miniſtry.

He is cited to Rome.

Is excommunicated.

He is baniſhed.

Gods mercy.

A ſchiſm at Rome.

Sometimes alſo he repaired to his Church of Bethlehem, and preached there. But upon the Popes death, the Cardinals being divided, choſe three Popes, whereupon there was a Council called at Conſtance, Anno Chriſti 1414. Unto which Council the the Emperour Sigiſmund commanded Huſs to come, giving him his ſafe Conduct for his coming, and return.

October, 15. John Huſs began his journey towards Conſtance being accompanied with two Noble Men, John, Lord de Chlum, and Mr. Wencelat de Duba, and their followers: And Mr. Huſs relying upon the goodneſs of his Cauſe, the clearneſs of his Conſcience, and the Emperours ſafe Conduct, with a cheerful mind and undaunted ſpirit went to Conſtance, and in his journey ſet up writings in every City, the tenor whereof was this; Mr. John Huſs Batchelor of Divinity, goeth now to the Council of Conſtance, there to declare his Faith which he hath hitherto holden, and even at this preſent doth hold, and by Gods grace will hold, and defend even to the death: Therefore even as he hath manifeſted through all the Kingdom of Bohemia by his Letters & Intimations, willing before his departure thence to have ſatisfied & given an account of his Faith unto every man which ſhould object or lay any thing againſt him in the general Convocation held in the Archbiſhop of Pragues Court: So alſo he doth manifeſt and ſignifie, that if there be any man in this Noble and Imperial City that can impute any Error or Hereſie to him, that he would prepare himſelf to come unto the Council; foraſmuch as the ſaid Mr. John Huſs is ready to ſatisfie every man at the ſaid Council which ſhall lay any thing to his charge, as touching his Faith.

He is cited to the Council.

His intimations as he went.

In all Cities as he paſſed by, eſpecially when he entred into Germany, a great number of people reſorted to him, and he was every where kindly entertained, eſpecially by the Citizens and Burgeſſes, inſomuch that he confeſſed in a certain Epiſtle, that he found in no place ſo great Enemies as in Bohemia: and when he came to Noremberg, certain Merchants that went before, having given notice of his coming, almoſt all the Prieſts that were in the City came to him, deſiring him that they might talk with him in private, to whom he anſwered, that he deſired rather to declare his minde openly then in hugger mugger; and ſo from dinner time till night he ſpake before the Prieſts, Senators, and many Citizens, inſomuch that they all had him in ſingular eſtimation and reverence. One of his great Adverſaries [Staniſlaus Znoma], a Bohemian, as he was going towards Conſtance to accuſe him, was ſtricken by God with a great Impoſtume whereof he dyed.

His kinde entertainment as he went.

Gods judgment on his adverſary.

When Mr. Huſs came to Conſtance, he was ſent for to appear before ſome Cardinals to give an account of his Doctrine; But he told them that he came to do it before all the Council, yet if they would force him to do it before them, he doubted not but Chriſt would ſtrengthen him to chuſe death for his glories ſake, rather then to deny the Truth, which he had learned out of the holy Scriptures.

His courage

After Examination they committed him to a filthy Priſon, where, by reaſon of the ſtink, he fell ſick and was like to die: In the mean time his Adverſaries preferred Articles againſt him, wherein they had forged many things of their own heads, wreſting, and perverting his godly and Orthodox ſayings to a ſiniſter ſenſe, that they might have whereof to accuſe him: and thereupon deſired of the Council that he might be condemned. Mr. Huſs hearing of theſe their malicious proceedings, moved that he might have an Advocate, but that was denyed him. Whilſt he lay there in Priſon, when he had in ſome meaſure regained his health, he wrote ſundry Books. From that Priſon he was removed by the Biſhop of Conſtance to a Caſtle on the other ſide of the Rhene, where in the day time he was ſo laden with fetters on his Legs that he could ſcarce go: and every night he was faſtned by the hands up to a rack againſt the wall: Hereupon many Noble men of Bohemia petitioned for his releaſe, at leaſt upon Bail, but that was denyed.

Popiſh cruelty.

His writings in priſon.

Popiſh cruelty.

The ſum of the Nobles Petition was this; That whereas Mr. John Huſs is freely of his own accord come to Conſtance under the Emperors ſafe Conduct, againſt all right and reaſon he is grievouſly impriſoned before he is heard, and at this preſent is tormented miſerably with hunger, thirſt, and fetters: though formerly at the Council of Piſa, held Anno Chriſti 1410. the Hereticks which were condemned, were ſuffered to remain at their liberty, and to depart home freely: But Mr. John Huſs, neither convicted, nor condemned, no nor ſo much as once heard, is taken and impriſoned, when as neither King, nor any Prince Elector, nor any Ambaſſadour from any Univerſity is yet come or preſent:

The Nobles of Bohemia petition in his behalf

ſent: And though the Lord our King, together with the Nobles and Lords here preſent have moſt inſtantly required and deſir'd that his ſafe Conduct might not be violated, and that the ſaid Mr. John Huſs might be openly heard, being ready to render a reaſon of his Faith: and if he be convicted, obſtinately to affirm or maintain any thing againſt truth and the holy Scriptures, that he is ready to amend the ſame: yet could he never obtain this: But the ſaid Mr. John Huſs, notwithſtanding all this, is moſt grievouſly oppreſſed with fetters and Irons, and ſo weakned with hunger and thirſt, that it is to be feared that he will die in Priſon. And although the Lords of Bohemia here preſent are greatly ſcandalized with the trouble and torments of Mr. John Huſs, contrary to the Kings ſafe Conduct: yet hitherto they have forborn to complain to the King that he might ſee his ſafe Conduct better obſerved, and the reproach and diſhonor that is done to the Kingdom of Bohemia thereby, vindicated: and indeed they ſuffer theſe things patiently, leſt by any means trouble or vexation ſhould ariſe to this Sacred Council by reaſon thereof: Wherefore we moſt earneſtly deſire and require your Father-hoods, that for the honor of the ſafe Conduct granted by the King, and for the preſervation and encreaſe of the worthy fame and renown of the Kingdom of Bohemia, and your own alſo, you will haſten the diſpatch of Mr. John Huſs his buſineſs, ſeeing he is in great danger by reaſon of his ſtrait Impriſonment if you delay him any longer. And whereas we the Nobles of Bohemia are informed that many ſlanderous reports are raiſed by Back-biters againſt the famous Kingdom of Bohemia, as that the Sacrament is carryed up and down in Veſſels unhallowed, that Coblers do adminiſter it, and hear Confeſſions, &c. We therefore require and deſire you that you will give no heed to ſuch tale-bearers, who herein report untruths: alſo we require that ſuch Back-biters may be made known, and we doubt not eaſily to refell the falſe and frivolous ſlanders of theſe naughty perſons, that hereafter they ſhall be aſhamed to appear before the Lord King and your Reverences.

But notwithſtanding this, they which were appointed for his Judges, in his abſence heard his Enemies, examined witneſſes againſt him: Judged his Doctrine not by the true Touch-ſtone of Gods Word, but by the Popiſh Canons. But when the Council would have condemned him without hearing, the Emperour interpoſed, requiring that he ſhould be firſt heard; But when he was brought before them, they made ſuch a confuſed noiſe, railing upon him, that he could not ſpeak one word. The next day when he was brought before them again, there fell out ſo great an Eclipſe that the Sun was almoſt wholly darkned: when Huſs ſaw that he was like to meet with no Juſtice there, he appealed from them to the Pope, and from him to Chriſt, for which they derided him: But when he ſaw the cruelty of his Judges, the malice of his Accuſers, the falſe-hood of his Witneſſes, and the rage of all the Council againſt him, that breathing forth nothing but fire and fagots, he kneeled down, and commended his righteous cauſe to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, begging forgiveneſs for his very Enemies: yet he earneſtly requeſted, even with tears, the Council that they would convince him of any Error by the Word of God, and he would willingly retract it: But nothing prevailed, for they proceeded to condemn and degrade him; whereupon kneeling down, he ſaid, Lord Jeſus Chriſt, forgive mine Enemies, by whom thou knoweſt that I am falſly accuſed; forgive them I ſay for thy great mercies ſake. In degrading him they pared off the Crown of his head, and the skin, with a pair of ſhears: and to juſtifie their proceedings againſt him, becauſe the Emperour had given him his ſafe Conduct, the council made a Decree, That Faith was not to be kept with Hereticks.

The Councils incivility.

A prodigy.

His appeal to Chriſt.

He is condemned.

His charity.

Popiſh cruelty

A wicked Decree.

The Roman Agents perſecuted him with ſuch eagerneſs, that his Works were condemned to be burned with him. When he was brought forth to be burned, they put on his head a Tripple Crown of paper, painted over with ugly Divels: But when he ſaw it, he ſaid, My Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for my ſake did wear a Crown of Thornes; why ſhould not I then for his ſake wear this light Crown, be it never ſo ignominious? Truly I will do it, and that willingly. When it was ſet upon his head, the Biſhops ſaid,

His works condemned

His ornaments.

His patience.

Now

Now we commit thy Soul unto the Divel: But I, ſaid John Huſs, (lifting up his Eyes towards Heaven) do commit my ſpirit into thy hands O Lord Jeſus Chriſt, unto thee I commend my ſpirit which thou haſt redeemed. As he was going to Execution, they burned his Books before his face, at which he ſmiled, and ſaid unto the people, Think not, good people, that I die for any Hereſie, or Error, but only for the hatred and ill-will of my Adverſaries. When he came to the place of Execution, he kneeled down, and with his Eyes towards Heaven he prayed and repeated certain Pſalms, and with a merry and cheerful countenance cryed often, Into thy hands O Lord I commend my Spirit.

His Books burnt.

His deportment at his death.

As he liſted up his head in Prayer, the Crown of paper fell off; but a Souldier taking it up, ſaid, Let us put it on again, that he may be burned with his Maſters the Divels, whom he hath ſerved. When he roſe from his knees he ſaid, Lord Jeſus Chriſt, aſſiſt and help me, that with a conſtant and patient minde, by thy moſt gracious help, I may bear and ſuffer this cruel and ignominious death, whereunto I am condemned for the Preaching of thy moſt holy Goſpel. And as they tyed his neck with a chain to the ſtake, ſmiling he ſaid, That he would willingly receive the ſame chain for Jeſus Chriſt's ſake, who he knew was bound with a far worſe chain. When the fire was kindled, he began to ſing with a loud voice, Jeſus Chriſt the Son of the living God have mercy upon me; and at the third time that he repeated it, the wind drove the flame ſo into his face, that it choaked him. The heart that was found amongſt his bowels, being well beaten with ſtaves and clubs, was at laſt prick't upon a ſharp ſtake, and roſted at a fire till it was conſumed. His aſhes were diligently gathered up, and thrown into the River Rhene. He ſuffered Martyrdome, Anno Chriſti, 1415.

His prayer.

His martyrdom.

Inhumane cruelty.

He told them at his death, That out of the aſhes of the Gooſe (for ſo Huſs in the Bohemian language ſignifies) an hundred years after God would raiſe up a Swan in Germany, whoſe ſinging would affright all thoſe Vultures: which was exactly fulfilled in Luther, juſt an hundred years after. Upon his death the Bohemians, under Ziska, roſe in Armes, and had admirable ſucceſs againſt the Emperour and the Papiſts. And this pompous act of theirs had a very tragical event, the Bohemians maintaining war againſt the Emperour Sigiſmund for 17. years after, wherein he ſpent abundance of treaſure, loſt many brave Armies, and gallant men: and during theſe Wars a thouſand Monaſteries were overthrown, many Caſtles demoliſhed, and Cities burnt: all which was a juſt revenging hand upon him for his perfidiouſneſs and cruelty.

A propheſie.

Gods judgment on his perſecutors.

Before his going to Conſtance, Mr. Huſs ſet up this Epiſtle upon the Gate of the Kings Palace.

Unto the Kings Majeſty, the Queen, and to all ſuch as are of his Council, and to all other Nobles and Magiſtrates which are now in the Kings Court, I John Huſs do ſignifie and publiſh, that being certainly informed that Letters are come from the Pope to the Kings Majeſty, the contents whereof are theſe: That the King ſhould extirpate all ſuch Hereticks as are lately ſprung up in his Kingdom and Dominions: But I truſt in God, that this fame is blown abroad without any deſert: And it ſhall be our part to foreſee and take heed that neither the Kings Majeſty nor the Noble Kingdom of Bohemia, ſhall ſuffer any trouble or reproach and ſlander for my ſake. Wherefore now of late I have ſent my Letters to and fro, which with great labor and diligence I have cauſed to be ſet up openly, with this intent, that I might thereby cauſe the Archbiſhop of Prague, to be careful and diligent about the matter, ſignifying openly, that if there were any man in all Bohemia, which did know me to be a follower of any falſe or corrupt Doctrine, he ſhould appear in the Archbiſhops Court, and there declare what he thought. And foraſmuch as there would none be found, or come forth which would accuſe me, the Archbiſhop commanded me and my Procters to depart in peace. Wherefore I require and deſire the Kings Majeſty, which is the defender of the Truth, alſo the Queen and their Counſellors, and all other Nobles and Magiſtrates, that they would give me a true Teſtimonial of this matter: Foraſmuch as I have oftentimes willed and attempted this, and no man hath either accuſed or moleſted me. I do it moreover to be known to all Bohemia, and all

His petition to the King.

Nati-

Nations, that I will with the firſt be preſent at the Council of Conſtance, in the preſence of the Pope, and of all others that will come to that famous place: and that whoſoever hath any ſuſpition of me, that I have either taught or defended any thing contrary unto the Faith of Chriſt, let him come thither alſo, and declare before the Pope and all the Doctors of Divinity, what erroneous or falſe Doctrine I have at any time maintained or holden. And if he ſhall convince me of any Error, or prove that I have taught any thing contrary to the Chriſtian Faith, I will not refuſe to ſuffer whatſoever puniſhment ſhall be due to an Heretick: But I hope and truſt even from the bottom of my heart, that God will not give the victory to unfaithful and unbelieving men which willingly kick and ſpurn againſt the Truth.

His requeſt to the Biſhop.

At the ſame time alſo Mr. Huſs ſent his Proctor to the Biſhop of Nazareth, who was Ordained by the Pope, Inquiſitor for Hereſies in the City and Dioceſs of Prague, requiring him that if he had found any Error in him, he would declare it openly: But the ſaid Biſhop, in a publick Aſſembly anſwered, that he had often talken with John Huſs, and that he never found any thing in him, but ſuch as becometh a godly and faithful man, which alſo he atteſted by his Letters in writing. Shortly after alſo all the Barons of Bohemia being aſſembled in the Abby of St. James, the Archbiſhop of Prague being preſent alſo, John Huſs preſented a ſupplication to them, wherein he moſt humbly deſired the Barons to requeſt the Archbiſhop, that if he did ſuſpect him for any Error or Hereſie, he ſhould declare it openly: for that he was ready to ſuffer correction for the ſame at the Archbiſhops hands: and that if he had found no ſuch thing in him, that then he would give him a Teſtimonial thereof, that being armed there-with he might the more freely go unto the Council: Hereupon the Archbiſhop did openly confeſs before all the Aſſembly, that he knew not that the ſaid John Huſs was guilty of any ſuch thing.

In another Author, I find ſome of theſe afore-mentioned Paſſages, More Largely ſet down as Followeth.

John Huſs denied Purgatory, Auricular Confeſſion, the Popes Power, and Indulgences: He diſproved Dirges: He called Prayer for the Dead, a deviſe of Prieſts to get Mony: He ſpake againſt Praying to Saints: Againſt the Images of God, and the Saints: Againſt Confirmation, and extream Unction: Againſt all Holy Dayes, except the Sabbath, &c. He commended John Wicklief, and openly wiſhed, that when he departed this Life, his Soul might be with the Soul of Wicklief, whom he doubted not but to be in Heaven.

Sbinco, Archbiſhop of Prague ſent complaints hereof unto Rome, whereupon Pope Alexander directed his Letters, charging the Biſhop to forbid all Preaching but only in Cathedral-Churches, Pariſh-Churches, or other ſuch conſecrated Places: Requiring alſo that the Articles of Wicklief ſhould not be taught either Privately or Publickly: And that all ſhould be judged Hereticks that attempted the contrary. Againſt this Bull John Huſs Objected many things, urging, that Chriſt uſed to Preach to the People on the Sea, in Fields, Houſes, and ſo did the Apoſtles in any Place: Where-fore (ſaid he) from this Mandate of Alexander, I appeal to the ſaid Alexander being better adviſed. Yet did the Biſhop diſcharge him from Preaching: And he Obeyed, and went out of the City to a Village called Huſs, where he was Born: Yet he ceaſed not from Pteaching, and had many Auditors.

Shortly after he was again complained of to Pope John, who ſent a Legate to try his cauſe in Prague: But Wencheſlaus, and his Queen Sophia maintained John Huſus, and himſelf appealed from the Legate to the Pope: And then fearing envy, more then Suſpecting his Cauſe; he ſent Proctors unto Rome, of whom ſome were Impriſoned, for ſpeaking ſo boldly, and John Huſs was excommunicated as an Heretick.

About

About this time the Wars fell out betwixt Pope Alexander, and Ladiſlaus, King of Naples, whereupon the Pope ſent his Bulls of Indulgence to all ſuch as would aid him in his Wars againſt the King. John Huſs wrote againſt the wickedneſs of theſe Pardons, and the People being informed by him, ſpake alſo againſt them, and called the Pope Anti Chriſt, for Proclaiming Wars, and taking the Croſs againſt Chriſtians.

But ſome that were Rich, and therefore fearful, were inſtant againſt Huſs, and prevailed with the King to baniſh him the Town: And another Party cryed out againſt the Prieſts, and Prelates as the Authors of his Baniſhment, accuſing them of Simony, Adultry, Pride, &c. Not ſparing to lay open their Vices, and eagerly craving a Reformation of the Clergy: The King being moved here-with, required greater exactions of ſuch Clerks, as were accuſed, and known to be Profane, whereby ſome of them fell into great diſtreſs, and the moſt part were glad, either to fall in, or not to fall out with the Purer Sort: By this means John Huſs had liberty to return to his Church at Bethleem: But this cauſed him to be more vehemently accuſed at Rome, and the Pope directed his Bull to the King, to ſuppreſs John Huſs and his Doctrine.

John Huſs being reſolved to appear at Conſtance, he affixed Letters on the Doors of Chathedrals, Pariſh Churches, Abbies, and Cloiſters, ſignifying that he was going to the General Council to give an Account of his Faith: And that if any man ſuſpected his Doctrine, he deſired that they would declare their doubts before the Biſhop of Prague, or, If they pleaſed, before the Council,

Then Anno Chriſti 1414. Auguſt. 30. Did all the Barrons of Bohemia aſſemble at St. James Abby in Prague, the Biſhop being preſent. Then John Huſs preſented a Supplication, craving, that if the Biſhop of Nazareth, who was the Inquiſitor of Hereſie within that Diocеſs, had any ſuſpicion of Error in his Doctrine, that he would declare it, Proteſting that he was willing to ſuffer Correction therein, if he deſerved it: Or, if the Biſhop had no Accuſation againſt him, that they would give him a Teſtimonial, that being Armed there-with, he might go with the more Confidence to Conſtance. The Biſhop Profeſſed openly, that he knew no offence in him, only he adviſed him to Purge himſelf of the Excommunication. This was in form of an Act, and ſent by him to the Emperor.

Alſo about this time the Archbiſhop Conrade, held a Synod with his Prelates, where a Proctor appeared in the Name of John Huſs, requiring, that ſeeing he was ready to give an account of his Faith, they, or any of them who would accuſe him, ſhould give it in Writing under their Names, and, according to the Law of God, and Man, prepare themſelves to ſuffer the like Puniſhmeut, if they could not Prove it Legally againſt him: As he was ready (with God's help) to anſwer before them, or the Enſuing Council: He could get no anſwer to this, and therefore he made Proteſtation of his Profer, and craved an Inſtrument, upon the refuſal, from a Notary there Preſent.

November 3. John Huſs came to Conſtance, and lodged with an honeſt Matron, named Faith. On the Morrow the two Noble Men informed the Pope that they had brought John Huſs, & intreated that he might remain without Moleſtation, according to his Safe Conduct: The Pope anſwered, that though John Huſs had killed his Brother, yet no hurt ſhould be done to him, during his abode there.

November. 29. Two Biſhops, and the Burgy-Maſter were ſent for him, to come before the Pope, and his Cardinals to render an account of his Doctrine, as he had deſired, and they were ready to hear. He anſwered, that He came to do it before all the Council, &c.

He was Firſt queſtioned in general about the Errors that were ſpread of him: He anſwered: Reverend Fathers, underſtand that my mind is to Dye, rather then to be found culpable of any one Error. The Cardinals replyed, Thou ſpeakeſt modeſtly, and ſo left him with the Lord de Chlum under a Guard of Armed Men. Then they ſent a Subtile Monk, who under a ſhew of Rudeneſs and Simplicity, ſought to entrap him by captious Queſtions: But Huſs perceiving it, told him of his diſ-ſembling, yet anſwered his Queſtions. In the Evening the Pope ſent the Proveſt of the Court, to the Lord de Chlum, willing him to go unto his lodging, but as for Mr. Huſs, they had diſpoſed otherwiſe of him. Then did the Lord John, go ſpeedily unto the Pope, putting him in mind of his Promiſe about John Huſs, and intreating him that he would not ſo lightly falſifie his Faith, adding, that he was come thither under the Emperors ſafe Conduct: to which the Pope anſwered, that all was done, without his Conſent, and ſaid privily: What Reaſon is it that thou ſhouldeſt impute this Act to me, who am in the Hands of theſe Biſhops, and Cardinals? and indeed, the Pope, fearing to be Depoſed, or ſeeking to curry Favour with the Prelates, did thus betray the Innocent unto them. So the Baron returned, complaining openly of the Wrong, but to no purpoſe.

Then was John Huſs led to the Chapter-Houſe of the great Church, where he was kept Priſoner Eight days, and from thence he was led to the Jacobines upon the Rhine, and ſhut up in the vileſt Priſon of the Abby, though his Cauſe was not yet heard Publickly. In this Priſon, by reaſon of the Stink, he fell Sick of a Feavor, and was like to Dye: Yet leſt he ſhould Dye, as others in that Priſon had done, the Pope ſent a Phyſitian to attend him. The Emperor was not yet come to the Town.

In the middeſt of his Sickneſs, his accuſers, Michael de Cauſis, and another Bohemian, made an Importunate Suit, that the Heretick might be Condemned; for which end they preſented to the Pope, ſome Articles againſt him: As Firſt, That he had taught, that the Communion was to be Adminiſtred in both Kinds. Secondly, That he would not Acknowledg that the Word Church was to be underſtood of the Pope and his Cardinals, but affirmed that the Senſe, had it's beginning from the School-Men. Thirdly, That he held, that Temporal Princes might take Temporal Poſſeſſions, from Church-Men. Fourthly, Concerning the equallity of all Princes in Power. Fifthly, That the Reſervation of Cauſes, did proceed from the Pride, and Ambition of Popes. Sixthly, That he had Raiſed a Schiſme, and tumults in Bohemia.

In the time of his Sickneſs Four Commiſſioners were appointed to hear the Accuſation, and to examine Witneſſes, who were ignorant Prieſts of Bohemia, one contradicting another. John Huſs being informed hereof, he ſent, and Craved, that an Advocate might be admitted to anſwer for him, himſelf being hindred by Sickneſs: But this was Denyed, becauſe (Forſooth) there was a Canon that forbad, that one Accuſed of Hereſie, ſhould anſwer by a Proctor. When he had recovered his Health in ſome Meaſure, at the Command of the Commiſſioners certain Articles were ſent unto him, which they ſaid, they had gathered out of his Books, but indeed they were ſuch as Steven Paletz, a Bohemian, had either Forged of his own Head, or Patched up by Wreſting his Godly, and Orthodox ſayings to a ſiniſter Senſe.

Thus he continued in this Priſon, till March, Twenty-Eighth, 1415. and then having in ſome meaſure recovered his Health, he wrote ſome Treatiſes, viz. of the Ten Commandements. Of Love, and the Knowledge of God: Of Marriage: Of Pennance: And of the Lords Supper. And when Pope John fled from Conſtance, his Servants delivered the Keyes of the Priſon to the Emperour, and the Council commanded that the Priſoner ſhould be delivered to the Biſhop of Conſtance, who removed him to a Caſtle on the other ſide of the Rhine, &c.

The Biſhop of Luthomiſlen anſwered, that in the Supplication, he was touched and Accuſed as a Slanderer, and therefore he Craved that a Day might be appointed, for the Clearing of thoſe things which they called Slanders: The Seventeenth day of May was appointed; at which time he brought in what he had to ſay for himſelf. The next day, the Noble Men returned their Anſwer, wherein they cleared their Preacher of all that the Biſhop had Objected, concluding their Anſwer with another Supplication, to which they received no Return, till the Laſt of May; at which time they Preſented the Teſtimony of the Biſhop of Nazaret, beforementioned: As alſo another of the Biſhop of Prague: And a Third, from the Univerſity; ſity, all Three cleering John Huſs from the Calumnies which his Adverſaries had raiſed againſt him: And the Noble Men Petitioned that Huſs might have liberty to anſwer in Perſon; or that his Accuſers ſhould not be ſo lightly believed: The Patriarch of Antioch, anſwered in the Name of the Council, that Huſs ſhould be brought to his hearing, June Fifth, where he ſhould have Liberty to ſpeak for himſelf: But they failed of their Promiſe; therefore the ſame Day, theſe Noble Men Preſented another Supplication unto the Emperor, ſhewing the Diſcourteous dealing of the Four Commiſſioners, and intreating, that according to the ſafe Conduct, himſelf would hear their former Supplications: But the Emperor was driven from owning his ſafe Conduct by the Cardinals, becauſe (as they Alledged) No ſafe Conduct could be given to one who is Suſpected of Hereſie.

On the ſame Day all the Cardinals, and Biſhops, and moſt of the Clergy met in the Convent of the Franciſcans, and there it was Concluded, that before the Priſoner ſhould be brought forth, the Articles againſt him ſhould be Produced, and the Witneſſes Examined: But a Notary [Madonienetz] hearing that they had concluded to Condemn the Articles, in the abſence of the Party, he went with all ſpeed to the Bohemian Barons, and informed them of it, and they went and told the Emperor; whereupon, he ſent Lewis, Count Palatine of Heidleburg, and Frederick, Burgrave of Nurenburg, to require of them who Ruled the Council, that nothing ſhould be done in that cauſe till the Party was firſt heard, and that they ſhould ſend the Articles unto him, and he would cauſe them to be examined by Good and Learned Men: So the Decree was Suſpended.

At that time the Barons gave to thoſe whom the Emperor imployed, certain Books of John Huſs, that his Adverſaries and their Accuſations might be tried by them.

The Books were by them delivered to the Cardinals, and at laſt John Huſs was brought forth, who upon Examination, acknowledged the Books to be his, ſaying, That if there were any Error in them, he was willing to Retract it. They had ſcarcely Read one Article when they called for witneſſes: John Huſs would have ſpoken, but they all cryed out ſo againſt him, that he had no liberty to ſpeak one word: And when the Tumult was a little quieted, and he would have anſwered out of the Scriptures, & Ancient Fathers, ſome ſaid, It was to no purpoſe: Others mocked him: And ſome were ſo out-ragious, that he reſolved to hold his Peace, and to be Silent: And then they all ſaid, Now he is Dumb; And by his Silence confeſſes his Guilt.

June Seventeenth, on which day he was brought before them again, there fell out ſo great an Eclipſe, that the Sun was almoſt wholly Darkned, and their Aſſembly was held in the Cloiſter of the Minorites, where his Accuſers read ſome Articles, and undertook to prove them by witneſſes: But he proteſted that he had never ſpoken ſuch things. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Florence, Maſter, you know that in the Mouth of Two or Three Witneſſes, every word is eſtabliſhed, and here you ſhall ſee many Famous Witneſſes againſt you, and for my part, I cannot ſee how you can maintain your Cauſe againſt them. Huſs anſwered, I take God, and my Conſcience to Witneſs, that I never Taught ſuch things as theſe men alledg againſt me. The Cardinal replyed, We cannot judg according to your Conſcience, but muſt rely upon Evident Witneſſes.

Then it was Objected, that he had Defended the Errors of Wicklief: To which he anſwered, that he had never Defended any Errors of Wicklief: And when they inſtanced in ſome Particulars, he denyed them to be Errors, but agreeable to the Scriptures. They Objected, that he had ſown Sedition between the Eccleſiaſtical, and Political States in Bohemia? His anſwer was, that Pope Gregory had taken the Empire from Wenceſlaus, and the Colledge of Cardinals, being offended with the Pope, had written to the King, that if he would deny Obedience to the Pope, they would ſo order it, that another Pope ſhould be choſen, who ſhould reſtore him to his Empire, which he did accordingly, and hence aroſe the Diſſention betwixt the King, and the Archbiſhop Sbinco, who was a follower of Gregory: And ſaid he, It's eaſie to be known that I am Accuſed falſly in this cauſe, as the Germans here preſent can Witneſs. Then Albert Warren Arch Deacon of Prague ſtood up to ſpeak, but they would not hear him. Then was he Accuſed of ſpeaking ſome Words againſt the Emperor, from which he was cleered by the Teſtimony of the Lord de Chlum.

Then ſaid the Emperor, ſeeing we may not defend any Man that is an Heretick, or Accuſed of Hereſie, we adviſe thee to ſubmit thy ſelf to the Council in all things, ſo we will provide that they ſhall ſuffer thee to depart in Peace, with an eaſie Penance: Which if thou refuſe to do, the Preſidents will have ſufficient cauſe to proceed againſt thee: And for our part, aſſure thy ſelf, that we will prepare the Fire for thee with our own Hand, rather then ſuffer thee to maintain thine Opinions any longer: To this he anſwered, O Moſt Noble Emperor, I render unto your Highneſs Immortal thanks, for your Letters of ſafe Conduct, and I take God to Witneſs, that I never intended to maintain any falſe Opinions Obſtinately, and I came willingly hither, that if the meaneſt of the Council can lay before me any Holier Doctrine then what I have taught, I will ſoon change my mind. Then was he led away by the Sergeants, and Committed to the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Rigen, who had Hierom of Prague alſo in Priſon.

On the Morrow they met again, & the former Articles were read in the Audience of John Huſs, and they ſaid, that other Articles were Collected out of his Books of Predeſtination, and Perſeverance: He acknowledged what they had truly collected out of his Books, and gave the Reaſons thereof: He ſhewed alſo that in other Articles they had perverted & wreſted his Words contrary to his meaning. Then Peter de Aliaco, Biſhop of Camdray, ſaid, Thou heareſt what horrible Crimes are alleaged againſt thee; Now therefore it concerns thee to think what to do: Thou muſt Recant all theſe Articles, and ſo thou mayeſt find favour: But if thou wilt ſtand to defend them, I fear it will turn to thy great danger. This I ſpeak to thee by way of Council, and not as a Judg. The like ſaid other Cardinals. Then anſwered Huſs, Moſt Reverend Fathers, I have ſaid already that I came not hither to maintain any Error Obſtinately; But if in any particular I have entertained a falſe Opinion, I would gladly be reformed therein. And now I beſeech you, that I may have liberty to declare my mind, and if I bring not ſolid, and ſufficient reaſons, I will humbly ſubmit my ſelf to your better information.

Then ſaid a Cardinal: Behold how craftily he ſpeaketh: He calls it Information, and not Correction, or Determination. Verily, ſaid Huſs, call it what you will: I take God to Witneſs that I ſpake from my heart. After ſome other ſpeeches, a Prieſt ſaid, that he ſhould not be admitted to Recant, becauſe he had written to his Friends, that though he ſhould be forced to Swear with his Tongue, yet he would keep his Opinions unto Death. Then did the Biſhop of Rigen command him to be had back to Priſon.

During his Impriſonment, he wrote all theſe Paſſages to his Friends that the Truth might be known, andCalumnies prevented. When he was gone, the Emperor ſaid to the Preſidents, that either he ſhould Recant all thoſe things that were alleadged againſt him, and abjure all Preaching, and be baniſhed out of the Kingdom of Bohemia, or elſe be burned: And that all his favorers in Conſtance ſhould be apprehended, and Impriſoned, eſpecially his Diſciple, Hierom of Prague. Others ſaid, that when the Maſter was Puniſhed, the Diſciples would be more tractable.

July Sixth, the Emperor ſent to him Four Biſhops, with the Two Bohemian Barons, to know what he would do. And when he was brought out of Priſon to them, the Lord of Chlum, ſaid firſt: Mr. John, I am an unlearned Man, and therefore unable to inſtruct you a Man of Learning; nevertheleſs, I require you, if you know your ſelf guilty of any of thoſe Errors werewith you are charged, that you would not be aſhamed to change your mind: Yet would I not adviſe you to do any thing againſt your Conſcience, but rather to ſuffer any puniſhment then to deny what you know to be Truth. Huſs anſwered with Tears, Verily, as I have often ſaid, I take the moſt High God to Witneſs, that I am ready with all my heart, if the Council will better Inſtruct me by the Holy Scriptures, to change my mind. Then ſaid a Biſhop, I would never be ſo Arrogant, as to prefer my Judgment, to the Judgment of the whole whole Council. John anſwered, Neither do I: But if the meaneſt of the Council will convince me of Error, I will perform with all my heart whatſoever the Council will injoyn me. Mark, ſaid another Biſhop, how he continues in his Errors: So they ſent him back to Priſon again.

The next day a General Congregation was held in the great Church, where the Emperor was preſent: Then were brought in, and laid down, all the Veſtments belonging to a Prieſt, and John was brought before them. When he came in, he fell on his Knees and Prayed a good ſpace: And the Biſhop of Londenſis went up into the Pulpit, and Preached upon this Text; Rom. 6. Let the body of Sin be deſtroyed. And the whole Scope of his Sermon was, that John Huſs ſhould be deſtroyed. Then read a Biſhop the Proceſs which was drawn up at Rome againſt him, as alſo the Articles of his Accuſation: And when he attempted to anſwer a Word or Two to the ſeveral Articles as they were read, the Cardinal of Combray commanded him ſilence, ſaying, Here-after thou maieſt anſwer them altogether, if thou wilt. Alaſs! ſaid Huſs, how can I anſwer to all theſe things at once? I am not able to remember them all. The Cardinal of Florence ſaid, we have heard thee enough. Yet Huſs beſought them to here him, leſt others ſhould conceive amiſs, either of them, or of him. And when they would not hear him, he, kneeling down committed his cauſe to God, and to Jeſus Chriſt, hoping at their hands to obtain all his deſire. Then they charged him, that he had affirmed, that there was a Fourth Perſon in the Deity, alleadging, that a certain Doctor heard him ſpeak it. Huſs craved the Doctor's name. The Archbiſhop anſwered, that it was not needful to name him. Then ſaid he, Oh miſerable Man that I am, who am forced to hear ſuch Blaſphemies and Slanders. Then they alleadged that he had appealed to Chriſt, which (ſaid they) is Heretical. Hereupon Huſs ſaid, O Lord Jeſus, whoſe Word here is openly condemned, I do again appeal unto thee; who, when thou waſt evilly intreated of thine Enemies, didſt appeal unto God thy Father, committing thy cauſe unto the moſt juſt Judg, that by thy Example, when we are oppreſſed with manifeſt wrongs, we ſhould fly unto thee.

Then was the Definitive Sentence read, declaring, That by the Council it was ordained for his Heretical Doctrine, Publickly to degrade him from his Prieſtly Office &c. As the Sentence was reading, he did now & then interrupt them, but was oft commanded to be ſilent: When they read, that he was Obſtinate, he cryed out, that he was never Obſtinate, but was always ready to imbrace the Truth, if he might be taught it by the Holy Scriptures. When his Books were Condemned, he ſaid: Why have you condemned thoſe Books, ſeeing ye have not proved in any one Particular, that they are contrary to the Scripture's, or Articles of the Faith? and what injury is that to me to condemn my Books written in the Bohemian Language, which you never ſaw? Alſo, oft times he looked up to Heaven and Prayed. When the Sentence was ended, he kneeling down, ſaid, Lord Jeſus Forgive mine Enemies, by whom thou knoweſt I am falſly Condemned, and that they have uſed falſe Witneſſes and Slanders againſt me: Forgive them for thy great Mercies ſake. But many of them laughed at it.

Then Seven Biſhops, who were appointed thereunto, put upon him the Prieſtly Veſtures: And as they put on the Albe, he ſpake of the White Veſture wherein Chriſt was Clothed and Mocked: So in all the other things he comforted himſelf, with the Example of Jeſus Chriſt. When all the Veſtments were put on, an Archbiſhop exhorted him to change his mind, and thereby to provide for his Safety and Honor: But he refuſing, went up to the top of the Scaffold, after the cuſtome, and being full of Tears, he ſpake unto the People ſaying: Theſe Lords, and Biſhops, exhort me, That I would here profeſs before you, that I have Erred; which if it were to the infamy of any Man, they might happily perſwade me to it: But now I am in the ſight of the Lord my God, without diſhonouring them, and Wounding my own Conſcience, I can no way do what they require of me: With what Countenance could I look up to Heaven? With what Face could I look upon them whom I have taught, of whom there is a great number, if by my Example thoſe things which formerly they have known to be moſt True, ſhould now be made Dubious? I will never do it, nor give ſuch Scandal, ſeeming thereby more to eſteem this Vile Carcaſs of mine, which is condemned to Dye, then their Salvation. Upon this, a Biſhop ſaid, Behold how he continues in his pernicious Errors? Then was he Commanded to come to the Execution; and a Biſhop took the Chalice from him, ſaying, O Accurſed Judas, why haſt thou forſaken the Way of Peace: We take from thee the Chalice of thy Salvation. John anſwered, I truſt in God my Father, and in my Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for whoſe ſake I ſuffer theſe things; That he will not take away his Chalice of Redemption, but I have a ſtedfaſt hope that I ſhall Drink thereof this day in his Kingdom. The other Biſhops took away the other Prieſtly Ornaments, and each of them Accurſed him. To whom he anſwered, That he willingly ſuffered their Curſes for the Name of Chriſt. At laſt thoſe Biſhops began to contend with what Inſtrument his Shaven Crown ſhould be Unprieſted, whether with a Razor, or Cizers? John then turning him to the Emperor, ſaid, I marvel, that when they are all of alike cruel mind, that yet they cannot agree in the manner of their cruelty? At laſt they cut off the Skin of his Head with Cizers, Saying, Now the Church hath taken from thee all her Ornaments, and Priviledges, and nothing remains, but that thou be delivered into the hands of the Civil Magiſtrate.

Then cauſed they a Crown to be made of Paper, almoſt a Cubit deep, upon which were Painted Three Black Devils, with this Tittle above them, Hæreſiarcha: And when he ſaw it, he ſaid, My Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for my Sake &c.

Before the Wood was kindled, the Baron of Openhiem, and another Gentleman, exhorted him that he would remember his Salvation, and repent of his Errors: To whom he ſaid, What Errors ſhould I renounce, whereas I know my ſelf guilty of none? As for thoſe things that have been falſly alledged againſt me, I know that I never did ſo much as think them. For this was my chiefeſt end in all my Preaching, to Teach all Men Repentance, and Remiſſion of Sins, according to the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and according to the Expoſition of the Holy Fathers. Wherefore I am ready to ſuffer Death with a cheerful mind.

As he was tying to the Stake, it Happened that his Face was turned towards the Eaſt; Wereupon one cryed, That an Heretick, ſhould not have Liberty to look Eaſtward. So he was turned the other Way.

When he had done Praying, the People ſaid, What he hath done before we know not, but now he Prayeth Devoutly: and ſome ſaid, It were good that he had a Confeſſor: But a Prieſt ſitting on Horſe-back, anſwered, that he might not be heard being a Condemned Heretick.

In Prague he ſaw a Viſion, wherein he ſeemed to Paint the Images of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles: But the Pope came and hindred him, and cauſed his Servants to blot out thoſe Images. Then he ſaw other Painters, in a great number, Painting the ſame Images again: And they were ſo numerous that the Pope and his Cardinals were not able to blot them out.

The

JEROM OF PRAGVE

The Life of Hierom of Prague, who dyed, Anno Christi. 1416.

HIerom of Prague, was a Bohemian born, a man famous for Courage, Comelineſs, Virtue, Learning, and Eloquence: when he underſtood that the Publick Faith was violated, his Country ſlandered, and Huſs burnt, he travelled to Conſtance, April the 4. Anno Chriſti 1415. But no ſooner came he thither, but he underſtood that watch was laid for him to apprehend him, whereupon the next day he went to Iberling a City of the Empire, and a mile from Conſtance.

His birth.

His zeal.

His retreat to Iberling.

From thence he ſent to Sigiſmund King of Hungary, and his Barons, but eſpecially to the Council, moſt earneſtly requeſting that they would give him a ſafe Conduct freely to come and go, and then he would come in open Audience to anſwer every man, if any would appear to charge him with any crime: But this was denyed him both by the King and Council, whereupon the next day he wrote ſundry intimations and ſent them to Conſtance, cauſing them to be ſet upon the gates of the Citie, upon the doors of Churches, Monaſteries, of the houſes of the Cardinals, and other Noble perſonages, the tenor whereof was this: Unto the Noble Emperour, &c, I Jerom of Prague, Maſter of Arts of the Univerſity of Paris, Cullen, Heidleberg and Prague, by theſe my Letters do notifie to the King & Council, and to all others, that becauſe of many crafty ſlanderers, back-biters, and accuſers, I am ready of mine own free will to come unto Conſtance, there to declare openly before all the Council the purity and ſincerity of my Faith and mine Innocency: But this I will not do in corners, ſecretly before any private or particular perſon: wherefore if there be any of my ſlanderers of what Nation ſoever, that will charge me with Error or Hereſie, let them come forth openly before the Council, and in their own names object againſt me, and I will be ready to anſwer them: and if I ſhall be found guilty of any Error or Hereſie, I will not refuſe openly to ſuffer ſuch puniſhment as ſhall be meet for an Heretick: wherefore I humbly deſire a ſafe Conduct as afore: But if (ſeeing I offer ſuch equal terms) before any fault be proved againſt me, I ſhall be arreſted, impriſoned, or have any violence done to me, that then it may be manifeſt unto all the World, that this Council doth not proceed according to the rules of equity and juſtice, the rather ſeeing that I am come hither freely, and of my own accord, &c.

A ſafe Conduct denyed him.

His intimations ſet up at Conſtance.

But

His return towards Bohemia.

He is apprehended.

Carryed to Conſtance.

His anſwer to the Biſhops.

He is accuſed.

His anſwer.

He is impriſoned.

He is encouraged.

Popiſh cruelty.

He falls ſick.

His weakneſs.

He is brought before the Council.

He retracts his recantation.

Back-ſliding repented of.

His condemnation.

His ſhort anſwer.

His ornaments.

But notwithſtanding all this, no ſafe Conduct would be granted him: wherefore the Lords of Bohemia gave him their Letters Patents under their Seals to teſtifie the Truth of the premiſes: with the which Letters he returned again towards Bohemia: But by the treachery and ſubtilty of his Enemies he was apprehended by the way in Hirſaw, and by the Officers was carryed before the Duke: Who, preſently after, carryed him bound to Conſtance; and for a greater diſgrace, they put a bolt of Iron upon his wriſts, with a long Iron chain at it, by which they led him through the City to the Cloyſtor of the Frior Minors, where all the Prieſts, Scribes and Phariſees were met together, and when he came before them, ſome of the Biſhops ſaid to him, Hierom, why didſt thou fly and run away, and not appear when thou waſt cited? To which he anſwered, Becauſe I could get no ſafe Conduct neither from you, nor the King; and perceiving that I had many bitter Enemies in the Council, would not be the Author of my own peril: But had I known of your Citation, aſſuredly though I had been in Bohemia, I would have appeared.

Then a great rable of Prieſts cryed out againſt him, and Gerſon the Chancellor of Paris, and the Chancellor of Cullen, and the Chancellor of Heidleburg charged him with Errors delivered in thoſe Univerſities: To which he anſwered, that what he had delivered there, he would juſtifie now; yet if any could convince him of Error therein, he would willingly be informed: Hereupon ſome cryed out, Let him be burned, let him be burned; Then was he delivered bound to the Officers to be put into Priſon.

Aſſoon as he came thither, one called to him at his window, ſaying, Mr. Hierom, be conſtant and fear not to ſuffer death for the Truths ſake, of which when you were at liberty you did Preach much good: To whom he anſwered, Truly brother, I do not fear death, &c. But the Priſon-keeper coming to the man drove him away with ſtrokes from the window: Preſently the Biſhop of Rigen ſent for Hierom, ſtrongly bound with chains, both by the hands and Neck, and ſent him to a Tower, where they tyed him faſt to a great block, and his feet in the ſtocks, his hands being alſo made faſt upon them, the block being ſo high that he could by no means ſit thereon but his head muſt hang down-wards: where alſo they allowed him nothing but bread and water.

But within eleven days, hanging ſo by the heels, he fell very ſick; yet thus they kept him in Priſon a year wanting ſeven days, and then ſent for him, requiring him to recant, and to ſubſcribe, that John Huſs was juſtly put to death, which he did, partly for fear of death, and hoping thereby to eſcape their hands: after which they ſent him back to Priſon, and kept him guarded with Souldiers, yet not ſo ſtrictly chained as before. Afterwards they ſent to examine him again, but he refuſed to anſwer in private, except he might be brought before the Council; and they (ſuppoſing that he would openly confirm his former recantation) ſent for him thither, May the 25. 1416. ſuborning falſe witneſſes to accuſe him; But he ſo learnedly cleared himſelf, and refelled his Adverſaries, that they were aſtoniſhed at his Oration, and with ſhame enough were put to ſilence: He alſo concluded his Oration with this, That all ſuch Articles as Wicklief and Huſs had written againſt the enormities, pomp, and diſorder of the Prelates, he would firmly hold and defend, even unto the Death; and that all the ſins that he had committed, did not ſo much gnaw and trouble his conſcience, as did that moſt peſtiferous act of his in recanting what he had juſtly ſpoken, and in conſenting to the wicked condemnation of Huſs, and that he repented with his whole heart that ever he did it.

This ſo enraged them, that they proceeded to condemn him; whereupon he ſaid: I after my death, will leave a remorſe in your conſciences, and a nail in your hearts; Et cito vos omnes ut reſpondeatis mihi coram altiſſimo, & juſtiſſimo judice poſt centum annos: I here cite you all to anſwer to me before the moſt High and juſt Judge within a hundred years. When he was brought forth to Execution, they prepared a great and long paper painted about with red Divels, which when he beheld, throwing away his hood, he took the Miter, and put it on his head, ſaying, Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when he ſuffered death for me moſt wretched ſinner, did wear a crown of thorns upon his head: and I, for his ſake, will willingly wear this Cap. As

As he went to the place of Execution, he ſung ſome Hymns: and coming to the place of Execution, where John Huſs was burned, he kneeled down, and prayed fervently. He was bound to the Image of John Huſs, and ſo fire was ſet to him, which he endured with admirable valor: For ſtanding at the ſtake bound, and the Executioner kindling the fire behinde him, he bade him kindle it before his face; For (ſaid he) If I had been afraid of it, I had not come to this place, having had ſo many opportunities offered to me to eſcape it. The whole City of Conſtance admired his conſtancy, and Chriſtian magnanimity in ſuffering death. At the giving up the Ghoſt, he ſaid,

His deportment at death.

His Martyrdom.

His Courage.

His laſt words.

Hanc animam in flammis offero Chriſte tibi:

The Soul of mine in flames of fire
O Chriſt I offer thee.

Poggius who was Secretary to the Council of Conſtance, writing to a Friend, ſaith thus of this Hierom, "I profeſs I never ſaw any Man, who in diſcourſe (eſpecially it "being for Life or Death) that came nearer to the Eloquence of the Apoſtles and "Antients whom we do ſo much admire. It was a wonder to ſee with what Words, "with what Eloquence, Arguments, Countenance, and with what Confidence he "anſwered his Adverſaries, and maintained his own Cauſe. *I*nſomuch as it is to be "lamented, that ſo fine a wit had ſtrayed into the way of Hereſie, if that be true which "was objected againſt him. And afterward he ſaith:

"When many things were heaped againſt him to accuſe him of Hereſie, which alſo "were proved by Witneſſes, it was permitted to him to anſwer particularly to the "ſame But. he refuſed a long time, becauſe he ought firſt to plead his own Cauſe, and "then to anſwer to the railings of his Adverſaries. And when this was denyed him, "he ſaid; How great an injury, and iniquity is this, that when I have lived three "Hundred and forty Dayes in moſt hard Priſon, in filthineſs, in Dung, in Fetters, "and in want of all things, ye have heard my Adverſaries at all times, and yet you "will not hear me one hour? You are men and not Gods; You may ſlip, and Err, "and be deceived, and ſeduced, &c.

"When every Article of his accuſation was read Publickly, and proved by Witneſſes, they aſked him, Whither he had any thing to Object? But its almoſt incredible how cunningly he anſwered, and with what Arguments he defended himſelf: "He never ſpake one word unworthy a good man: So that, if he thought in Heart "as he ſpake with his Tongue, no cauſe of Death could have been found againſt him, "neither indeed was he guilty of the leaſt Offence.

"He ſaid, that what he was charged with by his Adverſaries, were falſe, and feigned by them. He declared his own Studies and life, full of Virtues. And he ſpared not to Commend John Huſs, calling him a Good, Juſt, and an Holy man, who "had ſpoken nothing againſt the Church of God, but only againſt the abuſes, Pride "and Pomp of the Clergy, and Prelates. MARTIN LVTHER.

The Life of Martin Luther, who flouriſhed Anno Chriſti 1500.

His birth.

His parentage.

Martin Luther was born at Iſleben in the Earldom of Mansfield, Anno Chriſti 1483. of good parents. His Fathers name was John Luther, who firſt lived at Iſleben, and afterwards removed to Mansfield, where he had ſome mettal Mines, and was choſen a Magiſtrate, and was grateful to all for the integrity of his life. His Mothers name was Margaret Lindeman, who was adorned with ſuch Virtues as became an honeſt Matron, but eſpecially ſhe was eminent for chaſtity, the fear of God, and often calling upon his Name. Aſſoon as this their ſon was capable of Learning, they firſt trained him up in the knowledge and fear of God, and in the Exerciſe of other virtues under their own wings: Then their care was to educate him in humane Learning, for which end they ſet him to ſchool to George Æmilius: and though at this time the darkneſs of Popery had much obſcured the light of the Truth, yet it pleaſed God to preſerve in the Schools, the Catechiſms containing the Principles of Religion, the uſe of ſinging Pſalms, and ſome forms of Prayer.

His education.

Gods providence.

Schola Illuſtris.

He goes to Erford.

His great proficiency.

At fourteen years of age, he went to Magdeburg, where he lived a poor Scholar one year: From thence he was removed by his Parents to Iſenach, where was an Illuſtrious School, and where he firſt taſted the ſweetneſs of Learning, and ſo after a while, went thence to the Univerſity of Erford, Anno Chriſti 1501. There he profited ſo much in the knowledge of Logick, and other Learning, that the whole Univerſity admired his wit.

He is Maſter of Arts.

Means of his converſion.

At twenty years old, he was made Maſter of Arts, and Profeſſor of Phyſick, Ethicks, and other parts of Philoſophy. Then he betook himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law: But at the age of twenty one (being affrighted at the violent death of a faithful companion of his whom he dearly loved) he betook himſelf into the Auguſtine Monks Colledge in Erford, writing to his parents the reaſon why he changed the courſe of his life.

In the Library of that Colledge he met with a copy of a Latine Bible, which he had never ſeen before: and with admiration, obſerved that there were more portions of holy holy Scripture, then were read in the Churches, which made him wish that he had the like book: And it pleased God that not long after, he obtained his desire, and fell close to the study thereof, some sickness and fear also whetting him on in those studies. The ignorance of those times. His study of the Scriptures.

Afterwards falling into a violent disease which threatned death, an old Priest came to him, saying, Sir, be of good courage, your disease is not mortal: God will raise you up to afford comfort to many others: which also came to pass, and he was much cheared up by conference with that Priest, who largely discoursed with him about Justification by Faith, and explained the Articles of the Creed to him. A prediction.

Then did Luther read over Augustines Works, where he found the same Doctrine of Justification by Faith frequently confirmed. He read over the School-men also, especially Occam, and in these studies he spent five years in that Colledge. His studiousness.

Anno Christi 1507. he was made Presbyter: and John Staupicius, endeavouring to promote the University of Wittenberg (then lately begun) knowing the wit and Learning of Luther, removed him thither, Anno Christi 1508. when he was but 26 years old, where by his labors he did much good; Three years after he was sent to Rome in the behalf of his Convent, where he saw the Pope, and the manner of the Roman Clergy, concerning which he saith; At Rome I heard them say Mass in such a manner as I detest them: For at the Communion Table I heard Curtisans laugh and boast of their wickedness, and others concerning the Bread and Wine of the Altar, saying, Bread thou art, and Bread thou shalt remain; Wine thou art, and Wine thou shalt remain. His ordination. His remove to Wittenberg. He goes to Rome Anno Christi 1511.

Upon his return from Rome, he was made Doctor in Divinity at the charge of Duke Frederick, Elector of Saxonie, who heard him Preach, and admired the soundness of his Invention, the strength of his Arguments, and the excellency of the things which he delivered. Popish profaneness. He is made Doctor of Divinity. An. Chr. 1512.

Soon after he began to explain the Epistle to the Romans, and some Psalms, where he shewed the difference between the Law and Gospel; refuted Justification by Works, &c. And his demeanor agreed with his Doctrine; his speech seemed to come from his heart, not from his lips only. Then he betook himself to the study of the Greek and Hebrew. He studies the Languages.

This year 1517. was by the account of Sculletus the 356. from the Reformation of Religion in France by the Waldenses: the 146 from the first confutation of Popish Errors in England by John Wicklief. The 116. from the first year of the Ministry of John Huss, who opposed the Errors of Popery in Bohemia. The 36. year from the condemnation of Dr. Wessalia, who taught at Worms the same Doctrine before Luther was born, that Luther did afterwards.

Anno Christi 1517. John Tecelius brought Indulgences into Germany to be sold, averring that he had so large a Commission from the Pope, that though a man had defloured the blessed Virgin, yet for money he could pardon his sin: Luther's zeal being inflamed herewith, it caused him to set forth some Propositions against Indulgences, which so enraged Tecelius, that whersoever he came, he declamed against Luther, and set forth contrary positions; and not content therewith, he burned openly Luthers propositions, and the Sermon which he wrote about Indulgences: This caused the Students at Wittemberg to burn his positions also. Popish blasphemy. He opposeth Indulgences.

The propositions which Luther set up, were 95 in number: After which he made this Protestation; I Martin Luther, Doctor of the Order of the Eremites at Wittenberg, would have it publickly testified, that I have set forth certain Propositions against the Popes Indulgences as they call them; But albeit neither the famous and worthy School of ours, nor the Civil nor Ecclesiastical Power hath hitherto condemned me: yet (as I hear) there are certain men of a violent and bold wit, who dare to pronounce me an Heretick, as if they well understood and throughly knew the whole matter: But I beseech every one, as I have often done before, so now by the Christian Faith, that they either shew me a better way if it be revealed by God to any of them, or else let them submit their sentence to God and his Churches Judgement. For neither am I so rash that I would have my Opinion alone to be preferred before all others, neither am I so doltish that I would have the Word of God to be placed after Fables devised by Humane Reason. His protestation.

Many defend. Luthers Doctrine.

Anno Christi 1518. Andrew Bodenstein from his Native place called Caraloſtadius with many other Divines of Wittenberg defended Luthers Doctrine by their writings. Alſo the Elector of Saxony of his own accord, without intreaty, took upon him the Patronage of Luther, neither would he ſuffer that he ſhould be drawn to Rome. Alſo about the ſame time Luther (contrary to the advice of his friends) went to the Chapter of the Auguſtine Fryars held at Heidleberg to defend his Doctrine, and ſhew his obedience to their Summons. He was honorably entertained by the Biſhop of Wurſtburg, and at Heidleberg by Wolfgang the Count Palatine.

Amongſt the Fryers there, he diſputed of 28 Paradoxes which he propounded out of St. Pauls Epiſtles concerning Juſtification by Faith without works. Bucer being preſent, and taking notes at this Diſputation, wrote thus of it to Beatus Rhenanus. His ſweetneſs in anſwering (ſaith he) was admirable, his patience in hearing was incomparable: you might have ſeen the acuteneſs of Saint Paul in reſolving doubts, ſo that he brought them all into admiration of him, by reaſon of his ſhort and pithy anſwers, and thoſe taken out of the Store-houſe of Gods holy Scriptures.

In his return when he was at Erford, he wrote to Jodocus, a Divine of Iſenach, who had been his Maſter, wherein he thus expreſſeth himſelf: The whole Univerſity of Wittenberg is of my minde concerning the Doctrine of Faith and Works except one Licenciat, and alſo the Duke of Saxony: The Biſhop of Brandenburg (who is my Ordinary) and many Prelates, and the more Ingenuous Citizens ſay with one mouth, that they never knew Chriſt and the Goſpel before.

The Emperor is againſt him.

Auguſt following, Maximilian the Emperor, hearing of theſe Controverſies between Luther and others, preſently wrote to the Pope to provide timely remedies againſt thoſe ſpreading evils (as he called them) promiſing, that whatever he ſhould Decree about the ſame, he would ſee that it ſhould take place through all the Provinces of the Empire. Hereupon Pope Leo citeth Luther to Rome, which he alſo ſignified to his Legat Cardinal Cajetan in theſe words, Hearing that Luther defendeth certain ungodly opinions, eſtranged from thoſe of the Church of Rome, which is the Miſtris of Faith and Religion, out of my Fatherly affection deſiring to repreſs his raſhneſs, I have commanded the Biſhop of Æſculan to cite him to Rome to anſwer thoſe accuſations that are laid againſt him. This the ſaid Biſhop hath done, yet Luther is ſo far from returning to ſoundneſs, that being ſtubborn in his Hereſie, he hath ſet out writings much worſe then the former, to my great grief and perturbation, &c. Then he proceeds to require the Cardinal to ſee that Luther were brought to Auſpurg, and that he ſhould implore the Emperour and Princes to ſet a guard upon him, and carry him to Rome: yet withall if he ſhould repent, and voluntarily confeſs his fault, he bade the Cardinal pardon him, otherwiſe to Interdict him, from holy ſervices. &c.

The Pope againſt him.

The Pope writes to the Duke of Saxony.

The Pope alſo wrote to the Duke of Saxony, in which Letter after a few flatteries, he tells him, that he heareth many and grievous complaints againſt Luther, (an undone man) who forgetting his Order and Profeſſion, doth many things very ſawcily againſt the Church of God with great confidence: Bragging that he is defended with the favor of his Prince, and that he fears the authority of no man: which thing he preſumes to be falſe and ſcandalous to the Prince: yet (ſaith he) I am willing to write to you, to admoniſh you to be mindeful of the dignity and ſplendor of your Anceſtors, flying not only the fault, but alſo the ſuſpition of it, &c. After which he tells him, that it properly belonged to the Church of Rome to judge in theſe cauſes of Religion, and therefore requires him, at the requeſt of his Legat, to ſee that Luther be ſent to Rome, that there he might be either cenſured or pardoned according to his deſerts.

The Pope further perſecutes him

The Pope wrote alſo to the Maſter of the Auguſtine Monks, exhorting him by his Authority to endeavour to recal Luther from his undertakings, and to follicit him earneſtly thereto both by Letters and learned men: withall, telling him that this muſt be done ſpeedily, whereby he might quench the flame that was but lately riſen, whereas by delays it was to be feared that the danger would grow greater and greater; for the timely ſuppreſſing whereof he required him to uſe all his ſtudy, care, and diligence.

Luther cited to Rome.

When Luther ſaw that he was called to Rome, he earneſtly ſollicited that his cauſe might might be heard in Germany, before fit Judges appointed thereto, and in a place leaſt ſubject unto danger. The Univerſity alſo of Wittenberg wrote to the Pope, giving a notable teſtimony unto Luther both for his Life and Learning: They ſaid alſo that in regard of his ſickneſs, and the danger of the way, he could not go to Rome: They beſeeched the Pope that he would think no otherwiſe of him then of a good man: That certain things indeed were propounded by him only for Diſputation ſake, not to define them: That his Adverſaries interpreted him in the worſe ſenſe, and thereby much exaſperated him: Beſeeching him to give credit to this their Teſtimony. The Univerſity pleads for him.

They wrote alſo to Charles Miltitius, a Germane, who was Chamberlain to the Pope, highly commending Luther, and deſiring him to procure of the Pope that indifferent Judges might be appointed to hear his cauſe in Germany: preſuming that he being a German, would favour his Country man who was oppreſſed with ſlanders, and in danger of his life in an honeſt cauſe.

Prince Frederick alſo the Elector of Saxony, treated with Cardinal Cajetan, and ſo prevailed with him, that Luther ſhould be called to Auſpurg, there to plead his cauſe before the Cardinal.

About this time the Bohemian ſent a Book to him written by John Huſs, encouraging him to conſtancy and patience, confeſſing that what he taught was ſound and right. The Bohemians encourage Luther.

In a Letter to Spalatinus he thus writes; In what matter ſoever I have not ſo roughly dealt with the Romaniſts, let them not aſcribe it to my modeſty, nor to their deſerts, but to my reſpect to my Prince and his Authority, and to the common good of the Students of Wittenberg: As for my ſelf, Contemptus a me eſt Romanus & favor, and furor: I contemn Romes favour and fury: Let them cenſure and burn all my books, I will do the like by theirs, and will put an end to all my humble obſervance of them, which doth but incenſe them more and more. Luthers reſolution. His courage

The Elector of Saxony telling Eraſmus that he wondred at the Monks and Popes extreme hatred of Luther: Eraſmus anſwered, Your Highneſs needs not wonder at it, ſeeing he deals againſt the Monks Bellies, and the Popes Crown. And the ſame Eraſmus being profered a great Biſhoprick if he would write againſt Luther, anſwered, That Luther was too great a man for him to deal with, and that he learned more from one ſhort page of Luthers writings then from all Thomas Aquinas's great Books. Eraſmus alſo in a Letter to the Arch-biſhop of Mentz, ſaith, That many things were in the Books of Luther condemned by Monks and Divines for Hereſie, which in the Books of Bernard and Auguſtine are reputed ſound and godly. The cauſe why Luther was ſo hated. Eraſmus's teſtimony of him.

About the ſame time Margaret, Cæſars Aunt, who governed the Low-Countries, when the Maſters of Lovan complained to her that the writings of Luther overthrew the whole Chriſtian Common-wealth; ſhe asked them, what kinde of man that Luther was? To whom they anſwered, An unlearned Monk: whereupon ſhe replyed: Therefore do you who are many learned men, write againſt that one unlearned fellow: For ſure the World will ſooner believe many learned, before one unlearned man.

Luther being cited, as we ſaid before, to appear before Cardinal Cajetan at Auſpurg, went thither, and having obtained a ſafe Conduct from the Emperour Maximillian, he appeared before the Cardinal, where he juſtified his Doctrine, and profered to maintain the ſame either by Diſputation or Writing: The Cardinal being much offended with him for his bold ſpeech, would not ſuffer him to come before him any more: Hereupon Luther, after five or ſix days ſtay, when he heard no more from him, appealeth to the Pope, and ſo departeth home. But the Cardinal wrote after him to the Duke of Saxony, That as he tendered his own honor and ſafety, he ſhould expel Luther out of his Dominions: This Letter the Duke ſent to Luther, who wrote back again, that rather then he would any way indanger his Prince, he would depart thence, and go whitherſoever it ſhould pleaſe the Lord to lead him. But the whole Univerſity of Wittenberg (ſeeing the cauſe of God in danger by this means to Luther cited to Auſpurg. Luther goes from Auſpurg.

decline) wrote to the Prince, humbly beſeeching him, that of his Princely Honor, he would not ſuffer Innocency to be thus oppreſſed by meer violence: but that the Error might firſt be ſhewed, and Luther be convicted of it, before he be pronounced guilty.

The Duke of Saxony pleads for him.

Hereupon the Duke, hearing Luthers Sermons, and reading his Books with more diligence, began to favour his quarrel more then he did before, and thereupon wrote back to the Cardinal to this purpoſe: That whereas he had promiſed that Luther ſhould come to Auſpurg, that being done, he could do no more: That the Legat had alſo promiſed him that he would diſmiſs Luther in a friendly manner: "But that "it ſeemed a wonder to him that he would have forced Luther to a recantation be- "fore he had pleaded his cauſe: That there were many not only in his Juriſdiction, "but in other places alſo that were learned and vertuous perſons which did not con- "demn Luthers Doctrine, but they which oppoſed him were men drawn thereto "through filthy covetouſneſs: But if they would ſhew him his Error, he would then "do therein the Office of a Chriſtian Prince, as one that reſpected the glory of God, "and deſired to provide for the peace of his Conſcience; and that whereas (beyond "his expectation) he wrote that Luther ſhould be proſecuted at Rome, and therefore "required that either he ſhould be ſent to Rome, or baniſhed his Dominions: he anſwered "that he could not agree thereto: 1. Becauſe his Error is not yet ſhewed him: Second- "ly, becauſe it would be an intolerable loſs to the Univerſity of Wittenberg, which he "had lately founded, wherein were many Students and Learned men which loved "Luther exceedingly, who had deſerved ſo well of them, That Luther is ſtill wil- "ling to come to a Diſputation in a place not ſuſpected, and to ſubmit to the "judgements of ſuch as can bring any thing more right, or to anſwer by writing: "That he thinketh it juſt that this be granted him, and requeſteth that it may be ſo "done, that ſo it may appear why he is counted an Heretick, and what himſelf ought "chiefly to follow, aſſuring him that he will maintain no Error: And as he is un- "willing to depart from the obſervance of the Church of Rome, ſo neither can he con- "demn Luther, till his Errors and Crimes be detected.

Popes malice.

After the death of Maximilian, and the Coronation of Charles the fifth, the Pope ſent to the Duke of Saxony by ſome Cardinals, requeſting him, that he would cauſe all Luthers Books to be burnt; and that he would ſee Luther either to be executed in Saxony, or elſe that he would ſecure him, and ſend him to Rome; To which the Duke anſwered, That he was ready to ſhew his obedience to the Pope, but yet he could not ſend Luther to him, till his cauſe was heard before the Emperour, and till he was convicted of Error; and then if he recanted not, he ſhould find no favour at his hands.

The Dukes anſwer.

Luther diſputes at Lipſick.

About this time, many Adverſaries being riſen up againſt Luther, there was a Diſputation appointed at Lipſick, to which Luther came, accompanyed with Phil. Melancthon, who was come to Wittenberg the year before: On the adverſe party came John Eckius, a bold and confident Divine: This Diſputation laſted fourteen days, which was after publiſhed in print by Luther and Petrus Moſſellanus.

Fryars and Biſhops ſtir up the Pope againſt him.

Preſently after, the Fryars grievouſly charged the Pope with neglect of his duty, in that minding his pleaſures ſo much (whereunto he was wondrouſly addicted) he in the mean time neglected the care of the Church, in not timely ſuppreſſing the Doctrine of Luther: The Biſhops alſo of Germany having condemned the Doctrine of Luther, wrote earneſtly to the Pope againſt him, whereupon upon the Pope calling together the Cardinals, Biſhops, Divines, and Canoniſts, referred the buſineſs wholly to their pleaſures, who after much contention and wrangling amongſt themſelves, at laſt concluded that a certain day ſhould be appointed for Luthers appearing, and that his Books ſhould be burnt openly.

Luther intends a retreat.

The Court of Saxony hearing theſe things, was ſomewhat troubled, which when Luther perceived, he began to bethink himſelf of retiring into Bohemia: which being taken notice of, Sir Francis of Sickingen, Sir Ulrick of Hutten, and Silveſter of Scawenberg, a Noble Franconian, offered him both entertainment and patronage; in-intreating him not to go into Bohemia, but to come into Franconia, if the Romans curſes did prevail, promiſing him an hundred Noble Horſe men of Franconia for his guard. Hereupon Luthers courage encreaſeth, and he giveth notice to the Cardinal of Saint George, that if the Popes curſes drave him out of Wittenberg, they ſhould get nothing by it, ſeeing there were now, not only in Bohemia, but in the midſt of Germany ſuch as were able and willing to defend him againſt the Popes power: And then (ſaith he) being ſafe guarded by theſe Protectors, I ſhall more cruelly inveigh againſt the Romaniſts, then if you let me alone in peace under my Prince.

Yet June 15. the Pope publiſheth his Bull againſt Luther, and all his partakers: Forbidding, upon pain of Excommunication, the reading or keeping any of his Books: commanding all men to apprehend him, and bring him to Rome: and interdicting all places where he ſhould come. The Popes Bull againſt him.

This Bull in many places of Germany was oppoſed and torn in peices: and Sir Ulrick Hutten publiſhed it with interlineary Gloſſes, and marginal Notes, to their great diſgrace. The Bull anſwered.

But before this came abroad, Luther had publiſhed his Book De Captivitate Babylonica, wherein he profeſſed that he was daily made more learned, wiſhing that his Books about Indulgences were burned, and that inſtead thereof this Poſition were ſet forth, Indulgences are the wickedneſſes of the flatterers of Rome. And when the Popes Bull came forth, Luther Excommunicated the Bull it ſelf, and the Authors of it; He alſo publiſhed a defence of all the Articles condemned by the Pope, appealing from the Pope to a Council. The Bull excommunicated.

After this, the Cardinals, according to their Commiſſion, told the Duke, that they could doe no leſs then burn Luthers Books; which accordingly they did: But Luther hearing of it, being accompanyed with all the Univerſity, he alſo openly burnt the Popes Decrees, and his Bull lately ſent out againſt him. At which time he added theſe words, Becauſe thou haſt troubled the holy one of the Lord, eternal fire ſhall trouble thee. Luther books burnt. He burns the Bull

A while after, the Emperour Charles the fifth coming into Germany, Prince Frederick of Saxony accompanyed him to Worms, from whence he wrote to Luther, that he had obtained of the Emperour to hear him openly at the Diet: To which Luther anſwered, that it was very welcome news to him that the Emperor would take to himſelf the hearing of his cauſe, promiſing to do all which he could with a ſafe conſcience, and not wronging the cauſe of Chriſt. Luther ſent for to Worms.

March the ſixth, the Emperour ſent for him, and withall ſent him a ſafe Conduct, requiring his repair thither within 21 days: but many of his friends diſſwaded him from going, to whom he anſwered, That theſe diſcouragements were caſt into his way by Satan, who knew that by his profeſſion of the truth in ſo illuſtrious a place, his Kingdom would be ſhaken, and therefore if he knew that there were as many Divels in Worms as Tiles on the Houſes, yet would he go thither, &c. His friends diſſwade him. His courage

April the ſixteenth, Luther came to Worms: whereupon ſome perſwaded the Emperor to deal with him as the Council of Conſtance had dealt with John Huſs: But the Emperour ſaid, That the Publick Faith was not to be violated. The next day Luther appeared before the Emperour, and a frequent Aſſembly of the Princes, at which time Eccius, a Lawyer, at the command of the Emperour, made a ſpeech: in the end whereof he asked him whether he would recant and retract his works? To which Luther, after deliberation, anſwered, Of my Books (ſaith he) ſome tend to Faith and Piety; to theſe my Adverſaries give an ample teſtimony: others are againſt the Pope and his Doctrine; ſhould I revoke theſe, I ſhould confirm his Tyranny: others are againſt private men who defend his cauſe; in theſe I confeſs, I have been too vehement; yet I cannot revoke them, unleſs I will ſet open a gap to the impudency of many. But Eccius told him that the Emperour was not ſatisfied with this anſwer, but required his recantation. To which Luther anſwered, I beſeech you, give me leave to maintain the peace of my own conſcience, which, if I ſhould conſent to you, I cannot do. For unleſs my Adverſaries can convince me by ſound Arguments taken out of the holy Scriptures, I cannot ſatisfie my Conſcience. For I can plainly prove, that both Popes and Councils have often He goes to Worms. His anſwer to Eccius. His conſtancy.

often erred grieously: and therefore it would be an ungodly thing for me to assent to them, and to depart from the holy Scriptures which is plain and only cannot err. And so he departed at that time.

The Emperour intends to proscribe him.

But the next day the Emperour sent his Letter to the Assembly of the Princes, wherein he wrote, That his Ancestors had always professed the Christian Religion, and had observed the Church of Rome, which seeing Luther now opposed, and stood stifly to his opinion, it behoved him to proscribe him and his companions, and to provide fit remedies to quench that flame. Yet that he would keep the Publick Faith given him, so that he might return safe to his own home. The Princes were divided in their opinions; but the major part held that he was not rashly to be condemned, because the Emperour, being a young man, was instigated against him by the Pope and his Ministers.

The Princes divided about it.

A few days after the Bishop of Trevers appointed Luther to come unto him, with whom also some other of the Princes were assembled: At which time they used many Arguments to draw him to a recantation, and concluded that they perceived that if he refused, the Emperours purpose was to banish him out of the bounds of the Empire, and therefore they exhorted him seriously to think upon the same. Luther answered, that he was very thankful to them that so great Princes would take so much pains for his sake who was so mean, and unworthy a person: yet he told them, that he would rather lose his life then depart from the manifest Truth of the Word of God, seeing its better to obey God then man, &c. Then was he commanded to withdraw: and there came to him one Vaus, a Lawyer; who perswaded him to submit his writings to the judgement of Cæsar and the Princes: To whom he answered, That he would not decline the judgement of Cæsar, and the Orders of the Empire if they would be guided by the Word of God, Which (saith he) makes so plain for me, that unless they convince me of an Error, I cannot depart from mine opinion.

Luthers courage.

He is proscribed.

And sent away.

Shortly after the Emperor sent to him to depart home, giving him 21 days for his return, commanding him neither by writing nor word to declare any thing to the people by the way. And after his departure the Emperour proscribed him. After the publication whereof, Prince Frederick appointed certain Noble men, whom he most confided in, to convey him to a secret place thereby to avoid the danger, who accordingly conveyed him privately to Wartsburg, which he called his Patmos, where he continued ten moneths, and wrote divers useful Treatises. The Papists imployed Wizards to descrie him, but they could not certainly design the place where he was.

His Patmos.

Witchcraft frustrated.

Reformation in his absence.

In Luthers absence, the University of Wittenberg sollicited Prince Frederick to abolish the Mass out of his Jurisdiction, shewing him the impiety of the same, and that it was invented but about 400 years before for the Popes profit, to which the Prince gave them a very prudent and pious answer.

Anno Christi 1522. Luther wrote to Melancthon to provide him a lodging at Wittenberg: For (saith he) the Translation of the Bible will urge me to return. For having translated much of the Bible into Dutch in his Patmos, it was necessary for him to confer with learned men, and to have their help and assistance about the same.

He translates the Bible.

In his absence, Justus Jonas, Caralostad, Phil. Melancthon, Ampsdorfius, &c. had removed private Mass, Images', Auricular confession, Prayer to Saints, &c.

His return to Wittenberg.

He is displeased with the reformation.

March the sixth, Luther came back to Wittenberg, and preached every day, taxing the Reformers in one of his Sermons, as if they had erred in abolishing the Mass: Not (saith he) because it's sinful to do it, but because they have not done it in a right order, &c. And as touching the pulling down of Images, he said, If any worship Images, thy are to be abolished, otherwise they are to be endured: yet I wish they were all taken away because of the abuse of them, which we cannot dissemble.

Caralostadius was much netled with these and other such like speeches, who was the chief doer in these matters, saying, that Luther would have all men enslaved to his his authority, and would ſuffer no man to do or write any thing whereof himſelf was not the firſt Author.

Preſently after Luther excuſed himſelf by Letters to Prince Frederick for returning to Wittenberg without his leave, and concludes that he returned to Wittenberg under a ſtronger protection then the Elector could give him; for ſaith he, God alone can order and promote the Truth without any mans exceſſive care, and helping hand: Therefore in this cauſe, he that moſt ſtrongly truſts to Gods aſſiſtance, he moſt ſurely defends himſelf and others. His faith.

Anno Chriſti 1522. He printed the New Teſtament (tranſlated by him in his Patmos) into the German tongue, which was reviſed by Melanchthon, whereat our King Henry the Eighth, and George Duke of Saxony where much troubled.

About this time Thomas Muncer, an Anabaptiſt, wrote a Fanatick Book againſt him and his Doctrine, and the Boors, ſeduced by him, roſe in Arms, publiſhing their demands, whereof theſe were ſome: That they might chooſe their own Miniſters: That they might pay no Tithes, but of corn only, which alſo might be diſtributed partly to the Miniſters, partly to the Poor, and other common uſes. That they ſhould not be uſed as ſervants, who were made free by the blood of Chriſt, &c. To theſe Propoſals Luther wrote an anſwer, That indeed Princes grievouſly offend by forbidding the ſincere Preaching of the Goſpel, and for overburdening of their ſubjects: But yet for theſe things the ſubjects may not take Arms againſt their Magiſtrates: That there was no reaſon why they ſhould place their hope in the multitude, ſeeing God can eaſily deſtroy them: That they abuſed the Name of God, pretending it for their Sedition, as if they deſired to promote the ſincere glory of God, the Doctrine of the Goſpel, Juſtice and Equity, whereas indeed they go about to take from the Magiſtrate the power that God hath given him, and whom God hath commanded them to obey: Afterwards he proceeded to examine their Demands, ſhewing that the moſt of them were contrary to the Law of Nature and Equity, telling them alſo how great their confuſion would be, ſhould they be granted. And for the reſt, which ſeemed to be grounded upon any Equity, he referred them to be examined by the Lawyers. Laſtly, he exhorted them lovingly and brotherly to lay down their Arms, and to obey their Magiſtrates: telling them that they might remove from thoſe places where the Preaching of the Goſpel is forbidden: But they may not oppoſe themſelves violently againſt their Magiſtrates. The riſing of the Anabaptiſts. Luthers Unmasks them

But when this admonition prevailed nothing, he wrote another Treatiſe, wherein he exhorted all men to joyn together for the utter ſubverſion of theſe Theeviſh Incendiaries, as for the quenching of a common fire. He Deals more ſharply with them.

Thomas Muncer (a phanatical Preacher) ſowed the ſeeds of this Sedition, and was holpen much by one Pfeiffer. Theſe vented their dreams, and told their followers that they ſhould kill their Enemies as Mice in a Barn. Hereupon ſome of the Princes aſſembled their Forces, and pitying this wretched ſeduced multitude, offered them peace if they would lay down their Arms, and depart home: But Muncer told his followers, that the Princes were afraid, and that by a Divine Revelation he could aſſure them of victory: Hereupon they came to a battel, wherein 5000 of them were ſlain, and the reſt fled to Francuſium: but the Princes purſuing them, took the City, put 300 more to death: and Muncer being taken, was brought before the Princes, who chid him for his proceedings. and then racked him to confeſs his complices: Upon the wrack he cryed out grievouſly, whereupon Prince George of Saxony ſaid, But think upon the ſlaughter of the poor wretches, who being deceived by you, periſhed yeſterday: Upon this Muncer laughed out right, and ſaid, Why? they would be deceived. When he was to be beheaded, he was ſo faint-hearted that he could not rehearſe the Apoſtles Creed: with him alſo was beheaded Pfeiffer, and ſome others: and ſhortly after was finiſhed that mournful war of the Clowns, wherein in ſeveral places were ſlain above fifty Thouſand, ſome ſay one hundred Thouſand. Muncer & Pfeiffer the incendiaries. The Anabaptiſts beaten. Muncer and Pfeiffers beheaded.

Anno Chriſti 1525. Luther marryed Catherine a Boren, who had formerly been a Nun. This Luthers friends diſliked very much, that he ſhould marry at ſo unſeaſonable a time, when Germany weltred in the blood of the Clowns; and Saxony Luthers marriage.

Melanchthon excuſes it.

mourned for the death of Frederick their Prince: But Phil. Melanchthon wrote thus to Camerarius. Perhaps ſome will wonder that Luther ſhould marry in theſe unhappy times, as if he cared not for thoſe miſchiefs which are before our Eyes: But I think this was the occaſion of it: you know well enough his courſe of life, that he is none of thoſe that ſhun meetings; I think better to leave you to think the reſt, then that I ſhould write it: If any undecent thing be reported by the people of him, it's a lye and a calumny. I judge alſo that nature compelled him to become an Huſband. If any thing ſeem unſeaſonable & unadviſed, it muſt not trouble us too much: perhaps there is ſome hidden and divine matter in it, into which it becometh not us curiouſly to ſearch, and becauſe I ſee him ſorrowful for the change of his condition, I labor to comfort him all that I can.

His ſickneſs

His Tentation.

How he recovered.

Anno 1527. Luther fell ſick of a congealing of blood about his Heart; but by the drinking of the water of Carduus Benedictus, he recovered. Preſently after (on a Sabbath day) he endured a ſpiritual temptation, which he called the buffeting of Satan: It ſeemed to him that ſwelling ſurges of the Sea did ſound aloud at his left Ear, and that ſo violently, that dye he muſt, except they preſently grew calm: Afterwards, when the noiſe came within his head, he fell down as one dead, and was ſo cold in each part, ut nec calor, nec ſanguis, nec ſenſus, nec vox ſupereſſet: that he had remaining, neither heat, nor blood, nor ſenſe, nor voice; but when his face was ſprinkled with cold water by Juſtus Jonas, he came to himſelf, and prayed moſt earneſtly, and made a confeſſion of his Faith, ſaying, That he was unworthy to ſuffer Martyrdom, which by his proceedings he might ſeem to run upon. He often mentions this tentation in his Letters to his Friends, and was confirmed in his Faith by receiving Abſolution from a Miniſter, and the uſe of the Sacrament.

Melanchthons fears.

Luther encourageth him.

An excellent ſpeech.

Melanchthon knowing the rage of the Papiſts, and Cæſars threats to ſubvert the Goſpel, was much troubled at it, and gave himſelf wholly up to grief, ſighs and tears; whereupon Luther wrote to him: In private conflicts I am weak, and you are ſtrong; but in publick conflicts, you are found weak, and I ſtronger; becauſe I am aſſured that our cauſe is juſt and true: If we fall, Chriſt, the Lord and Ruler of the World falleth with us; and ſuppoſe he fall, Mallem ruere cum Chriſto, quam regnare cum Cæſare, I had rather fall with Chriſt then ſtand with Cæſar: I extremely diſlike your exceſſive cares, with which you ſay, that you are almoſt conſumed: That theſe reign ſo much in your heart, it is not from the greatneſs of the danger, but the greatneſs of your incredulity. Si piam, & juſtam cauſam defendimus, cur Dei promiſſis non confidimus? præter vitam hanc miſellam Satanas, & mundus nobis eripere nihil poteſt. At vivit, & in ſempiternum regnat Chriſtus, in cujus tutela conſiſtit veritas: Is nobis aderit: is etiam cauſam hanc, quæ non noſtra, ſed ipſius eſt, ad optatum producet finem. If the cauſe be bad, let us revoke it, and flie back: if it be good, why do we make God a lyer? who hath made us ſo great promiſes: Caſt thy care upon the Lord, &c. Be of good comfort, I have overcome the World. If Chriſt be the conquerour of the World, why ſhould we fear it as if it would overcome us? A man would fetch ſuch ſentences as theſe upon his knees, from Rome to Hieruſalem. Nolite igitur timere, eſtote fortes, & læti, nihil ſolliciti, Dominus prope adeſt: Be not afraid; be couragious and cheerful: ſolicitous for nothing. The Lord is at hand to help us. And in another place, when our King Henry the Eighth had written bitterly againſt him: Agant quicquid poſſunt Henrici, Epiſcopi, atque adeo Turca, & ipſe Satan, nos filii ſumus regni, &c. Let the Henries, the Biſhops, the Turk, and the Divel himſelf do what they can, we are children of the Kingdom, worſhipping, and waiting for that Saviour, whom they, and ſuch as they, ſpit upon and crucifie.

His Faith.

Luthers courage.

Eraſmus cenſures him.

He defends his Book againſt King Henry the Eighth.

Concerning this his anſwer, Eraſmus thus writes, If (ſaith he) Luther commending the Kings good intention, had proceeded by ſtrong Arguments, without violating the Kingly Majeſty, in my judgement, he had taken a better courſe for the defence of his cauſe. For what made Luther in his Book to the King of England to uſe theſe words, Come hither my Lord Henry, and I will teach you? Truly the Kings Book was written in Latine, and that not unlearnedly: But Luther thus excuſeth himſelf, If any man (ſaith he) be offended at my ſharpneſs againſt the King, let him know that in that Book I dealt with ſenſeleſs Monſters, who contemned my beſt and moſt modeſt writings, and by my

my humility and modeſty were more hardned in their Errors: Beſides I abſtained from bitterneſs and lies, with which the Kings Book was ſtuffed. Neither is it any wonder, if I contemn and bite an Earthly King, when as he feared not at all in his writings to blaſpheme the King of Heaven, and to profane his truth with virulent lyes.

Anno Chriſti 1523. A Diet was held at Norinberg in the abſence of Cæſar, wherein the Edict of Worms was made null: Of this the Popes Legat complained to the Princes, ſaying, That Luther was not puniſhed according to the Emperours Edict; To which the Princes anſwered: That the Court of Rome neglected Reformation: That Germany was ſo far inlightned by the Sermons and Writings of Luther, that if they ſhould go about to put the Edict in Execution, great tumults would ariſe, and the people would be ready to think that they went about to oppreſs the Truth, and to put out the light of the Goſpel, that ſo they might the better defend thoſe manifeſt vices which could be no longer concealed. Why Luther was not puniſhed.

The ſame year Luther publiſhed his book, Of the Dignity and office of the Civil Magiſtrate. He wrote alſo to the Waldenſes about the Adoration of the Sacrament. He publiſhed the Pentateuch in the German tongue. He wrote to the Senate of Prague his Book De Inſtituendis Miniſtris Eccleſiæ, and another about the avoiding the Doctrines of men: Beſides divers others. What was judged of him for his conſtancy and reſolution may appear by this. His writings.

Upon a time a motion was made in the Conſiſtory at Rome, that a great ſum of mony ſhould be profered to him to buy him off from oppoſing Popery; but one wiſer then the reſt, cryed out, Hem! Germana illa beſtia non curat aurum ſed auram: That beaſt of Germany cares for no money, but ſeeks vain-glory. He will not be bribed.

Anno Chriſti 1529. he ſet forth both his Catechiſms: the leſſer in January, the greater in October following. He publiſheth his Catechiſms.

The year after the Emperour ſummoned a Diet at Auſpurg, giving the Publick Faith for the ſecurity of all men that would come to the Diet to ſet forth the Form of their Belief.

Hereupon the Prince Elector of Saxony to be better prepared againſt this Diet, appointed Luther, Juſtus Jonas, Pomeran and Melanthon, to ſet down the form of Doctrine which the Saxon Churches,& thoſe which accorded with them,did profeſs. Luther comprehended the ſum of his Doctrine in ſeventeen Articles,which being reviſed by Phil. Melanthon, & put into a better form, was afterwards called,the Confeſſion of Auſpurg. The Confeſſion of Auſpurg.

And whereas it was given out that the Emperour when he came into Germany would tread the Goſpellers under his feet, the Proteſtant Princes met, and conſulted together whether it were better to go to the Diet, or to meet the Emperour in Arms before he ſhould paſs the Alps.

Luther (who was always a Counſellor of Peace) diſſwaded them from taking Arms under the pretence of Religion, perſwading them rather by Faith and Prayer to beg, and look for help from God, whoſe cauſe (ſaith he) himſelf will defend. Luther perſwades to peace.

Upon this advice the Princes went to Auſpurg, yet left Luther not far off in Coburg Caſtle to be nere at hand, but out of danger, that his advice might be had in time of need. And when the Diet was met, the Elector of Saxony ſent to him to know whether the cauſe of Religion ſhould be referred to the Judgement of the Emperour? This Luther would by no means have done: For (ſaith he) this honor is to be given to the Word of God only to be Judge of holy controverſies. A Diet at Auſpurg.

Anno Chriſti 1535. the Landgrave of Huſs ſent for Bucer and Melanthon to Caſells, to reconcile them together about the buſineſs of the Sacrament, where, after much conference Melanthon mitigated the rigor of his opinion about Chriſts preſence: and at his return to Wittenberg he carryed with him Bucers Declaration concerning that point, which when Luther had conſidered of, he began to hearken to an agreement with Zuinglius, writing moſt friendly to the Divines of Strasborough and to others, that there might be a meeting appointed, wherein after deliberation, the deſired concord might be confirmed. And accordingly Anno Chriſti 1536. Bucer and divers other Divines of Germany came to Wittenburg, where a form of concord was drawn up by Bucer, and ſubſcribed by both parties: But Bucer therein, ſtriving to pleaſe Peace endeavoured between Luther and Zuinglius.

Yet frustrated.

both parties, pleased neither: For the Helvetian Divines rejected it; and Luther understanding of Bucers various Exposition of it, was very wrath with him, and would no more reckon him amongst his Friends: And so all hope of concord was taken away.

Anno Christi 1537. The Protestants being met at Smalcald, drew up, and set forth the sum of their Religion and practice in a book called Articuli Smalcaldici, unto which Luther prefixed this preface.

Luthers preface to the Smalcaldian Articles.

Whereas Pope Paul the third, summoned a Council the last year, which was to meet at Mantua, and a little after adjourned it again without nominating time or Place, so that it is not certain whether he will or can call it; And we also hoped that we should have been called to it: or else it was to be feared that we should be condemned not called: It was injoyned to me that I should gather and write the Articles of our Doctrine, that if perhaps the matter went on, it might be known what, and how far we would and could yeild to the Papists, and in what points we would constantly persevere: I have therefore written these Articles, and delivered them to our party, who have perused and received them with one consent, that they might be publickly presented, and explain the Confession of our Faith in the Council, if any one shall at length be assembled and held by the Pope and Popelings without lyes and deceit, in a true, lawful and Christian manner.

But seeing the Court of Rome doth so fear a Christian and free Council, and most fouly flyeth the light, so that all hopes of seeing such a Council is utterly taken away, even from the Papists themselves, to the great offence of many of them, taking ill the negligence of the Pope herein: Yea, they easily from hence gather, that the Pope had rather see the destruction of all Christianity, and the damnation of all souls, then to suffer a Reformation of himself and Courtiers, and the restraint of his Tyranny.

I thought fit therefore to publish these Articles, that if I be taken out of this life before a Council be called (which I trust and hope shall so come to pass) seeing these wicked flyers of the light labor so much to drive off, & hinder a Council) That they I say, which live after me, should have my Confession and Testimony, and may adjoyn and publish it with the Confession which I have formerly set forth, wherein I have hitherto persevered, and will by (Gods Grace) persevere unto the end.

What shall I say? How shall I begin my complaint? For being yet alive, I Preach and read to others publickly and dayly; and yet not only my virulent Adversaries, but my false Brethren that say that they agree with us in opinion, dare bring and alleadge my own Doctrine and Writings against me, whilest I am alive, and see and hear it, albeit they know that I teach otherwise; and they go about to adorn their own poyson with my labors, so to deceive and seduce the simple with my name: Good God, what then will be done after my decease?

I should answer to all things whilst I am alive: But how, I pray you, can I alone stop all the mouths of the Devil? Especially of them who being so full of poyson, will neither hear nor heed what I write: But wholly imploy themselves wickedly to pervert and deprave my words even in the least letters: Let the Devil and Gods wrath answer them as they deserve.

I oftentimes remember good Gerson, who oft doubted whether any thing that is good might be brought to light by writing. If writing be omitted, many souls are neglected which might have been delivered; and if it be done, presently the Devil is at hand with plaguy Tongues full of slanders which corrupt all things, and fill them with poyson, that the profit of the writings may be hindred thereby. Yet what commodity they receive by this their malice, is manifest; for whereas by loading us with lyes, they seek to draw away the simple from us, God so ordereth it by his Providence for the promoting of his own work, that their company decreaseth, & ours increaseth daily: for God hath confounded, & still will confound them and their lyes.

Lately there came a Doctor out of France to Wittenberg, who told us openly, that his King was made to believe that we had no true Church amongst us, no Magistrates, no Marriages, but that we all live promiscuously together like brute Beasts. With what face will these false Informers look upon us before the Tribu- nal Seat of Christ in his laſt Judgement, who have ſo oft told their King ſuch falſe and prodigious lyes? Christ, who is the Lord and Judge of us all, knows that they belye us. God convert them that are to be converted, that they may repent, and over-whelm the reſt with eternal woe.

But to return to the matter: I could wiſh with all my heart, that a free and Chriſtian Council were aſſembled, that proviſion might be made for many things that are amiſs. Not that we have need of a Council; for our Churches are ſo enlightened, taught, and confirmed by the Grace of God, with the pure Word of God and true uſe of the Sacraments, that we need not a Council, neither can a Council ſhew us a truer or better way: But there is need of one in many other regards: In many Biſhopricks divers Pariſhes are deſtitute of ſpiritual food: Yet the Biſhops and Canons regard not the life of thoſe poor men, for whom yet Christ dyed, ſo that they cannot hear the true Shepherd ſpeaking to his Sheep: I fear Christ for this will call a Council of Angels to deſtroy Germany as he deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah. Beſides theſe affairs of the Church, many things need Reformation in the Civil State: Great diſcords are amongſt Princes: uſury and coveteouſneſs overflow like a deluge: wantonneſs, pride, riot, garniſh in apparrel, bellycheer, dicing, pomp, malice, ſtubborneſs of ſubjects, oppreſſion, &c. ſo over-flow that they cannot be amended by ten Councils, and Twenty Diets, &c. Our ſins weigh us down, and ſuffer not God to be gracious to us, becauſe inſtead of repenting we defend our abominations.

O Lord Jeſus Christ, do thou ſummon and hold a Council, and redeem thy ſervants by thy glorious coming: The Pope and Popelings are paſt cure: Therefore help us, poor and diſtreſſed men, who groan unto thee, and ſeek thee with our hearts, according to the grace that thou haſt given us by thy holy Spirit, which liveth and reigneth with thee and the Father for ever, Amen.

His violence againſt the Sacramentaries.

Luther, leſt he ſhould ſeem to have yeelded any thing, to the temperament of Bucer, which we ſpake of before, wrote to Albert of Brandenburg Duke of Boruſſia, exhorting him to ſhun the Sacramentaries and their Doctrine, and not to ſuffer it to creep any where into his Dominions, leſt he ſhould thereby ſo burthen his conſcience with ſo great wickedneſs, that perhaps he ſhould never be able to pacifie it again. They of Zurick took this very ill, and they wrote alſo to the Duke of Boruſſia, requeſting him not to Decree any thing againſt the Profeſſors of their Faith.

A while after, Luther wrote an Epiſtle to the Aldermen of Francfurt, wherein he called the Zinglands, Arch-devils, and ſaid, they were to be driven out of Pulpits, and caſt out of the Country.

His power in prayer.

He uſed to be very fervent in Prayer: Vitus Theodorus thus writeth of him. No day paſſeth wherein Luther ſpendeth not three hours at leaſt in Prayer. Once it fell out (ſaith he) that I heard him: Good God! what a ſpirit, what a confidence was in his very expreſſion? with ſuch a reverence he ſueth for any thing, as one begging of God; and yet with ſuch hope and aſſurance, as if he ſpake with a loving Father, or Friend, &c.

He juſtifies his turn from Popery.

When the Papiſts charged him for a lyer, a promiſe-breaker, and an Apoſtate: Luther denying the former, yielded himſelf to be an Apoſtate, but a bleſſed and holy one, who had not kept his promiſe made to the Devil; ſaying, That he was no otherwiſe a revolter then a Mamaluke turning Chriſtian, or a Magician renouncing his Covenant made with the Devil, and betaking himſelf to Chriſt.

Power of prayer.

When Philip, Duke of Pomerania, marryed Mary daughter to the Elector of Saxony, Luther being preſent, prayed for a bleſſing, and taking Philip by the hand, ſaid, The Lord God be with you, and keep your poſterity from failing; But his wife continuing barren four years, all his male-ſtock was like to be extinct; yet at length, by Gods bleſſing, according to Luthers Prayer, he had ſeven ſons by her which wonderfully enlarged that Noble Family.

Luther falls ſick.

Luther falling ſick of the Stone, made his Will, in which he bequeathed his deteſtation of Popery to his Friends and to the Paſtors of the Church. He alſo beforehand made this verſe,

Teſtis

Peſtis eram vivus, moriens ero mors tua Papa:

I living, ſtopt Romes breath:
And dead, will be Romes death.

His recovery. Yet it pleaſed God in a ſhort ſpace to give him eaſe, and to reſtore him to his former health which brought great joy to all his Friends, and eſpecially to Melanchthon, who in an Epiſtle to him congratulated his recovery.

A Council of the Popes. What it was like. Anno Chriſti 1537. The Pope appointed a Council at Vincentia for reforming the Church, of which Luther wrote a Book, and by a picture in the Frontiſpiece, ſhewed the Argument of it: wherein the Pope was pictured ſitting in a high Throne, with ſome Cardinals ſtanding by, with Fox-tails on the end of long poles, as with bruſhes pretending to ſweep the room, but preſently after, the duſt ſettled again as before.

1538. Antinominians. Their opinions. About this time the new Sect of the Antinomians did ſtart up: The chief ringleader was Joannes Agricola of Iſleben, a familiar friend of Luthers: They held, That repentance was not to be taught from the Decalogue: They oppoſed ſuch as taught, that the Goſpel was not be preached to any but to ſuch as were humbled by the Law: and they taught, that whatſoever a mans life was, though impure, &c. yet he was juſtified, ſo that he believed the Goſpel: Luther confuted theſe.

He prays Melanchthon well. Anno Chriſti 1540. there was a meeting appointed at Haganaw upon the Rhine, where the Divines were to meet, & in a friendly manner to debate their differences: But as Melanchthon was going thitherward, he fell ſick at Vinaria, made his Will, & prepared for death; whereupon Luther and Cruciger by long journeys haſtened to him: and as ſoon as Luther ſaw how miſerably he was waſted with his diſeaſe, with ſighes and tears, He brake out into this ſpeech, Alaſs! how pretious and profitable an inſtrument of the Church is miſerably weakened, and ready to periſh! and therewithall, falling upon his knees he prayed moſt earneſtly for him: and Melanchthon confeſſed, that if Luther had not come, he had dyed.

1543. He comforts Myconius. Power of prayer. Anno Chriſti 1541. Luther wrote a conſolatory Letter to Frederick Myconius, almoſt quite ſpent with a Conſumption, affirming, he could have no joy to live if he dyed, and therefore wiſhed, that himſelf might firſt lay down his Earthly Tabernacle: concluding, that he was verily perſwaded that his Prayers ſhould be granted, as indeed it came to paſs; For Myconius out-lived him ſix years, and would often ſay, That Luther obtained this for him by his Prayers.

1543. His judgement about Ceremonies. Luther afterwards wrote his minde concerning Ceremonies, (which he deſired might be few, and tending to the edification) and Excommunication, which he wiſhed might be brought into the Church as a profitable Diſcipline, but could ſcarce hope to ſee it.

His Expoſition upon Geneſis. Anno Chriſti 1544. November. 17. he finiſhed his Explication of Geneſis, which was his laſt publick reading in the Univerſity, which he thus concluded: Thus end I my Explication on Geneſis; God grant that others may more rightly expound it then I have done: I cannot proceed further, my ſtrength faileth; pray for me, that I may have a quiet and comfortable departure out of this life.

1545. A Popiſh lye about Luthers death. This year in Italy was ſpread a moſt impudent lye about Luthers death: which they called Horrendum, & inauditum miraculum, quod in æternum laudandus Deus in fœda morte Mart. Lutheri, & corpore, & anima damnati, exhibuit, in gloriam Jeſu Chriſti, atq; in emendationem, et conſolationem piorum. The ſubſtance of it was this: That when he ſaw he muſt die, he requeſted that his body ſhould be ſet upon the Altar, and worſhiped with Divine Worſhip: But when his body was laid in the grave, ſuddenly ſo great a ſtir and terror aroſe, as if the foundation of the Earth were ſhaken together: whereupon all that were preſent, trembling, and aſtoniſhed, lift up their Eyes, and ſaw the ſacred Hoſt appear in the Air; whereupon they placed that upon the Altar: But the night following a loud noiſe and ratling, ſhril-ſhriller then the former, was heard about Luthers ſepulchre, which terrified all the City, and almoſt killed them with aſtoniſhment: In the morning when they opened the ſepulchre, they found neither bodie, bones, nor clothes, but a ſulphurous ſtink came out thereof, which almoſt overcame the ſtanders by, &c. This Lye coming printed into Germany, Luther ſubſcribed with his own hand, I Martin Luther do profeſs, and witneſs under my own hand, that receiving this figment full of anger and fury concerning my death, I read it with a joyful mind and cheerful countenance: And, but that I deteſt the blaſphemy, which aſcribeth an impudent lye to the Divine Majeſty; for the other paſſages, I cannot but laugh at Satans, the Popes and their complices hatred againſt me. God turn their hearts from their Diaboliacal malice; but if he Decree not to hear my Prayer for their ſin unto death, then God grant that they may fill up the meaſure of their ſins, and ſolace themſelves with their libels, full fraught with ſuch like lyes. Luthers anſwer to it.

Anno Chriſti 1546. Luther (taking Melanthon and ſome others along with him) went into his own country, and returned in ſafety to Wittenberg again. And not long after he was ſent for back by the Counts of Mansfield, to compoſe a difference amongſt them about the borders of their Countries, and their inheritances. Luther did not uſe to meddle with ſuch buſineſſes, having all his life been accuſtomed only to deal in Eccleſiaſtical affairs: yet becauſe he was born in that Country he would not be wanting to promote the peace of it. And therefore, having preached his laſt Sermon at Wittenberg, January the 17. upon the 23. day he began his journey: and at Hall in Saxony, he lodged at Juſtus Jonas his houſe: and paſſing over the River with Jonas, and his owa three ſons, they were in danger of drowning: whereupon he ſaid to Juſtus Jonas, Think you not that it would rejoyce the Devil very much, if I and you, and my three ſons ſhould be drowned? He was honorably entertained by the Earl of Mansfield, who ſent an hundred Horſe that conveyed him to Iſleben, being very weak, whereupon he ſaid, that he never undertook any great buſineſs, but he was attended with ſuch ſickneſs: yet after the uſe of ſome Fomentations, he was pretily well, and atended the buſineſs about which he came, from the 29. of January to the 17. of February; During which time he preached ſome times in the Church, and twice adminiſtred the Lords Supper, and Ordained two to the work of the Miniſtry: At his Table he uſed holy conferrence, and was dayly very fervent in his Prayers.

He is ſent for into his own Country.

He is in danger of drowning.

He comes to Iſleben.

His imployments.

The day before his death he dined and ſupped with his Friends, diſcourſing of divers matters, and amongſt the reſt, gave his opinion that in heaven we ſhall know one another, becauſe Adam knew Eve at firſt ſight, &c. After ſupper, his pain in his breaſt increaſing, he went aſide and prayed; then went to bed and ſlept; But about midnight, being awakened with the pain, and perceiving that his life was at an end, he ſaid, I pray God to preſerve the Doctrine of his Goſpel amongſt us: For the Pope and the Council of Trent have grievous things in hand: After which he thus prayed, O heavenly Father, my gracious God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, thou God of all conſolation, I give thee hearty thanks that thou haſt revealed unto me thy Son Jeſus Chriſt, whom I believe, whom I profeſs, whom I love, whom I glorifie, whom the Pope and the rout of the wicked, perſecute and diſhonor: I beſeech thee Lord Jeſus Chriſt receive my ſoul: O my heavenly Father, though I be taken out of this life, and muſt lay down this frail body; yet I certainly know that I ſhall live with thee eternally, and that I cannot be taken out of thy hands: God ſo loved the World, &c. Lord, I render up my ſpirit into thy hands, and come to thee: And again, Lord into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, thou O God of Truth haſt redeemed me: and ſo, as one falling aſleep, and without any bodily pain that could be diſcerned, he departed this life February 18. Anno Chriſti 1546. and in the great Climacterial year of his life.

His laſt ſickneſs.

Luthers laſt Prayer.

His faith.

His death.

This was the Will which he made concerning his Wife with child, and his young ſon: O Lord God, I thank thee that thou wouldſt have me live a poor and indigent perſon upon Earth; I have neither houſe nor land, nor poſſeſſions, nor mony to leave:

His laſt will.

leave: Thou Lord haſt given me wife and children: them Lord I give back to thee; nouriſh, inſtruct, and keep them (O thou the Father of Orphans, and Judge of the Widow) as thou haſt done to me, ſo do to them.

When he was ready to dye, Juſtus Jonas and Cælius ſaid to him, O Reverend Father, do you dye in the conſtant confeſſion of that Doctrine of Chriſt which you have hitherto preached? To which he anſwered Yea, which was the laſt word that he ſpake.

His laſt word.

His conſtancy. He was ever conſtant in the known Truth, from the confeſſion whereof he could never be removed, neither by promiſes nor threats.

In the diſmal Wars which followed, when Wittenberg was yeilded to the Emperour Charles, and he came to ſee Luthers Tomb, ſome of his Spaniards perſwaded him that the body of Luther ſhould be taken up and burned; The Emperour ſaid, Suffer him to reſt till the day of the Reſurrection and Judgement of all men.

When he was fitting himſelf for his journey to Iſleben, he confeſſed to Melanchon, that he had gone too far in the Sacramentary Controverſie: Hereupon Melanchon perſwaded him to explicate his minde by publiſhing ſome Book: but he anſwered, Hereby I ſhall bring a ſuſpition upon all my Doctrine as faulty, but when I am dead you may do as you ſee cauſe.

He in part retracts conſubſtantiation.

He was full of affections towards his children, gave them liberal education by keeping a School-maſter in his houſe to train them up in learning and godlineſs.

When he ſaw his daughter Magdalen ready to dye, he read to her Iſay 26. 19. Thy dead men ſhall live; together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe, &c. Adding, My daughter enter thou into thy chamber in peace: I ſhall ere long be with thee, For God will not permit me to ſee the puniſhment which hangs over the head of Germany, whereupon he wept plentifully: but when he followed the Corps, he ſo reſtrained his affection that he ſhed not a tear.

His daughters death.

His ſayings. He uſed to ſay, That three things make a Divine: Meditation, Prayer, Tentation: and that three things were to be done by a Miniſter: 1. To read the Bible over & over. 2. To pray earneſtly. 3. Always to be a learner. And that they were the beſt Preachers, who ſpake as to babes in Chriſt, in an ordinary ſtrain, popularly, and moſt plainly. He ſaid, That in the cauſe of God, he was content, totius mundi odium & impetum ſuſtinere, to undergo the hatred and violence of the whole world.

His charity. He was very liberal to the poor: A poor Student asking him ſome money, he bade his wife give him ſome: But ſhe pleading penury, whereupon he took up a ſilver cup, and gave it him. Alſo a friend ſending him two hundred Angels of gold, he beſtowed them all on poor Students: and when the Elector gave him a new gown, he ſaid, That he was made too much of: For (ſaith he) if here we receive a full recompence of our labors, we ſhall hope for none in another life. And again he ſaid, turning my ſelf to God, Valde proteſtatus ſum, me nolle ſic ſatiari ab eo, I ſaid flatly that God ſhould not put me off with theſe low things. And having a vein of metal offered him, he refuſed it, leſt he ſhould incur the temptation of the Devil, who is Lord of treaſure under the Earth. He never took any thing of Printers for his Copies.

On a time one brought him a ſtone that was found in the Mines in Mansfield, which had upon it the Image of the Pope with his tripple Crown: whereupon he ſaid, Hem, oportet Papam revelari etiam per mettalla, & metallicos. The Pope muſt be revealed even by metals and metal-diggers.

His private life. His private life was very exemplary: At dinner and ſupper-time he uſed often to dictate Sermons unto others: Sometimes to correct ſheets from the Preſs: Sometimes with Muſick to refreſh his friends: He was very temperate both in meat and drink: Sometimes he uſed to faſt four days together: and other ſometimes to eat only a little bread, and an herring. As much as he could, he avoided Feaſts, that he might not ſpend time. In his converſe with his friends he was pleaſant, courteous and ſociable mixed with gravity. He ſometimes uſed recreations, and amongſt the reſt, turning in a Lathe. He would never be idle. He was very loving to and tender of his children, maintaining a Schoolmaſter in his houſe to inſtruct them in Piety and Learning. He was very paſſionate, but ſoon appeaſed: Melanchon ſeeing him once in a paſſion ſaid: Vince animos iramq; tuam qui cætera vincis: whereupon he ſmiling, ſaid, we will no longer diſpute of theſe matters, and ſo he diſcourſed pleaſantly of other things. He foretold many things which afterwards came to paſs. He was very healthful, but that ſome times he was troubled with the Headach, eſpecially towards his latter end, whereupon he feared an Appoplexy: and when his head was ſo out of order he uſed to ſay: Feri, Domine, feri clementer: ego paratus ſum: quia verbo tuo à peccatis abſolutus, & corpore & ſanguine tuo paſtus. He was troubled with frequent tentations, whereupon he uſed to write, Valemus omnes præter Lutherum ipſum qui corpore ſanus, foris a toto mundo, intus à Diabolo patitur, & omnibus Angelis ejus. His diſeaſes. His tentations.

He was big of ſtature, ſtrong, and had ſuch a ſharp ſight, that few could endure ſtedfaſtly to look upon him. Upon a time one was ſent under pretence of private conference, to piſtol him: Luther entertained him friendly, but withall, ſtedfaſtly looking upon him, the man was ſo terrified, that he took care for nothing but how he might run away: He had a gentle and clear voice. He lived chaſtly and holily in Wedlock above twenty years, and after his death left three ſons, and his Widdow who lived ſeven years after him: who was much grieved that ſhe was abſent at his death, whereby ſhe could not perform her laſt duty of love to him as ſhe deſired. Preſently after his death the wars breaking forth, ſhe wandred up and down with her children as an Exile through many difficulties and dangers, and beſides the inconveniences of her widdow-hood which were many, ſhe met with great ingratitude from many, from whom ſhe expected better, conſidering how much her Husband had deſerved from the Church. His character. His wifes afflictions.

At length being returned to Wittenberg, after a while, the Plague brake forth; wherefore removing with her children to Fergaw, as ſhe was paſſing in a Wagon, the Horſes affrighted at ſomething, ran away, whereupon leaping out of the Wagon ſhe bruiſed her ſelf, and falling into a Lake of water ſhe caught a diſeaſe, whereof ſhe dyed three Months after, Anno Chriſti 1552.

One ſaith of him, That Luther a poor Fryar ſhould be able to ſtand againſt the Pope, was a great miracle: That he ſhould prevail againſt the Pope, was a greater: and after all, to die in peace, having ſo many Enemies, was the greateſt of all. Miracles.

Again, it was no leſs miraculous that he ſhould eſcape ſo many dangers: for when a certain Jew was ſuborned to kill him by poyſon, Luther had warning of it before hand, and the picture of the Jew ſent him, whereby he knew him, and avoided the danger: concerning which himſelf thus writes: There is (ſaith he) here with us a certain Poloniſh Jew, that is hired with two thouſand Crowns to poyſon me: This is diſcovered to me by Letters from my friends: He is a Doctor of Phyſick, and one that dares undertake, and is ready to perform any villany, of incredible ſubtilty and dexterity. Special providences.

On a time as Luther was walking in his Garden, the Devil appeared to him in the ſhape of a black Boar, but he ſlighted him, after which he vaniſhed. Another time as he was ſitting in a certain place on his ſtool, there was a great ſtone over his head in the vault, which being ſtayed up miraculouſly ſo long as he ſate there, ſo ſoon as he was up, immediately it fell upon the place where he ſate, being able to have cruſhed him in pieces, if it had light upon him.

And again, a young man about Wittenberg, being kept bare and needy by his Father, was tempted by the Devil to yeild himſelf body and ſoul to him upon condition to have his wiſh ſatisfied with money, and thereupon an Obligation was made by the young man, written with his own blood, and delivered to the Devil. But preſently after, the man began to decay in his health, (ſo that the thing being ſuſpected,) he was brought to Luther, who examined him about it; But he, through fear and ſhame, long denyed to confeſs any thing, yet at laſt, through Gods mercy, he revealed the whole matter to him: whereupon Luther, much pitying his lamentable condition, called the whole Congregation together, where he prayed with ſo much earneſtneſs and affection, that the Devil was at laſt compelled to throw in his Obligation at the window. One gives himſelf to the Devil. Power of prayer.

The power of his Miniſtry.

And as he was mighty in Prayer, ſo in his Sermons, God giving him ſuch a grace, that when he preached, they which heard him, thought every one his own temptations ſeverally to be noted and touched; whereupon ſome of his friends, asking him the cauſe of it: Mine own manifold temptations and experiences (ſaid he) are the cauſe of it. Wellerus alſo, a Diſciple of Luthers recordeth, that he oft heard his Maſter thus report of himſelf, That he had been often aſſaulted and vexed with all kind of Temptations, ſave only unto the ſin of coveteouſneſs.

His works.

Lutherus multa Latino, & vernaculo ſermone ſcripſit, quæ diverſis locis & temporibus ſeparatim primum edita, & poſtea collecta, & in plures Tomos diſtributa. There is alſo lately printed in Engliſh his Colloquia menſalia, of which one thus writes: Præſtitiſſet hos Sermones convivales in lucem nunquam emiſſos: Forte adverſariis procurantibus illi editi. Sin minus, videant ii qui Lutheranorum nomine ſuperbiunt, quomodo modeſtiam, judicium exiſtimationem, & authoritatem Lutheri defendere queant. Sunt enim in iis, non dico multa, ſed plurima, quæ piæ, caſtigataq; aures non ſolùm in conviviis Theologorum, ſed etiam in ludis, atq; theatris Comicorum non ferrent, &c.

His ſpeech about his works.

Concerning his works he thus writes, Above all things I requeſt the pious Reader, and beſeech him for our Lord Chriſt Jeſus ſake, that he read my Books with judgement, yea with much pitty; and let him remember that I was ſometime a Fryar, and a mad Papiſt, and when I firſt undertook this cauſe, ſo drunken and drowned in Popiſh Doctrines, that I was ready, if I could, to have killed all men, or to have aſſiſted others in doing of it, who with drew their obedience from the Pope but in one ſyllable: Such a Saul was I, as there are many at this day: neither was I ſo cold and frigid in defending the Pope as Eccius, and ſome like him are; who ſeem to me to defend the Papacy rather for their bellies ſake, then in good earneſt: Yea, like Epicures, they ſeem to me to deride the Pope, whereas I was ſerious in his cauſe as one that trembled at the thoughts of the day of Judgement, and from my very heart deſired to be ſaved. He would by no means endure that any ſhould be called after his name: For (ſaith he) The Doctrine which I teach is none of mine, neither did I dye for any man: neither would Paul 1 Cor. 3. 4, &c. endure ſuch termes: Beſides we are all Chriſtians, and profeſs the Doctrine of Chriſt: And laſtly, becauſe the Papiſts uſe to do ſo, calling themſelves Pontificians, whom we ought not to imitate. Melanchon gave this teſtimony of him; Pomeran (ſaith he) is a Grammarian, and explains the force of the words: I am a Logician ſhewing the context and arguments of things: Juſtus Jonas is an Orator, and ſpeaks copiouſly and eloquently; but Luther is all, even a miracle amongſt men: whatſoever he ſaith, whatſoever he writes, pierceth into the ſoul, and leaveth wonderful ſtings in the hearts of men.

He would have none called Lutherans.

Melanchons teſtimony of him.

Many Epitaphs were made of him, amongſt which theſe were ſome.

A prediction.

He uſed often to ſay, That, through Gods goodneſs, there ſhould be no Wars in Germany in his life time: but (ſaith he) let the ſurvivors look to it after my death.

Concerning the Doctrine of the Goſpel, he uſed to ſay, that three things would deſtroy ſtroy the Chriſtian Religion: Firſt, Forgetfulneſs of the bleſſings received by the Goſpel. Secondly, Security which reigns everywhere. Laſtly, Worldly wiſdom, which will ſeek to bring all things into order, and to ſupport the publick peace by wicked Counſels.

His character.

He was of a ſharp and quick wit: Of a great and invincible minde: Conſtant in the known Truth, from the Confeſſion whereof he could not be withdrawn either by threats or promiſes.

Many falſe reports were raiſed of him by the Papiſts, inſomuch as King Ferdinands Ambaſſador went to ſee what a manner of Man he was, telling him that it was reported in his Kings Court, that he never went abroad but armed & attended with his guard: That he ſpent all his time with Whores, at Dice and Taverns: But (ſaith he) I am well accuſtomed to ſuch lyes.

His ſtile

He had a very ſharp and Satyrical ſtile; ſo that Eraſmus uſed to ſay, Deus dedit huic poſtremæ ætati propter morborum magnitudinem acrem medicum: God hath given to this latter Age, by reaſon of the greatneſs of its diſeaſes a ſharp Phyſitian. And Charles the Emperour uſed to ſay, Si ſacrificuli frugi eſſent, nullo indigerent Luthero: If Prieſts were not ſo diſſolute, they would not need a Luther.

Note.

When this Emperour had taken Wittenberg, ſome of his Spaniſh ſouldiers would have digged up Luthers body, and burned it: but he ſaid to them, Sinite ipſum quieſcere, uſq; ad diem reſurrectionis, & judicii omnium: Let him reſt till the day of Reſurrection and of the Judgment of all things.

HVLRI. ZVINGLIVS

The Life of Zuinglius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1531.

His birth and education.

Ulldericus Zuinglius was born in Switzerland of godly Parents, and by them brought up in Learning: Being about ten years old he was ſent to School to Baſil, to George Bintzlius, where he profited ſo much, that in all Diſputations he went away with the victory: He excelled all in Muſick. From Baſil he was ſent to Bern, to Henry Lupulus, a moſt learned man, and an excellent Poet, under whom he learned Rhetorick, and became a good Poet.

His learning.

After two years he went to Vienna in Auſtria, where he ſtudyed Philoſophy, and profitted much therein: After a while he was called back into his own Country, and at Baſil he taught others what himſelf had learned, where alſo he commenced Maſter of Arts, and fell to the ſtudy of Schoo!-Divinity; and being called to a Paſtoral charge, he entred into the Miniſtry, and ſtudied Divinity very hard; and to furniſh himſelf with examples, he gat Valerius Maximus by heart: He eſpecially addicted himſelf to the ſtudy of the Bible: and finding his defect in the knowledge of the Tongues, he learnt Greek: wrote out S. Pauls Epiſtles, and gat them by heart, and grew ſo perfect, that he underſtood Greek better than Latine: and reading in S. Peter, that no Scripture is of private interpretation, he betook himſelf by earneſt Prayer to God for the Spirit of Truth to be his Teacher: and leſt he ſhould be miſled by a falſe ſpirit, he compared Scripture with Scripture, and expounded obſcure Texts by thoſe which were more clear.

He commenced Master of Arts.

His ſtudy of the Scriptures.

Preachers pattern.

In his Miniſtry he ſet himſelf much againſt the ſins of the times, eſpecially againſt Penſions, which the Switzers uſed to receive of Princes to ſerve as Mercenaries in their Armies, which procured him much hatred.

He is choſen to a place.

After a while he was choſen to a place called Our Lords Hermitage, by Theobaldus Guolzeggius the Baron thereof, to which place there was great reſort of people from all Countries, who came on Pilgrimage thither, which much moved him to embrace that Call, that he might have opportunity to diſperſe the knowledg of the Truth into ſeveral parts: About this time one of the chief Minſters dying at Zurick, they much deſired Zuinglius to ſucceed him, and he, coming accidentally to that place, was choſen Paſtor there, Anno Chriſti 1519. and began to Preach unto them the Hiſtory of Chriſt out of Mathew.

His zeal.

Preſently after there came one Sampſon, a Franciſcan Fryar, and a Preacher of Indulgences, who was ſent by the Pope into Switzerland to get mony: Zuinglius ſtrongly oppoſed himſelf againſt him, ſhewing him to be an Impoſtor: The Biſhop alſo of Conſtance wrote to Zuinglius to keep this Sampſon out of Zurick, becauſe he had not acquainted him with his authority: Yet when this Impoſtor came to Zurick, becauſe he was kept out, he went to Badena, ſetting forth the Popes Bulls to ſale: Often crying out, Behold they flie, behold they flie, as if he had ſeen with his Eyes the Souls which he had delivered out of Purgatory flying into Heaven.

He oppoſeth Indulgences.

Popiſh impoſtures.

Zuinglius alſo cauſed the Pope to be admoniſhed by his Commiſſary, not to Excommunicate Luther, for that he foreſaw the Germanes would deſpiſe both him and his Excommunication, which alſo came to paſs.

Anno Chriſti 1520. the Senate of Zurick, by the Counſel of Zuinglius, commanded the Preachers of their Juriſdiction freely to teach whatſoever might be proved by the Authority of the Prophets and Apoſtles paſſing by the Inventions of men. Hereupon the Biſhop of Conſtance, by publick Proclamation, forbad thoſe of Zurick to Innovate any thing, willing them to remain in the Faith of the Church of Rome, till a Council might be convened: But Zuinglius defended them and his writings: and the Magiſtrates of Zurick entreated the Biſhop to come to a Synod, where learned men might confer together, & determine what the people ought to believe. Yet the Biſhop wrote again to them, ſhewing them what complaines he had heard of Zuinglius, which he could not but take notice of, the City belonging to his Juriſdiction: But Zuinglius going to the Bench of Aldermen, defended his Doctrine, and ſatisfied them.

A Reformation in Zurick.

The Biſhop oppoſeth it.

Anno Chriſti 1522. the Biſhop wrote again unto the Colledge of Canons in Zurick, exhorting them to take heed to themſelves, for that Pope Leo, and the Emperor, by their Proclamations, had condemned thoſe Doctrines: He put them in minde therefore to obey thoſe Decrees, and not to innovate any thing in Religion, till thoſe whom it concerned had by Common-Council ſet down ſomewhat. Hereupon Zuinglius wrote back to the Biſhop, that he underſtood by whoſe ſetting on he did theſe things, but he wiſhed him not to follow their Counſel: For (ſaith he) the Truth is invincible, and will not be reſiſted. And afterwards ſome others joyning with him, they wrote to the Biſhop, entreating him to Decree nothing againſt the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and that he would no longer endure the filthy and infamous life of the Prieſts, but that he would ſuffer them to marry.

Zuinglius admoniſheth the Biſhop.

Zuinglius wrote alſo to the Helvetians that they ſhould not hinder the courſe of the the Goſpel: That they would not trouble Miniſters for marrying, for that the command for their living without Wives was the Doctrine of Satan. He exhorted them alſo, whereas their manner was in their Pages, or Parithes, when they admitted a Prieſt, to command him to take a Concubine, leſt he ſhould attempt the chaſtity of other women, that inſtead thereof they ſhould command them to take lawful Wives. He would have Miniſters marry.

About this time Luthers Books coming abroad, though himſelf abſtained from reading of them, yet he perſwaded his people to buy, and read them: which he did, that they might ſee the agreement that was in their Doctrine, being both taught by the ſame ſpirit: There alſo he ſtudied Hebrew, and gat the Senate to erect a School for Latine, Greek and Hebrew: and aſſociating to himſelf Leo Judæ, he gat ſuch skill in the Hebrew, that he began to explain Iſaiah and Jeremiah. Luthers Books come abroad. He ſtudies the Hebrew.

Shortly after there came to Zurick Franciſcus Lambertus, and diſputed with Zuinglius about the Interceſſion of the Saints, and the Sacrifice of the Maſs; but being non plus'd, he left his Error, and gave praiſe to God. Lambertus converted.

Zuinglius began alſo to write about this time: and Pope Adrian wrote to him with great promiſes to oblige him to the Papal-See: But all in vain. Shortly after he perſwaded the Senate to reſtrain the exorbitant number of Prieſts and Fryars, yet withall, to allow them a competent ſubſiſtence for their life time; which was done accordingly; and their revenues were imployed for the maintenance of the Miniſtry, for advancement of Learning and for the Poor: He preſſed alſo the taking away of Images, the aboliſhing of the Maſs, and the reſtoring of the Lords Supper; which the Senate aſſented to, and performed, not only in the City of Zurick, but through all the places within their juriſdiction. His conſtancy. Popery aboliſhed. The revenues of Monaſteries turned to charitable uſes.

Anno Chriſti 1523. when the Senators of Zurick underſtood that the Doctrine of Zuinglius was traduced every where, as being wicked and ungodly, they commanded all the Miniſters of their Juriſdiction to meet together on the 29. of January about the differences of Religion, promiſing, that every one ſhould be fully heard: They beſeeched alſo the Biſhop of Conſtance that he would either come himſelf or ſend thither ſome of his Divines. He preſſeth a further reformation.

At the day appointed many met together, John Faber the Biſhops Vicar being alſo preſent, who pleaded hard that this place was unfit to handle ſuch cauſes, but that they were to be referred to a general Council. But Zuinglius urged him, that if he had any thing againſt his Doctrine which he had publiſhed in 47 Poſitions, he ſhould produce it, and he ſhould be anſwered either by word of mouth or by writing; which when Faber would not conſent to, the Magiſtrates diſmiſſed the Aſſembly, and proclaimed throughout their Juriſdiction, that the Goſpel ſhould be purely taught out of the Books of the Old and New-Teſtament, the Traditions of men being laid aſide; and in February following Leo Judæ was made Preacher in S. Peters Church in Zurick, and he marryed a wife, and the like did other Miniſters. A Diſputation. A further Reformation.

Anno Chriſti 1524. the Magiſtrates of Zurick forbad Proceſſions; removed the Martyrs Tombs out of the chief Churches in the City; Took down the Idols and Images, and burned them publickly; The like they did in all places as far as their Juriſdiction extended. Alſo Katharine Cimmerin, the Abbeſs, delivered up her Nunnery into the hands of the Mayor, marryed an husband, & was by the Magiſtrates endowed with a large eſtate of yearly revenues: Converting the Nunnery and the Revenues of it to the education of Youths under a good Maſter. This year alſo Zuinglius marryed Ann Rembart, the widdow of the Noble John Mouer. An Abbeſs converted. Note. His marriage.

Anno Chriſti 1525 the Maſs was aboliſhed at Zurick, as Images had been the year before: Concerning which Zuinglius thus telleth the ſtory; When (ſaith he) we dealt before the Bench of Senators conſiſting of two hundred, about the aboliſhment of the Maſs, a certain Scribe or Notary ſtood up and ſpake thus; O ye Fathers, I am not of that rank to ſpeak before you when any cauſe of the Common wealth is handled: But when matters of Salvation are treated of, and the Faith it ſelf is in danger, it concernes every man to ſpeak what he thinks; I therefore profeſs that I am of opinion that the true fleſh and blood of Chriſt is received in the Sacrament, and A controverſie about the Maſs.

and I hope that you will by no means force me to the opinion of Zuinglius.

To this Zuinglius answered, that no man at Zurick had been compelled to the Faith: that he used no sophistical interpretation, when he expounded, this is my body. For this signifies my body: and so he went on to confirm his own opinion, and to refell the others. Then Henry Engelhard, formerly a Popish Doctor, but now a Disciple of Christ, said, I shall prove by Scripture that the bread cannot be the body of Christ, for its neither the natural, nor glorified, nor mystical Body of Christ, therefore not his body, &c. After this conflict was ended, the Aldermen appointed that after dinner four of them should confer with Zuinglius and his Brethren, that so weighty a business might be gravely discussed for the better satisfying of some that still doubted. When they were met together, the business was variously debated, and in the end resolved, that it should again be referred to the hearing of the Bench of Aldermen. And the next day when they were again met together, Zuinglius and his Brethren still desired that the Mass might wholly be abolished: Whereupon the Scribe stood up again, and told Zuinglius that he had said indeed that by these words, This is my body, Christ meant, this signifies my body, but had not sufficiently proved it by Testimonies of Scripture. For saith he; whereas you have instanced, The Seed is the Word: The Field is the World; the Enemy is the Devil, &c. These make not to the purpose, for there Christ spake Parabolically, but this is no Parable when he saith This is my body. To this Zuinglius answered, that though he spake not Parabolically, yet he spake Tropically Upon this, the Aldermen Decreed that hereafter the Eucharist should be celebrated according to Christs Institution, and that the Mass should be no more used amongst them. At this the whole Church much rejoyced; only a few of the ruder sort repined, urging that the Protestant Ministers should produce some example out of the Scripture: wherein the words ought to be in the like manner expounded.

Luke 8. Mat. 13.

The Mass. abolished.

Hereupon they began to revolve all things, yet no example came into their mindes: But a few nights after Zuinglius dreamed that he contended again with the Scribe till he was aweary, and at last was so dumb that he could not speak: whereupon he was exceedingly troubled: but after awhile a Monitor came to him from above, who said, O thou sluggard, why dost thou not answer him with that which is written in the 12. of Exodus, This is the Passeover of the Lord? Immediately he awakened, and leaping out of his bed, examined the Text: and the next day disputed it before the whole Assembly, which was entertained with such approbation that all were well satisfied: and (saith he) the three next days we had the greatest Sacraments that ever I saw: and the number of those that looked back to the Garlick and Flesh-pots of Egypt, was far less then men thought they would have been.

He is instructed in a dream.

Anno Christi 1526. The other Pages of the Helvetians had often sent to Zurick to cast off their new Religion, and to return to the old. The Senators answered, that they would obey if they might be convinced of Error; whereupon the Helvetians invite Eccius to dispute with Zuinglius, and Eccius himself wrote a bitter Letter to the Ambassadors of Zuick, met at Baden, wherein he accused Zuinglius of Heresie, requiring them to appoint a time and place whither he might come to prove it.

Eccius his rage.

Zuinglius hearing of it, wrote an Apology for himself to the Ambassadors, saying, that Eccius dealt both inhumanely and ungodly with him: For (saith he) if I be an Heretick, Eccius should have admonished me either by Letters, or face to face to convince me of Heresie, and not have traduced me to the Magistrates before I was heard: He wrote also that he was ready to dispute with Eccius before his own Auditors, not admitting any other Judge then the Word of God.

Zuinglius defends himself.

Eccius replyeth to this Epistle, interweaving many slanders, and desiring that the place for Disputation might be either Lucern or Baden. Zuinglius answered, that if Eccius refuse to come to Zuick, he had much more reason to refuse those places where he was already condemned of Heresie, and where his death and destruction was sought after. Then did the Senators of Zuick write to Eccius, to come thither upon the Publick Faith: but Eccius refused, now accusing Oecolampadius also.

At

At length the twelve Pages Decreed that they muſt needs diſpute, and after much conteſt the meeting was at Zurick: The Diſputants were Eccius and Oecolampadius: But no good iſſue came of it: So that the nine Pages concluded, that Zuinglius, the chief man of the new Religion muſt be excommunicated, and all others that had not been reformed by this conference. A diſputation fruitleſs.

The year after they of Bern appointed a Diſputation, which the Popiſh Pages oppoſed, but they proceeded in it, and the iſſue was, that (the Diſputation being ended) by Publick conſent, they decreed that Maſſes, Altars, Images, and all Superſtitions brought in contrary to the Word of God, ſhould be at once taken away out of their City and large Territories. Monaſteries and Nunneries they turned into Schools. Then they renounced the League of the French King, forbidding him to leavy any Mercenaries in their Dominions, contenting themſelves only with that pay which he giveth to every Page for friendſhip, as they of Zurick had alſo done. Laſtly, they write the day and year of their aboliſhing the Popiſh Religion upon a Pillar in Golden letters, that an everlaſting memorial might remain there to future Poſterities. The like Reformation was effected at Baſil. Reformation at Bern. Its written in golden letters.

Not long after Quarrels aroſe between the Popiſh and proteſtant Cantons of the Switzers, and Armies were raiſed on both ſides: They of Zurick publiſhing the cauſes why they took Armes: As firſt that the Popiſh Switzers beat their men when they came to require their debts. Then that the Underwalds, hung the Arms of Bern, Baſil and Strasborough upon the Gallows. Then that they had made a League with their ancient Enemy King Ferdinand to oppreſs their Religion; Whereby they violate not only the Law of Nature, but alſo their own Covenants: But when the Armies drew neer, by the mediation of their neighbors the differences were compoſed, and Armes laid down for the preſent. Quarrels amongſt the Switzers. Peace made.

Anno Chriſti 1529. Philip Landgrave of Heſs endeavoured to reconcile the differences between the Saxon and Helvetian Divines concerning the Euchariſt: For which end he called from Wittenberg, Luther, Juſtus Jonas, and Melanchthon: From Helvetia, Zuinglius and Oecolampadius. From Norenberg, Oſiander: From Hall, John Brentius: From Strasborough, Bucer and Hedio. At their coming all were courteouſly entertained by the Landgrave: After dinner Oecolampadius and Bucer went to ſalute Luther, who ſpake friendly to Oecolampadius; but being ſaluted by Bucer, he anſwered, You are naught, and a Knave.

The Diſputation continued many days, but in the begining of it Luther told them that he would not depart an hairs bredth from his opinion; and when they could not agree, yet the Helvetians deſired Luther that he would account of them as of Brethren: which he would by no means aſſent unto: Then did Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and Bucer Proteſt before the whole Aſſembly, that Luther had not defended his Opinion by the Word of God, that his Error had been clearly ſhewed him, and that the Truth of their cauſe had been abundantly demonſtrated both out of the Word of God and the moſt Ancient Fathers: And ſo (the Sweating Sickneſs breaking out) the Diſputation ended, and they returned home. Yet it pleaſed God, that this fruit the Conference had, that they agreed in thirteen other Articles, and promiſed mutual love each to other, and to joyn in Prayer to God to diſcover his Truth to them. The Landgrave of Heſs alſo was converted to the true Opinion hereby: ſo that he was hardly drawn to ſubſcribe the Auguſtine Confeſſion, proteſting that he was not ſatisfied about the tenth Article. Alſo Francis Lambert his Preacher, who had formerly been much addicted to Luther, being now overcome with the Truth of Gods Word, changed his Opinion about the Sacrament, ſignifying his Opinion to the whole Church by a Confeſſion which he wrote, and delivered it to the Miniſters of Strasborough when he lay upon his death-bed, who after Publiſhed it. A Diſputation. Luthers violence. The Diſputation ends. Some good effects of it.

About that time there roſe up the Cata-baptiſts, which denyed the Baptiſm of Infants, & re-baptized themſelves: and fell alſo into many other abominable Errors and Hereſies: with theſe Zuinglius at firſt dealt very mildly and brotherly; But when they began to aſperſe him with lyes, to ſeduce his hearers, and make a Schiſm in the Church, he was forced to oppoſe them more ſtrongly in his publick Miniſtry and by Diſputations: Catabaptiſts. Their wickedneſs.

But

But though he had ſilenced them, they raged the more againſt him: whereupon the Senate impriſoned ſome, proſcribed others, and (for ſatisfying their Faith) put ſome to death: The firſt father of them was Balthaſar Hucmerus an Apoſtate, and one that for Zuinglius his kindneſs, loaded him with lyes and reproaches.

They are puniſhed.

Popiſh malice.

The Monks and Fryars being caſt out of their houſes, and brought to penſions, ſought to enſnare him; and for that end, ſuborned ſometime ſome to ſeize upon him, and to carry him away, others to kill him; ſo that he could not ſtir abroad in ſafety in the night, whereupon his friends guarded him when he was abroad at ſupper, and the Senate were fain to appoint a guard about his houſe in the night time.

He is in danger.

New quarrels amongſt the Switzers.

Anno Chriſti 1531. They of Zurick and Bern ſtopped Proviſion from being carryed to the five Popiſh Pages, and withall ſet out this Declaration: That being compelled by the wrongs of the five Cities, they had barred them from Proviſion, and becauſe they refuſed the conditions of Peace which were propounded by the Interceſſors, violating the Covenants of the former years, by which order was taken that no mans Religion ſhould be prejudicial to him: wherefore (ſay they) it is lawful for us to deny them food; and if any conteſt ſhould ariſe about it, it ought to be imputed to them who deſire nothing but diſſentions.

Wars begun.

But when by reaſon hereof thoſe five Cities were pinched with want, they levyed Troops, and came forth with Banners diſplayed, and ſooner then was expected, entred into the bounds of them of Zurick, where was a Garriſon of above one thouſand men placed: This Garriſon diſcerning its own weakneſs, ſent meſſenger after meſſenger into the Town to haſten help to them: But ſuch was the ſpeed of the Enemy that the ſuccors came too late: yet when they came to the top of the Mountain, they ſaw their Souldiers fighting, and in preſent danger, whereupon exhorting and encouraging one another, they ran down the Hill with all ſpeed: but the paſſage was ſo narrow that they could go but ſingle, ſo that wanting time to ranck themſelves, they were oppreſſed with multitudes: about three hundred and eighty of them were ſlain, and the reſt eſcaped by flight.

They of Zurick beaten.

Zuinglius was in this Battel; for it is the cuſtom of the Switzers that their chief Miniſter goeth out with them to Battel: And Zuinglius being wiſe, couragious, and valiant, conſidered with himſelf that if he ſhould ſtay at home, and the Battel prove ill, he ſhould be expoſed to much envy, as if he had encouraged others before danger approached, and then proved faint-hearted himſelf.

Zuinglius diſlikes the war.

The truth is, he never approved this cutting off Proviſion from the five Pages; and when he ſaw the Magiſtrates would needs do it, he went to them and craved leave to depart from Zurick, becauſe his counſel was not obeyed: But they being troubled at this motion, ſent certain choice men to him to requeſt that he would not forſake their Church, which at laſt he aſſented to, though (ſaid he) it be to the danger of my life.

About fourteen days before the fight, in a Sermon he foretold his own death: and a Comet appearing about that time, he told a friend privately, that the Comet was fatal to him, and one other, meaning as was ſuppoſed Oecolampadius.

Zuinglius in the Battel was overthrown thrice, and yet ſtill gat up again: The fourth time being wounded with a ſpear, he fell on his knees, and ſaid, Well, they can kill the Body, but they cannot kill the Soul.

As the ſouldiers were ſpoiling the ſlain, Zuinglius was found alive lying upon his back, his arms folded, and his Eyes lift up to heaven, whereupon they asked him whether he would have a Prieſt to confeſs to, which he denyed; Then they willed him to call upon S. Mary, which he alſo refuſed, ever looking up to Heaven, whereupon one gave him his deaths wound: and when his body was known, the Enemies condemned him to be cut into four parts and burned. This fell out Anno Chriſti 1531, and of his age 44. after he had been Paſtor at Zurick twelve years. Three days after his death, ſome of his friends coming to the place, found his heart untouched by the fire.

He is ſlain.

Popiſh cruelty.

He

He began to preach at Glarona Anno Christi 1516. againſt many of the Popiſh Errors and abuſes before the name of Luther was ſo much as heard of in thoſe parts. He preach'd againſt Popery before Luther.

Beza made this Epitah on him,

Zuinglius arderet gemino cum ſanctus amore,
Nempe Dei imprimis, deinde ſuæ patriæ:
Dicitur in ſolidum ſe devoviſſe duobus,
Nempe Deo imprimis, deinde ſuæ patriæ.
Quam bene perſolvit ſimul iſtis vota duobus,
Pro Patra examinis, pro Pietate cinis!

His character. He had a Wit fitted for great matters, honeſt, candid, ſound, and vehement, yet not cruel, or bloody, but Heroical and cheerful. His Doctrine and Judgment were ſound: His ſtudy of Piety, and reforming Religion from Popiſh ſuperſtitions is ſeen in his Works. In his Sermons he was very methodical, teaching the Truth with great perſpicuity: He was very ſharp in reproving Vices, eſpecially the Pentions of the Switzers, oppreſſion of the Poor, and Prodigality. He uſed to ſay that it was a wicked warfare, and nothing more hateful to God than for the hire of forreign Princes to ſpill Blood: When he thundred moſt againſt Sin, leſt the Innocent ſhould be affrighted, he uſed to ſay, Bone vir, hæc te non moveant, nihil ad te quod dico; ne cures igitur: Honeſt man, be not affrighted at theſe things, I ſpeak not to thee, therefore care not for it. He uſed to ſtudy ſtanding, and tyed himſelf to certain hours, which he would not omit except neceſſity compelled him. From his firſt riſing till ten a clock he imployed himſelf in reading, writing, interpreting the Scripture, and making his Sermons: After dinner till two a clock, he conferred with his Friends, or gave counſel to ſuch as ſought it: and ſo to his ſtudy till ſupper: after which, (having walked a while) he buſied himſelf in writing Letters, which many times held him till midnight.

JOHN OECVLAMPADIVS

The Life of Oecolampadius, who dyed Anno Christi 1531.

His birth.

His education.

Ecolampadius was born at Winsperg, Anno Christi 1482. of rich and religious Parents; especially his Mother, for Wisdom, Charity and Sanctity, was very eminent in the place where she lived: They brought up this their Son in Religion and Learning: His Father intending to make him a Merchant, but his Mother, by her earnest entreaties, prevailed with him still to keep him at School, where he profited exceedingly.

He goes to Heidleberg.

Then to Bononia.

At twelve years of age he was sent to the University of Heidleberg, and so profited there, that at two years end he was made Bachelor of Art: In that place he continued till he was Master of Arts; and then went, by the will of his Father, to Bononia to study the Law; but the Air of Italy not agreeing with him, he quickly returned to Heidleberg, and betook himself to the study of Divinity, read the School-men, and profited much thereby.

His study of Divinity.

He grew so famous both for Piety and Learning, that Philip Prince Elector Palatine chose him for a Tutor to his Sons: But growing weary of a Court-life, he left that charge, and returned to the study of Divinity.

He enters into the Ministry.

Not long after, his Parents, having no other child, gave all their Estate for the maintenance of a Minister in their own Town, and chose this their Son to be the first that should undertake that charge, which caused his return from Heidleberg to his own Country: But finding himself as yet not thoroughly furnished for such a work, he quickly left it, and went to Tubing, and from thence to Stutgard; where under John Capnio he studied Greek, and from thence he went to Heidleberg, where he began to study Hebrew: And being by this means better furnished, he returned into his own Country to his former Charge; and became a severe Preacher, and very grave in his carriage: He associated himself but with few, and those the best: But especially he contracted a strict bond of love with Capito, which continued betwixt them so long as they lived.

He studies Greek and Hebrew.

He is made a Preacher.

His friendship with Capito.

He is chosen to Basil.

From this place he was at last called to be a Preacher at Basil, and there also he commenced Doctor in Divinity, about which time Erasmus Roteradamus coming thither to print his Annotations on the New Testament, he chose Oecolampadius as his assistant in that work, and confessed that he was much holpen by him.

Shortly

Shortly after he was called to Auſpurg to be a Preacher there; But finding ſome timorouſneſs in himſelf in ſo great a work, he thought that a retired life, wherein he might betake himſelf to Prayer and Study, would be better for him for the preſent, and therefore he entred into a Monaſtery near to that City, in which alſo he thought to continue; But all his friends, eſpecially Capito, diſſwaded him from it, which advice he at laſt hearkening unto, and taking occaſion to declare his judgment in ſeveral things againſt the Popiſh Doctrine, he began to be much hated and threatned with Priſon and Death; yet he (daily encreaſing in courage) contemned their threats: But after a while, the danger growing greater (at the importunity of his friends) he departed, and not long after came to Baſil to print ſome Works, which in his retiredneſs he had made. During his abode there, having no other means of ſubſiſtance, he was maintained by Andrew Cratander the Printer, where alſo, to find himſelf imployment, he tranſlated Chryſoſtom upon Geneſis, and preached Chriſt freely to ſome that reſorted to him.

He is choſen to Auſpurg.

Popiſh malice.

Anno Chriſti 1522. Sir Francis Sickengen ſent for him; concerning which himſelf thus writeth: "Becauſe (ſaith he) Sir Francis Sickengen, that moſt famous Knight "of Germany, and Captain of the Emperors Army hath ſent for me to inſtruct his "Family, yea rather to feed it with ſpiritual Sermons, being long ſince inſtructed; "I thought it my duty to endeavor that the Law of God ſhould be made familiar in "it, whereby it might grow in the true and ſincere ſtudy of Chriſtianity: where-"upon I daily read the Goſpel, and expounded it to thoſe that were preſent, famili-"arly exhorting them to the ſtudy of Piety; and whereas they had been accuſtomed "to hear Sermons only upon the Sabbaths, and to have Maſſes all the Week after, I ſo "prevailed that Maſſes were laid aſide, and ſome part of the Epiſtles and Goſpels "was read and expounded every day to them.

His call to Sir Fr. Sickengen.

Shortly after the Senate of Baſil choſe him to be a Profeſſor of Divinity in that City, (though the Popiſh party ſought by all means to oppoſe it) where he read on the Prophet Iſaiah; and after a while he was called to a Paſtoral charge in that City, to the great regret of the Papiſts, Anno Chriſti 1524.

He is Profeſſor at Baſil.

In that City he cauſed Infants to be baptized in the Dutch Tongue: He adminiſtred the Lords Supper in both kinds by the conſent of the Magiſtrates. He confuted by the holy Scriptures the Sacrifice of the Maſs, Purgatory, and other Popiſh Traditions of the like kind, whereupon by little and little they vaniſhed away: Upon this John Cochlæus ſent Letters to him from Stutgard, full of great promiſes, thereby endeavouring to withdraw him from the Truth, and the Maſs-Prieſts thundred againſt him and his companions, ſaying that they deſerved the puniſhment of the worſt Hereticks: But the Magiſtrates of Baſil commanded all the Preachers within their Juriſdiction to preach to the People the Word of God and not of men, and to abſtain from railing and evil ſpeeches, threatning ſevere puniſhments to thoſe that offended againſt their Proclamation: ſo that not long after there was a general Reformation of Religion, not only in Baſil, but in the parts adjacent: A Decree being made by the Senate, that as well within the City of Baſil as without, throughout all their Juriſdiction, the Maſs with all Idols ſhould be abandoned: and the Aſh wedneſday following all the Wooden Images were diſtributed amongſt the Poor of the City to ſerve them for fire-wood; but when they could not agree upon the dividing of them, it was decreed, that all the ſaid Images ſhould be burnt together: ſo that in nine great heaps all the ſtocks and Idols were the ſame day burnt to aſhes before the great Church-door. Oecolampadius alſo (like a faithful Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt) was careful to reſtore Chriſts Diſcipline, and brought in the cenſure of Excommunication: And preſently after, being ſent for to Ulm, together with Blaurerus and Bucer, he carried on the work of Reformation there.

At Marpurg (by the invitation of the Lantgrave of Heſs) there was a Diſputation for three days between Luther, Jonas and Melancthon on the one part, and Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, and others on the other part, about the Controverſie concerning Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament; but the Sweating ſickneſs breaking out there, put an end to it, yet they agreed about all other Fundamentals in Religion, and parted in a brotherly manner.

Oecolampadius, returning to Baſil, ſpent the remainder of his days in preaching, reading, writing, publiſhing of Books, viſiting the ſick, &c. Anno Chriſti 1531. and of his Age 49. he fell ſick (about the ſame time that Zuinglius was ſo unhappily ſlain, the grief of whoſe death much aggravated his weakneſs) yet intermitted he not his labors, till an Ulcer breaking forth about his Os ſacrum, he was forced to keep his bed: and though his friends, Phyſitians and Chirurgeons uſed all means for his cure, yet he told them that his Diſeaſe was mortal. He ſpent his time in Divine meditations, and comforting his friends: and ſending for the Miniſters of the Churches to him, he ſpake to this purpoſe: O my Brethren, the Lord is come, he is come, he is now calling me away, &c. I deſired to ſpeak with you to encourage you to continue faithful followers of Chriſt, to perſevere in purity of Doctrine, in lives conformable to the Word of God; Chriſt will take care for the defence of his Church: therefore, Let your light ſo ſhine forth before men, that they may ſee your good Works, &c. continue in love unfeigned: walk as in Gods preſence: adorn your Doctrine with holineſs of life: a cloud is ariſing, a tempeſt is coming, and ſome will fall off: but it becomes you to ſtand faſt, and God will aſſiſt you, &c. For my ſelf, I paſs not the aſperſions that are caſt upon me, I bleſs God I ſhall with a clear conſcience ſtand before the Tribunal of Chriſt: I have not ſeduced the Church of Chriſt (as ſome affirm) but leave you all witneſſes that at my laſt gaſp I am the ſame that formerly I was.

He had nothing to give, and therefore made no Will: The fifteenth day of his ſickneſs he called for his children, took them by the hand, ſtrok'd them on the head; and though the eldeſt was but three years old, yet he ſaid unto them, Go too, my three children, ſee that you love God: Then ſpeaking to his wife and kindred, he deſired them to take care that his children might be brought up in the fear of God, and then commanded them to be taken away.

The Miniſters continued with him that night, and a certain Friend coming to him, Oecolampadius asked him what news? His Friend anſwered, None: but (ſaith he) I'le tell you ſome news, I ſhall preſently be with my Lord Chriſt: and ſome asking him whether the light offended him: He putting his hand to his heart, ſaid, Here is abundance of light: In the morning, he prayed earneſtly with the words of David in the 51. Pſalm, which he repeated from the beginning to the end: and preſently after ſaid, O Chriſt, ſave me, and ſo he fell aſleep in the Lord.

The Papiſts ſpread many lyes abroad of his death: ſome ſaid that in deſpair he ſlew himſelf; others, that he was murthered, or poiſoned, &c. He dyed Anno Chriſti 1531. and of his Age 51. Eraſmus wrote to his friends concerning his Book about the Sacrament, Oecolampadium emiſiſſe libellum tam accuratè ſcriptum, tot machinis argumentorum, totque teſtimoniis inſtructum, ut poſſet vel electos in errorem pertrahere.

In the beginning of Reformation he was another Doctor in Helvetia; of a mild and quiet wit: ſomewhat ſlow in diſpatching buſineſſes, but very circumſpect: He took pleaſure in nothing ſo much as in reading and writing Commentaries; wherein he wrote upon Geneſis, Pſalms, Job, Iſaiah, Jeremy, Ezekiel, Daniel, and moſt of the ſmall Prophets, as alſo upon the Books of the New Teſtament: Before his Converſion he was ſuperſtitiouſly religious. So oft as he read the words of Inſtitution of the Lords Supper, he thought that ſome ſpiritual ſenſe was included in them, and yet ſtill drave out thoſe thoughts with this, Wilt thou be wiſer than other men? You ſhould believe as others believe: But it pleaſed God at laſt to enlighten him with his truth, which he ſubmitted to. He was moſt ſtudious of the peace and concord of the Church. He excelled in the knowledg of the Latin, Greek and Hebrew: and was very skilful in Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities. He was older than Martin Luther by one year.

The Life of John Frith, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1531.

John Frith was born at Weſtram in Kent, and had from his childhood a marvellous love to Learning; a wonderful promptneſs of Wit, and was of a ready capacity to receive and underſtand any thing: neither was there any diligence wanting in him, equal to that worthy diſpoſition that God had given him. He was firſt a Student in Cambridg, where he profited exceedingly in the knowledg both of the Arts and Tongues, where it pleaſed God he fell into acquaintance with William Tindal, through whoſe Inſtructions, he firſt received into his heart the ſeed of the Goſpel, and ſincere Godlineſs. His Birth. His Learning. His Converſion.

About the ſame time Cardinal Wolſie, undertaking to build a ſtately College in Oxford, ſought out the moſt learned men to be Fellows in the ſame, and amongſt others John Frith (though but Batchelor of Arts) was appointed for one: But when divers of them were perſecuted for Religion, and accuſed of Hereſie: he, together with ſome others, who were choſen with him out of Cambridg, was committed to Priſon, in a dark Cave where ſalt fiſh was then kept, the ſavor whereof infected them all, ſo that ſome of them dyed: But Mr. Frith, by Gods Providence, eſcaped the danger, in the ſame time year wherein Queen Elizabeth was born, having been diſmiſſed out of his former Priſon by means of Cardinal Wolſies Letter, whereupon he went beyond Sea to avoid the ſtorm: But after two years he came back, and having ſome buſineſs in Reading, he was there taken for a Vagabond, and ſet in the Stocks: where they ſuffered him to ſit till he was almoſt pined with hunger: At laſt he deſired to ſpeak with the Schoolmaſter of the Town, who when he came to him, Frith in Latin bewailed his captivity: The Schoolmaſter being overcome with his Eloquence, began exceedingly to affect and pity him, the rather when he ſpake in Greek to him alſo, and repeated divers Verſes out of Homer: upon this the Schoolmaſter repaired ſpeedily to the Magiſtrates, and procured his enlargement. His Impriſonment. His releaſe. Manifold afflictions. He is ſet in the ſtocks. His inlargement.

Yet neither then was he in ſafety; for Sir Thomas Moor (the then Lord Chancellor) perſecuted him both by Land and Sea, promiſing great rewards to thoſe that could bring any news of him: Frith, to avoid this ſtorm, changed place and apparel often; yet at laſt he was betrayed by one William Holt, a Taylor, who Judas-like pretended great friendſhip to him, and ſo he was ſent to the Tower, where he had many conflicts with the Biſhops, but eſpecially in writing with Sir Thomas Moor: and in his Diſputations he uſed ſuch ſtrength of Reaſon, and evidence of Scripture, that Doctor Canner, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, never gave more credit to any Author than to John Frith, and at Friths candle he lighted his lamp; alſo he converted Raſtal to his part, who was Moors Son-in-Law. Popiſh malice. His Impriſonment. Raſtal converted by him.

During his Impriſonment in the Tower it hapned that Doctor Curreine, Chaplain in ordinary to King Henry the Eight, preached a Sermon in Kent before his Majeſty, wherein he inveighed bitterly againſt the Sacramentaries, as they then were called, which denyed the Real Preſence: And he proceeded ſo far herein, as that he ſaid, It's no marvel though this abominable Hereſie doth ſo much prevail amongſt us, ſeeing there is now one in the Tower which is ſo bold as to write in the defence of it, and yet no man goeth about his reformation, &c. This Doctor was ſet on work by Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, on purpoſe to procure the deſtruction of Mr. Frith: They alſo ſuggeſted to the King that he was kept in the Tower rather for his ſafeguard than for his puniſhment by ſuch as favoured him, as by the Lord Cromwel and others: Hereupon the King called to him the Archciſhop of Canterbury and the Lord Cromwel, willing them forthwith to call Frith to Examination, that ſo he might either be compelled to recant, or to ſuffer condign puniſhment: But when they delayed time, the King took it ſo hainouſly, that he ſent a Commiſſion to the Popiſh malice. The King commands Frith to be tryed.

Arch-

Arch-biſhop, to Stokeſly Biſhop of London, and ſome others, without further delay to proceed to Examination of him: and that there ſhould be no concourſe of Citizens at the ſaid Examination; the Archbiſhop removed to Croydon, whither Stokeſly and the reſt of the Commiſſioners reſorted.

He is ſent for to Croydon.

But before the day for his Examination came, the Archbiſhop ſent one of his Gentlemen and one of his Porters to fetch Frith from the Tower to Croydon. This Gentleman had the Archbiſhops Letter, and the Kings Ring, to the Lord Fitz-Williams Conſtable of the Tower for the delivery of the Priſoner; The Lord Fitz-Williams lodging then at Weſtminſter, underſtanding for what end they were come, fell a curſing and banning Frith and all other Hereticks, ſaying, Take your Heretick with you, I am glad that I am rid of him.

His conference with the Biſhops men.

Frith being delivered to theſe two men, as they went in a Wherry towards Lambeth, the Gentleman being very ſorry for his condition, ſaid to him: "Conſider the "ſtate wherein you are, a man altogether caſt away in this world, if you do not the "more wiſely behave your ſelf: But though your caſe be very dangerous, yet may "you help your ſelf by giving way for a time, and ſomewhat relenting of your opi-"nion, which hereafter when occaſion and opportunity ſhall ſerve, you may pro-"mote again. You have many friends which will ſtand for you, ſo far as they are "able and dare do. It's great pity that one which hath ſuch ſingular knowledg in "Greek and Latine, and is ſo ready and ripe in all kind of Learning, as well in the Scrip-"tures as in the antient Fathers, ſhould now ſuddenly ſuffer all thoſe excellent gifts "to periſh, with little profit to the World, and leſs comfort to your Wife and Chil-"dren, and Kindred. And as for your opinion about the Sacrament, it's ſo unſea-"ably vented at this time in England, that it's like to do more hurt than good: There-"be ruled by good counſel till a fitter opportunity may ſerve. This I am ſure of, "that my Lord Cromwel and my Lord of Canterbury much favour you, knowing you "to be an eloquent and learned young man, young in years, but old in knowledg, "and likely to be a profitable inſtrument of much good in this Realm: and there-"fore they will never ſuffer you to ſuſtain any open ſhame if you will be adviſed by "their counſel: But if you ſtand ſtiff in your opinion, it's not poſſible for them to "ſave your life; for as you have good Friends, ſo you have mortal foes.

His courage and conſtancy.

I moſt heartily thank you Sir (ſaid Mr. Frith) for your good-will and counſel, whereby I ſee your love to me: yet my Cauſe and Conſcience is ſuch, that in no wiſe I either may or can, for any worldly reſpect, without danger of damnation ſtart aſide, and fly from the Truth whereof I am convinced, and which I have publiſhed concerning the Lords Supper: ſo that if I be asked what my judgment is about it, I muſt needs declare my knowledg and conſcience therein, as I have formerly written, though I were ſure to loſe twenty lives if I had ſo many: And further, you ſhall underſtand that I am furniſhed with Scriptures, Fathers, Schoolmen and others, for the proving of it; ſo that if I may be indifferently heard, I am ſure my Adverſaries can neither juſtly condemn me nor mine aſſertion, but that with me they muſt condemn Saint Auguſtine, and moſt of the antient Writers; yea the very Biſhops of Rome of antient time ſpeak for me, and defend my Cauſe. "Yea marry (quoth the "Gentleman) you ſay well, if you might be indifferently heard: but I much doubt "thereof, for that our Maſter Chriſt was not indifferently heard, nor ſhould, I think, "if he were now preſent in the World, eſpecially in this your opinion, the ſame be-"ing now ſo odious in the World, and we ſo far from the true knowledg thereof. Well (ſaid Mr. Frith) I know aſſuredly that this Doctrine of the Sacrament is very hard meat to be digeſted both of the Clergy and Laity: But this I will ſay to you, that if you live but twenty years more, whatſoever ſhall become of me, you ſhall ſee this whole Realm of mine opinion, though haply ſome particular perſons ſhall not be fully perſwaded therein; and if this come not to paſs, then count me the vaineſt man that ever you heard ſpeak with a Tongue. And whereas you ſay, my Death would be very grievous to my Friends, I grant that for a ſmall time it would be ſo: But if I ſhould ſo moderate my cauſe that I ſhould only be kept in Priſon, that would not only be a longer grief unto me, but would breed no ſmall diſquietneſs to my friends

A Propheſie.

both in body and mind: Therefore all things well conſidered, my death in this cauſe ſhall be better to me and all my Relations, than life in continual bondage and penury: And Almighty God knoweth what he hath to do with his poor Servant, whoſe Cauſe I now defend, and not mine own: from the which (through Gods Grace) I never intend to ſtart, nor otherwiſe to give place ſo long as God will give me life.

When they were landed at Lambeth, after they had refreſhed themſelves with Victuals, they all three went on foot towards Croydon: The Gentleman ſtill with himſelf lamenting the peril that Mr. Frith was in, and therefore he deviſed with himſelf by what means he might deliver him out of the Biſhops hands; and having in mind contriv'd the way, he walked with the Porter, and privately imparted his thoughts to him, and finding him forward to join with him therein, he went again to Mr. Frith, and told him that the buſineſs which he had undertaken, to lead him as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, ſo grieved him, that he was overwhelmed with cares and ſorrows, whereupon he was reſolved, what danger ſoever he incurred, to find out a way to deliver him out of the Lyons mouth: And yet, ſaid he, yonder good fellow and I have contrived a means whereby you may eaſily eſcape from this imminent danger, and we alſo be cleared from any vehement ſuſpicion: For when we come to yonders Hill, called Briſtow Cauſway, where are Woods on each hand, you ſhall turn into that on the left hand, which leads into Kent, and ſo by the help of your friends convey your ſelf away, and we will ſo order the matter, that they ſhall never ſeek that way for you, &c.

His eſcape contrived.

Mr. Frith having diligently hearkned to his ſpeech, ſaid with a ſmiling countenance, And is this the effect of your ſecret conſultation all this while? Surely, ſurely you have loſt more labor formerly, and ſo you are like to do this alſo: For if you ſhould both leave me here, and go to Croydon, declaring to the Biſhops that you had loſt Frith, I would ſurely follow after as faſt as I could, and bring them news that I had found and brought Frith again: Do you think that I am afraid to declare mine Opinion before the Biſhops in ſo manifeſt a Truth? "You are a fond man (quoth the Gentleman) thus to talk, do "you think, that your reaſoning with the Biſhops will do any good? But I much "marvel you were ſo willing to fly the Realm before you were taken, and now ſo "unwilling to ſave your ſelf when you may.

He refuſeth to fly, and why.

Marry (quoth Frith) there is a great difference between eſcaping then and now: For then I deſired to eſcape becauſe I was at liberty, and not yet attached, which liberty I would fain have enjoyed for the improvement of my Studies beyond-Sea, where I was Reader of the Greek Tongue: But now being taken by the higher Powers, and that by Almighty Gods permiſſion and providence I am fallen into the Biſhops hands only for Religions ſake, and for ſuch Doctrine as I am bound in conſcience, under pain of damnation, to maintain, if I ſhould now ſtart aſide and run away, I ſhould run from my God, and from the Teſtimony of his Word, whereby I ſhould deſerve a thouſand Hells. And therefore I moſt heartily thank you both for your good wills towards me, beſeeching you to bring me where I was appointed to be brought, or elſe I will go thither all alone. And ſo with a cheerful and merry countenance he went with them, ſpending the time with pleaſant and godly communication till they came to Croydon, where for that night he was well entertained in the Porters Lodg. On the morrow he was called before the Biſhops to be examined, at which time he ſhewed himſelf exceeding ripe and ready to anſwer all Objections, even beyond all mens expectations: And his Allegations out of S. Auguſtine and other Antient Fathers were ſuch, as ſome of them much doubted of St. Auguſtines authority in that caſe: and when they had done Doctor Heath in private confeſſed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that no man could avoid his Allegations out of S. Auguſtine; Yet after this, without any regard to his Piety, Learning, or Merit, he was turned over to Stokeſly Biſhop of London, who would not hear what S. Auguſtine or any other ſaid for his opinion: But calling him into his Conſiſtory, after he had witneſſed there a good Confeſſion, he condemned him, and ſo delivered him over to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to be burned.

His examination, and learning.

His unjuſt condemnation.

When

His patience. Gods mercy. His Death.

When he came into Smithfield, where he was to ſuffer, he ſhewed much conſtancy and courage: and being tyed to the ſtake, and the fire kindled, he willingly embraced the ſame: But the wind blowing away the flame, made his death ſomewhat the longer: yet (through Gods Grace) he bore it with ſuch patience even as though he felt no pain in that long torment, and ſo at laſt quietly reſigned up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1531. Whilſt Mr. Frith was beyond the Seas, he much helpt Mr. Tindal in the Tranſlation of the New Teſtament.

Popiſh malice.

At the time of his burning, one Doctor Cook (a Parſon in London) admoniſhed the people that they ſhould no more pray for him than they would pray for a Dog; whereupon John Frith ſmiling, prayed God to forgive him: This ſpeech of the Doctor much moved the people to anger, and this mild anſwer of the Martyr ſunk deeply into their minds.

His Works.

The Books that were written by this bleſſed Martyr were many, and much ſought after in King Henry the Eighth, and in Queen Maries Reign, to be burned: and in the times of King Edward the Sixth, and Queen Elizabeth, for the inſtruction and comfort of the godly. But it pleaſed God by a marvellous occaſion to cauſe three or four of his moſt uſeful Treatiſes to be reprinted of late, which was this.

A ſtrange Providence.

On Midſummer Eve Anno Chriſti 1626. a Codfiſh being brought into the Market in Cambridg, and there cut up for ſale, in the Maw of the Fiſh was found wrapt up in Canvas a Book in Decimo ſexto containing three Treatiſes of Mr. Friths: The Fiſh was caught about the coaſt of Lin, called Lin-deeps, by one William Skinner: when the Fiſh was cut open, the garbiſh was thrown by, which a woman looking upon, eſpied the Canvas, and taking it up, found the Book wrapped up in it, being much ſoiled and covered over with a kind of ſlime and congealed matter. This was beheld with great admiration, and by Benjamin Prime, the Batchelors Beadle (who was preſent at the opening of the Fiſh) was carried to the Vicechancellor, who took ſpecial notice of it, examining the particulars before mentioned. By Daniel Boys (a Book-Binder) the leaves were carefully opened and cleanſed: The Treatiſes contained in it were,

A Preparation to the Croſs.
A Preparation to Death.
The Treaſure of Knowledg.
A Mirror, or Glaſs to know thy ſelf.
A brief Inſtruction to teach one willingly to dye, and not to fear Death.

How uſeful the reviving of theſe Treatiſes by ſuch a ſpecial Providence hath been, may eaſily be diſcerned by ſuch as have lived ſince thoſe times.

The Life of Thomas Bilney, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1531.

His birth & education. His zeal.

THomas Bilney was born in England, and brought up at the Univerſity of Cambridg, where he profited exceedingly in all the Liberal Sciences, was choſen Fellow of Trinity Hall, and commenced Batchelor of both Laws: But betaking himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, he was wonderfully enflamed with the love of true Religion and Godlineſs.

Mr. Latimer converted by him.

He was requeſted to preach at a poor Cure belonging to that Hall; He converted many of his fellows to the knowledg of the Goſpel; and amongſt others, Hugh Latimer, who was Croſs-keeper at Cambridg, and uſed to carry it before the Proceſſion.

His zeal in preaching.

Bilney afterwards forſaking the Univerſity, went into many places Teaching and Preaching every where, and ſharply reproving the Pomp and Inſolency of the Clergy:

whereupon Cardinal Welſey cauſed him to be apprehended Anno Chriſti 1527. and to be examined before him: and ſundry Articles to be drawn up againſt him: amongſt which theſe were ſome. Popiſh malice.

That in the Church of Willeſdon he had exhorted the people to put away their Gods of Silver and Gold, and to leave offering to them, for that it was known, that ſuch things as they had offered to them were many times ſpent upon Whores and Stews: And that the Jews and Saracens would have been Chriſtians long ago, had it not been for the Idolatry of Chriſtians, and their offering to ſtocks and ſtones. That Chriſt is our only Mediator, and that therefore we ſhould not ſeek to Saints. That man is ſo imperfect in himſelf that he cannot merit by his own deeds. That it was a great Blaſphemy to ſay, that to be buried in Saint Francis's Cowl would take away four parts of penance, ſeeing the Blood of Chriſt taketh away the ſins of the World. That it was great folly to go on Pilgrimage. That Miracles done at Walſingham, Canterbury, &c. were done by the Devil, through Gods permiſſion, to blind the poor people: That the Pope hath not the Keys that Peter had, except he follow Peter in his life. That for theſe 500 years there hath been no good Pope, and that of all ſince Chriſts time, we read but of fifty that were good. Laſtly, that he had propheſied, that there would come others beſides him that would preach to the people the ſame Faith and manner of living that he did: which (ſaid he) is the very true Goſpel of Chriſt, and agreeable to the minds of the holy Fathers, &c. His apprehenſion. The Articles againſt him. A Propheſie.

For theſe and ſuch like things, the Cardinal being himſelf buſied in the affairs of the Kingdom, turned him over to Tonſtal Biſhop of London, who, after examination of witneſſes againſt him, urged him to recant; But he ſtifly refuſed three ſeveral days, ſtill ſaying, Fiat Juſtitia, & Judicium in nomine Domini; And, Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea. Then the Biſhop after delibetation putting off his Cap, ſaid, In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus ſancti, Amen. Exurgat Deus, & diſſipentur, inimici ejus; and ſo making a Croſs on his Forehead and Breaſt, he ſaid; I, by the conſent and counſel of my Brethren here preſent, do pronounce and declare thee Thomas Bilney to be convict of Hereſie, and for the reſt of the Sentence we will take deliberation till to morrow. At which time the Biſhops being again aſſembled, London asked him if he would yet return to the Unity of the Church, and revoke his Error? Mr. Bilney anſwered, That he would not be a ſlander to the Goſpel, truſting that he was not ſeparated from the Church, and that if multitude of witneſſes might be credited, he could have thirty men of honeſt life of his part for one on the contrary brought in againſt him: The Biſhop told him it was too late, they could admit no witneſs, and therefore exhorted him to abjure: This conteſt continued between the Biſhops and him for divers days, they ſtill urging and he refuſing to recant: yet at laſt through humane frailty he told them that he was perſwaded by Mr. Dancaſter to abjure, and ſo reading his Abjuration, he ſubſcribed it, and for penance was enjoyned to abide in Priſon till he was releaſed by the Cardinal, and that the next day he ſhould go bare-headed before the Proceſſion, carrying a Faggot on his ſhoulder, and ſo ſtand at Pauls Croſs during all the Sermon. His condemnation. His fall. His penance.

In the time of his Impriſonment, before this, he wrote to Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of London ſeveral Letters; and in one of them he compares the Prieſts and Fryars that accuſed him, to Jannes and Jambres, to Elymas, to Demetrius, to the Pythoniſs, to Balaam, Cain, Iſhmael, &c. Adding further, Theſe are thoſe Phyſitians upon whom the woman vexed twelve years with a Bloody Iſſue, ſpent all that ſhe had, and found no help, but was ſtill worſe and worſe, till at laſt ſhe came to Chriſt, and was healed by him: Oh the mighty power of the Moſt High! which I alſo miſerable ſinner have often taſted and felt: whereas before I had ſpent all that I had upon theſe ignorant Phyſitians, ſo that I had little ſtrength left in me, leſs mony, and leaſt wit and underſtanding: But at laſt, I heard ſpeak of Jeſus, even then when the New Teſtament was tranſlated by Eraſmus, which, when I underſtood to be eloquently done, I bought it, being allured thereto rather by the elegant Latin, than the Word of God, (for at that time I knew not what it meant,) and looking into it, by Gods ſpecial Pro- His letter to Tonſtal. His firſt converſion.

vidence, I met with thoſe words of the Apoſtle St Paul, This is a true ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the World to ſave ſinners, whereof I am the chief. O moſt ſweet and comfortable ſentence to my Soul! This one ſentence, through Gods inſtruction and inward working, did ſo exhilarate my heart, which before was wounded with the guilt of my ſins, and being almoſt in deſpair, that immediately I found marvellous comfort and quietneſs in my ſoul, ſo that my bruiſed bones did leap for joy. After this the Scripture began to be more ſweet unto me than the Hony and the Hony-comb: whereby I learned that all my Travels, Faſtings, Watchings, Redemption of Maſſes and Pardons, without Faith in Chriſt, were but, as S. Auguſtine calls them, an haſty and ſwift running out of the right way: and as Fig-leaves which could not cover Adams nakedneſs. Neither could I ever obtain quietneſs and reſt, or be eaſed of the ſharp ſtings and bitings of my ſins till I was taught of God that Leſſon, John 3. 14, 15. As Moſes lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life: Aſſoon as (according to the meaſure of Grace given unto me by God) I began to taſte and reliſh this heavenly Leſſon, which none can teach but God only, I deſired the Lord to encreaſe my Faith: and at laſt deſired nothing more than that I being ſo comforted by him, might be enabled by his holy Spirit and Grace from above, to teach the wicked his ways, which are all Mercy and Truth, that ſo ſinners might be converted to him by me. I did with my whole power teach, that all men ſhould firſt acknowledg their ſins, and condemn them, and afterwards hunger and thirſt for that righteouſneſs which is by Faith in Chriſt, &c. For theſe things I have been cryed out of, attached, and am now caſt into Priſon, though I exhorted all men not ſo to cleave to outward Ceremonies, as to be ſatisfied therewith, and ſo to loath and wax weary of Chriſt, &c. Yet at laſt through infirmity, rather than by conviction, he was drawn to abjure and ſubmit himſelf, Anno Chriſti 1529.

His inward joy.

Without faith nothing pleaſes God.

His deſire to convert others.

The danger of apoſtacy.

After Mr. Bilneys Abjuration (which we mentioned before) he fell into ſuch terrors of Conſcience, that he was near the point of utter deſpair; and returning to Cambridg, he continued under ſuch terrors, that his friends were fain to be with him night and day, endeavoring to comfort him, but all in vain: This continued a whole year: During which time he was in ſuch anguiſh that nothing did him good, neither eating nor drinking, &c. yea he thought that all the Word of God was againſt him, and ſounded his condemnation: But Anno Chriſti 1531. he began, through Gods mercy, to feel ſome comfort, being reſolved to lay down his life for the Truth which before he had renounced: whereupon taking his leave of his Friends, he went into Norfolk, preaching firſt in private to confirm the Brethren, afterwards in the fields, confeſſing his fact, and intreating all to beware by him, and never to truſt in their fleſhly Friends in the cauſe of Religion: At Norwich he was apprehended, and by the Biſhop caſt into priſon: whither Dr. Cole and Dr. Stoakes were ſent to diſpute with him; but Bilneys Doctrine and good life ſo prevailed with Cole, that he was ſomewhat reclaimed, and brought to favor the Goſpel.

Great comfort after great troubles.

Prevalency of the truth.

His conference with a Fryar.

Alſo whilſt he was at Ipſwich, there came one Fryar Bruſierd to reaſon with him about thoſe things which he had taught: At which time Mr. Bilney told him that the ſigns and lying wonders attributed by S. Paul to the Pope, were thoſe wonders which were daily wrought in the Church, not by the power of God, but by the illuſions of Satan, whereby he labors to draw men to put their Faith in our Lady and other Saints, and not in God alone, as we are commanded in the holy Scriptures: This free ſpeech ſo incenſed the Fryar, that he ſpake thus to him; But that I believe and know, that God and all his Saints will take everlaſting revenge upon thee, I would ſurely with theſe nails of mine be thy death for this horrible and enormous injury againſt the pretious Blood of Chriſt. For whereas God ſaith, I deſire not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould convert and live: thou blaſphemeſt him as though he ſhould lay privy ſnares to betray us: which, were it true, we might ſay with Hugo de Sancta victoria, If it be an Error, it is of thee, O God, that we are deceived; for theſe be confirmed with ſuch ſigns and wonders which cannot be done by thee alone: But I ſee you wreſt the Scriptures to a reprobate bate ſenſe, ſo that I am ſcarce able to hold mine Eyes from tears, hearing theſe words from you; Therefore farewel.

The Fryars rage againſt him.

During his latter Impriſonment they uſed many means to have withdrawn him from his ſtedfaſtneſs, which not prevailing, he at laſt was condemned to death. His conſtancy.

The day before his Execution, ſome friends finding him eating heartily, with much cheerfulneſs, and a quiet mind, ſaid, That they were glad to ſee him at that time ſo heartily to refreſh himſelf: O, ſaid he, I imitate thoſe who having a ruinous houſe to dwell in, yet beſtow coſt as long as they may to hold it up: Diſcourſing further with them for their edification, ſome put him in mind of the heat of the fire, yet told him withal, that the comforts of Gods Spirit ſhould cool it to his everlaſting refreſhing: whereupon he putting his finger into the flame of the candle (as alſo he did at divers other times) I feel (ſaid he) by experience that fire is hot, yet I am perſwaded by Gods holy Word, and by the experience of ſome ſpoken of in it, that in the flame they felt no heat, and in the fire no conſumption; and I believe, that though the ſtubble of my body be waſted, yet my ſoul ſhall be purged thereby, and after ſhort pain, will be joy unſpeakable, alleaging that text Iſai. 43. 1, 2. His comfort before death. An excellent ſpech. He puts his finger into the candle. His faith.

The next morning, the Officers fetching him to Execution, a certain friend intreated him to be conſtant, and to take his death patiently: To whom he ſaid, I am ſailing with the Marriner through a boiſterous Sea, but ſhortly ſhall be in the Haven, &c. Help me with your Prayers. An excellent ſpeech.

By the way as he went, he gave much Alms, and at the place of Execution he ſpake to the people, confeſſing his Faith, by rehearſing the Articles of the Creed: and afterwards prayed privately with earneſt elevation of his Eyes and Hands to Heaven: Being tyed to the ſtake, the Fryars deſired him to declare his charity to them, by aſſuring the people that they were not the cauſers of his death: For, ſaid they, they think that we have procured it, and thereupon will withdraw their charitable alms from us: whereupon he ſaid, I pray you, good people, be never the worſe to theſe men for my ſake, for they were not the Authors of my death. His charity. His martyrdom.

The fire being kindled, the wind drove away the flame from him, ſo that he was the longer a burning, holding up his hands, crying ſometimes Jeſus, ſometimes, Credo, and ſo at laſt yielded up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1531. His patience. His death.

WILLIAM TINDALL

The Life of William Tindal, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1536.

His birth & education.

WIlliam Tindal was born about the Borders of Wales, and brought up from a child in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he grew up and encreaſed in the knowledg of the Tongues and the Liberal Arts, but eſpecially of the Scriptures, whereunto his mind was ſingularly addicted: inſomuch as, being in Magdalen-Hall, he read privately to ſome Fellows and Students ſome parts of Divinity, inſtructing them in the knowledg and truth of the Scriptures: His life alſo was ſo blameleſs, that he acquired much love and eſteem thereby.

His zeal.

After he had profited exceedingly, and taken his Degrees there, he removed to Cambridg, and being well ripened in the knowledg of Gods Word, he went to live with one Mr. Welch in Gloceſterſhire, where he was Tutor to his Children: And many Abbots and Doctors reſorting thither, Mr. Tindal diſcourſing with them of Luther, Eraſmus, &c. ſhewed them plainly his judgment in Religion, proving the ſame by the Word of God, and confuting their Errors; which cauſed them to bear a ſecret grudg in their hearts againſt him.

His remove into Gloceſterſhire.

Not long after it happened that ſome of theſe great Doctors invited Maſter Welch and his Lady to a Banquet, where they had talk at will, uttering their blind Superſtitions without gainſaying. Then Mr. Welch and his Lady coming home, and calling for Mr. Tindal, began to reaſon with him about theſe matters whereof they had talked before with the Prieſts. Mr. Tindal anſwering by the Scriptures, maintained the Truth, and confuted their Errors, whereupon the Lady Welch ſaid, There was ſuch a Doctor as may expend 100 l. per annum, and ſuch an one as may ſpend 200 l. per annum, and ſuch another as may ſpend 300 l. per annum, and is it reaſon, think you, that we ſhould believe you before them? Mr. Tindal gave her no anſwer at that time, and talked but little afterwards of thoſe matters, becauſe he ſaw it was in vain: But fell upon tranſlating a Book called Enchiridion militis Chriſtiani, and having finiſhed it, he gave it to the Knight and his Lady, who, after they had well read and peruſed the ſame, did no more ſo often invite the Doctorly Prelates to their houſe as before, neither had they that chear and countenance when they came as formerly,

Mr. Tindals wiſdom.

The fruits of it.

merly, which they well perceiving, ſuppoſed that it was by the means of Mr. Tindal, whereupon they utterly withdrew themſelves, and came no more thither.

Popiſh malice and ignorance.

Then did the Country Prieſts cluſter together, ſtorming and railing againſt Mr. Tindal in their Alehouſe-meetings, concerning whom himſelf writes thus: I was (ſaith he) in that Country much moleſted by a company of unlearned Prieſts, that had never ſeen more Latin than in their Porteſſes and Miſſals, which yet many of them can ſcarcely read: and if they be but ſorrily learned, they get Albertus magnus de ſecretis mulierum, which they pore night and day upon, making notes therein, &c.

He is accuſed.

He prayeth for ſtrength.

He is railed at.

Theſe men railed and raged againſt him, affirming that he held Heretical opinions, and thereupon accuſed him to the Biſhop and Chancellor, whereupon the Chancellor appointed thoſe Prieſts and Mr. Tindal alſo to appear before him; and Mr. Tindal, ſuſpecting the matter, as he went, prayed heartily unto God to give him ſtrength to ſtand faſt to the Truth: When he came, the Chancellor threatned him grievouſly, reviling and rating him, as though he had been a Dog, accuſing him of many things whereof no proof could be brought, and ſo diſmiſſed him for the preſent.

Popiſh blaſphemy.

Mr. Tindals zeal.

Not long after, Mr. Tindal happening into the company of one that was eſteemed a learned Doctor, in diſputing with him he drave him to that iſſue, that the Doctor burſt out into theſe Blaſphemous words, We had better be without Gods Laws, than the Popes. Mr. Tindal hearing this, full of godly zeal, replyed, I deſie the Pope and all his Laws; and if God ſpare my life, ere many years I will cauſe a boy that drives the Plough to know more of the Scripture than you do.

He departs from Maſter Welch.

Gods providence.

The rage of the Prieſts encreaſing, Mr. Tindal told Mr. Welch, that he well perceived that he could ſtay there no longer with ſafety, and that his ſtay might be prejudicial to his Family; and therefore with his good leave he departed and went to London, where he preached a while, as he had done in the Country before: And then hearing a great commendation of Cuthbert Tonſtal, Biſhop of London, he endeavoured to get into his ſervice, but the Lord ſaw that it was not good for him, and therefore he found little favor in the Biſhops ſight.

He goes into Germany.

His zeal.

Remaining thus in London about the ſpace of a year, and being deſirous, for the good of his Country, to tranſlate the New Teſtament into Engliſh, he found that there was no place for him to do it in England, and therefore being aſſiſted by Maſter Humphry Munmouth, a godly Citizen, and other good men, he left the Land, and went into Germany; where this good man being inflamed with a tender care of and zeal for his Country, refuſed no travel nor pains, if by any means poſſible he might reduce his Brethren and Countrymen of England to the ſame taſte and underſtanding of Gods holy Word and Truth which the Lord had endued him withal. And, conferring with Maſter John Frith, he thought in his mind that no way would more conduce thereunto, than if the Scriptures were tranſlated into their vulgar language, that ſo the people might ſee the plain text before them; For he well perceived that one great cauſe of Error was, becauſe the knowledg of the Scriptures was hidden from the peoples Eyes: upon theſe conſiderations he there ſet upon this work: And having tranſlated the New Teſtament Anno Chriſti 1527. He ſet upon the Old, and finiſhed the five Books of Moſes, with ſundry moſt learned and godly Prologues prefixed before every one of them: The like alſo he did upon the New Teſtament: Beſides divers other godly Treatiſes which he wrote there; which being publiſhed, and ſent over into England, became exceeding profitable to the whole Engliſh Nation.

The Bible tranſlated firſt into Engliſh.

His conference with Luther.

At his firſt going over into Germany, he went into Saxony, and had much conference with Luther, and other learned men in thoſe quarters: and then returning into the Netherlands, made his greateſt abode at Antwerp: He wrote alſo divers other Books under ſundry Titles, amongſt which is that moſt worthy monument of his, called, The Obedience of a Chriſtian Man, with divers other Treatiſes, as the Wicked Mammon, the Practice of Prelates, with divers Expoſitions upon ſundry portions of Scripture: As alſo ſome Anſwers to Sir Thomas Moore, and other Adverſaries of the Truth, no leſs delectable than right fruitful to be read: Theſe Books being ſent over and diſperſed in England, it cannot be imagined what a dore of Light they opened to the Eyes of all the Nation, which for a long time had been ſhut up in darkneſs. He wrote wrote alſo one Book of the Declaration of the Sacrament and againſt the Maſs, but he kept it by him, and did not print it, conſidering how the people, for the preſent, were held under their groſs Idolatry; and therefore judging that it would be odious to them to hear theſe things at the firſt, he waited a fitter time for the publication of it.

His excellent works.

The benefit come by them.

His prudence.

Theſe godly Books, but eſpecially his Tranſlation of the New Teſtament coming abroad, as they brought ſingular profit to the godly: So the ungodly Clergy, diſdaining and envying that the people ſhould be wiſer than they, and withal, fearing leſt by the ſhining beams of the Truth, their Hypocriſie and works of darkneſs ſhould be unmasked, they began to make a great ſtir: But eſpecially, the Devil envying the progreſs of the Goſpel, ſought by all means to hinder the bleſſed travels of this worthy man: For when he had finiſhed his Tranſlation of Deuteronomy, minding to print it at Hamborough, he ſailed thitherward. But by the way upon the coaſt of Holland he ſuffered ſhiprack, by which he loſt all his Books and Writings, and ſo was compelled to begin all again, to his great hinderance and doubling of his labors.

Satans malice againſt the truth.

His great afflictions.

Thus having by that ſhipwrack loſt all his mony, copies and time, yet (through Gods mercy) he was not diſcouraged: But, taking the opportunity of another ſhip, he went to Hamborough, where he met with Mr. Coverdal, who aſſiſted him in the tranſlation of the five Books of Moſes, the ſweating Sickneſs being in that Town all the while, which was Anno Chriſti 1529. And during their imployment in that work, they were entertained by a religious Widow, Miſtres Margaret Van Emerſon.

Mr. Coverdal aſſiſts him.

A widows charity.

When his Engliſh Teſtament came abroad, Satans and the Popes inſtruments raged exceedingly, ſome ſaying that there were a thouſand Hereſies in it: others that it was impoſſible to tranſlate the Scriptures into Engliſh: others, that it was not lawful for the Lay-people to have it in their own Language, &c. and at laſt the Biſhops and Frieſts procured of King Henry the Eight a Proclamation, prohibiting the buying or reading of it, Anno Chriſti 1527.

Popiſh lyes.

The Bible prohibited to be read.

Yet not ſatisfied herewith, they ſuborned one Henry Philips to go over to Antwerp to betray him: who, when he came thither, inſinuated himſelf into Mr. Tindals company, and pretended great friendſhip to him: and having learned where his abode was, he went to Bruxels, and there prevailed ſo far, that he brought with him the Emperors Attorney to Antwerp, and, pretending to viſit Mr. Tindal, he betrayed him to two Catchpoles, which preſently carried him to the Attorney: who, after examination, ſent him to Priſon in the Caſtle of Filford, 18 miles off, and withal they ſeized upon all his Writings, and what elſe he had at his Lodging.

Popiſh malice.

He is betrayed.

A Judas.

Caſt into priſon.

The Engliſh Merchants at Antwerp, who loved Tindal very well, did what they could to procure his releaſe; alſo Letters were ſent by the Lord Cromwel and others out of England in his behalf: But Philips ſo beſtirred himſelf, that all their endeavors came to nothing: and Tindal was at laſt brought to his anſwer, and after much reaſoning, although he deſerved not death, yet they condemned him to dye.

Means uſed for his releaſe.

When he was brought forth to the place of Execution, whilſt he was tying to the ſtake, he cried with a fervent and loud voice, Lord, open the King of Englands eyes. And ſo he was firſt ſtrangled by the Hangman, and then burnt, Anno Chriſti 1536.

His martyrdom.

The power of his Doctrine and the ſincerity of his Life was ſuch, that during his impriſonment (which was about a year and an half) he converted his Keeper and his Daughter, and ſome others of his houſhold: and Philips, that betrayed him, long enjoyed not the price of innocent Blood, but by Gods juſt judgment was devoured by lice.

A Jailor converted.

Gods judgment on a perſecutor.

The Emperors Attorney, that proſecuted againſt him, left this teſtimony of him, that he was Vir doctus, pius & bonus, a learned, pious and godly man: Whilſt Maſter Tindal was Priſoner in the Caſtle, there was much writing, and great Diſputations betwixt him and them of the Univerſity of Lovain (which was but nine or ten miles from thence) ſo that they had all enough of him, not knowing how to anſwer the authorities and teſtimonies of Scriptures, whereupon he grounded his Doctrine.

A Conjurer prevented by Mr. Tindals preſence.

On a time the Company of Engliſh Merchants being at Supper together at Antwerp, there was a Jugler amongſt them who by his Magical Art could fetch all kind of dainty diſhes,

dishes, and wine, from any place they pleased, and set it on the Table incontinently before them, with many other such like things: This being much talked of abroad, Mr. Tindal hearing of it, desired of some of the Merchants that he might be present at supper to see this Jugler play his pranks. Accordingly supper was appointed, and Mr. Tindal with the Merchants went to it: and the Jugler, being requested to play his pranks, and to shew his cunning he after his wonted boldness began to utter all that he could do: but all was in vain: so that at last, after all his sweating, toiling and labor, when he saw that nothing would go forwards, but that all his enchantments were void, he openly confessed that there was some man present at supper which disturbed and hindered all his doings.

Concerning his Translation of the New Testament, which was so vilified by his Adversaries, he thus writes in an Epistle to John Frith: I call God to record against the day we shall appear before our Lord Jesus, to give up reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one syllable of Gods Word against my conscience; nor would do it for all that is in the Earth, whether honour, pleasure or profit, &c. His sincerity.

Most of his Works are mentioned before in his Life. His works.

The Life of Bertholdus Hallerus, who dyed Anno Christi 1536.

Berthold Haller born in Helvetia Anno Christi 1502. and from his childhod was much addicted to Learning, and therefore after he had been trained up at School, he went to Collen, where he applyed himself to the study of the Arts and Tongues, and afterwards betook himself to the study of Divinity, and commenced Batchelor in Divinity. Then returned he into his own Country, and at Bern was chosen first a Canon, and after that a publick Preacher: For indeed he excelled all his Colleagues in Piety, Learning and Eloquence. His birth & education. His preferments.

About this time Hulderick Zuinglius began to preach at Glorana, and afterwards at Zurick, the Gospel of Christ purely, by whose Ministry it pleased God to enlighten our Haller, who, consulting with flesh and blood, presently adjoined himself to Zuinglius, and endevored to propagate the Truth both publickly and privately. His conversion.

Anno Christi 1526 the twelve Pages of the Helvetians appointed a Disputation at Baden about matters of Religion whither, when Zuinglius could not go with safety, Oecolampadius and Haller went thither, where they had a great dispute with John Eccius, the Pontificians Champion. A disputation.

The year after, the Bernates (which is the most potent Canton of the Switzers) desired a Copy of that Disputation; and when they could not obtain it, and the differences about Religion began to encrease, by a publick Writing set forth Decemb. 17. they appointed another Disputation in their City: To which they invited their neighbor Bishops, intreating them also to bring their Divines along with them: which if they refused, they threatned to lay a fine upon their possessions which were within their Jurisdiction: They also invited any other Divines out of other parts to come to the Disputation, promising them safety upon the publick Faith: They also agreed upon Laws for the Disputation, and published the Questions which were to be handled: which were, That the Church hath but one Head, viz. Christ; and that she knows not the voice of any other. That the Church can make no Laws besides the Word of God; and therefore no man is bound by Traditions. That Christ hath satisfied for the sins of the World: and therefore they which seek out any other way of Salvation, or expiating their sins, deny Christ. That the Body and Blood of Christ are not received corporally in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. That the Mass wherein Christ is offered up to his Father for the quick and the dead, is blasphemy, and an abomination before God. That Christ alone is our Mediator and Advocate to his Father: And that no other is to be sought out or invocated. That after this Life there is no Purgatory. That Images are not to be worshipped: Another disputation. The questions.

ſhipped: and therefore that all that are ſet up in Churches for that end, ought to be taken away, That Matrimony is not prohibited to any order of men.

A Reformation.

January 7. Anno Chriſti 1528. this Diſputation was held, and the iſſue of it was, that moſt were ſatisfied in all theſe points, ſo that preſently after, Popery was caſt out of the City, and all the large territories of the Bernates, by the unanimous conſent of all, (though the Pontificians did all that poſſibly they could to hinder it) and by their example, ſome of their neighbors did the like, and in particular the City of Geneva.

His Death.

When thus our Haller had been a great inſtrument of Reformation in this Country, and had ſet things in good order in the Church, ſo that his fame began much to ſpread abroad, it pleaſed God to take him away by an immature death, Anno Chriſti 1536. and of his Age 44. to the great grief of all his Friends.

The Life of Urbanus Regius, who died Anno Chriſti 1541.

His Birth.

Rbanus Regius was born in Arga longa, in the Territories of Count Montfort, of honeſt Parents, who bred him him up in Learning, and when his childhood was over, they ſent him to Lindau, where was a School famous both for the Maſters and ſtore of Scholars; Here he profited much in Grammer Learning, ſo that from thence he was ſent to Friburg, where he was a diligent auditor of ſundry men excelling in all kind of Learning.

His Education.

His Studiouſneſs.

Then was he entertained in the houſe of Zaſius, an excellent Lawyer, who loved him dearly, for his diligence and induſtry; Zaſius alſo allowed him the uſe of his Library: In which Regius did (as it were) hide himſelf, diligently reading over all ſuch Authors as were fit for his ſtudies: and therein eſpecially obſerved ſuch Notes as Zaſius in his younger days had written in the Margins of them: which Notes Regius, in the night time, uſed to write out: ſo that when Zaſius aroſe ſometimes in the night, becauſe he could not ſleep, he ſtill found Regius writing out thoſe Annotations, whereupon he uſed ſoftly to pull him by the Ear, ſaying, Thou wilt get all my Art and Learning from me. And when at any time he had found him aſleep with his head leaning on the table, he uſed to lay one or two great Law-books upon his ſhoulders, and ſo leave him till he waked. Zaſius loved him as his ſon, both for the ſweetneſs of his nature and carriage, as alſo for his diligence and induſtry in his ſtudies.

His remove to Baſil.

When thus at Friburg he had informed his judgement, and ſtored his mind with Learning, he went to Baſil, that by hearing the Profeſſors of the Arts and Tongues, he might enrich himſelf with more Polite Learning.

And then to Ingolſtade.

At this time of all the Univerſities of Germany, Ingolſtade was the moſt famous, which was governed by John Eccius, a moſt learned man in Philoſophy: whoſe fame coming to the Ears of Regius, he left Baſil, and went to Ingolſtade. In that place (where there was a great confluence of Students) beſides the publick Lectures, there were many which read privately: amongſt whom Regius alſo ſet to reading private Lectures, having many that reſorted to hear him: At laſt, divers Noble men ſent their ſons to him to be educated, deſiring him to furniſh their children with Books, and all other neceſſaries, for which they would take care to pay him again quarterly: But when he had run into debt for them, they neglected to return their money, which cauſed him to think of departing, being tired out with the importunity of his Creditors; and having an opportunity, he liſted himſelf a Souldier under a Captain that went againſt the Turks, leaving his Books and other furniture to be divided amongſt the Creditors.

He is Ill dealt with.

He turns Souldier.

Being now amongſt the Souldiers, it happened that John Eccius (who was Governor of the Univerſity) coming forth to ſee the Souldiers, eſpyed Regius amongſt them, and enquiring the cauſe of his ſo ſudden a change, he told him how thoſe Noble men had ſerved him; whereupon Eccius got him releaſed from his Captain, and by his Captain, and by his Authority, procured the Debts to be paid by the Parents of those Youths which had been with him; whereupon he returned to his ſtudies again; and growing famous for his wit and learning, Maximilian the Emperour paſſing through Ingolſtade, made him his Laureat-Poet and Orator.

After the departure of Maximilian, he grew ſo grateful to Erneſt, Duke of Bavaria, and Leonard Eccius a Noble man, that he was made one of the Profeſſors in the Univerſity of Ingolſtade. And Anno Chriſti 1516. by the order of his Prince, he dealt effectually with Eraſmus Roterodamus to draw him to Ingolſtade: And though he could not prevail, yet he had this Teſtimony given him by Eraſmus, that he was vir candidus, prudens, facundus, eruditus; in ſumma, omnibus omnium Gratiarum ac Muſarum dotibus præditus. A candid, wiſe, eloquent and learned man, &c. Then Regius falling to the ſtudy of Divinity, preferred that before all other Learning: applying himſelf wholly to the ſearching out of the Divine Myſteries therein contained & a while after, the controverſie growing hot between Luther and Eccius, Regius favouring Luthers Doctrine, becauſe he would not offend Eccius, to whom he was many ways bound, left Ingolſtade, and went to Auſpurg, and there, at the importunity of the Magiſtrates and Citizens, he undertook the Government of the Church, and being offended at the groſs Idolatry of the Papiſts, he joyned with Luther, and preached againſt the ſame: and having written to Zuinglius to know his judgment about the Sacrament, and Original Sin, he received ſuch ſatisfaction, that he joyned in opinion with him about the ſame.

He is made a Profeſſor in Ingolſtade.

Eraſmus teſtimony of him.

He goes to Auſpurg.

He joyns with Zuinglius.

At that time the Anabaptiſts crept into Auſpurg, and held private Conventicles, to the diſturbance of the Publick Peace; for which the Magiſtrates impriſoned the chiefeſt of them. Amongſt which there was a woman of good quality caſt into Priſon: who boaſted that ſhe could defend her opinion againſt Regius, if ſhe might but have liberty to confer with him: Hereupon ſhe was called before the Senate, where Regius alſo was appointed to meet with her: There ſhe produced divers Texts of Scripture to confirm her Errors: But Regius did ſo clearly and fully open the genuine ſenſe of them, that every one, which was not wilfully blind, might eaſily diſcern the truth: But this wilfull woman was ſo far from ſubmitting to it, that ſhe impudently ſpake thus unto Regius, Egregia enimvero, Urbane frater, hæc diſputandi ratio inter me, & te. Tu in molli culcitra ad latera Conſulum adſidens, quaſi ex Apollinis tripode proloqueris: ego miſera, humi proſtrata, ex duris vinculis cauſam dicere cogor. To this Urbanus anſwered, Nec vero injuria, ſoror: ut quæ ſemel è ſervitute Diaboli per Chriſtum in libertatem adſerta, tua ſponte iterum cervicem turpi jugo ſubmiſiſti; & iſtis te ornamentis veſanus oſtentat genius aliis in exemplum. The Senate perceiving that they labored in vain whilſt they ſought to reclaim them, by a Decree baniſhed them the City.

Anabaptiſts diſturb the peace of the Church.

He diſputes with a ſhe-Anabaptiſt.

Regius Preaching againſt Purgatory and Indulgences, the malice and cruelty of the Papiſts prevailed at length to the driving him out of that City: But after a while, by the earneſt prayers of the Citizens, he was called back again to his former Charge, where alſo he marryed a wife, by whom he had thirteen children.

He is driven away by Papiſts.

His return.

His marriage.

About the ſame time Eccius came thither, and ſought by all means to turn him from the Truth; but in vain: He ſent alſo Faber and Cochlæus with flatteries and large promiſes, who prevailed as little as the other.

His conſtancy.

Anno Chriſti 1530. when the Diet was held at Auſpurg, for quieting the controverſies about Religion, the Duke of Brunſwick coming thither, by importunity prevailed with Regius to go to Luneburg in his Country, to take care of the Church there: In which journey at Coburg he met with Luther, and ſpent a whole day in familiar conference with him, about matters of great moment, of which himſelf writes, That he never had a more comfortable day in his life. As theſe words of his in a Letter to one of his friends in Auſpurg do teſtifie, wherein he writes thus, Cum Saxoniam peterem, Coburgi integrum diem ſolus cum Luthero, viro Dei, tranſegeram, quo die nullus mihi in vita fuit jucundior. Talis enim & tantus eſt Theologus Lutherus, ut nulla ſecula habuerint ſimilem. Semper mihi magnus fuit Lutherus, at jam mihi Maximus eſt. Vidi enim præſens, & audivi, quæ nullo calamo tradi poſſunt abſentibus.

His comfortable conference with Luther.

Erneſtus Duke of Brunſwick loved him dearly, and eſteemed him as his Father, inſomuch as when the City of Auſpurg, Anno Chriſti 1535. ſent to the Duke, deſiring him to return Regius to them again, he anſwered, That he would as ſoon part with his Eyes as with him: Alſo at his return from Auſpurg, when divers of his Nobles asked him what new and pretious ware, after the example of other Princes, he had brought home with him? He anſwered, that he had brought home incomparable treaſure for the good of his whole Dukedom, which he preferred before all his delights: And preſently after he made him Biſhop and Over-ſeer of all the Churches in his Country, with an ample ſalary for the ſame.

The Dukes love unfeigned to him

He is made ſuperintendent.

Urbanus Regius, going with his Prince to a meeting at Haganaw, he had a humor fell into his right Leg, which ariſing in a Puſtle, brake, and cauſed an iſſue, which the Phyſitians adviſed to keep ſtill open: But not long after he ſtopped the ſame, whereupon many preſaged his death, whereof indeed this was a cauſe: For when, on the Sabbath day, he had been at Church, and received the Sacrament, in the Evening rubbing his Forehead, he complained of ſome obſtructions and pain in his Head: yet was he ſtill cheerful and not troubled at it: and ſo went to bed with his wife, and ſlept till almoſt day, when riſing out of his bed, he fell along in the floor, and with the fall awaked his wife, who leaping out of her bed, cryed out, and endeavoured to lift him into his bed again; but all in vain till help came to her: A while after ſeeing his wife and friends heavy and mourning, he comforted them, and commended himſelf wholly unto God, and ſo about two or three hours after, quietly and comfortably reſigned up his ſoul into the hands of his heavenly Father, Anno Chriſti 1541. and May the 23.

His ſickneſs.

His death.

He often deſired God that he might dye a ſudden and eaſie death, wherein God anſwered his deſires. He was of an excellent wit, holy of life, and painful in the work of the Lord.

He deſired a ſudden death.

His ſon Erneſt collected all his works together, and digeſted them into ſeveral Tomes, printed them at Norinberg. Afterwards came forth another Book, called Loci Theologici ex Patribus, & Scholaſticis, Neotericiſq; collecti per U. Regium.

The Life of Caraloſtadius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1541.

His Birth.

His Education.

Andreas Bodenſtein Caraloſtadius was born in France, in a Town called Caraloſtadium, from which he received his name: He was brought up at School there: and, for the improvement of his Learning, he went to divers Countries, and publick Schools, ſuch as thoſe times afforded: At laſt he went to Rome to ſtudy Divinity, ſuch as was then taught there: and having ſpent ſome time in thoſe ſtudies, he went into Germany, and there ſetled himſelf at Wittenberg, where he commenced Doctor in Divinity, and was a publick Profeſſor Anno Chriſti 1512.

He ſetles at Wittenberg.

Afterwards he became an earneſt aſſertor of Luthers doctrine, and a defender of it againſt Eccius, both by diſputation and writing: At the Diſputation held at Lipſich, Anno Chriſti 1519. (of which you may read in Luthers life) Caraloſtadius and Eccius firſt began it. There was a great diſſimilitude between theſe two perſons. For Caraloſtadius ſhewed the modeſty of a Divine in his voice, countenance, geſture, and proceeedings: diſputing, not for glory and victory, but to ſearch out the Truth; wherefore he affirmed nothing but what he ſoundly proved: nor admitted any Quotations brought by the Adverſe party till he had gathered the meaning of the Author by the words that went before and followed after: By this his diligence he commended himſelf to the learned; But the unlearned interpreted it to be dulneſs and fear. But Eccius on the other hand appeared fierce by his outcryes, his ſtern countenance, his Theatrical geſture, and his impetuous proceedings: which outward geſtures of the body ſhewed a mind little Theological: He often boaſted of himſelf ſo highly and impudently, that he he loſt his reputation amongſt wiſe men. He moſt conſtantly affirmed thoſe things which were falſe, and as ſhamelesly denyed thoſe things which were true: Their Diſputation was about Freewill; the fruit whereof as Luther writes, was not the ſearching out of truth, but temporis perditio, the loſs of time. At his return to Wittenberg, he publiſhed Trecentas & ſeptuaginta concluſiones Apologeticas, & defenſionem adverſus monomachiam D. Johannis Eccii, cum epitome de impii juſtificatione. The year after he ſet forth his Theſes againſt the Papacy.

Anno Chriſti 1521. at the time of Luthers being in his Pathmos, Caraloſtadius obtained of the Elector the aboliſhing of private Maſs, Auricular confeſſion, Images, &c. at Wittenberg; about which time he marryed a wife, concerning which Luther writing to Amſdorfius, ſaith thus: Caraloſtadii nuptiæ mire placent: novi puellam: confortet eum Dominus in bonum exemplum inhibendæ & minuendæ Papiſticæ libidinis, Amen. But Luther hearing of that Reformation in Wittenberg, and being offended at it, returned preſently thither, Anno Chriſti 1522. and preached eagerly againſt that alteration; whereupon Caraloſtadius (who in Luthers abſence was the principal man in Wittenberg) being netled with thoſe ſharp Sermons of Luther, wrote in juſtification of it, which was the firſt beginning of greater differences betwixt them about the Sacrament, whereupon he left Wittenberg, Anno Chriſti 1524. and went to Orlamund, being called to a Paſtoral charge there.

He reforms Wittenberg.

His remove to Orlamund.

But after a while he was called back to his place in Wittenberg; yet before he went, Luther being ſent by the Elector to Jene, and Orlamund, in a Sermon where Caraloſtadius was preſent, inveighed bitterly againſt the Anabaptiſts, and ſaid withal, That the ſame ſpirit reigned in the Image-haters and Sacramentaries; whereupon Caraloſtadius, being much offended, went to his lodging to confer with him about it: Afterwards Luther coming again to Orlamund went not to ſalute Caraloſtadius, but in his Sermon quarrelled with their aboliſhing of Idols: and ſhortly after he procured the Elector to baniſh Caraloſtadius; whereof Caraloſtadius afterwards complained in a Letter to his people in Wittenberg, that unheard and unconvicted he was baniſhed by Luthers procurement.

Luthers infirmities.

He is baniſhed by Luthers means.

From thence he went to Baſil, where he printed ſome Books that he had written about the Lords Supper, for which the Magiſtrates (being offended with the novelty of the Doctrine) caſt the Printers into Priſon, and the Senate of Zurick forbad their people to read thoſe Books. But Zuinglius in his Sermon exhorted them firſt to read, and then to paſs judgment on them, ſaying, That Caraloſtadius knew the truth, but had not well expreſſed it: Afterwards whilſt Caraloſtadius was wandring up and down in upper Germany, the ſedition of the Booriſh Anabaptiſts brake out, (unto which they were ſtirred up by Muncer) for which many of them, eſpecially of their Miniſters, were brought to puniſhment, and Caraloſtadius alſo eſcaped very narrowly, being let down in a basket, over the walls of Rottenberg:

His great afflictions.

Thus being in great ſtraits, he wrote to Luther, and purged himſelf from having any hand in thoſe uproars, entreating him to print his Book, and undertake his defence, which alſo Luther did, deſiring the Magiſtrates that he might be brought to his juſt trial, before he was condemned: Caraloſtadius wrote again to him a Letter, wherein he ſaid, That for his opinion about the Sacrament, he rather propoſed it for Diſputation ſake, then that he poſitively affirmed any thing, which many imputed to him for levity: But Luther thereupon procured his return in to Saxony: yet he finding little content there, went to Zurick Anno Chriſti 1530. and taught in that place till the death of Zuinglius, and then he went to Baſil, where he taught ten years; and Anno Chriſti 1541. he dyed there of the Plague, and was very honourably buryed. What eſteem Luther had ſomtimes of him, may appear by this ſuperſcription of a Letter which he wrote to him. *Eruditiſſimo viro, & præſtantiſſimo D. The Life of Capito, who dyed Anno Christi 1541.

His birth.

His education.

Wolfgangus Fabricius Capito was born at Hagenaw in Alsatia, Anno Christi 1478. His Father was of the Senatorian rank, who bred him in Learning, and sent him to Basil, where he studied the Liberal Arts and Tongues, and by his singular diligence profited very much therein. Afterwards when he applied himself to the study of Divinity, his Father, who abhorred the unholy life of those which professed holiness, took him off from those studies, and set him in a way of studying Physick, wherein he made such a progress, that Anno Christi 1498. he commenced Doctor of Physick: But his Father being dead, he returned to the study of Divinity being religiously inclined, and profited much in it.

He studies Physick.

And Divinity.

Then he went to Friburg, where he studied School-Divinity: but after a while, growing weary thereof, because he found in the Schoolmen much subtilty, but little utility, he was ordained a Presbyter; and then fell to the study of the Law, being for four years space a Hearer of Zasius: But above all things he admired and esteemed the Doctrine of the Gospel, and was a great lover and admirer of godly Ministers.

Love unfeigned.

At Heidleburg he grew into acquaintance with Oecolampadius, and there was a near tye of friendship betwixt them all their lives after; with him also he studied Hebrew, being therein assisted by Matthew Adrian, a converted Jew. From thence, being sent for by the Senate, he went to Basil, where he was Preacher in the chief Church for some years, and laid the foundation of a blessed Reformation in that City: There also he commenced Doctor Anno Christi 1516.

He is chosen Pastor at Basil.

Anno Christi 1520. through the favor of Sir Ulrick Hutten he was called to Ments by the Archbishop thereof to be the Preacher and Counsellor to the Prince: At which time also Gasper Hedeo was made Preacher and chief Governor over the highest Church in Ments. Capito did the more willingly embrace this call, that he might plant the reformed Religion in Ments. Concerning his commencing Doctor, he thus writes in an Epistle to Hutten; Furis Pontificii, ut vocant, Doctoratum suscepi, propter authoritatem videlicet comparandam; scopum suboleſsis: Licet interim sint aliqui, qui vitio vertunt Theologum esse & unâ simul Civilem; quasi Theologus necesse habet omnem exuere humanitatem.

He is chosen to Ments.

Anno Christi 1521. Tecelius, the Merchant of Indulgences being dead, by the order of the Archbishop of Ments, Letters Patents for the renewing of them were set to sale at Hale in Saxony, whereupon Luther wrote to the Archbishop, and Melanthon to Capito his Counsellor, to dissuade them from such Merchandize. Capito therefore, secretly favouring the Gospel, so far prevailed with his Master, that he wrote mildly and humbly to Luther: And Capito also wrote to him, to advise him, that in writing against the vices of Prelates, he should not name them. For, saith he, Exasperantur potius animi insectatione, quam curantur: mens minds, by such bitterness, are rather exasperated then cured.

He favors the Gospel.

His advice to Luther.

Capito thus continuing with the Elector of Ments, was very dear unto him for his rare Wisdom joined with Piety, his happy Eloquence, and mild Nature, so that by him he was sent upon many Embassies. And February the 7. Anno Christi 1523. he was, by the Emperor Charles the Fifth, endowed for himself and his posterity with the Ensigns of Nobility under the Imperial Seal. But not much esteeming these things, when he saw that he could not accomplish his purpose at Ments, to the wonder of the Archbishop and astonishment of the Courtiers, he left it, and followed Bucer to Strasborough, where he was called to a Pastoral charge.

He goes to Strasborough

The fame of Capito and Bucer did so spread abroad, that James Faber Stapulensis and Gerard Rufus came privily out of France to them, being sent by Margaret Queen of Navar, and Sister to Francis King of France, where they discoursed largely with them them of all he heads of Divinity: So that France oweth the beginning of her embracing the reformed Religion, as to the other godly Miniſters, ſo eſpecially to Capito and Bucer.

Capito was a very prudent and eloquent man, a good Hebrician, and ſtudious of Peace: Concerning the Sacrament he ſaid, Mittendas eſſe contentiones, & cogitandam de uſu ipſius cœnæ: & fidem noſtram pane, & vino Domini, per memoriam carnis, & ſanguinis illius, paſcendam. Anno 1525. he was called into his own Country, where he inſtructed his Brethren in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, preached and adminiſtred the Lords Supper to his own Citizens, and baptized without the Popiſh Ceremonies; and whereas, in Helvetia many ſeemed to incline to the reformed Religion, Capito often went amongſt them, confirming them in the Faith. And in a Diſputation at Bern in Helvetia, Anno Chriſti 1528. Capito with many other Divines was preſent at it, defending the Truth againſt the Adverſaries, ſo that he, with the reſt, prevailed for the aboliſhing of the Maſs, and ſetting up a faithful Miniſtry in that place. He affects peace. A Diſputation at Bern.

The reſt of his time he ſpent in Preaching at Strasborough, and giving wholſom counſel to the Churches.

Anno Chriſti 1541. when a Diet was appointed at Ratisbone, eſpecially for the cauſe of Religion, Capito, amongſt other Divines, was ſent by the Proteſtants to it, where he gave en excellent demonſtration of his wit and judgment: But when nothing could be effected, returning home in a great and general infection, he died of the Plague, Anno Chriſti 1541. of his Age 63. His death

He was a man of an excellent wit and judgment, conſtant in Religion. A great lover of the Schools and Learning: wherefore he exhorted to the repairing of Schools, and keeping up Scholaſtical Titles, that the ſtudious might be diſtinguiſhed from the ſlothful; the Seniors from the Juniors: and that diligence might be ſpurred on by hope of honeſt glory. When Eraſmus halted between two opinions, he continually called upon him to put off that Nicodemus-like temper. His firſt wife was Agnes, a learned woman, after whoſe death he married the Widdow of Oecolampadius, his intire friend. He left to poſterity theſe excellent works, His Character.

LEO JVDÆ.

The Life of Leo Judæ, who dyed Anno Christi 1542.

His Birth,

His Education.

His study of Divinity.

He is made Pastor at Zurick.

He translates the Bible.

His death.

LEo Judæ was born Anno Christi 1482. his Fathers name was John Judæ, his Mothers name was Elizabeth: By the care of his Father he was brought up at School in Sleſtadia, where having learned Grammar, he went to Basil, Anno Christi 1502. There he joined in ſtudy with Zuinglius, was an hearer of Doctor Wittenbash, by whom he was inſtructed in the knowledg of the Goſpel: There alſo he continued in his ſtudies till he commenced Maſter of Arts, Anno Christi 1512. after which he was made a Deacon, and from thence he was called into Helvetia; where he ſet himſelf to the ſtudy of the Oriental Tongues, and to read the Fathers, eſpecially Hierom and Auguſtine; as alſo he read diligently the Books of Luther, Eraſmus and Capito: At length being called to a Paſtoral charge at Zurick, he oppoſed the Popiſh Doctrine and Ceremonies, both in the Pulpit and Preſs, ſo that his fame ſpread far and near: There he continued eighteen years, and ſpent much of it in expounding the Old Teſtament out of the Hebrew, wherein (being grown very skilful) he ſet upon (at the importunity of his Brethren of the Miniſtry) the Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament out of the Hebrew, wherein alſo he was much holpen by the induſtry of other learned men.

His care was to get the moſt exact Hebrew Copy that he could, which alſo he compared with others: neither did he neglect to examine the Greek and Latin verſions, that by all, he might the better find out the genuine ſignification of the Words and Mind of the Holy Ghoſt. But this work proving very great, he was ſo waſted with Labor and old age, that he died before he finiſhed it, Anno Christi 1542. and of his Age 60. leaving undone Job, the forty laſt Pſalms, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, Canticles, and the eight laſt Chapters of Ezekiel, which he commended to Theodore Bibliander to finiſh, who accordingly did it: and he left all to Conradus Pellican to peruſe and put to the Preſs, which he carefully performed.

Four

Four days before his death, ſending for the Paſtors and Profeſſors of Zurick, he made before them a Confeſſion of his Faith, concerning God, the Scriptures, the Perſon and Offices of Chriſt, concluding, Huic Jeſu Chriſto Domino & liberatori meo, &c. To this my Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, my Hope, and my Salvation, I wholly offer up my ſoul and body; I caſt my ſelf wholly upon his mercy and grace, &c. after which he added an hearty thankſgiving unto God for all the bleſſings and benefits that he had received from him: Prayed earneſtly to him for the pardon of all his ſins: made an exhortation to his Brethren: and with hearty affections commended to God the Senate and People of Zurick, together with his Wife and Children, entreating them to be an Husband to the Widdow, and a Father to the Fatherleſs. He left to poſterity, Annotationes in Geneſin, & Exodum, ex ore Zuinglii exceptas: Item in Evangeliſtas quatuor: Paſſionis Dominicæ Hiſtoriam: Ac in Epiſtolas Pauli ad Romanos, Corinthios, Philippenſes, Colloſſenſes, Theſſalonicenſes, & Sancti Jacobi. Præterea Opus concluſionum Zuinglii, atque Catechiſmum majorem & minorem conſcripſit.

The Life of George Spalatinus, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1545.

George Spalatine was born at Noricum, Anno Chriſti 1482. and being brought up in Learning profited ſo much, eſpecially in the knowledg of the Humane Arts, that Frederick the Third, Elector of Saxony, took a great liking to him, and made him one of his privy Counſel, and preferred him to ſome other Offices under him: Yet did not he neglect the ſtudy of Divinity; but profited ſo much therein, that he was ordained a Miniſter. He was alſo an excellent Hiſtorian, inſomuch as his Prince imployed him in writing a Chronicle from the beginning of the World to his time: What favour he was in with his Prince may appear by this, in that Pope Leo the tenth, endeavoring to ſuppreſs Luthers Doctrine in the bud, wrote to the Duke of Saxony, and to our Spalatine, to promote his buſineſs with the Duke for the deſtroying of Luther.

His birth and Education.

His preferments.

When he firſt applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, he wrote to Luther, intreating directions from him for the Method of his Studies: Luther adviſed him to read Hierom. Auguſtine, and Ambroſe, as they were publiſhed by Eraſmus: He alſo adviſed him always to begin his Studies with Prayer: For (ſaith he) there is no Maſter that can inſtruct us in Divine matters but the Author of them. He further perſwaded him to read over the whole Bible diligently, adjoining Auguſtine to it: And (ſaid he) if you will have my advice, begin with that part which is De ſpiritu & litera, which our Caroloſtad (a man of incomparable diligence) hath expounded and publiſhed. Afterwards he named to him other parts of Auguſtine and of Ambroſe.

Luther directs him in his ſtudies.

After this, the Elector of Saxony made him his Court-Preacher, and whitherſoever he went, took him along in his train with him, as he did when he went to the Diet at Worms, Anno Chriſti 1521. whence he wrote to Luther, that there was ſo much favour ſhewed to the Goſpel but then appearing, that he perſwaded himſelf that Luther ſhould not be condemned before he was heard. Nine years after this he was at Auſpurg, when the Confeſſion of Faith, which was written by Melanchthon, was preſented unto the Emperor. And indeed in all the Controverſies of Religion he always ſtood of Luthers ſide.

His imployments.

He had many thoughts of leaving his Miniſtry, had not Luther earneſtly oppoſed him: amongſt other things writing thus to him, Thoſe temptations which purſue you to deſert your Miniſtry, either overcome them, or ſlight them: Chriſt hath called you to that Office, yield to him, and obey him according to his will. What you are doing you know not for the preſent, but you ſhall know hereafter. This is a Diabolical tentation, and you know not now, why you are afflicted with it: we which are ſpectators know it better: Therefore you ought rather to truſt us than your ſelf, who in the Lord, before the Lord, yea the Lord by us doth exhort and comfort you: For we look after nothing elſe herein than the Will of God and his Glory. And indeed this is a certain ſign that your Miniſtry is neither ingrateful to God, nor unprofitable to the Church, in that you are troubled with theſe tentations: For if it were unpleaſing to God, you would rather long after it, as they do which run before they be ſent: They ſpeak when they have nothing commanded them of God: whereas Satan when he finds ſuch as are truly ſent by God, and pleaſing to him, he makes them aweary of their work: but thoſe which are unpleaſing to God he fills them with a violent hunting after the work. You have no reaſon to give over your Miniſtry which is ſo earneſtly deſired and embraced, &c.

His tentations. Luthers counſel therein.

His death. Upon theſe perſwaſions of Luther he continued in his Office unto the end of his life, which fell out Anno Chriſti 1545. and of his age 63.

He was a man that lived in great eſteem with Princes and Nobles, and moſt of the learned men of his time. Eraſmus wrote often to him, acknowledging him not only his dear friend, but his Patron alſo: and Luther wrote ſix hundred Epiſtles to him.

His works. He wrote the Chronicle before-mentioned: Turned Eraſmus his Book De Inſtitutione Principis into Dutch with ſome others.

The Life of Myconius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1546.

His Birth, Fridericus Myconius was born in Franconia, of religious parents, Anno Chriſti 1491. Decemb. 26. and bred up at School till he was thirteen years old, and then he was ſent to Annæberg, where he ſtudied till he was twenty, and then entred into a Monaſtery of the Franciſcan Fryars there, without the knowledg of his Parents: and this he did, not that he might live in eaſe, fill his belly, and follow his pleaſures: but that he might ſerve God, pray for the pardon of his own and other mens ſins, and that he might live an holy and innocent life: For ſo men judged in thoſe days.

His Education.

He enters into a Monaſtery.

His bodily exerciſes. The firſt night after his entry, he had a dream, which proved Prophetical. In that Monaſtery he almoſt killed himſelf with watchings, faſtings, praying, and performing other bodily exerciſes wherein they thought all holineſs to conſiſt: And in the night time when other Monks were aſleep, he macerated and weakened himſelf with reading Peter Lombard, Alexander Hales, Bonaventure, Gabriel Biel, Auguſtine, and other like Authors, and being made Reader at Meal-times, for ſeven years together, every dinner and ſupper he read the Bible with Lyra's Notes upon it, which he turned over ſo often that he had almoſt gotten it by heart, but yet without underſtanding and judgment: only he retained in his Memory the ſacred Hiſtories. But deſpairing of attaining to Learning under ſuch Maſters, he left his ſtudies, and fell to Mechanical Arts: About which time Tecelius brought his Indulgences into Germany, boaſting of the virtue of them, and exhorting all, as they loved their own and their dead friends Salvation, that they ſhould buy them, &c. and withal, threatning that if they came not ſpeedily to buy, he would lay down the Croſs, ſhut Heaven Gates that now ſtood wide open: That he would extinguiſh the light and ſplendor of the Sun: and that ere long he would cauſe, that ſo precious ware ſhould not be ſold at ſo eaſie a rate: and that whilſt the World ſtood

His diligence in reading.

Indulgences brought into Germany.

Popiſh blaſphemies.

Germany

Germany ſhould not have ſuch liberality profered to them from Rome again: And therefore he exhorted them ſeriouſly to have reſpect to their own and their deceaſed friends Salvation: For (ſaith he) now is the acceptable time, now is the day of Salvation: and except ye buy theſe indulgences, no man can abſolve you from your ſins.

He alſo told the Citizens of Annæberg, that if they would freely part with their mony, their metal Mines which were about the Town of S. Anne, ſhould abound with pure ſilver. By theſe means this cunning Hucſter procured ſuch honor to his Indulgences, that when he came to any Town, the Popes Bull was carryed before him, wrapped either in ſilk or cloth of gold, and was met with a long and pompous Proceſſion: ſo that probably, had God himſelf come in a viſible ſhape, he ſhould not have been entertained with ſo much magnificence.

Myconius had been taught by his Father, the Lords Prayer, the Creed, the Decalogue, and to pray often: and that the blood of Chriſt only could cleanſe us from ſin: and that pardon of ſin and eternal life could not be bought with mony, &c. which cauſed him to be much troubled whether he ſhould believe his Father or the Prieſts; But underſtanding that there was a clauſe in the Indulgences that they ſhould be given freely to the Poor, he went to Tecelius, entreated him to give him one, for that he was a poor ſinner, and one that needed a free remiſſion of his ſins, and a participation of the merits of Chriſt: Tecelius admired that he could ſpeak Latine ſo well (which few Prieſts could do in thoſe days) and therefore he adviſed with his Colleagues, what to anſwer, who perſuaded him to give Myconius one: But after much debate, he returned him anſwer, That the Pope wanted mony, without which he could not part with an Indulgence: Myconius urged the aforenamed clauſe in the indulgences which were publickly poſted up, wherein the Pope had inſerted theſe words, ut pauperibus gratis darentur propter Deum: whereupon Tecelius his Colleagues preſſed again that he might have one given him, pleading his learning, ingenuity, poverty, &c. and that it would be a diſhonour both to God and the Pope to deny him one: But ſtill Tecelius refuſed, whereupon ſome of them whiſpered Myconius in the Ear to give a little money, which he refuſed to do, and they fearing the event, one of them profered to give him ſome to buy one with, which he ſtill refuſed, ſaying, that he would not have bought Indulgences, and that if he pleaſed, he could ſell a Book to buy one, but he deſired one for Gods ſake; which if they denyed him, he wiſhed them to conſider how they could anſwer it to God, &c. But prevailing nothing, he went away rejoicing that there was yet a God in Heaven to pardon ſinners freely, &c. according to that promiſe, As I live (ſaith the Lord) I deſire not the death of a ſinner, &c.

Myconius well educated.

Popiſh covetouſneſs.

Not long after he entred into Orders at Vinaria, and read privately Luthers Books, which the other Fryars took very hainouſly, and threatned him for it. From thence he was called to be a Preacher at Vinaria, where at firſt he mixed ſome Popiſh Errors, with the Truth; but by the Illumination of Gods Spirit, and by his reading Luther, he at laſt began to preach againſt Popery, and to hold forth the Truth clearly in Thuringia; which ſpred ſo ſwiftly in one months ſpace, and was ſo greedily imbraced, not only through Saxony but through all Countries, as if the Angels had been the carriers of it.

The means of his converſion.

The Goſpels ſwift progreſs.

Anno Chriſti 1518. when Luther was going to Auſpurg, he lodged in the Monaſtery where Myconius was at Vinaria: At which time Myconius firſt ſaw him, but was not ſuffered to ſpeak with him. Afterwards he was called to Gotha to teach and govern the Thuringian Churches, where he lived with his Colleagues twenty years in much peace and concord; of which himſelf ſaith, Cucurrimus, certavimus, laboravimus, pugnavimus, vicimus & viximus ſemper conjunctiſſimè, &c.

Love unfeigned.

Anno Chriſti 1525. In the tumult of the Anabaptiſtical Boors Myconius took much pains to pacifie their mindes, and to keep them quiet: Yea, he ſo quieted with an Oration, ſome that were pulling down ſome Noble-mens houſes, that they went away in peace. That year alſo he marryed a wife called Margaret, the daughter of an honeſt Citizen of Gotha, by whom, through Gods bleſſing, he had a numerous poſterity. And though Myconius was by Gods Providence called to the Government of the Church in Gotha, yet the moſt Illuſtrious Elector of

He endeavors to quiet the Anabaptiſts.

His marriage.

Saxony imployed him in many other buſineſſes. He alſo took him along with him thrice into the Low-Countries, as alſo into Cullen, Juliers, and divers other places.

His Zeal in Preaching.

At Duſſeldorp he preached the Goſpel ſincerely and purely, though to the hazard of his life; and at Cullen he maintained a publick Diſputation with the Fryars which was afterwards printed. With the like conſtancy and faithfulneſs he preached the Doctrine of the Goſpel in Brunſwick, in Cella of Saxony, and in other parts of Weſtphalia. Alſo in divers publick Conventions at Smalcald, Francfurt, and Noremberg, his counſel being asked, with much courage and zeal he handled the affairs of Religion, ſeeking to promote the glory of God, and the profit and welfare of the Church.

He is ſent into England

Anno Chriſti 1528. Henry the Eighth, King of England, fell out with the Pope for not divorcing him from his wife Katharine of Spain, ſiſter to Charles the Fifth, by reaſon of whoſe greatneſs the Pope durſt not do it: whereupon the King of England ſent over to the Germane Princes (eſpecially to the Duke of Saxony) to confederate againſt the Pope, and to joyn with them in an agreement about Religion; upon which occaſion Myconius was ſent over into England, partly about matters of Religion, but eſpecially about a match between Henry the Eighth, and Anne of Cleve: But coming thither, he diſcovered the Kings hypocriſie about Religion, not only by the ſix Articles about that time eſtabliſhed, but alſo by his impriſoning of Latimer, and cutting off the Lord Cromwels head, and burning of Mr. Barnes, &c. and by his ſeizing upon all the Abbey-lands: whereupon he left England, and being come home, Anno Chriſti 1538. he was called by Henry of Saxony to viſit and reform the Churches of Miſnia, together with Luther, Jonas, Cruciger, &c. which fell out upon this occaſion.

King Henry the Eight his Hypocriſie.

His return into Germany.

George Duke of Saxony, lying on his death-bed, ſent to his Brother Henry (all his own ſons being dead before) deſiring him, that ſucceeding him, he ſhould innovate nothing in Religion, and withall, promiſed him golden mountains by his Ambaſſadors if he would aſſent thereto: To whom Henry anſwered, This Embaſſie of yours is juſt like to the Devils dealing with Chriſt, when he promiſed him all the World if he would fall down and worſhip him: but for my own part I am reſolved not to depart from the Truth which God hath revealed unto me; But before the return of the Ambaſſadour, Duke George was dead: whereupon this Henry (notwithſtanding all the oppoſition of the Papiſts) made this Reformation in the Churches: which work being finiſhed, Myconius viſited all the Churches in Thuringia, and, with the help of Melanchthon and ſome other, he provided them Paſtors and Schoolmaſters, and procured ſtipends to be ſetled upon them for their maintenance. The reſt of his life he ſpent in Preaching, Praying, and writing of Letters: many great perſons in Univerſities, and the chief Churches holding correſpondence with him; amongſt whom were Luther, Melanchthon, Cruciger, Menius, Baſilius, Monerus, John Langus, Mechlerus, John Marcellus, Matthew Ratzenbergerus, &c.

An heroical reſolution.

Reformation in Miſnia and Thuringia.

Anno Chriſti 1541. he fell into a Conſumption, whereof he wrote to Luther, That he was ſick not to death, but to life: which gloſs upon the Text pleaſed Luther excellently well, unto whom he wrote back: I pray Chriſt our Lord, our Salvation, our Health, &c. that I may not live to ſee thee and ſome others of our Colleagues to dye, and go to Heaven, and to leave me hear amongſt the Devils alone. I pray God that I may firſt lay down this dry, exhauſted, and unprofitable tabernacle: Farewel, and God forbid that I ſhould hear of thy death whil'ſt I live: Sed te ſuperſtitem faciat mihi Deus: hoc peto & volo, & fiat voluntas mea, Amen; quia hæc voluntas gloriam nominis Dei, certe non meam voluptatem, nec copiam quærit. A while after Myconius recovered according to this prayer, though his diſeaſe ſeemed to be deſperate, and out-lived it ſix years: even till after Luthers death, whereupon Juſtus Jonas, ſpeaking of Luther, ſaith of him, Iſte vir potuit quod voluit, That man could have of God what he pleaſed.

The Life of John Diazius who dyed, Anno Christi 1546.

John Diazius was born in Spain, and brought up at School; Afterwards he went to Paris to study the Arts, where he continued thirteen years: But it Bleased God that whilst he read over the holy Scriptures, and some of Luthers Books, and other Protestant Divines he began to see and abominate the Errors of Popery: and therefore, to further himself in the knowledge and study of the Truth, he went to Geneva, where he spake with Calvin, and was very dear unto him. His birth. His Education. His Conversion. He goes to Geneva.

From thence he went to Strasborough where Martin Bucer observing his learning, Piety, and diligence in his study, obtained of the Senate that he should be joined with him to go to the Disputation at Ratisbone: and when he came thither, he went to Peter Malvenda, a Spaniard, the Popes Agent in Germany, who when he knew that he came in the company of Bucer, and the other Protestant Divines, he was much astonished, and admired how he was so much changed from that he which he knew him to be at Paris: and withall, he fretted exceedingly that they had gotten a Spaniard amongst them, presuming that they would triumph more in him then in many Germanes: whereupon he left no means untryed to draw him back again to the Church of Rome: Sometimes making large profers and promises to him: other sometimes threatning severe punishments, and mixing both with earnest entreaties: He also advised him by no means to stay at Ratisbon till the Emperours coming; For (saith he) that cannot be without great danger to you; rather haste to his Court and beg your pardon. From thence to Strasborough. So to Ratisbone. He is tempted.

Also at another conference Malvenda asked him, wherefore he was come to Ratisbone; Diazius answered that he was sent thither by the Senate of Strasborough, that he might join his prayers with the prayers of the Church, and in the publick conference might endeavour reconcilement, as much as he could, in those Articles which were to be disputed of. Then (said Malvenda) you are come hither in vain, for nothing will be concluded at this conference. But if you would do good, you should rather go to the Council that the Pope hath begun at Trent. But when by no means he could prevail to divert him from the Truth, he sent for his Brother Alphonsus Diazius, one of the Popes Lawyers, from Rome, who hearing that his Brother was turned Protestant, came speedily into Germany, bringing a notorious cut-throat with him, resolving either to divert or destroy him: When he came to Ratisbone Diazius was departed to Neoburg about the Printing of Bucers Book, which His conference with Malvenda. Popish treachery.

Alphonſus hearing of, followed him thither, carrying with him Letters to John Diazius from Malvenda, wherein he wiſhed him to obey his Brother Alphonſus, who would give him good Counſel.

When Alphonſus came to Neoburg, his Brother John wondred to ſee him there, asking him the cauſe of his ſo unlooked for preſence: After ſome other excuſes at length he told him, that he had undertook that long and dangerous journey to recal him into the boſome of the Church: Hereupon they had much conference about matters of Religion, and at length, Alphonſus told him, that he had five hundred Ducats per annum in Church revenues, all which he would make over to him if he would go with him to Rome: But when by no means he could prevail with him, fetching a deep ſigh, he ſaid, Brother, I perceive the conſtancy of your Faith and your unmoveablneſs in adhering to the Doctrine of the Goſpel to be ſo great, that you have almoſt drawn me unto your opinion.

He is tempted.

Devilliſh hypocriſie.

Yea upon further diſcourſe, he ſeemed to be in love with the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and thereupon perſwaded John to leave Germany which abounded with learned men, and where there was leſs uſe of him, and to go with him into Italy, Rome, and Naples, there to ſpread his Doctrine privately, whereby alſo he might have the better opportunity of ſpreading it in Spain: but (ſaid he) we will firſt go to Trent, where are many excellently learned men, and from thence into Italy: I beſeech you therefore Brother go with me, and I will furniſh you with all things neceſſary for your journey.

John Diazius being glad of this, preſently wrote to Bucer and others at Ratisbone for their advice what he ſhould do? They counſelled him by no means to ſtir or go with his brother. Then Alphonſus being fruſtrate of this hope, intreated him at leaſt to bear him company to Auſpurg: But in the interim Bucer coming to Neoburg would not ſuffer him to ſtir a foot, neither would leave him till his brother Alphonſus was gone.

He is adviſed not to go with his brother.

Alphonſus hereupon three days after came to take his leave of his Brother, where he had much conference with him, exhorting him to charity and conſtancy in the profeſſion of the true Religion, and at laſt would needs thruſt fourteen Crowns into his Brothers hand, willing him therewith to buy new cloths, and ſo they parted not without tears.

Next morning, the waggon being ready to depart wherein Alphonſus and his cut-throte were to paſs to Auſpurg, the two Brothers again took their leaves with tears; and ſo Alphonſus ſet forward and came to Auſpurg; But privately, the next day he and his cut-throte returned to Neoburg, and by the way they bought an hatchet of a Carpenter, and ſo ſtayed all night at a Village nere Neoburg, and the next morning very early went thither, diſguiſed, that they might not be known, and leaving one to hold their horſes under an hedge, they entred into the City, ſo ſoon as the gates were open, and going ſtrait to the Miniſters houſe where John lodged, the Executioner knocked at the door, and when a youth came, he asked him for John Diazius; the youth anſwered that he was in bed: Go (ſaid this villain) and tell him that I have brought him Letters from his Brother: John hearing this (being in bed with Senarcleus his intimate friend) preſently leaped up, caſt a cloke about him, and ſo went in to a ſtove which was over againſt his chamber door; then calling for the meſſenger, he went in to him, leaving Alphonſus at the ſtair-foot, and preſented the Letters to him; the effect whereof was, that aſſoon as he came to Auſpurg, he underſtood that he was in great danger, and therefore out of his Brotherly love to him he adviſed him to beware of Malvenda and ſuch as he, who being Enemies to Chriſt, went about to ſhed his blood, &c.

He is baſely murthered.

John being buſie in reading theſe Letters, the Executioner that ſtood at his back, plucked forth his hatchet, and ſtroke it into the Temples of this holy man in the right ſide of his Head even to the helve, which in a moment ſo deprived him of ſenſe that he made no noiſe, and leſt the fall of his body ſhould make a noiſe, this villain caught it in his arms, and laid it down, and ſo went down the ſtairs ſoftly to his Maſter Alphonſus, and both of them immediately repaired to their horſes and fled.

They of Neoburg hearing of this horrible fact, ſent out certain Horſemen to purſue the murtherers: who coming to Auſpurg, and hearing that they were paſſed that City, being out of hope to overtake them, returned: only one, more zealous then the reſt would not return, but purſued them ſtill, and in the City of Oenopont, cauſed them to be apprehended, and caſt into Priſon. And Otto the Palatine being informed of all theſe paſſages, ſent unto the Magiſtrates, requiring Judgement againſt them: The Magiſtrates at firſt ſeemed very forward: But in concluſion, through the practice of the Papiſts and crafty Lawyers ſuborned by them, judgement was deferred from day to day, till the Emperours Letters came in poſt haſte to ſtop their further proceedings, pretending to reſerve the cauſe to his own hearing. And thus this terrible murther of Cain and his fellow was ſlipped over by man: yea this unnatural act was highly commended by the Papiſts: But the Lord would not ſuffer ſuch an unnatural villany to go unpuniſhed: For not long after, he was ſo dogged, and haunted by the Furies of his own Conſcience, that being at Trent, when the Council was held there, he hanged himſelf about the neck of his own Mule, ſix years after the murther was committed, viz. Anno Chriſti 1551.

The murtherers apprehended.

GASPER CRVCIGER

The Life of Cruciger, who dyed Anno Chriſti, 1548.

Gaſper Cruciger, was born at Lipſich in Miſnia, Anno Chriſti 1504. His Fathers name was George, a man who was endowed with many virtues, but eſpecially to be commended for that in thoſe perillous times he did not onely embrace the Celeſtial Truth himſelf, but brought up this his ſon in the knowledge and ſtudy of it to the great benefit of the Church. His Mother alſo was eminent for piety.

His birth.

His fathers piety.

His education.

This Gaſper was melancholy by nature, and of a retired diſpoſition: much in meditation, and of few words. Being principled in the Latine, he learned Greek, and pro-profited much therein, and ſo went to the Univerſity of Wittenberg, that having ſtudied Divinity there, he might be the more uſeful to the Church: He ſtudyed alſo the Hebrew tongue, and grew very exquiſite therein: From thence he was called to govern the School at Magdeburg, where he taught with much profit, and applauſe, till Anno Chriſti, 1527. In ſo much as many of riper years, yea ſome Clerks came to be his hearers, ſo that his School growing too little for his Auditory, he was removed into a larger. But after a while he was called back to Wittenberg, where he preached and expounded the Scriptures with ſo much dexterity, that he was graced with the degree of a Doctor; In that Univerſity he ſtudyed and practiſed Phyſick alſo, and was ſo much delighted therewith, that he endavoured to know the nature of Herbs and Plants, and what Diſeaſes they were good for: whereupon he planted two Gardens with his own hands, which with ſingular induſtry he furniſhed with variety of Simples, and made many excellent Medicines which did much good.

He ſtudies Hebrew.

He is called back to Wittenberg.

His delight in ſimples.

By reaſon of his Learning, and candid nature, he was very dear to Luther, and was very helpful to him in his Tranſlation of the Bible. He wrote ſo ſwiftly that he was choſen Scribe at the Diſputation at Worms, Anno Chriſti 1540. and yet withall, ſuggeſted to Melanchthon many things for anſwer to Eccius his ſubtilties, inſomuch that Glanvel (who ſupplyed the Emperours room) ſaid of him, That the Lutherans, had a Scribe that was more learned then all the Pontificians.

He aſſiſts in tranſlating the Bible.

His learning

He took by characters a great part of Luthers Lectures and Sermons, which afterwards he wrote out at large, and faithfully printed them after Luthers death. He publiſhed alſo ſome Commentaries of his own upon the Pſalms, and the Goſpel of Saint John, which are of excellent uſe to the learned. He was a fine and ſmooth Orator, and always abhorred the vain phancies of phanatick perſons, cleaving to the Truth without deviation. He ſhunned in his Sermons ſtrang and uncouth expreſſions, by which erroneous perſons oft diſturb the peace of the Church. He always oppoſed the Anabaptiſtical Errors, and was very careful to preſerve the Truth from corruptions. He often contemplated the footſteps of God in Nature, ſaying with Paul, That God was ſo near unto us, that he might almoſt be felt with our hands. He ſtudyed the Mathematicks in his latter time, and grew ſo skilful therein, that few excelled him: He was excellent alſo in the Opticks.

He ſtudyes the Mathematicks

But with his exceſſive pains, and inceſſant ſtudies night and day, he contracted to himſelf a mortal diſeaſe, whereby he waſted away, and yet his intellectuals decayed not. He lay ſick for above three months, all which time he gave forth clear and notable demonſtrations of his Faith, Patience and Piety. He called up his two young daughters, and cauſed them to repeat their Prayers before him, and then himſelf prayd with great fervency for himſelf, the Church, and thoſe his Orphans, concluding Invoco te quanquam languida & imbecilla fide, ſed fide tamen: credo promiſſioni tuæ, quam ſanguine tuo & reſurrectione obſignaſti, &c. I call upon thee with a weak, yet with a true Faith, I believe thy promiſes which thou haſt ſealed to me with thy Blood and Reſurrection, &c. In his ſickneſs he intermitted not his ſtudies. For during the ſame, he turned into Latine, Luthers books concerning the laſt words of David: He read the Pſalms, and other Authors: His ordinary diſcourſe with his friends was about the Principles of Religion, the admirable government of the Church, of Immortality, and our ſweet Communion in Heaven.

His carriage in ſickneſs.

Upon the ſixth of November there was a great Chaſm, or opening in the Heavens, and in ſome places fire fell to the Earth, and flew up into the ayr again: This Cruciger ſaw, as he lay in his bed in the night, and thereupon much bewayled the great commotions and diſſipations in the Church, which he foreſaw by this Prodigie: He ſpent the few days which remained, in Prayer and Repentance, and ſo quietly ended his days November 16. Anno Chriſti, 1548. and of his Age 45. Conſidering the mutability of all Earthly things, he uſed often to ſay,

And that for ever doth endure

He was a man of an excellent wit, whoſe dayly and indefatigable labors were not only very uſeful to the Univerſity of Wittenberg, but even to forraign Nations and Churches. He had a plentiful knowledge of the Celeſtial Doctrine, which by his ardent Piety and aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, was daily encreaſed in him. He was ſo exact and ready in the Hebrew Tongue that he eaſily excelled all others that joyned with him in the tranſlation of the Bible. In his Sermons and ſpeeches he had a ſound Judgement joyned with an Eloquent Tongue. He ſhewed the greatneſs of his minde by his exact knowledge and skill in the Mathematicks, wherein he was deſervedly accounted inferiour to none. And theſe gifts he adorned with many other excellent vertues, with gravity, conſtancy, and moderation in every condition, with bounty toward ſtrangers, and heartly love to his friends: He publiſhed ſundry Commentaries upon the Pſalms, John, and the firſt Epiſtle of Paul to Timothy. Lectures upon two Articles of the Nicene Creed. He turned many of Luthers Lectures and Sermons out of Dutch into Latine, and others out of Latine into Dutch.

The Life of Matthias Zellius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1548.

Matthias Zellius was born in Alſatia, in a Town called Kaiſerſberg, Anno Chriſti 1477. and was trained up in Learning by his Parents from his childhood, and afterwards ſet to the publick Schools: From whence he went to the Univerſity, where his proficiency was very exemplary: And being well grounded in the Arts, he commenced Maſter of Arts; and then applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity.

His birth and education.

Not long after he went to Straſborough, where he was ordained a Miniſter; and Anno Chriſti. 1522. he was made Paſtor of S. Lawrence Church: At which time Luthers Doctrine ſpreading abroad, Zellius compared it with the Doctrine of his Adverſaries the Papiſts; and upon mature deliberation and examination, imbraced that of Luther, whereupon he began puplickly to defend it, perſwading the Citiziens of Straſborough to entertain it.

He is ordained a Miniſter and Paſtor in Strasborough

His converſion

Aſſoon as the Biſhop heard hereof, he cited him to appear in his Court, and cauſed twenty four Articles to be drawn up againſt him, amongſt which theſe were ſome: That he taught Juſtification by Faith: That he defended Luther: That he preached againſt the Maſs: Held the Marriage of Prieſts to be lawful: Denyed the Primacy of the Biſhop of Rome and Humane Traditions: Hereupon Zellius An. Chr. 1523. publiſhed a Book wherein he anſwered this charge, juſtified his Doctrine, and ſhewed reaſons why he appeared not before the Biſhop. From this time forward he was much hated by the Popiſh Clergy, and went through many dangers for aſſerting the Truth, yet (through Gods mercy) he, with ſome others, ſo far prevailed, that the Magiſtrates of Straſborough caſt out Popery, and embraced the Reformed Religion, Anno Chriſti 1529.

His conſtancy.

Reformation in Strasborough

Zellius therefore was the firſt Preached of the Truth in the Church of Straſborough; To whom after a good while, Symphorianus an ancient Paſtor of S. Martins Church, adjoined himſelf, who formerly had been very looſe in his carriage, and therefore the people did the more admire this great change in him; yea ſome of his former acquaintance, led by his example, did ſhake off Popery, and embraced the Truth: and truly theſe two were rather Popular Preachers then learned: Yet Zellius was a man of ſingular piety: And not long after Anthoni Firnius, Miniſter of S. Thomas Church, joined himſelf to them, and was the firſt Miniſter in that City that marryed a wife: Yea, after after a while there came thither Martin Bucer, Capito and D. Gaſpar Hedio, learned and eminent men, who more ſtrongly carryed on the work of Reformation in Straſborough, Anno Chriſti 1523.

His death. Zellius continued a faithful and painful Paſtor in his Church till the year 1548. and of his Age 71. at which time it pleaſed God to tranſlate him from Earth to Heaven, after he had been a preacher in Straſborough about 26. years.

His character. He was a man famous, not for Learning only, but for other Chriſtian vertues, eſpecially modeſty, Temperance, and Charity: He had a good wit, was of an innocent and blameleſs Life. Preached the Truth purely, and was free from pride. Not only a Theoretick, but a Practical Divine: What he taught, he firſt practiſed himſelf, and had a ſpecial care of the Poor. Being on a time invited to ſupper by one of his Colleagues, he found much Plate ſet upon his Cupbord, at which he was ſo offended, that he went away without his ſupper: and afterwards in private ſo far prevailed with him, that he ſold his plate, and was more open-handed to the Poor.

His Works. He wrote many things, but, not ſeeking his own honour, would never ſuffer them to be printed: yet afterwards ſome few were publiſhed: As his Catechiſm in Dutch: An Explication of certain heads in Divinity: A defence of the Chriſtian Religion. An Oration, wherein he defended the Marriage of Miniſters. As alſo of the Decalogue, Lords Prayer, and Belief.

The Life of Vitus Theodorus, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1549.

His birth and Education. VItus Theodorus was born at Norimberg, one of the moſt famous Cities in Germany: and after he had been trained up in his Country-School, he went to Wittenberg, where he continued many years, applying himſelf hard to his ſtudies, and by his diligence, and attending upon the Lectures both publick and private, he made ſuch a progreſs in Learning, that he commenced Maſter of Arts, with the Good approbation of the Univerty: After which he betook himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, and attained to an excellent meaſure of knowledge therein: So that he was very dear to Luther, both for the eminent gifts of his mind, and for the holineſs of his Life, as alſo to Melanchthon: Both whoſe Lectures he dayly attended upon, and heard with much diligence, and by his good will would never be from their ſides.

He went with Luther Anno Chriſti, 1530. to Coburg in the Confines of Franconia, during the Diet at Auſpurg: He was alſo often preſent at the Imperial Diets which met about Religion, where he Diſputed with the Adverſaries about the Principal Heads of the Controverſies.

He was called to be a Paſtor at Norimberg, his own country where he preached the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt with great zeal and Eloquence, to the great profit of his hearers, and that for many years together in the Church of Sebald, till it pleaſed God to put an end to his labors, by tranſlating him out of this vale of tears into his Everlaſting Kingdom, Anno Chriſti 1549.

His Works. Scripſit Annotationes breves in tota Biblia Germanica: utilem Eccleſiæ operam navavit, Lutheri Colligendis expoliendiſque Commentariis in Prophetam Micheam, & in priora undecem Geneſeos capita.

The Life of Paulus Fagius, who dyed An. Chr. 1550.

Paulus Fagius was born in the Palatinate, An. Chr. 1504. of mean parents: His Father was Peter Buchlin, who was Schoolmaſter of Taberna Rhenana, the Town where this Paul was born. His Mothers name was Margaret. His Father brought him up in his own School till he was Eleven years old, and then ſent him to Heidleberg, where he was educated under John Brentius and Martin Frechtus till he was about 18. years old, and then he went to Strasborough, where he taught School to ſupply his neceſſities for ſome years: And the ſtudy of the Tongues, beginning about this time to be in requeſt, he applyed himſelf thereto, and became familiar with the moſt eminent therein, as Capito, Hedio, Bucer, Zellius, &c. who alſo were happy reformers of the Church of Chriſt at that time.

He teaches School.

He ſtudies the Tongues.

Anno Chriſti 1527. having attained ſome competent knowledge in the Languages, and other Learning; being compelled by poverty, he removed to Iſna, where alſo he taught School, and by his diligence, and virtuous carriage, approved himſelf to all: There alſo he married a wife, and growing more famous, he was called to the Miniſtry, and to a Paſtoral charge: But the ſtudy of the Tongues flouriſhing moſt at Strasborough, whither many Exiles reſorted for that end, he returned thither again, and read Hebrew to ſome with good ſucceſs. And yet in the mean time, he ſo followed the ſtudy of Divinity, and applyed himſelf to Preaching, that after two years ſpace he returned with his Family to his Friends more learned and better accommodated with outward things.

His poverty.

His diligence.

Anno Chriſti 1537. he was recalled to Iſna to a Paſtoral charge, which he diſcharged with good credit for about five years; ſpending his ſpare-time in the ſtudy of the Hebrew, wherein he profited to a miracle, ſo that it was believed that thoſe latter ages never produced a more learned man in the Hebrew then Fagius: He made uſe of a learned Jew, called Elins Levita, whom he ſent for to him from Venice: and amongſt his other friends there was one Senator of Iſna moſt dear unto him, called Peter Buſler, by whoſe aſſiſtance he ſet up a Preſs, and publiſhed ſome Books for the Publick good: and when he was faln into want, the ſaid Buſler was very bountifull to him: But finding that place not ſo fit for his purpoſe, he thought of changing his ſeat again.

He is made Paſtor at Iſna.

He is an excellent Hebrician.

He ſets up a Preſs.

Whilſt he was at Iſna, Anno Chriſti 1541. a great Plague brake forth, which cauſed many (eſpecially the richer ſort) to leave the place: Yet before their departure, by his zealous and fervent Sermons and Exhortations, he prevailed with ſome to ſtay, and with others to leave their alms behinde them for the relief of the indigent. He prevailed alſo with the Senate, upon the Publick purſe, to hire fit perſons to take care of the ſick: and Fagius himſelf all the time of the Infection, went up and down night and day to comfort thoſe that were viſited, refuſing none, no not the Pooreſt; ſo all acknowledged it no leſs then a miracle that he was preſerved in ſo contagious a time.

His carriage in a Plague-time.

About the ſame time the Plague raged much at Strasborough, and amongſt others, ſnatched away Wolfgang Capito, whoſe place continued void for a year after, viz. to the year 1542. whereupon the Commonwealth of Conſtance, which was aſſociated with them of Strasborough in Religion, by their Prayers and meſſengers prevailed to get him to Strasborough, firſt for two years, and afterwards for two years more: Though before this, Philip Prince of Haſſia had deſigned him for a Profeſſor in his Univerſity of Marpurg.

His remove to Strasborough.

About the beginning of the Germane war, Frederick the ſecond, Prince Elector Palatine, purpoſing to reform the Churches within his Dominion, made choice of Fagius (who was famous for his Eloquence and Doctrine) for that work; whereupon he ſent for him to Heidleberg to be a Preacher there.

His remove to Heidleberg.

During his abode at Heidleberg he publiſhed divers Books which were very uſeful for thoſe that ſtudyed the Hebrew Tongue: whereupon it ſeemed good to Bucer, Martyr, and Hedio, who were the ordinary Profeſſors of Divinity in that Univerſity, that each other week he ſhould read an extraordinary Divinity Lecture: and that when any of them were hindred by buſineſs or ſickneſs, he ſhould ſupply their rooms.

Religion goes to ruine.

Anno Chriſti 1548 Cæſar having prevailed in the war againſt the Proteſtants, the progreſs of Religion was hindred in the Palatinate, and the Interim began to be preſſed with great violence: and it was reſolved that the Godly Miniſters ſhould be baniſhed, eſpecially ſuch as by reaſon of their great imployments ſtood as a brazen wall in the way of Antichriſt: amongſt whom Fagius was one, who notwithſtanding all the threats of the Papiſts, continued conſtant and unmoveable in the Truth.

His conſtancy.

The ſufferings of theſe godly Divines grew famous in forreign Nations, whereupon Bucer and Fagius were ſent for by Cranmer into England, where they arrived Anno Chriſti 1549. and were honorably entertained by Doctor Cranmer, in his own houſe, where they were inſtrumental to the great encreaſe of Religion. Alſo by Cranmer they were ſet upon the Tranſlation of the Bible, with brief notes: to which they added an enucleation of hard Texts, and a reconciliation of ſeeming contradictions in Scripture. In this work Fagius undertook the Old Teſtament, and Bucer the New: But the work was hindred by the ſickneſs of them both, and the death of Fagius, who being taken with a Feaver about the end of the Dog-days, for change of Ayr was carryed to Cambridge, where the 13. of November, he ended his days joyfully, Anno Chriſti 1550. and of his Age 45. but not without the ſuſpition of Poyſon, and was there honourably buryed: Yet afterwards in Queen Maries time, Anno Chriſti 1556. he was condemned of Hereſie, his bones digged up and burned to aſhes.

MARTIN BVCER

The Life of Martin Bucer, ~~who dyed~~ Anno Christi 1551.

Martin Bucer was born at Seleſtade in Alſatia, Anno Chriſti 1491. Being of an excellent wit, he entred very young into the Monaſtery of the Dominicans there, and afterwards by conſent of the Prior, he went to Heidleberg for the encreaſe of Learning; And having gone through other Arts, he ſtudied Divinity, together with the Greek and Hebrew Tongues. His birth. His education.

Whilſt he was there he met with and read Eraſmus and Luthers Works, whereupon he began to diſ-relliſh Popery, and Frederick Prince Elector Palatine being much pleaſed with his Eloquence, and ſingular Humanity, as alſo with his clear and ſtrong Voice, and with his freedom in reproving the vices of men, by the inſtigation of Sir Francis Sickengen choſe him to be his Miniſter, ſo that he Preached often in Heidleberg and elſewhere. He is made Preacher at Heidleburg.

During his abode in that place, Luther came thither, whom he heard diſputing againſt Free Will, which kindled in his Breaſt the firſt ſparks of the Divine Truth, which by his converſing with Luther were further encreaſed. Afterwards going with his Prince into the Low-countries, he Preached freely againſt the Superſtitions and ſins of the times, and began to bethink himſelf of leaving his Order, whereupon the Monks lay in wait to take away his Life: But eſcaping thence, he went to Sir Francis Sickengen, who ſheltered him from danger, (till the Controverſies about Religion were determined) in his Caſtle at Nauſtall; and when Luther was ſent for to the Diet at Worms, he went along with him, and after ſome converſe, he embraced and defended his cauſe: Not long after, War ariſing between Sickengen, and Trevir, Bucer finding that he could not follow his ſtudies in the midſt of thoſe tumults, craved leave to depart, and obtained it: But a Neighbor Paſtor of Wiſſemburg intreated him to Preach in his charge, which he did till by the unhappy fall of Sickengen, they were both driven thence by the prevailing power, ſo that he fell into great danger. His Converſion. His zeal. Popiſh malice. An. Chr. 1521. He goes with Luther to Worms. His troubles.

About this time the ſeeds of the reformed Religion began to be ſown in Strasborough by Matthew Zellius, and Gaſper Hedio, Sigiſmund Count of Hohenlo favoring them: to whom therefore Bucer went, and was curteouſly entertained, and Anno Chriſti He goes to Strasborough 1523. was appointed publick Preacher in the Church, and to read Divinity in the Schools.

Reformation in Strasborough.

These Colleagues excelling in Wit, Eloquence and Zeal, did propagate the Gospel of Christ notably in that City, and the year after published in Print the reasons why they changed the Mass into the Lords Supper, &c. which Book they dedicated to Frederick the Elector Palatine. This Book was subscribed by Capito, Hedio, Zellius, Pollio, Niger, John Latomus, Firn, Hag, and Bucer: Hereupon the Senate of Strasborough by a general Vote reformed their City, casting out Popery, and establishing the pure Gospel of Christ.

A disputation at Marpurg.

Anno Christi 1529. when the Gospellers agreed not in all things amongst themselves, a conference was appointed at Marpurg, between Luther and Zuinglius, whereupon Bucer with Hedio, went thither, and had much discourse with them, wherein they agreed upon all points of Divinity, except about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and so parted friendly, resolving ab omni contentione in posterum abstinendum utrinq; esse: Deumq; orandum ut Spiritu suo erudiat ducatq;: That both sides should abstain from contention, &c.

He disputes with the Papists.

The year following at Ausburg he disputed with the Papists, and had a large testimony for his Learning, and modesty, hearing his Adversaries patiently, rather seeking Truth then Victory, and answering them mildly, yet strongly: He took much pains to reconcile the difference between Luther and Zuinglius about the Lords Supper, fore-seeing the great mischief that that difference would bring upon the Church.

A blessed peace-maker.

He reforms Ulm.

Anno Christi 1531. the Citizens of Ulm sent for him to Reform their Churches, where he, with Oecolampadius, performed the trust put in him with much prudence and faithfulness. He was so studious of peace, that some said he complyed too much with Luther in that Doctrine, against which he had formerly both Preached and Written. Whereupon, in the Moneth of May Anno Christi 1533. he went to Zurick, and there in an Assembly of the Ministers of the Church, he purged himself from the suspition of revolt, shewing that he did still retain the same Doctrine concerning the Supper of our Lord which he had formerly professed, and had defended in the Disputation at Bern against the Adversaries thereof, and that, by the grace of God, he would continue therein to his lives end: But yet he said that it seemed to him that Luther dissented from Zuinglius rather in words then in Doctrine and very deed: He requested also the Ministers of Zurick that they would not attempt, nor write any thing more bitterly against Luther, by reason of that Epistle which he had, sent to the Magistrates of Franckford.

His Apology at Zurick.

To this they of Zurick answered, That they admitted his excuse: yet withall shewed him out of that Epistle, what Luther seemed to think of the Supper of the Lord, and what was to be expected of them hereafter; withall telling him, that they were determined with Gods help to remain in that Doctrine which they had taught hitherto in the Church of Zurick, till they were otherwise convinced out of the holy Scriptures: and in the mean time they would do what might conduce to peace, so that the Truth was not wronged, and so they dismissed Bucer lovingly and honorably.

His imployments.

Anno Christi 1537. He encouraged the Senate of Strasborough to erect a School, in which himself taught. He was present at many Disputations and Conferences, wherein he carryed himself with singular prudence: He was one of the Disputants at Ratisbone against Eccius, and others of the Popish party: in which he grew acquainted with John Gropper, who, at his return, commended him so much to Herman, Archbishop of Collen, that he sent for Bucer to assist him in the Reformation of his Churches, yet afterwards that Gropper became a deadly Enemy to Bucer, and the honest Archbishop was first Excommunicated by the Pope, and then thrust out of his Government by the Emperour.

Hermannus sends for him.

The Intrim made.

Anno Christi 1548. the Emperour, with the consent of the Princes, chose some moderate men to write a form for amendment of the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church; The persons imployed therein were, Julius Pflug, Michael Helding,

John

John Agricola, Phil. Melanchon, and John Brentius; Theſe wrote a Book which was called the Interim. Hereupon the Elector of Brandenburg wrote to the Senate of Strasborough, entreating them to ſend Martin Bucer to him: For (ſaith he) the Emperour ſeeing how loth the Pope is to have a Council, hath thought of another way, ſo that good men hope there will be an amendment of things in the Church. Bucer coming to Auſpurg, lodged with the Elector of Brandenburg, who ſhewed him the Book, and told him that it was written with as great moderation as could be, and therefore perſwaded him to approve thereof: But when Bucer had peruſed it, he refuſed to allow it, for that there were many Popiſh Doctrines contained therein: At this the Elector was very angry, and the Lord of Granvel was very earneſt with him to ſubſcribe it, but he would by no means be drawn thereto, and ſo he returned home with great danger of his life, going through the Country of Wittenberg, which was full of Spaniſh Souldiers. Bucer diſowns it.

Shortly after his return to Strasborough, the Interim was by the Emperour obtruded upon them: and the Proteſtan Divines were every where in great danger; Some being dragged unto Priſon, and others driven into Exile: & it ſo fell out by Gods Providence, that the fame of Bucers ſuffering with his Colleagues flew into England, where the Reformation of Religion was begun under Edward the ſixth: whereupon Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by his Letters earneſtly ſollicited Bucer with P. Fagius to come into England; and when they ſaw no hope of recovering their liberty in Germany, they aſſented, and went over Anno Chriſti 1549. by the conſent of the Senate of Strasborough, and at their arrival, were kindly entertained, eſpecially by the Archbiſhop, who ſhortly after provided them houſes at Cambridge, that thereby they might be imployed in the interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures: Bucer had alſo a ſtipend of Two-Hundred Forty Crowns per annum ſettled upon him, that with his Family, he might live comfortably amongſt ſtrangers: He was alſo imployed in interpreting the New Teſtament, wherein he began with the Goſpel of John: He had ſuch a dexterity in reconciling ſeeming contradictions in Scriptures, as was a wonder to his Auditors. The Engliſh much admired, at his Learning, ſo his integrity of Life, ſimplicity of Apparrel, Modeſty, and Sobriety in his food, his tollerance of Labors, and great Patience in ſeveral Diſeaſes. A perſecution about the Interim. He is ſent for into England. His imployment there.

Shortly after, with the change of ayr, he fell into a fit of ſickneſs, which was a pain in his Bowels, the Stone, a nauſeating in his Stomach, Coſtiveneſs, and a violent Catarh, upon which diſeaſes he lay ſick for ſome moneths: yet would he never be idle, for when he could not go to the Publick Schools, he read his Lectures in his own houſe: yet in January following he read again in the Schools, though he continued craſie. His ſickneſs. His indefatigableneſs.

He had great Authority in Teaching, his Doctrine was excellent, his Life blameleſs, his Wiſdom great, his Voice ſtrong, agreeing with the matter he delivered: He uſed a modeſt freedom in noting mens manners, and as he abhorred idleneſs himſelf, ſo neither would he ſuffer others about him to be idle.

Thus exerciſing himſelf indefatigably for thirty days together, he fell into a relapſe, yet being a little recovered, he Commenced Doctor in Divinity: But relapſing a ſecond time, he imployed himſelf wholly in Heavenly Meditations, and prayed God to keep England from thoſe ſins which had brought upon Germany ſo much miſery; and that, that form of Diſcipline which he had written to King Edward the ſixth, might be here eſtabliſhed. Mr. John Bradford going to Preach, told him that he would remember him in his Prayers, whereupon Bucer weeping, ſaid, Caſt me not off (O my God) in my old age, now when my ſtrength faileth me: withall adding, He hath afflicted me ſore, but he will never, never caſt me off. And being admoniſhed to arm himſelf againſt the temptations of Satan, he anſwered, I am wholly Chriſts; and the Devil hath nothing to do with me; and God forbid that I ſhould not now have experience of the ſweet conſolations in Chriſt; and ſo with ſweet and heavenly ejaculations, he reſigned up his ſpirit into the hands of God, at Cambridge, February the 27. Anno Chriſti 1551. of his age 61. and had about three thouſand perſons attending him to his grave: Walter Haddon and Dr. Parker Preached his Funeral Sermons. His ſickneſs. His faith. His death.

Anno 1556. in Queen Maries days he was condemned of Hereſie, his body digged up, and, together with his Books, burned.

The Cardinals teſtimony of him.

Cardinal Contarene returning out of Germany from the Diſputation at Ratisbone, being asked his judgement of the Germane Divines, anſwered, Habent Germani Martin. The Life Gaſper Hedio, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1552.

His birth. and education.

Aſpar Hedio was born at Etling, in the Marquiſat of Baden, of honeſt Parents, and educated in Learning at Friburg, where alſo he Commenced Maſter of Arts; and from thence went to Baſil, where he ſtudyed Divinity, and Commenced Doctor Anno Chriſti 1520. About which time the glorious Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt beginning to appear in Germany, Hedio embraced and made a profeſſion of the ſame, whereupon being called to Preach in the chief Church of Ments, he taught the Truth plainly and powerfully, which when the tender and delicate Ears of many would not endure, a perſecution was raiſed up againſt him, eſpecially by the Popiſh Clergy, which cauſed him to leave Ments, and go to Strasborough, Anno Chriſti 1523. where he was a great aſſiſtance to Capito and Bucer in reforming Religion by the command of the Senate, though the Papiſts gnaſhed their teeth at it: For the ſame year the Senate commanded their Preachers that they ſhould teach the Goſpel freely and Publickly, and that they ſhould inſtill into their hearers the Love of God and their Neighbors; yet withall, that they ſhould abſtain from reproaching the contrary opinions, and from ſcandalous provoking the people againſt them.

His converſion.

He goes to Strasborough.

Reformation at Strasborough.

His marriage.

Anno Chriſti 1523. Hedio marryed a wife, and though the Papiſts raiſed a great perſecution in that City againſt him, yet he Preached boldly againſt Maſſes, Indulgences, Auricular Confeſſion, &c. and wrote againſt them alſo. And when the Senators of Strasborough the year after, ſet forth in Print the reaſons grounded upon Scripture, why they made that alteration in Religion, Hedio with Colleagues ſubcribed it: and withall, they publiſhed certain Propoſitions, wherein they ſtrongly defended their Doctrine to be grounded upon the Word of God.

He is ſent for to Collen.

Anno Chriſti 1543. when Herman, Archbiſhop of Collen, began a Reformation, he ſent for Bucer and Hedio to aſſiſt him therein, knowing them to be men of very quiet diſpoſitions, and very fit to inſtruct the people: But awhile after when Cæſar came to Bonna, they were in great danger by reaſon of his Spaniſh Souldiers, and at laſt by the command of Cæſar, they were diſmiſſed from Ments, and through many difficulties and dangers they returned to Strasborough.

His danger and return.

His diligence.

What time he could ſpare from his Miniſterial imployment, he ſpent in writing Commentaries and Hiſtories, of which a great part afterwards were publiſhed in Print, whereby he deſerved excellently of the Church; and ſo continued Preaching and Writing till the year 1552. at which time it pleaſed God to put an end to his labors on Earth, and to tranſlate him to his Heavenly Kingdom: concerning whom one made this Epigram.

His death.

He corrected Chronicon Abbatis Uſpergenſis: adding many remarkable matters from the year 1512 to 1537. He wrote Chronicon Germanicum: Beſides a great many Hiſtories and other Books which he tranſlated into Dutch. His works.

As he maintained peace and friendſhip with his Colleagues, ſo he held correſpondence with moſt of the learned men of that Age. The Life of Oſwald Myconius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1552.

Oswald Myconius was born at Lucern in Helvetia, Anno Chriſti 1488. and was firſt trained up in his Country School: after which he went to Baſil, and there betook himſelf to the ſtudy of the Arts and Tongues, which he proſecuted with great diligence, and was much delighted with the Works of Eraſmus, and of his Country-man Henry Glarianus, with both of which he was well acquainted, and was highly prized by them both for the excellency of his wit, and for his ſingular learning: This was about the year 1514. His birth & education.

His Learning being taken notice of, he was by the Magiſtrates of Baſil made chief Maſter of Saint Theodores School, and a while after of Saint Peters School, in both which he trained up many young men, and made them very fine Scholars. He is made a Schoolmaſter.

After ſome years he was called from Baſil to Zurick to moderate a School there, where he took great pains in training up youth for three years ſpace; at the end whereof he was called into his own Country of Lucern, and ſet over the chief School there: About which time the Doctrine of the Goſpel began to ſhine out in all places, and our Myconius did not only willingly and readily embrace it himſelf, but was zealous to propagate it; and for that end, endevoured to inſtill it into the hearts of his Scholars, which were very many, inſomuch as the Popiſh party taking notice of it, ruined him out of his School, Anno Chriſti 1523. Removes to Zurick. From thence to Lucern. His converſion.

From thence therefore he went back to Zurick, where he was kindely entertained, and made chief Schoolmaſter again, where he continued till after Zuinglius was ſlain in the War, at which time Learning and the eſteem of Learned men began to decay in Zurick, whereupon he returned to Baſil, and giving over the troubleſome Office of a Schoolmaſter, he was made Deacon of the Church of S. Alban, where he preached diligently till the death of John Oecolampadius, and then he took up his Divinity Lecture, and began to expound the Goſpel of S. Mark, which he performed ſo well, that very many Auditors frequented his Lectures. Goes back to Zurick. Thence to Baſil. He is made a Deacon.

About this time the Magiſtrates of Baſil conſulted about ſurrogating one in the Paſtoral Office of Oecolampadius: and (beyond his expectation) Myconius was nominated and appointed thereto, and ſo was made the chief Paſtor in Baſil, having but a little while ſupplyed the Office of a Deacon. In this his Paſtoral Office he continued for about twenty years with great fidelity and diligence, and both by his Lectures and Miniſtry was very grateful to his hearers: And the rather becauſe his curteous carriage was very pleaſing, his Learning more then ordinary, and his Eloquence very popular. And a Paſtor.

When the great controverſie about the manner of Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament ment ſprang up, Myconius inclined to the opinion of Luther, and often rendred his reaſons for it to his friends in private: But when for this, ſome grudges were raiſed up againſt him in the Univerſity, he voluntarily laid down his Divinity Lectures, and wholly applyed himſelf to his Paſtoral Office, wherein he continued to the end of his life, which fell out Anno Chriſti 1552. and of his age 64.

His death.

His works.

He wrote a learned and pious Expoſition upon the Goſpel of S. Mark: Sermons upon Pſalm 101. He tranſlated Oecolampadius his Catechiſm out of Dutch into Latine: He publiſhed Commentaries upon Mathew, Luke, and John, as alſo upon the Prophets Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Jonas, beſides ſome other Theological and Philological Works.

GEORG PRINCE OF ANHALT

The Life of George Prince of Anhalt, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1553.

His Birth.

His Education.

George Prince of Anhalt was born Anno Chriſti 1507. Of a very ancient and honourable Family. His Father was Prince Erneſt. By the advice of that grave, and prudent man, Adolphus, Prince of Anhalt, Biſhop of Mersburg, he was ſet to the ſtudy of the Law, wherein he ſhewed ſuch induſtry, that he was quickly acquainted with the principles of it, and being of a generous nature he loved the Truth, & hated Lyes; often uſing that Proverb of Solomon, that, Lying lips become not a Prince. Amongſt all Law-books, he was moſt verſed in Panormitan.

His firſt preferment.

Having thus prepared his Wit by theſe Studies, Anno Chriſti 1522. he was by Cardinal Albert, Elector of Mentz, and Biſhop of Magdeburg, choſen to be one of his Counſellors, whereby he was verſed in the weighty Affairs of State, finding the uſe and benefit of his knowledge of the Law therein; and being Eloquent by nature, the Cardinal often made uſe by him to open his minde to others; ſo that his judgement was encreaſed and confirmed by his induſtry and employments.

But the Controverſies about Religion waxing hot at this time, and Luther's books coming abroad, he fell to reading of them, eſpecially De diſcrimine Legis, & Evan-

Evangelii. De vera pœnitentia. De gratia. De fide. De vera invocatione. De uſu Sacramentorum. De diſcrimine legum divinarum, & humanarum. De diſcrimine Miniſterii Evangelici, & politicæ poteſtatis. Yet withall ſuſpecting his own injudiciouſneſs, he would often pray with tears to God to incline his heart to the Truth, ſaying, Deal with thy ſervant according to thy mercy, and inſtruct me in thy Righteouſneſs. He was frequent in reading the Scriptures, Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, Auguſtine, Hierom, and Lombard, having George Forcheme both for an helper, and co-partner with him in thoſe ſtudies.

He ſtudied alſo Greek and Hebrew, and was ſo perfect in the Hebrew that few excelled him. He diſcourſed with learned men about the Controverſies; & ſo at length, having long weighed the Opinions of all, he concluded, that the Confeſſion of the Reformed Churches did agree with the ancient Catholick Church of God, inſtructed by the writings of the Prophets, and Apoſtles: And though he knew what hatred and danger he expoſed himſelf to, yet he made a publique profeſſion of the Truth; giving over to joyne with the Papiſts, in their Counſels, and Idolatrous Services; giving himſelf wholly to Prayer, and reading the Scriptures, and other good Books: aſſiſting his Brethren (with whom he lived in perfect Peace and Love) exceedingly in their Governments. And firſt of all, by their joynt conſents, he reformed the Churches in his own Country, ſetting fit Paſtors over them, commanding them to teach the Word of Truth to their people. He aboliſhed the Popiſh Ceremonies, erected Schooles, allowed competent ſtipends to the Miniſters: ſo that all things were Reformed without any diſſention or tumult; and many were drawn to embrace the Truth; others were confirmed therein by the judgements and examples of their pious Princes. He was alſo very profitable to his Country by the faithful adminiſtration of Juſtice to them. Anno Chriſti 1545. he was called to the Government of the Churches in the Dioceſs of Mersburg, and for that end, he ſent for Philip Melanchon, and divers other godly Miniſters, who ordained him by the Impoſition of hands, and gave him a Teſtimonial thereof Auguſt the third 1545. Concerning which Melanchon thus writeth; Nos convocati, quia certè ſciebamus hunc illuſtriſſimum Principem Georgium rectè intelligere, & conſtanter amplecti puram Evangelii Doctrinam, quam Eccleſiæ harum regionum una voce, & uno ſpiritu cum Catholica Eccleſia Dei profitentur, & eximiam ejus eſſe virtutem, & ſanctitatem: Teſtimonium noſtrum de eo, ritu Apoſtolico, impoſitione manuum, declaravimus, &c.

He profeſſeth the reformed religion.

He reforms his Country.

He is ordained.

He lived very continently in a ſingle life, without any defilement: His Chamber was a Temple, Academy, and a Court; For he uſed daily in the ſame to pray, read, write, and deliberate about Government. He never wronged any man willingly. He did good both privately and publickly to many. He was a great promoter of Peace among Princes. He ended many Controverſies. He abhorred all ſeditious and turbulent counſels. He was far from ambition. No anger, hatred, or deſire of revenge could ever draw him to goe againſt the Rules of Juſtice, or to act any thing againſt the common good. Many, and great injuries he bore with a great minde, and pardoned them for the publick peace ſake.

His holy life.

And with the ſame moderation of minde he bore other griefs, ſo that it might eaſily appear, that he was ſupported by Prayer, and reſting himſelf upon God; and as a learned man, he knew the difference between divine, and humane conſolations, and often repeated this ſaying, Subditus eſto Deo, & ora eum, &c. Submit thy ſelf to God, and pray unto him; for he is near to thoſe that are of a contrite heart, and will ſave the humble in ſpirit. He employed his time ſo well, that he left none for pleaſures; and uſed to ſay, That nothing refreſhed him more in his ſorrows, than conference with learned and godly men. About all controverſies in Law he uſed to conferre with the excellenteſt Lawyers, who were wiſe and vertuous men: About the nature of mans body, the cauſes and remedies of diſeaſes, with the moſt skilful Phyſitians: About the Doctrine of the Church, Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, with Luther, Juſtus Jonas, John Bugenhag, &c. and many of their Diſputations, full of Learning and Piety, were heard to the profit of many. He conferred with Joachim Camerarius about the Hiſtories of all Ages, the mutation of Empires, their period, and

His induſtry.

His prudence to improve his parts.

the cauſes thereof; about the Motions of the Heavens, and the effects of the Stars.

The laſt act of this Princes life ſhewed his Piety, and Gods preſence with him: For falling ſick of a moſt troubleſome diſeaſe, he was frequent in holy prayer for himſelf, for all the Princes of that Family, for his Country, and for Germany. He had ſome portions of the holy Scripture daily read to him. He made his Will, wherein he ſet down the Confeſſion of his Faith, and commended the defenſe of his Churches to His Brother. He added ſomething to the ſtipends of all the godly Miniſters under his charge. He often ruminated upon thoſe Texts, God ſo loved the world, that he gave &c. No man ſhall take my ſheep out of my hand. Come unto me all yee that are weary, &c. and ſo in holy meditations and prayer he reſigned up his ſpirit unto God Anno Chriſti 1553, and of his Age, 47.

Synods. Amongſt other parts of his Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtrations, every year he held two Synods, wherein all the Paſtors of his Dioceſſe met together, where they had very profitable Sermons preached. He was made Superintendent of thoſe Churches of Mersburg by Auguſtus Duke of Saxony, brother to Maurice, Anno Chriſti 1544.

His Works. His Works which he left behind him were theſe; A Conſolatory Sermon upon that ſpeech of our Saviour, None can take my ſheep out of my hand. A Nuptial Sermon preached at Torgau, at the Marriage of the Duke of Saxony to Anne the King of Denmarks Daughter. Four Sermons about the Sacrament. A Conſolation to his Brother Wolphgang in his Sickneſſe. Two Sermons againſt Falſe Prophets. Sermons containing an aſſertion of the true Doctrine in the Reformed Churches. A Tractate about the Apoſtolical Rite of Ordination uſed in the Reformed Churches. His opinion about the controverted Articles publiſhed by Selneccerus.

His Conſtancy. He was of ſuch conſtancy of Life and Manners, that it might truly be ſaid of him, which Dion ſaid of the Emperor Marcus Antonius, In omni vita ſui ſimilis, nec ulla unquam in remutatus fuit. Itaq; vere fuit vir bonus, nec, fictum, aut ſimulatum quicquam habuit.

The Life of Juſtus Jonas, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1555.

His Birth. Juſtus Jonas was born at Northuſa, Anno Chriſti 1493, where his Father was a Senator, who, falling ſick of the Plague, having applyed an Onion to the Soer, and taken it off, he layd it by him; preſently after, this little Jonas coming, took the Onion and eat it up, yet without any prejudice to himſelf; God miraculouſly preſerving him from that danger.

A miracle of Mercy.

He was at firſt brought up at School, in his own Country. Afterwards being ſent to a publick School, he ſtudied the Law, and made a good progreſs therein: but upon better thoughts, he ſtudied Divinity, and proceeded Doctor, and embraced the Reformed Religion, and was called Anno Chriſti 1521 to a Paſtoral Charge in Wittenberg: And when ſundry Controverſies aroſe, eſpecially about abrogating private Maſſe, and the Prince Elector of Saxony feared leſt the aboliſhing of it ſhould cauſe great tumults, Jonas with his Colleagues went to him, and rendred ſuch reaſons for it, that the Prince acquieſced therein.

His Converſion

His call to Wittenburg.

He was preſent at moſt of the Diſputations about Religion, where he defended the Truth ſtrenuouſly, and endeavoured to promote Peace. He was alſo made a Profeſſor in that Univerſity, where he publickly read Divinity Lectures, and bore all Offices in the Schools. Anno Chriſti 1533. he created ſundry Doctors of Divinity, as Gaſper Cruciger, John Bugenhag, Pomeranus, and John Æpinus, Paſtor of the Church of Hamborough: At which Commencement John Frederick Elector of Saxony was preſent, and was much delighted with the Eloquent Speeches made by Juſtus Jonas.

His employments in the Schools.

He reforms ſome Churches. Anno Chriſti 1539, when Henry Duke of Saxony, who had embraced the Reformed Religion, and was admitted into the League of Smalcald, ſucceded his Brother George in the Government of Miſnia and Thuringia, he preſently, by the advice of Luther Luther and his Colleagues, Reformed his Churches, Luther himſelf beginning that Reformation; but the carrying on, and perfecting of that work, was left to the care of Juſtus Jonas, with Spalatine and Amperſdorf.

From thence he was called unto Hale in Saxony, where he preached and promoted Religion exceedingly: And whilſt he was imployed there, he was not only very uſeful to thoſe Churches, but was ſent to from divers others for advice and counſel, and being a man of a publick ſpirit, he was never wanting to thoſe that craved his help. Luther ſometimes reſorted thither to him, and took him along with him in his laſt journey to Iſleben, Anno Chriſti 1546, where he dyed: After whoſe death he remained a while in the Duke of Saxony's Court, and was a conſtant companion of John Frederick's Sonnes in all their afflictions. And laſtly, he was ſet over the Church in Eiſfield, and was made Superintendent of the Franconian Churches within the Principality of Coburg, where he ended his dayes in much peace and comfort, Anno Chriſti 1555, and of his age 63.

He is called to Hale.

His death.

He was a man of an excellent Wit, of great Induſtry, of much Integrity of life, joyned with Piety. Whilſt Luther lived he was his faithful friend, and moſt dear to him. Moſt of the famous men of that age were his great friends. On a time Luther coming to his houſe, drank to him out of a curious glaſs, adding this Diſtich ex tempore.

His Character.

Dat vitrum vitreo Jonæ vitrum iſpe Lutherus:
Ut vitro fragili ſimilem ſe noſcat uterq;

Being once under Temptations, and in a great Agony, he ſhewed much deſpondency, but his ſervant, partly by comforting him, and partly by chiding him, cheared him up, and at laſt, through God's mercy, the Spirit prevailed againſt the fleſh.

His Tentation.

He publiſhed a Defence of the marriage of Miniſters againſt John Faber, the patron of whoredoms: An Oration about the ſtudy of Divinity. Annotations upon the Acts: About private Maſſe, and the Unction of Prieſts. He turned ſome of Luthers works into Latin.

His Works.

The Life of John Rogers, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1555.

John Rogers was born in England, and brought up at the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he profited very much in good learning, and from thence was choſen by the Merchant Adventurers to be their Chaplain at Antwerp, to whom he preached many years, and there falling into acquaintance with Will. Tindal, and Miles Coverdal (who were fled thither from the perſecution in England) he, by their means, profited much in the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, and joyned with them in that painful and profitable work of Tranſlating the Bible into Engliſh, and being much enlightened thereby in the ſaveing knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, he caſt off the heavy yoak of Popery, perceiving it to be impure, and filthy Idolatry.

His birth & education.

He goes to Antwerp.

His converſion.

There he married a wife, and from thence he went to Wittenberg, where he much profited in learning, and grew ſo skilful in the Dutch-tongue, that he was choſen paſtor to a Congregation and diſcharged his office with diligence, and faithfulneſs for many years.

His marriage.

He goes to Wittenberg.

But in King Edward's time, he was ſent for home by Biſhop Ridley, and was made a Prebend of Pauls, and the Dean and Chapter choſe him to read a Divinity Lecture in that Church, in which place he preached faithfully till Queen Marie's dayes; And in the beginning of her Reign, in a Sermon at Paul's Croſs, he exhorted the people conſtantly to adhere to that Doctrine which they had been taught: and to beware of peſtilent Popery, Idolatry, and ſuperſtition, for which he was called before the

His zeal, and Courage.

Lords of the Council, where he made a ſtout, witty and godly anſwer, yet withall carried himſelf ſo prudently, that for that time he was diſmiſſed: But after the Queen's Proclamation againſt True Preaching came forth, he was again called (the Biſhops thirſting for his blood) and committed Priſoner to his own houſe, whence he might have eſcaped, and had many motives, as his wife, and ten children, his friends in Germany, where he could not want preferment, &c. But being once called to anſwer in Chriſt's Cauſe, he would not depart, though to the hazard of his life. From his own houſe, he was removed by Bonner to Newgate amongſt thieves and murtherers for a great ſpace.

His courage and Conſtancy.

His uſage before the Councill.

At length he was again carried before the Lords of the Council, where the Lord Chancellor [Steven Gardener] taunted, reviled, and checked him, not ſuffering him to ſpeak his mind, and ſo remanded him to priſon: whereupon he wrote thus: I was compelled to leave off what I would have moſt gladly ſpoken, and therefore I deſire the moſt hearty, and unfeigned prayers of all Chriſts true members, the true imps of the true Catholique Church: That the Lord God of all conſolation will now be my comfort, and, ſtrength, buckler, and ſhield: as alſo of all my Brethren who are in the ſame caſe, aid diſtreſſe; that I, and you all may deſpiſe all manner of threats, and cruelty, and even the bitter burning fire, and the dreadfull dart of death, and ſtick like true ſoldiers to our dear, and loving Captaine Chriſt, our onely Redeemer, and Saviour; and the onely true head of the Church; that doth all in us all, That we doe not traiterouſly run out of his tents, or rather out of the plaine field from him in the heat of the Battell: But that we may perſevere in the fight (If he pleaſe not otherwiſe to deliver us) till we be moſt cruelly ſlaine of his Enemies. For this I moſt heartily, and even with teares moſt inſtantly, and earneſtly deſire you all to pray: And if I dye, to be good to my poor, and moſt honeſt wife, being a poor ſtranger, and to all my little ſoules, her, and my children, &c.

His condemnation.

The next day he was brought before the Councel again, and the third day alſo, where he met with the like uſage, and when by no means they could remove him from his conſtancy, Steven Gardener read his ſentence of condemnation, Degraded him, and ſo delivered him over to the ſecular power; Declaring that he was under the great curſe, and that it was a vengeable dangerous matter to eat, or drink with him, or to give him any thing: for that all that did ſo, ſhould be partakers of the ſame curſe.

His ſpeech upon it.

Then ſaid Mr Rogers: Well my Lord, here I ſtand before God and you, and all this Honorable Audience, and take him to witneſſe, that I never wittingly, and willingly taught any falſe Doctrine, and therefore have I a good conſcience before God and all good men. I am ſure that you, and I ſhall come before a righteous Judge, before whom I ſhall be as good a man as you: and I nothing doubt but I ſhall be found then a true member of Jeſus Chriſt, and everlaſtingly ſaved. And as for your falſe Church you needed not to have excommunicated me out of it, for I have not lived in it theſe twenty yeares, the Lord be thanked for it.

Then he deſired that his wife (to whom he had been married eighteen years, and by whom he had ten children, and ſhe being a ſtranger) might be admitted to come to him whilſt he lived: But Steven Gardner, the then Lord Chancellor, would by no means ſuffer it.

Gardners Cruelty.

February 4th, Anno Chriſti 1555. He was warned ſuddenly by the keepers wife of Newgate to prepare himſelf for the fire, who then being found aſleep could ſcarce be awaked, with much jogging: At length being awaked, and raiſed, he was bid to make haſt: If it be ſo, ſaid he, I need not tie my points, and ſo he was preſently had away to Bonner to be degraded, of whom he earneſtly requeſted to be admitted to ſpeak with his wife, but could not prevaile.

He is warned to prepare for Death.

He is degraded.

From thence he was carried into Smithfield, where ſcarce being permitted to ſpeak to the people, he briefly perſuaded them to perſeverance in that truth which he had taught them, which alſo he was now ready to ſeal with his blood. Then was a pardon proferred to him if he would recant, but he utterly refuſed it. His wife, with nine ſmall Children, and the tenth ſucking at her Breſt came to him, but this ſorrowful ſight nothing moved him, but in the flames he waſhed his hand, and with wonderful patience took his death, all the people exceedingly rejoycing at his conſtancy, and praiſing God for it. He was the Proto-Martyr in Queen Marie's dayes. The

His Conſtancy.

His Patience, and Martyrdom.

The Sabbath before his death he drank to Mr. Hooper, who lay in a chamber beneath him, bidding the Meſſenger to commend him to him, and to tell him, That there was never little fellow that would better ſtick to a man, then he would to him; ſuppoſing they ſhould be both burn'd together, although it happened otherwiſe. Cheerfulneſs in ſufferings.

During the time of his impriſonment ſtrait ſearch was made in his chamber for his writings, and papers, yet nothing was found: But after his Death, his wife, and one of his ſons going to his chamber to look after them, could find nothing, till being ready to depart, the boy eſpyed a black thing lying in a corner under a blind pair of ſtairs, which indeed proved the book they looked for, containing a narration of his examination, and anſwers, whereunto were added theſe predictions. A ſpeciall Providence.

If (ſaid he) God look not mercifully upon England, the ſeeds of utter deſtruction are ſown in it already by theſe hyprocritical Tyrants, and Antichriſtian Prelates, double Traytors to their native Country. And yet they ſpeake of Mercy, of Bleſſing, of Unity, of the Catholick Church, &c. But this double diſſimulation will be diſcovered one day, when the Plague comes, which undoubtedly will fall upon thoſe Crown-ſhorne Captains, and that ſhortly, whatſoever the Godly, and the poor Realme ſuffer in the mean time by Gods permiſſion, and will: For the diſperſed Engliſh flock ſhall be brought again unto their former ſtate, or a better (I truſt in the Lord God) then it was in innocent King Edwards days; and our bloody Babylonian Biſhops, with their whole Crown-ſhorne company ſhall be brought to utter ſhame, rebuke, ruine, and deſtruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not for ever ſuffer their abominable, lying, falſe Doctrine, their Hypocriſy, Blood-thirſtineſs, Whoredoms, Idleneſs, their Peſtilent lives Pamperd in all kinds of delight, their Thraſonical Boaſting Bride, their Malitious, Envious, and Poyſonful Stomacks, which they bear towards his poor afflicted Flock. Some ſhall have their puniſhment here in this World, and they that eſcape here, ſhall not eſcape everlaſting Damnation. This ſhall be your Sawce, O yee wicked Papiſts, make yee merry as long as yee may. His propheſies

Alſo an honeſt Printer being his priſon fellow, Mr. Rogers ſaid to him. Thou ſhalt live to ſee the alteration of Religion, and the Goſpel to be freely Preached again, and therefore have me commended to my Brethren, as well in Exile, as others; and bid them be circumſpect in diſplacing Papiſts, and putting good Miniſters into the Churches, or elſe their end will be worſe then ours.

Whilſt he lay in the Priſon of Newgate (which was above a year) he was very merry, and earneſt in all he went about: To the Priſoners very charitable, and liberal; for whoſe ſake he made an agreement with his fellows, that they ſhould eat but one Meal a day, yet paying for two, which over-plus ſhould be given to them that lacked on the other ſide of the Priſon. His cheerfulneſs & Charity.

The Life of Laurence Saunders, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1555.

Laurence Saunders was born of worſhipful parents, brought up in learning at Eaton School, and from thence choſen to King's Colledge in Cambridge, where he continued three years, and profited in learning very much; Then by his Mother, (who was very rich) he was bound to a Merchant in London, called Sir William Cheſter. His birth and Education.

But Almighty God who hath his ſecret workings in all things, provided better imployment for his ſervant: for he no way liked that courſe of life: ſo that when his other fellows were buſily imployed about their worldly affairs, he would ſecretly withdraw himſelf into ſome private corner, and there fall into his ſolitary Lamentations. And it fell out that his Maſter (being a good Man) one day heard him in his ſecret prayers bewailing his condition, whereupon queſtioning with him, he found that he did not ſanſie that kind of life; but that his mind was wholly bent to his Book, He is bound an Apprentice.

book, and ſpiritual Contemplations: Upon this occaſion his Maſter acquainting his friends with it, gave him back his Indentures, and releaſed him from his ſervice.

He is releaſed.

His return to Cambridg.

Frequent in Prayer.

He commenceth Maſter of Arts.

And Laurence Saunders being raviſhed with the love of Learning, eſpecially with reading God's Word, ſhortly after returned to Cambridge, where alſo he ſtudied Greek and Hebrew, but eſpecially the Holy Scriptures, to fit himſelf for the work of the Miniſtry: He was frequent, and very fervent in prayer, and when aſſaulted by temptations, he ſtill found much ſupport, and comfort in prayer, whereby he gained ſuch experience, that he became a great comforter of others with the ſame conſolations which himſelf had found from God. He Commenced Maſter of Arts and ſtayed long after in the Univerſity.

He is Ordained Miniſter.

The ſucceſs of his Miniſtry.

He marieth a Wife.

His remove to Lichfield.

Then into Leceſterſhire.

Then to London.

In the beignning of King Edward's Reign he began to preach (being firſt Ordained a Miniſter) and that with ſuch general approbation, that he was choſen to read a Divinity Lecture at Fotheringaie, where by his Doctrine and life he edified many, and drew many ignorant perſons to God, and ſtopped the mouths of the Adverſaries. About this time he marryed a Wife: and from thence removed to the Minſter of Liechfield, where alſo he, by his life and Doctrine, gat a good report even from his Adverſaries for his Learning and Godlineſs.

From thence he was removed to Church Langton in Leiceſterſhire, where he taught diligently, and kept a bountiful houſe, and from thence to Alhollows in Breadſtreet London; and after his admiſſion there, he went back into the Country to reſigne his Benefice, which fell out when Queen Mary raiſed ſtirs to get the Crown, by reaſon whereof he could not accompliſh his purpoſe.

Queen Maries Coming in.

His zeal.

He is taken Priſoner.

In his journey he Preach'd at Northampton, not medling with the State, but boldly delivering his Conſcience againſt Popiſh Doctrine, and Errors; which (ſaid he) are like to ſpring up a gain, as a juſt Plague for the little love which England hath born to the true Word of God, ſo plentifully offered to them. Some of the Queens men which were there, and heard him, were highly diſpleaſed with him for his Sermon, and for it kept him Priſoner amongſt them for a time: But partly out of reſpect to his Brethren and Friends, which were chief ſticklers for the Queen; and partly becauſe there was no Law broken by his Preaching, at length they diſmiſſed him.

His faithfulneſs.

Preacher's Pattern.

And he ſeeing the dreadful day approaching, inflamed with godly zeal, Preached faithfully at both his Benefices, not having opportunity to reſign either, but into the hands of Papiſts: And, notwithſtanding the Proclamation to the contrary, he taught diligently the Truth, at his Country place where he then was, confirming the People, and Arming them againſt falſe-Doctrine, till he was not only commanded to ceaſe, but by force was reſiſted. Some counſelled him to fly out of the Kingdom, which he refuſed; and being hindred there from Preaching, he travelled towards London, to viſit his flock in that Place.

A faithful Paſtor.

His courage and Conſtancy.

Popiſh Malice.

But coming near London, Maſter Mordant, one of the Queen's Council, overtook him, asking him whether he went? I have (ſaid Mr. Saunders) a Paſtoral charge in London, whither I am going to inſtruct my people according to the truth. If you will follow my counſel (quoth Mordant) let them alone, and come not at them: But ſaid Mr. Saunders, How then ſhall I be diſcharged before God? If any be Sick, and deſire Conſolation: or if any want good Counſel, and want Inſtruction, or if any ſhould ſlip into Error, and receive falſe Doctrine. Then did Mordant ask him, if he did not preach ſuch a time in Bread-ſtreet? He ſaid Yea: And will you, ſaid Mordant, preach ſo again? Yes, ſaid he, to morrow you may heare me there, where I will confirm by God's Word, all that I then preached. I would counſel you (ſaid the other) to forbear. Saunders ſaid, If you will forbid me by lawful Authority, I muſt then forbear: Nay, ſaid Mordant, I will not forbid you, and ſo they parted. Mordant went preſently to Biſhop Bonner, and informed him of Maſter Saunders his purpoſe to preach the next day: which accordingly he did: and at his lodging, being ſomewhat troubled in his thoughts, a Friend of his asked him how he did? Truly ſaid he, I am in priſon, till I be in Priſon.

The

The Text which he preached upon in the forenoon was 2 Cor. 11. 2 I am jealous over you with godly jealousie, for I have espoused you to one Husband, that I may present you as a chast Virgin to Christ: But I fear least by any meanes as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. In the afternoon he prepared himself to preach again, but Bonner sent an Officer for him, who carryed him to the Bishop where he found Mordant.

The Bishop charged him with Treason, for breaking the Qneen's Proclamation; and with Heresie and Sedition, for his Sermon; An Heretick he would prove him to be; because he taught, that the administration of the Sacraments, and all orders of the Church were most pure, which came neerest to the order of the primitive Church: For (said Bonner) the Church was then in her infancy, and could not abide that perfection, which afterwards it grew to by Ceremonies. Mr. Saunders answered out of St. Augustine, That Ceremonies were given to the infirm, and weak, and that therefore it was a sign of the great perfection of the Primitive Church, that it had few Ceremonies, whereas the Popish Church had many, and those partly blasphemous, partly unsavory, and unprofitable. After much other discourse, the Bishop required him to write his judgment about Transubstantiation, which he did, saying, You seek my Blood, and you shall have it: I pray God you may be so baptized in it, that you may hereafter loath Blood-sucking, and become a better man. Then Bonner sent him to Gardiner, where he waited four houres, in the Bishops absence, in a room; where the Bishops Chaplaine, and many of his servants were merrily playing at Tables: At last came the Bishop from the Court, and after he had dispatched many Sutors, being informed of Master Saunders, and his cause, he sent for him in; Master Saunders kneeling at the end of the Table: Gardiner said to him. How happened it that notwithstanding the Queens Proclamation you dared to Preach.

Bonners Ignorance.

His Courage.

His conference with Gardiner.

Saunders. Seeing the perilous time now at hand, I did but according to my duty exhort my flock to persevere and stand stedfast in the Doctrine that they had learned; I also remembred those words of the Apostle; That its better to obey God than man; and what I did, I was moved thereto by my conscience.

Gardiner. A goodly conscience surely. This your conscience could make our Queen a Bastard: would it not?

Saunders. We declare no such matter: But for that let them care whose writings are yet abroad to testify the same, not without the great shame, and reproach of the Author. This he said, because Gardiner, to curry favor with King Henry the Eighth, had published a Book, wherein he had openly declared Queen Mary to be a Bastard. And so going forward, he said; We only profess, and teach the sincerity, and purity of Gods Word; which albeit it be now forbidden us to publish with our mouths, yet I doubt not but it shall be sealed with our Blood.

The Bishop being vexed at this free speech, said, Carry away this frenzie fool to Prison; To whom he said, I thank God that at last he hath given me a place of rest, where I may Pray for your Conversion. He continued in Prison one year, and three months. In a letter to his Wife he thus writes; I am merry, and I trust I shall be merry, maugre the teeth of all the Divels in Hell; Riches I have none to endow you with, but that Treasure of tasting how sweet Christ is to hungry Consciences (whereof I thank my Christ, I do feel part) that I bequeath unto you, and to the rest of my beloved in Christ, &c.

Holy Charity.

Comfort in affliction.

The best Legacy.

He was so zealous in the defence of the Truth, that he forbad his Wife to sue for his delivery, and when other of his friends had by suit almost obtained it, he so discouraged them that they ceased from following their suit. Being at last brought again to Examination, and life being promised if he would recant; He answered. I love my life and liberty, if I could enjoy them without the hurt of my own Conscience: But by God's Grace I will abide the most extremity that man can do against me, rather than do any thing against my own Conscience: And when Gardiner threatned him with death, he said: Welcome be it, whatsoever the will of the Lord be, either life or death: and I tell tell you truly, I have learned to dye: But I exhort you to beware of ſhedding innocent blood: Truly it will cry aloud againſt you.

His Martyrdome. Being excommunicated, degraded and condemned, he was ſent to Coventry to be burned. When he came neer the place of execution, he went cheerfully to the ſtake kiſſing it, and ſaying, Welcome the Croſs of Chriſt, Welcome everlaſting life. The fire by his cruel enemies was made of green wood, and other ſmothering matter, which would not burn, whereby he was put to grievous torments; But the grace, and plentifull conſolation of Chriſt, which never forſakes his ſervants, gave him admirable ſtrength and patience, ſo that in all, he ſtood quietly, and at laſt ſweetly ſlept in the Lord.

Popiſh cruelty.

His admirable patience.

His Letter to his Wife. During his impriſonment he wrote many excellent Letters, and after his condemnation in a Letter to his wife, and friends, he thus writes. Oh what worthy thanks can be given to our gracious God for his unmeaſurable mercies plentifully poured upon us: And I, moſt unworthy wretch, cannot but bewail my great ingratitude towards ſo gracious a God, and loving Father? I beſeech you all, as for my other many ſins, ſo eſpecially for my ſin of unthankfulneſs, crave pardon for me in your earneſt prayers. To number Gods mercies in particular, were to number the drops of water in the Sea, the ſands on the ſhore, or the ſtars in Heaven. O my dear Wife and Friends, rejoyce with me, I ſay rejoyce with thankſgiving, for this my preſent promotion, in that I am made worthy to magnifie my God, not onely in my life by my ſlow mouth, and uncircumciſed lips, bearing witneſs to his truth, but alſo by my blood to ſeal the ſame, to the glory of my God, and confirming of his true Church: I profeſs to you that as yet the comfort of my ſweet Chriſt doth drive from me the fear of death. But if my dear Husband Chriſt, doe for my tryal leave me a little to my ſelf, Alas I know in what caſe I ſhall then be: But if he doe, yet I know that he will not be long, nor far abſent from me, though he ſtand behind the wall, yet he will peep in at a creviſe. He is a tender-hearted Joſeph, though he ſpeak roughly to his Brethren, and threaten bondage to his beſt beloved Benjamin; yet can he not containe himſelf from weeping upon us, and with us, from falling on our necks, and ſweetly kiſſing us. Such, ſuch a Brother is our Chriſt unto all his; wherefore haſten to goe unto him, as Jacob did with his ſons and family, leaving their Countrey and Acquaintance. Yea this our Joſeph hath obtained for us, that Pharoah the Infidel, ſhall provide us Chariots whereby with eaſe we may be carried to him. Our very Adverſaries do help us to our everlaſting bliſſe, by their ſpeedy diſpatch, bleſſed be our God. Fear not bugbears which lye in the way; fear rather the everlaſting fire, &c. My dear Wife, and fellow Heires of the everlaſting Kingdom, always remember the Lord; Rejoyce in hope, be patient in tribulation, continue inſtant in prayer, and pray for us appointed for the ſlaughter, that we may be unto our heavenly Father a fat offering, and an acceptable ſacrifice, &c. Farewel all in Chriſt, in hope to be joyned with you in everlaſting joy; Amen, Amen, Amen. Pray, Pray.

Doctor Pendleton a turncoat. Doctor Pendleton, and this Mr Saunders metting together in the beginning of Queen Maries reign, and ſpeaking of the Perſecution that was like to enſue, about which Maſter Saunders ſhewed much weakneſs, and many fears, Pendleton ſaid to him, What man? there is much more cauſe for me to fear, than for you, foraſmuch as I have a bigge and fat body, yet will I ſee the utmoſt drop of this greaſe of mine molten away, and the laſt gobbet of this fleſh of mine conſumed to aſhes, before I will forſake Jeſus Chriſt, and his Truth which I have profeſſed: Yet not long after, upon trial, poor, feeble, faint-hearted Saunders, by the power and goodneſs of God, ſealed the Truth with his Blood: whereas proud Pendleton played the Apoſtate, and turned Papiſt.

The Life of John Hooper, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1555.

John Hooper was a Student and Graduate in the Univerſity of Oxford, where having abundantly profited in the ſtudy of other Sciences, he was ſtirred up with a fervent deſire to the love and knowledge of the Scriptures, in which ſtudy he joyned earneſt prayers to his diligence, for the better underſtanding of the ſame; neither was the grace of the Holy Ghoſt wanting to ſatisfie his deſire, and to open to him the light of true Divinity. His Education. His converſion.

Thus Mr. Hooper growing more and more in ripeneſs of ſpiritual underſtanding, and ſhewing withall ſome ſparks of his fervent ſpirit, being about the time when the ſix Articles came out, he was ſo hated by ſome, eſpecially by Doctor Smith, that he was compelled to leave the Univerſity, and went to live with Sir Thomas Arundel, and was his Steward, till Sir Thomas Arundel (having intelligence of his opinions, which he by no means liked, yet exceedingly loving the conditions of the man; found meanes to ſend him on a meſſage to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, writing privately to the Biſhop by his learned conference to doe ſome good upon him, yet requiring him in any caſe to ſend him his ſervant home again. He leaves the Univerſity.

Wincheſter had much conference with him four or five dayes together; but when he could doe no good of him, he ſent him back to Sir Thomas Arundel according to his requeſt, much commending his wit and learning, but ever after bearing a ſecret grudg in his ſtomack againſt him; ſo that ſhortly after, Mr. Hooper was warned by ſome private friends to provide for his own ſafety; for that there were underhand workings to apprehend him. His conference with Gardiner.

Whereupon he left the Kingdome, and went to Paris: yet after a while he returned again, and lived with one Mr. Sentlow: But underſtanding that ſnares were again layd for him, with much difficulty and danger he eſcaped the ſecond time into France, and from thence travelled into Germany, where he gained acquaintance with many learned men, and of them was friendly and lovingly entertained both at Baſil and Zurich, eſpecially by M. Bullinger, who became his eſpecial friend. Flight in perſecution. He flies into Germany.

There he ſtudied Hebrew, and married a Wife being a Burgonian: And at laſt, hearing that King Edward the ſixth was come to the Crown, he amongſt many other Engliſh Exiles, was deſirous to return into England, and when he took his leave of thoſe his worthy friends, Mr. Bullinger ſaid to him; Mr. Hooper, though we are ſorry to part with your company for our own ſakes, yet we have much more cauſe to rejoyce both for yours, and the cauſe of Chriſts ſake, that you ſhall now return out of long baniſhment into your native Country again, where you may not only enjoy your own liberty, but may, and we doubt not will be very uſeful for the promoting the good of Chriſts Church: We alſo rejoyce not onely becauſe you ſhall remove out of exile into liberty; but you ſhall here leave a barren and unpleaſant Country, rude, and ſavage, to goe into a land flowing with milk and honey, repleniſhed with all pleaſures and fertility; yet with this our joy, our fear, and care is, leſt when you are ſo far diſtant, and long abſent in the midſt of your friends, wealth, and felicity (for peradventure you will be a Biſhop) you ſhould forget us your Friends and well-willers; yet though you ſhould do it, we aſſure you that we will not forget our old Friend and fellow Mr. Hooper, and if you will pleaſe, not to forget us, then pray let us hear from you. His marriage. He returns to England. Bullingers ſpeech to him.

To this Maſter Hooper anſwered, firſt giving moſt hearty thanks to Maſter Bullinger, and all the reſt for their ſingular good will, and undeſerved affection, which they had at all times ſhewed toward him: Then declaring that it was not the barrenneſs of that Country which occaſioned his remove; for that he could be content to live all his life there, as ſoon as in any part of the world, or in his own Country, were it not that he His anſwer.

took himself bound in conscience to endeavour the advancement of Religion in his native soil: & therefore (said he) Though I cannot deny that God hath blessed our Country of England with many great commodities: yet neither they, nor new friends, nor any thing else shall cause me to forget such Friends, and benefactors as you have been, unto whom I am so such bound: And therefore you shall be sure from time to time to hear from me, and I will send you word how it goeth with me: But, saith he, The last newes of all I shall not be able to write, for where I shall take most paines, there shall you hear of me to be burned to ashes.

A Prophesie.

Thus taking his leave of them, he returned to London, where he preached twice, but at least once every day. The people so flock't to him, that the Churches could not contain them. In his Doctrine and Ministry he was earnest, and zealous.

His painful Preaching.

In language Eloquent: In the Scriptures perfect, and ready: And in paines indefatigable. In this pains-taking he continued to his lives end, neither did his labor break him, nor promotion change him, nor dainty fare corrupt him: He was of a strong body, sound health, pregnant wit, and of invincible patience: spare of diet, sparer of words, and spareſt of time: A liberall House-keeper, and very grave in his carriage.

His Constancy.

His Character.

Note.

Being at length called to preach before King Edward, he made him first Bishop of Gloceſter, where he was Bishop two years, then of Worceſtor, where he carried himself so uprightly, and inoffensively, that his enemies had nothing to say against him: He used to go about from town to town, and from village to village to preach unto the people: He governed his house so, that in every corner of it there was some smell of virtue, good example, honest conversation, and reading of the Scriptures: In his Hall there was daily a table spread with good store of victuals, and beset with poor folk of the City of Worceſter by turnes, who were served by four at a Messe, with whole and wholsome meat: And when they were served (being before examined by himself or his deputies, of the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and ten Commandments) then he himself sate down to dinner, and not before.

He is made a Bishop.

A painful Bishop.

His Family Government.

His Charity.

In the beginning of Queen Marie's dayes, he was sent for by a Pursivant to London: and though he had opportunity, and was perswaded by his friends to flie, yet he refused, saying, Once I did flie, but now being called to this place, and vocation, I am resolved to stay, and to live, and die with my Sheep.

He is sent for to London.

A good Shepheard.

By Winchester when he came to London he was railed upon, and committed to prison: Afterwards also at his examination, they called him Beast, Hypocrite, &c. which he bore without answering again: In the Fleet where he was prisoner, he had nothing but a pad of straw for a Bed, and a rotten covering, till good people sent him a Bed to lie on: Of one side his Chamber was the sink and filth of the House, on the other the Town-ditch, enough to have choaked him.

Stephen Gardener.

Popish Malice.

His Patience.

After he had layen thus a while, falling sick, the doors, bars, hasps, and chaines being all made fast, he both mourned, called, and cryed for help: Yet the Warden hearing, would suffer none to goe to him, saying, Let him alone, if he die, it were a good riddance of him, &c. Concerning his base usage, himself thus writes: I paid alwayes (saith he) to the Warden of the Fleet as a Baron paid as well in Fees, as for my board: viz. 20*s. per week, till I was wrongfully deprived of my Bishoprick, and after that time I paide as the best Gentleman in the house, yet he alwayes used me worse, and more vilely then a very slave: Thus I suffered imprisonment almost eighteen monthes, my goods, living, friends, and comforts being taken from me: The Queen owing me above* 80 pound, yet hath she cast me into prison, & allowes me nothing, neither are any suffered to come at me whereby I may be relieved. I am under a wicked man, and woman, and see no remedy but in Gods help: But I commit my just cause to him whose will be done, whether it be by life or death.

Popish Cruelty.

When he was brought to examination before Winchester, and the other Commissioners, there was such a tumult whensoever he began to speak, that he was forced to keep silence: Yet did they proceed to Degrade, and condemn him, and so delivered him over to the secular Power.

Popish Rage.

As they were leading him from the Counter in Southwark to Newgate, & of the Sheriffs, Sheriffs ſaid to him. I wonder that you was ſo haſty, and quick with my Lord Chancellor, and uſed no more patience to him? To which he anſwered: Mr. Sheriffe, I was nothing at all impatient, though I was earneſt in my Maſters cauſe, and it ſtands me in hand ſo to be: For it goeth upon life and death, not in this World only, but in the World to come.

Six days he lay cloſe priſoner in Newgate, none being ſuffered to come to him, during which time, Bonner, Harpsfield, and divers others came to him, leaving no meanes untried to reduce him to their Antichriſtian Church, ſometimes making many great profers, and promiſes, to him of worldly Riches, and promotion, other ſometimes uſing grievous Threatnings to affright him: But they found him always the ſame Man, ſtedfaſt, and unmoveable. Tentations reſiſted.

February the 4th. at night, his Keeper gave him ſome inkling that he ſhould be ſent to Glouceſter to be burned, which he rejoyced very much at, lifting up his eyes, and hands to Heaven, and praiſing God for ſending him amongſt his people over whom he had been Paſtor, there to confirm with his blood the Truth that before he had taught unto them, not doubting but the Lord would give him ſtrength to perform it to his Glory: And immediately he ſent for his Boots, Spurrs, and Cloak, that he might be ready to ride when they ſhould call for him. Gods providence.

The day following he was delivered to ſome of the Queens Guard, who conveied him to Glouceſter, and when he came neer the City, much people met him, who cryed, and bewailed his condition exceedingly. The night before his Death, he did eat his meat quietly, and ſlept ſoundly: After his firſt ſleep, he ſpent the reſt of the night in Prayer. The next day, Sir Anthony Kingſton coming to him, told him that life was ſweet, and death bitter; to which he anſwered, The death to come is more bitter, and the life to come more ſweet: I am come hither to end this life, and ſuffer death, becauſe I will not gain-ſay the former Truth that I have here taught unto you. He is ſent to Glouceſter. The benefit of inward peace. Benefit of a good Conſcience. Conſtancy.

Alſo a blind Boy coming to him, after he had Examined him in the Grounds of Religion, he ſaid, Ah poor Boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward ſight, but hath given thee another ſight much more pretious, having endued thy ſoul with the Eye of Knowledg, and Faith: God give thee Grace continually to pray unto him that thou loſe not that ſight, for then ſhouldeſt thou be blind both in Body and Soul. Note.

Being delivered to the Sheriffe, he ſaid to him, My requeſt to you Maſter Sheriffe, is, only that there may be a quick Fire, ſhortly to make an end of me, and in the mean time I will be as obedient to you as you can deſire: If you think I do amiſs in any thing, hold up your finger and I have done: I might have had my life, with much Worldly gain, but I am willing to offer up my life for the Truth, and truſt to Dy a faithful ſervant to God, and a true ſubject to the Queen. When he ſaw the Sheriff's men with ſo many Weapons, he ſaid, This is more than needs; if you had willed me, I would have gone alone to the Stake and have Troubled none of you all: As he went to the Stake he was forbid to ſpeak to the people. He looked chearfully, and with a more ruddy countenance then ordinary. His requeſt to the Sheriffe. His meekneſs and conſtancy. He goes cheerfully to the Stake.

Being come to the place of Execution, he prayed about halfe an hour, whereof this was a part. Lord (ſaid he) I am Hell, but thou art Heaven: I am ſwill and a ſink of ſin, but thou art a gracious, and Merciful Redeemer: Have mercy therefore upon me moſt miſerable, and wretched offender after thy great Mercy, and according to thine ineſtimable Goodneſs: Thou art aſcended into Heaven, receive me Hell to be partaker of thy joyes, where thou ſitteſt in equall Glory with thy Father. For well knoweſt thou Lord, wherefore I am come hither to ſuffer, and why the Wicked do perſecute thy poor Servant: Not for my Sins, and Tranſgreſſions committed againſt thee, but becauſe I will not allow of their wicked doings to the Contaminating of thy Blood, and to the denyal of the knowledg of thy Truth, wherewith it did pleaſe thee by thy Holy Spirit to inſtruct me: With as much diligence as a poor wretch might (being thereto called) I have ſet forth thy glory. Thou well ſeeſt, O Lord my God, what terrible Torments, and cruel Paines are prepared for thy poor Creature: Even ſuch Lord, as without thy ſtrength none His prayer at the ſtake.

is able to bear, or patiently to paſs: But that which is impoſſible with Man is poſſible with thee: Therefore ſtrengthen me of thy goodneſs that in the Fire I break not the rules of Patience: Or elſe aſſwage the terror of the Paines as ſhall ſeem fitteſt to thy Glory.

He is tempted. Having a Box with a pardon ſet before him, he cryed, If you love my ſoul away with it, if you love my ſoul away with it. Three Irons being prepared to faſten him to the Stake, he only put on an Iron-Hoop about his middle, bidding them take away the reſt, ſaying, I doubt not but God will give me ſtrength to abide the extremity of the Fire without Binding. When reeds were caſt to him, he embraced and kiſſed them, putting them under his Arme, where he had bags of Gun-powder alſo: When Fire was firſt put to him, the faggots being green, and the Winde blowing away the Flame, he was but ſcorched: more Faggots being laid to him, the fire was ſo ſuppreſt, that his Nether-parts were burn'd, his upper being ſcarce touched: He prayed mildly as one that felt no pain, O Jeſus the Sonne of David have Mercy upon me, and receive my Soul: And wipeing his Eyes with his hands, he ſaid, For God's love let me have more Fire: A third fire being kindled, it burn'd more violently, yet he was alive a great while in it; The laſt words which he uttered being Lord Jeſus have Mercy on me, Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit. And ſo he ſlept in the Lord.

His confidence in God.

His cruel burning.

His prayer in the fire.

His death.

His heavenly ſpeeches. In one of his Letters he thus wrote, Impriſonment is painful, but liberty upon evill conditions is worſe: The Priſon ſtink's, yet not ſo much as ſweet Houſes where the fear of God is wanting: I muſt be alone and ſolitary, it's better ſo to be, and have God with me, than to be in company with the Wicked: Loſs of Goods is great, but loſs of Grace and God's favor is greater: I cannot tell how to anſwer before Great and Learned Men: Yet it is better to do that, than ſtand Naked before God's Tribunal: I ſhall Dy by the hands of cruel Men; He is Bleſſed that loſeth his Life, and find's life Eternal: there is neither Felicity, nor Adverſity of this World that is great, if it be weighed with the joyes, and Paines of the World to come. And in the concluſion of the Letter he writes thus. I am a precious Jewel now, and daintily kept, never ſo daintily before: For neither mine own Man, nor any of the Servants of the houſe may come to me, but my Keeper only, who is a ſimple, rude fellow: But I am not troubled thereat.

Contention about Ceremonies. In the time of King Edward, when he was made Biſhop, much controverſie was between him, and Doctor Cranmer, and Doctor Ridley about the Cappe, Rochet, &c. But when in Queen Maries days, they were all in Priſon for the ſame cauſe of Religion; Doctor Ridley wrote thus to him: My dear Brother, foraſmuch as I underſtand by your works, which I have but ſuperficially ſeen, that we throughly agree in thoſe things which are the grounds, and ſubſtantial points of our Religion, againſt which the World ſo furiouſly rageth in theſe days, however formerly in certain by matters, and circumſtances of Religion, your Wiſdom and my Simplicity hath a little jarred, each of us following the abundance of his own Sence, and judgment: Now I ſay, be you aſſured that even with my whole Heart (God is my witneſs) in the Bowels of Chriſt I love you in the Truth, and for the Truths ſake which abideth in us, and ſhall by the Grace of God abide for ever.

They agree in priſon.

His admirable patience. He was above three quarters of an hour in the fire before he dyed, yet, even as a Lambe, he patiently abode the Extremity thereof, neither moving forwards, backwards, or to any ſide; But having his nether-parts burned, and his Bowels faln out, he dyed as quietly as a Child in his Bed, Anno Chriſti, 1555.

The Life of Rowland Taylor, who dyed Anno Christi 1555.

Rowland Taylor was Doctor of both Laws, and Rector of Hadley in Suffolk, where Master Thomas Bilney had formerly been a Preacher of the Word, and in which place there were few, either Men or Women, that were not well learned in the Holy Scriptures, many having read over the whole Bible, and could say a great part of Paul's Epistles by heart. His imployment. Scriptures well studied.

Here this Doctor Taylor preached constantly on Sabbaths, Holy-Days, and at other times when he could get the People together. So soon as he was called to this place, he left the Family of Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, with whom he had formerly lived, and like a good Shepherd, constantly abode with his Flock, and gave himself wholly to the study of the Sacred Scriptures, most faithfully endeavouring to fulfil the precept of Christ to Peter; Lovest thou me? Feed my Sheep. His life also, and conversation was very Exemplary, and full of Holiness: He was meek, and humble, yet would stoutly rebuke Sin in the greatest: He was very mild, void of all rancor and malice, ready to do good to all men, forgiving his Enemies, and far from doing the least wrong. To the Poor, Blind, Lame, Sick, Bed-rid, or that had many Children, he was a Father, causing the Parishoners to make good provision for them, besides what of his own bounty, he gave them. He brought up his own Children in the fear of God, and good Learning: And thus he continued as a good Shepherd amongst his Flock, feeding, governing, and leading them through the Wilderness of this wicked World, all the days of Holy King Edward the sixth. Preachers pattern. His character. His charity.

But in the beginning of Queen Marie's Reigne, two Popish persons subborned a Priest to come and say Mass in his Church; He being at his study, and hearing the Bell to toll, went to Church, and finding this Priest, guarded with drawn swords, in his Popish Robes ready to begin the Mass, he said unto him, Thou Divel, who made thee so bold to enter into this Church, to profane and defile it with this abominable Idolatry, I command thee thou Popish Wolfe, in the name of God to avoid hence, and not to presume thus to poyson Christ's flock. Then said one Foster (the ring leader in this business) to Doctor Taylor, thou Traytor, what dost thou here, to let and disturbe the Queens proceedings? Doctor Taylor answered, I am no Traytor, but the Shepherd which God, and my Lord Christ hath appointed to feed this his flock; and therefore, I have good authority to be here. The Mass brought into the Church. His zeal. Popish malice.

Then said Foster, Wilt thou Trayterous Heretick, make a commotion, and resist violently the Queens proceedings? Doctor Taylor answered, I make no commotion; it's you Papists that make commotions and tumults; I resist only with Gods Word against your Popish Idolatries, which are contrary to the same, and tend to the dishonour of the Queen, and the utter subversion of this Realme; Then did Foster with his Armed men carry Doctor Taylor out of the Church, and so the Priest went on with his Mass.

Doctor Taylors Wife, who had followed her Husband to the Church, when she saw their violent proceedings, kneeled down, and holding up her hands, with a loud voice, said, I beseech God, the Righteous Judge to avenge this Injury, which this Popish Idolater doth this day to the Blood of Christ; Then did they thrust her out of the Church also; and presently after Foster wrote a complaint against Doctor Taylor to Steven Gardiner, who sent his Letters Missive for Doctor Taylor: whereupon his Friends earnestly entreated him to fly, telling him that he could neither expect justice, nor favor, but Imprisonement, and cruel Death: To whom he answered, I know my cause to be so Good, and Righteous, and the Truth so strong upon my side, that I will, by God's grace, appear before them, and to their Beards resist their false doings; for I believe that I shall never be able to do God so good Service as now, and that I shall never have He is accused and sent for. He is perswaded to fly. Flight refused. His courage.

have ſo glorious a calling, nor ſo great Mercy of God profferd me as I have now; wherefore Pray for me, and I doubt not but God will give me ſtrength, and his Holy Spirit, that all my adverſaries ſhall be aſham'd of their doings.

Then ſaid his friends, Maſter Dr. we think it not beſt ſo to do; you have ſufficiently done your duty, and born witneſs to the truth, both in your Sermons, and in reſiſting this Popiſh Prieſt, and therefore ſeeing our Saviour Chriſt bids us when we are perſecuted in one City to flee to another; we think that by flying at this time you ſhould doe beſt, reſerving your ſelf for better times. O (ſaid D. Taylor) I am now old, and have already lived too long to ſee theſe terrible and wicked dayes. You may doe as your conſciences ſerve you, but I am reſolved not to fly: God ſhall hereafter raiſe up Teachers, which ſhall with much more diligence and fruit teach then I have done; for God will not forſake his Church, though for a time he tryeth and correcteth us, and that not without juſt cauſe.

A Prediction.

His friends ſeeing his conſtancy and reſolution, with weeping eyes commended him to God; and ſo preparing himſelf, he went to London, and preſented himſelf to Steven Gardiner, Lord Chancellor of England; who railed upon him, calling him Knave, Traytor, Heretick, asking him if he knew him not? &c. To whom he anſwered, Yea, I know you, and all your greatneſs, yet you are but a mortall man: And if I ſhould be affraid of your Lordly looks, why fear you not God the Lord of us all? How dare you for ſhame look any Chriſtian in the face, ſeeing you have forſaken the truth, denyed our Saviour Chriſt, and his word, and done contrary to your own oath, and writing? with what countenance can you appear before the judgement ſeat of Chriſt and anſwer for your oath, firſt made to King Henry the eighth, and afterwards to King Edward the ſixth?

He goes to S. Gardiner.

His conference with Gardiner.

Gardiner. Tuſh, tuſh, that was Herods oath, unlawfull and therefore fit to be broken; I did well in breaking it, and thank God that I am come home to our Mother the Church of Rome, and ſo I would thou ſhouldeſt doe.

Taylor. Should I forſake the Church of Chriſt, which is founded upon the true foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles? to approve thoſe lyes, errors, ſuperſtitions and Idolatries that are approved of moſt blaſphemouſly by you? God forbid. Remember that you wrote truly againſt the Pope, and were ſworne againſt him.

Gardiner. I tell thee that was Herods oath, and our Holy Father the Pope hath diſcharged me of it.

Taylor. But you ſhall not be ſo diſcharged before Chriſt, who doubtleſſe will require it at your hands as a lawful oath made to your King, from which no man can aſſoile you.

Gardiner. I ſee that thou art an arrogant Knave, and a very Fool.

Taylor. My Lord, leave your railing, which is unſeemly in one that is in your place. I am a Chriſtian man, and you know that he that call's his Brother Fool, is in danger of Hell fire.

Gardiner. Ye are falſe, and liers all the ſort of you.

Taylor. We are true men, and know that God will deſtroy all them that ſpeak lies, and therefore we abide by the truth of Gods words, which ye, contrary to your own conſciences, deny, and forſake.

Gardiner. Thou art a married man.

Taylor. Yea, and I thanke God that I am, and have had nine children, and all in lawful matrimony, and bleſſed be God that ordained matrimony, and commanded that all that had not the gift of continency ſhould marry, and not live in whoredom and Adultery. After ſome other diſcourſe, the Biſhop called his men, commanding them to carry him to the Kings Beneh, requiring his Keeper to keep him ſtrictly: Then Doctor Taylor kneeling down, and holding up his hands, ſaid, Good Lord, I thank thee, and from the Tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable errors and abominations, good Lord deliver us. So they carried him away to priſon, where he lay almoſt two years.

His impriſonment.

In Priſon he ſpent his time in prayer, reading the Scriptures, preaching to the priſoners, and to others that reſorted to him: And it pleaſed God that he found in that priſon,

Priſon, holy Maſter Bradford, whom he began to exhort to Faith, Strength, and Patience, and to preſevere conſtantly unto the end. Maſter Bradford hearing this, thanked God who had provided him ſo comfortable a Priſon-fellow, and ſo they both together praiſed God, & continued in Prayer, Reading & exhorting one another: Inſomuch, as Doctor Taylor told his Friends, that God had provided Graciouſly for him, to ſend him to that Priſon, where he found ſuch an Angel of God, to be in his company, to comfort him. He meets with Mr. Bradford in Priſon.

He was divers times examined of his Faith, and witneſſed a good Confeſſion before his Adverſaries, for which at laſt he was Condemned to Dy. His Examinations.

When his Sentence was read, he told them, that God, the Righteous Judge, would require his Blood at their hands, and that the proudeſt of them all ſhould repent their receiving again of Antichriſt, and their Tyranny againſt the Flock of Chriſt. He alſo thus wrote to his Friends. God be praiſed, ſince my Condemnation I was never afraid to dye. Gods will be done. If I ſhrink from Gods Truth, I am ſure of an other manner of Death than had Judge Hales. But God be praiſed even from the bottome of my heart, I am unmoveably ſettled upon the Rock, nothing doubting but that my dear God will performe and finiſh the Work that he hath begun in me, and others. To him be all Honour both now, and ever, through Chriſt our onely Saviour, Amen. His Condemnation. His Courage. Death not Fear'd.

After his Condemnation, Biſhop Bonner came to the Priſon to degrade him, bringing all the Maſſing Garments with him, which he commanded him to put on. No, quoth Doctor Taylor, I will not. His conference with Biſhop Bonner.

Bonner. Wilt thou not? I ſhall make thee ere I go.

Taylor. You ſhall not, by the Grace of God.

Bonner. I charge thee on thy Obedience to do it.

Taylor. I will not

Then the Biſhop bad his own Man to put them on his back, which when it was done, Doctor Taylor ſetting his hands by his ſide, walked up and down, and ſaid, How ſay you now my Lord, am I not a Goodly Fool? If I were in Cheap-ſide, would not all the Boyes laugh at theſe Apiſh-toyes? The Biſhop having diſpoiled him of all, would have given him a ſtroke on his Breaſt with his Croſier: But his Chaplain ſaid, My Lord ſtrike him not, for he will ſure ſtrike again, Yea by Saint Peter will I, quoth Doctor Taylor: The cauſe is Chriſt's, and I were no good Chriſtian, if I would not fight in my Maſters Quarrel. Then the Biſhop curſed him, but durſt not ſtrike him. To whom Doctor Taylor anſwered, Though you curſe, yet God doth Bleſs me.

The next night his Wife, Son, and Servant came to him, where before Supper, they kneeled down, and Prayed, ſaying the Letany.

He was ſent down to Hadley to be burn'd, and all the way as he went, he was very merry, as one that went to a Banquet, or Bridal. In his journey, the Sheriffe of Eſſex, perſwaded him much to return to the Popiſh Religion, &c. To whom at laſt he anſwered, I well perceive now that I have been deceived my ſelf, and ſhall deceive many in Hadley of their Expectation: When the Sheriffe deſired him to explain his meaning, hoping that he would recant, he ſaid, I am a man of a very great carcaſs, which I had hoped ſhould have been Buried in Hadley-Church-Yard, but I ſee I am deceived, and there are a great number of Wormes there, which ſhould have had jolly feeding upon this Carrion, but now both I, and they, ſhall be deceived of our Expectation. He is ſent to Hadley. Benefit of a good Conſcience. His Courage and Conſtancy.

When he came within two Miles of Hadley, he deſired to alight, and being down, he leap't, and fet a friſk, or two, ſaying, God be praiſed I am now almoſt at Home, and have not paſt two Stiles to go over, and I am even at my Father's Houſe. At Hadley Towns-end, a poor man with his five Children met him crying, O dear father, and good Shepherd, God help and ſuccour thee, as thou haſt many a time ſuccour'd me, and my poor children: The Streets were full of People weeping, and bewailing their loſs, ſaying, Ah! Good God, there goes our good Shepherd from us, that hath ſo Faithfully taught, ſo Fatherly cared for us, and ſo Godly governed us: Oh Merciful God, what His comfort in Affliction. His death Bewailed.

ſhall we poor ſcattered Lambs do? What ſhall become of this moſt wicked World? Good Lord ſtrengthen him, and comfort him. To whom he ſaid, I have Preached to you God's Word, and Truth, and am come now to ſeal it with my Blood.

His Charity.

He gave all his Mony to the Poor, for whom he was wont thus to provide formerly: Once a fortnight at leaſt he uſed to call upon Sir Henry Doile, and other rich Clothiers, to go with him to the Alms-Houſes to ſee what the Poor lacked in Meat, Drink, Apparel, Bedding, and other neceſſaries: Withall, exhorting, comforting, and rebuking as he ſaw occaſion.

Popiſh Cruelty.

His Martyrdome.

Comming to the place of Execution, he was not ſuffered to ſpeak to the People, who much lamented his Death, yet he was very cheerful, ſaying, Thanks be to God, I am even at Home; and when he had Prayed and made himſelf ready, he went to the Stake and kiſſed it. He would fain have ſpoken to the People, but one thruſt in a Tip-ſtaffe into his Mouth, another ſtruck him on the head, and another threw a Faggot at him, which broke his Face that the Blood ranne down: To whom Doctor Taylor ſaid, O Friend, I have harme enough, what need that? When he was ſaying the Miſerere in Engliſh, Sir John Shelton ſtruck him on the Lips, ſaying, You Knave, I will make thee ſpeak Latin. The Fire being kindled, he held up his hands, calling upon God, and ſaying, Merciful Father of Heaven, for Jeſus Chriſt my Saviour's Sake, receive my Soul into thy hands, And ſo ſtood ſtill without moving, till one with an Halbert ſtruck out his Brains. Anno Chriſti, 1555.

JOHN BRADFORD

The Life of John Bradford, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1555.

His Birth, and Education.

His fidelity.

John Bradford was born at Mancheſter in Lancaſhire, and by his Parents brought up in Learning: And afterwards he ſerved Sir John Harrington, a Man much employed under Henry the 8th, and Edward the ſixth: In which place he had opportunity of much advantaging himſelf: For his Maſter found him ſo Active, and fit for his Imployments, that above all others he made moſt uſe of his Faithful ſervice: And thus he continued with him for certain years.

He goes to Cambridge.

But God intending him for better employment, having given up a juſt account to his Maſter, with his good Approbation, he went to Cambridge, whereby his diligence in in ſtudy, he profited ſo much in knowledge, and ſo pleaſed all by his godly, and blameleſs converſation, that after one years abode in the Univerſity he was made Maſter of Arts, and choſen Fellow into Pembroke-Hall. His preferment in the Univerſity.

There Maſter Bucer, falling into acquaintance with him, highly priz'd, and perſwaded him to enter into the Miniſtry, which he modeſtly excuſed for want of learning: To whom Bucer ſaid, If thou have not fine Manchet, yet give the people Barly-Bread, or ſuch as thou haſt. Being thus perſwaded to enter into the Miniſtry, Biſhop Ridley made him a Prebend in St Pauls, where he continued preaching three years faithfully, reproving ſin ſharply, yet ſweetly preaching Chriſt crucified, and pithily impugning Errors, and Hereſies, and perſwading to a godly life. Note. He enters into the Miniſtry.

In the beginning of Queen Marie's reign, Bourn, Biſhop of Bath made a ſeditious Sermon at Paul's Croſſe, which ſo moved the people to indignation, that they were ready to pull him out of the Pulpit, and one threw a dagger at him: Whereupon Bourn requeſted Maſter Bradford (who was behind him) to ſtand in his place, and to quiet the people, which accordingly he did, whom when the people ſaw, they cryed, Bradford, Bradford, God ſave thy life Bradford: Bourn not yet thinking himſelf ſafe, requeſted Maſter Bradford to convey him into the School-maſter's houſe, which accordingly he did, going at his back, and ſheltering him from the people: whereupon one ſaid to him, Ah Bradford, Bradford, Thou ſaveſt him that will help to burn thee. He defends Bourn from Death.

In the afternoon Maſter Bradford preached at Bow-Church, and ſharply reproved the people for their ſeditious carriage: Yet within three dayes after, he was ſent for before the Council, and charged with ſedition for this act, and by them was ſent priſoner, firſt to the Tower: Then from thence they removed him to the Kings Bench in Southwark: and after his condemnation, he was ſent to the Counter in the Poultry: In which places for the time that he remained priſoner, he preached twice a day, unleſſe ſickneſſe hindred, and often adminiſtred the Sacrament: Preaching, Reading, and Prayer was his whole life: He eat but one meal a day, and that a ſpare one too, and his continual ſtudy was upon his knees. He is ill requited for it. He Preacheth in Priſon.

In the mid'ſt of dinner he uſed to meditate with his hat in his eyes, from which flowed plenty of teares dropping on his trencher. He was in ſuch credit with his Keeper in Southwark, that at an Evening he would give him leave, upon his bare word, to go into London, to viſit a ſick friend: and he was ſo mindful of his promiſe, that he uſed to return to priſon again, rather preventing his hour, then breaking his fidelity. He was of perſon ſomewhat tall, and ſlender, ſpare of body, of a faint ſanguine colour, with an awberne Beard. He ſlept not above four hours in the night, and till ſleep came, his Book went not out of his hand. His recreation was honeſt company, and Chriſtian diſcourſe a little after dinner, and ſo to prayer, and his book again. He counted that hour ill ſpent wherein he did not ſome good, either with his pen, ſtudy, or exhorting others, &c. He was no niggard of his purſe, but would liberally communicate what he had to his fellow-priſoners. A ſoft Heart. His Character. Studious. Note. His Charaty.

Once a week he viſited the Thieves on the other ſide the Priſon, giving them godly exhortations, and diſtributing ſome mony amongſt them. An intimate friend of his asked him, if he ſhould procure his liberty, what he would doe, and whither he would goe? To whom he anſwered, That he cared not whether he were delivered out of priſon or no; But if he ſhould, that then he would marry, and abide ſecretly in England, and teach the people as the time would ſuffer him. He was had in great reverence and admiration of all good men: So that many which knew him not but by fame onely, much lamented his death, yea many Papiſts wiſhed heartily that he might live. He was well eſteemed of all.

Few dayes paſſed wherein he ſhed not ſome teares before he went to bed: Nor was there any priſoner with him, but receiv'd ſome profit by him. He had many opportunities of eſcaping, but would not embrace them. The night before he was carried to Newgate, he dreamed that chaines were brought for him to the Counter, and that the day following, he ſhould be carried to Newgate, and that the next day he ſhould certainly be burned in Smithfield, which accordingly Flight Refuſed. A dream Prophetical.

accordingly came to pass: For that day in the afternoon, the Keepers wife came running into his chamber, saying, O Mr. Bradford, I bring you heavy news, for to morrow you must be burned, your chain is now a buying, and presently you must go to Newgate. With that Mr. Bradford put off his cap, lift up his eyes to Heaven, and said, I thank God for it: I have looked for this a long time, it comes not now to me suddenly, but as a thing waited for every day and hour: The Lord make me worthy thereof.

He rejoyceth at the news of his Death.

His fervent Prayers.

He spent the rest of the evening in prayers, well watered with tears, whereby he ravished the mindes of the hearers. The morning before he should be burn'd, as he was putting on a clean shirt, in which he was to suffer, he made such a prayer of the Wedding Garment, that some present were in such great admiration, that their eyes were as throughly occupied in looking on him, as their ears were attentive to hear his prayer.

At his departing out of his chamber he prayed earnestly, and gave money to every servant and Officer in the house, exhorting them to fear and serve God continually, labouring to eschew all manner of evil. Then turning to the wall he prayed vehemently, that his words might not be spoken to them in vain, but that the Lord would work it effectually in them for his Christs sake. The Prisoners, with weeping tears, took their farewel of him.

His departure out of Newgate.

Whilst he remained a prisoner, he was oft examined before the Bishops, and proffered life if he would recant: to whom he answered, Life with Gods displeasure is worse than Death; and death in his true favour is true Life. When he came into Smithfield, (where another young Man was to suffer with him) he fell flat on his Face and Prayed; Then taking a Faggot in his hand, he kissed it, and the Stake also; Then putting off his Rayment, he stood by the Stake, and lifting up his hands and Eyes to Heaven, said, O England, England, Repent of thy Sinnes, Repent of thy Sinnes: Beware of Idolatry, Beware of false Antichrists, take heed they doe not deceive thee: And turning his head to the young Man, he said, Be of good comfort, Brother, for we shall have a merry Supper with the Lord this Night; And then embracing the Reeds, he said: Strait is the Way, and narrow is the Gate that leadeth to Eternal Salvation, and few there be that find it; And so he slept in the Lord.

Tentation Resisted.

His behaviour at his Death.

Note.

His Martyrdom.

His Charity.

His Humility.

He was very charitable, in so much as in a hard time he sold his Chaines, Rings, and Jewels to relieve those that were in want. He was so humble from the sense of his corruptions, that he subscribed some of his Letters out of Prison thus, The most miserable, hard-hearted, unthankful sinner John Bradford. A very painted Hypocrite John Bradford. Miserrimus peccator Joh. Bradford; The sinful John Bradford, &c. He suffered Martyrdome Anno Christi 1555.

His conference with Gardiner.

In his Examination before the Bishop of Winchester, He often told him, that he had sworn six times never to admit of the authority of the Bishop of Rome; and therefore (said he) I dare not answer you, if you examine me as a Delegate from him, lest I should breake my oath. To which Gardiner answered, that he pretended stoutly to defend the Doctrine taught in King Edward's dayes; yet (said he) thou dareſt not answer me.

Bradford.] That all men may know that I am not afraid, saving mine oath, ask me what you will, and I will plainly answer by Gods grace, although I see my life lieth thereon. But, Oh Lord, into thy hands I commend it, come what will, onely sanctifie thy name in me, as in an instrument of thy grace. Now ask me what you will.

Gardiner.] What say you to the blessed Sacrament? Doe you not believe Christs real presence there in his natural body?

Bradf.] My Lord, I do not believe that Christ is corporally present in the Sacrament; but that he is present there to the faith of the due Receiver. As for Transubstantiation, I plainly and flatly believe it not.

At another time one of the Earle of Darby's men came to him saying, Ah Master Bradford, consider your Mother, Sister, Friends, Kinsfolk, and Country, what a great discomfort will it be to them to see you die as an Heretick? To whom he answered,

I have

I have learned to forsake Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Friends, and all that ever I have; yea, and my own Self; or else I cannot be Christs Disciple.

And in a Letter to his Mother, and Brethren, he thus writes; I am now in Prison, sure enough from starting, and I thank God, I am ready with my Life, and Blood, to seal those Truths, which I have preached unto you, if God shall account me worthy of that Honour; for it is a special Benefit of God, to suffer for his Name and Gospel, as now I doe, I heartily thank him for it, and am sure that I shall be partaker of his Glory: If we suffer with him, we shall also Reign with him, as St. Paul speaks. Therefore be not faint hearted, but rather rejoyce, at least for my sake, who am now in the high Way to Heaven, for, Through many Afflictions, we must enter into that Kingdome. Now will God make known who are his: When the Winde doth not Blow, we cannot discerne the Wheat from the Chaffe; but when the Blast comes, the Wheat remains, but the Chaffe flyes away, and the Wheat is so far from being hurt by the Winde, that it's more cleansed, and known to be Wheat. Gold, when it's cast into the Fire, is made more precious, so are God's Children by the Cross of afflictions. Gods Children are now chastised here, that they may not be condemned with the World: But sure great Plagues from God hang over this Realm for it. And no marvel if God's hand lyes so heavy upon us; for lately, as there was never more knowledg, so never less Godly living. It was counted a Foolish thing to serve our God Truly; and Fervent Prayer was not passed upon. Preaching was but a pastime; The Communion was counted too common; Fasting to subdue the Flesh was far out of use; Almes were almost nothing; Malice, Coveteousness, and Uncleanness were common everywhere, with Swearing, Drunkenness, and Idleness; And therefore all this Evil is come upon us, &c. Yea, I my self loved not his Truth as I should, therefore God thus punisheth me, nay, in punishing, blesseth me: And I thank him more for this Prison than for any Parlour; yea than for any pleasure that ever I had; for in it I finde God, my sweet, and Good God alwayes.

His Godly Letters.

Sin the forerunner of Persecution.

And in another Place.

Let us Repent, and be heartily sorry that we have so Carnally, so Hypocritically, so Covetously, so Vain-gloriously professed the Gospel: Let the Anger, and Plagues of God, most justly fallen upon us, be applyed to our Sins, that from the bottome of our Hearts every one of us may say, It's I Lord that have Sinned against thee; It's my Hypocrisie, my Vain glory, my Covetousness, Uncleanness, Carnality, Security, Idleness, Unthankfulness, Self-love, &c. That hath deserved the taking away our good King, of thy Word, and True Religion, of thy good Ministers by Exile, Imprisonment, and Death. It's my Wickedness that causeth success, and encrease of Authority, and Peace to thine Enemies. O be Mercyful, be Mercyful unto us, &c.

NICOL. RIDLEY

The Life of Nicholas Ridley, who dyed Anno Christi 1555.

His birth & education.

His preferment in Cambridge.

Nicholas Ridley was born in Northumberland of worshipfull parents, and bred at School in Newcastle, and from thence sent to Cambridge, where he grew so famous for his learning, that after diverse other offices whereunto he was called in the University, he was chosen Master of Pembroke Hall, and made Doctor in Divinity.

His remove into Kent.

From thence he was called by Arch Bishop Cranmer to be Vicar of Herne in East-Kent, where he was a fruitful and painful Preacher, at which time it pleased God to reveal to him the true doctrine concerning the Lords Supper; and amongst others, to convert by his Ministry the Lady Phines, who proved an eminent instrument of Gods glory. After a while he was made a Prebend of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury; But not liking his society there, he travelled into France, and at his returne was made Chaplaine to King Henry the Eighth, and Bishop of Rochester, and from thence (in Edward the sixth dayes) he was removed to be Bishop of London; In which places he took so great pains in preaching, that he was dearly beloved of his flock, to whom also he was singularly exemplary in his life; so that his very enemies had nothing to say against him.

His preferments.

Preachers pattern.

Every Sabbath, and holy day he preached in one place, or other, except extraordinary occasions hindred him; and to his Sermons multitudes of people resorted, swarming about him like Bees to gather the sweet flowers, and wholsom juice of his fruitful doctrine. He was passingly well learned, and of such reading, that he deserved to be numbred amongst the greatest Schollars that these latter ages produced, as appeared by his notable Works, pithy Sermons, and sundry Disputations in both Universities, which drew an acknowledgment of his learning from his very adversaries.

His Character.

He was of a strong memory, and of great reading, of a deep wit, very judicious, and very merciful. He was of person right comely, and well proportioned in all points, both in complexion and lineaments of his body; He was free from malice, and soon forgat all injuries and offences done against him; very kind to his kindred; yet yet withall telling them, that if they did evill, they ſhould look for nothing from him, but ſhould be as ſtrangers to him. He uſed all means to Mortifie his Fleſh; being much in Prayer, and Contemplation; was ſober in Diſcourſe, and ſometimes merry at Meals, after which he uſed to play at Cheſs about an hour, and then returned to his Study till five a Clock at night, when coming down, he had Prayers in his Family; then went to Supper; Then plaid a Game at Cheſs, and ſo returned to his Study till eleven a Clock at night. Note. His Recreation.

His manner was daily to read a Lecture to his Family at Prayer-time, giving to every one that could read, a New-Teſtament, and hiring them with Mony to learn Chapters by Heart, being marvellous careſull that his Family might give an example of Godlineſs and Vertue to others. He called Biſhop Bonners Mother, his Mother, and when he was at Fulham, had her conſtantly at Meals with him, ſetting her at the upper-end of the Table, who ever was preſent. His Family Government.

And as he was Godly himſelf, ſo nothing appeared in his Family, but Vertue, and Godlyneſs. He was firſt converted by reading Bertrams Book of the Sacrament, and much confirmed by Conferrence with Doctor Cranmer, and Peter Martyr. In the beginning of Queen Marie's days, he was Impriſoned with the firſt, firſt in the Tower, and from thence he was ſent to Oxford with Cranmer, and Latimer, and there kept in the Common Goal, till at length being ſevered from his Brethren, he was committed to the Cuſtody of one Iriſh, with whom he remained till the day of his dearh, which was October 16. Anno Chriſti 1555. His converſion. His Impriſonment. He is ſent to Oxford.

Writing to Latimer in Priſon, he ſaith, I Pray you, good Father, let me have ſomething more from you to comfort my Stomach, for except the Lord aſſiſt me in his Service, I ſhall play but the part of a White-liver'd Knight; but he can make a Coward in his cauſe to fight like a Man. Note.

In a Letter to Mr. Bradford he ſaith, As far as London is from Oxford, yet thence we have received both Meat, Mony, and Shirts, not only from our acquaintance, but from ſome ſtrangers alſo. I know for whoſe ſake they doe it, &c. And again, Ever ſince I heard of our dear brother Rogers his ſtout Confeſſion, and departing (bleſſed be God for it) I never felt any Lumpiſh heavineſs in my Heart, as ſometimes I did before. And again, Sir, Bleſſed be God, notwithſtanding our hard reſtraint, and the Evil reports raiſed of us, we are merry in God; and all our care is, and ſhall be (by God grace) to pleaſe and ſerve him, from whom we expect after theſe Temporary, and Momentany Miſeries, to have Eternal joy, and perpetual Felicity, with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, &c. As yet never a Learned Man, Scholler or other, hath viſited us ſince our coming to Bocardo, which now may be called The Colledge of Quondams; For we be no fewer than three, and I dare ſay every one well contented with his Portion, which is our Heavenly Fathers good and gracious gift. Fare-well, We ſhall by the grace of God one day meet and be merry together; which day aſſuredly approacheth, the Lord grant it may ſhortly come. Charity to Chriſt's Priſoners. Note.

Writing to Maſter Grindal, who was now in Exile, He thus gives him an account of his condition. I was (ſaith he) about two Months cloſe Priſoner in the Tower, after that, without (my ſeeking) I had the liberty of the Tower granted me, and ſo I continued about halfe a year, till, refuſing to be preſent at Maſs, I was ſhut up cloſe Priſoner again. The laſt Lent but one, by reaſon of their riſing in Kent, the Tower was ſo full of Priſoners, that my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Maſter Latimer, Maſter Bradford, and my ſelfe, were all put into one Priſon, where we remained till almoſt Eaſter, and then Doctor Cranmer, Maſter Latimer, and my ſelf, were ſent down to Oxford, and were ſuffered to have nothing with us, but what we carryed upon us. About Whitſuntide following, was our Diſputations at Oxford, after which, we had Pen, Ink, and all things taken from us, yea, and our own Servants were removed from us, and ſtrangers ſet in their ſteads, and all of us kept apart, as we are unto this day. God be Bleſſed we are all three in Health, and of good cheer, and have looked long agoe to have been diſpatched; for within a day or two after our Diſputations we were condemned for Hereticks: The Lords will be fulfilled in us, &c. In his Letter to Mr. Grindall.

When

His courage

When he was brought before the Popes Delegate [the Biſhop of Lincoln] in the Divinity School in Oxford, whilſt the Commiſſion was reading, he ſtood bare till he heard the Cardinal named, and the Popes holineſs, and then he put on his Cap, and being admoniſhed by the Biſhop to pull it off, he anſwered, I do not put it on in contempt to your Lordſhip, &c. but that by this my behaviour, I may make it appear that I acknowledg in no point the uſurped Supremacy of Rome, and therefore I utterly condemne and deſpiſe all Authority coming from the Pope. Then the Biſhop commanding the Beadle to pull off his Cap, he bowing his head, ſuffered him quietly to do it.

His condemnation.

After diverſe examinations, he was at laſt degraded, condemned, and delivered to the Bailiffs to be kept till the next day, when he ſhould be burned. The night before he ſuffered, he cauſed his beard to be ſhaven, and his feet waſhed, and bad his Hoſteſs, and the reſt at the board to his wedding: He asked his Brother alſo whether his ſiſter could find in her heart to be preſent at it? Yea, ſaid he, I dare ſay with all her heart. His Hoſteſs (Miſtris Iriſh) weeping, he ſaid, O Miſtris Iriſh, I ſee now that you love me not; for in that you weep, it appears that you will not be at my marriage, nor are therewith content: I ſee you are not ſo much my friend as I thought; but quiet your ſelf, though my break faſt be ſomewhat ſharpe, and painfull, yet I am ſure my Supper ſhall be more pleaſant and ſweet.

His cheerfulneſſe before his death.

A good conſcience a continual Feaſt.

His Brother proffering to watch with him, he refuſed it, ſaying, I intend to go to bed, and ſleep as quietly as ever I did in my life. In the morning he came forth in a fair black gowne, faced with foins, and a tippet of velvet, &c. and looking behind him, he ſpied Maſter Latimer, coming after; to whom he ſaid, O! be you there? Yea, ſaid Latimer, have-after as faſt as I can follow. Coming to the ſtake, he liſt up his hands and eyes ſtedfaſtly towards Heaven, and eſpying Maſter Latimer, he ran with a cheerful countenance to him, embraced, and kiſſed him, and comforted him, ſaying, Be of good heart, Brother, for God will either aſſwage the fury of the flame, or give us ſtrength to abide it. So he went to the ſtake, kneeled by it, kiſſed it, and prayed earneſtly, and being about to ſpeak to the people, ſome ran to him, and ſtopped his mouth with their hands. Afterwards being ſtripped, he ſtood upon a ſtone by the ſtake, ſaying, O heavenly father, I give the hearty thanks, for that thou haſt called me to be a profeſſor of thee even unto death, I beſeech thee, Lord God, have mercy upon this Realm of England, and deliver it from all its enemies.

His carriage at his Martyrdome.

His Faith.

His prayer at the Stake.

As a Smith was knocking in the ſtaple which held the chain, he ſaid to him, Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the fleſh will have his courſe. Then his brother brought a bag of gunpowder, and would have tyed it about his neck. Doctor Ridley asked what it was? His Brother anſwered, Gunpowder; Then ſaid he, I take it as being ſent of God, therefore I will receive it as ſent from him. And when he ſaw the flame a coming up to him, he cryed with a loud voice, In manus tuas, &c. Into thy hands, Lord, I commend my ſpirit, Lord receive my ſoul: But the fire being kept down by the wood, he deſired them for Chriſts ſake to let the fire come to him, which his Brother in law miſ-underſtanding, ſtill heaped on faggots, whereby his nether-parts were burned, before his upper parts were touched. At laſt his upper parts fell down into the fire alſo, and ſo he ſlept in the Lord.

Note.

His cruel Martyrdom.

His Death.

Biſhop Ridley upon a time croſſing the Thames, there a roſe on a ſudden ſuch a Tempeſt, that all in the boat were aſtoniſhed, looking for nothing but to be drowned: Take heart, ſaid he, for this boat carrieth a Biſhop that muſt be burned, and not drowned. He ſuffered martyrdome Anno Chriſti, 1555.

His Prophecy.

He was a man ſo reverenced for his learning, and knowledge in the ſacred Scriptures, that his very enemies were enforced to acknowledge that he was an excellent Clerk; and if his life, might have been redeemed with mony, the Lord Dacres of the North, being his Kinſman, would have given ten thouſand pound for the ſame, rather then that he ſhould be burned. But ſo unmerciful and cruel was Queen Mary, that notwithſtanding Doctor Ridleys gentleneſs towards her in King Edward the ſixth days, ſhe would by no intreaties, nor other means be perſwaded to ſpare his life. The tender mercies of the wicked are cruelty.

Q. Maries Unmercifulneſſe.

In a Letter which he wrote to his Friends, he hath this paſſage: I warne you my

In a Letter.

Friends,

Friends, that ye be not aſtoniſhed at the manner of my diſſolution; for I aſſure you I think it the greateſt Honour that ever I was called to in all my Life; and therefore I thank the Lord God heartily for it, that it hath pleaſed him of his great Mercy to call me to this high Honour, to ſuffer death willingly for his Sake, and in his cauſe; wherefore all you that be my True lovers and friends, rejoyce, and rejoyce with me again, and render with me hearty thanks to God our Heavenly Father, that for his Sons ſake my Saviour, and Redeemer Chriſt, he hath vouchſafed to call me, being elſe without his gracious Goodneſs, in my ſelf but a ſinful and vile Wretch, to call me (I ſay) to this high Dignity of his True Prophets, Faithful Apoſtles, and of his Holy and choſen Martyrs to Dye, and to ſpend this Temporal life in the Defence, and Maintenance of his Eternal and Everlaſting Truth.

He learned the Scriptures by heart.

Whilſt he was Maſter of Pembrook-Hall, he uſed to walk much in the Orchard, where he Learned without Book, almoſt all Pauls Epiſtles, and the Epiſtles of James, Peter, John, and Jude; concerning which himſelf ſaid, Though in time I did forget much of them again, yet the ſweet ſmell thereof I truſt I ſhall carry with me into Heaven, and the profit thereof I have felt in all my Life time hitherto.

HVGH LATIMER

The Life of Hugh Latimer, who died Anno Chriſti 1555.

His Birth and Education.

Hugh Latimer, was born at Thirkeſſon, in the County of Leiceſter, and being of a Prompt and ſharp Wit, was by his Parents brought up in Learning, and at the Age of Fourteenth he went to Cambridge, where, after he had profited in other Studies, he gave himſelf to the Study of School-Divinity, Commenced Batchelor of Divinity, and was a very zealous Papiſt; He made an Oration againſt Philip Melanchthon: Railed againſt Maſter Stafford, Divinity Lecturer, and willed the Schollars in no wiſe to believe him. He was ſo zealous in his Popiſh Religion, and therewith ſo Scrupulous, that being a Prieſt, and uſing to ſay Maſs, he was ſo ſervile an Obſerver of the Romiſh Decrees, that he thought he had never ſufficiently mixed his Maſſing-Wine with Water, and that he ſhould never never be Damned, if once he were a Profeſſed Fryar. He uſed to carry the Croſſe before the Proceſſion.

He went to Cambridge.

A zealous Papiſt.

Mr Bilny's prudent Charity.

Maſter Thomas Bilney, ſeeing Mr. Latimer to have a zeal in his ways (although without knowledg) was ſtricken with a Brotherly pitty towards him, thinking by what means he might beſt win this ignorantly zealous Brother, to the True knowledge of Chriſt. And thereupon going to his Study, he deſired him to hear him make a Confeſſion of his Faith, which Latimer conſenting to, was ſo touched thereby, that he gave over School-Divinity, and Studied more Orthodox Divines. So that, whereas before he was an Enemy to, and almoſt a Perſecutor of Chriſt, he was now a zealous ſeeker after him; changing his old manner of cavilling and railing, into diligent conferring with Maſter Bilney and others. And asked Maſter Stafford forgiveneſs before he dyed.

His Converſion.

Being thus wonne to Chriſt, he was not ſatisfied with his own Converſion, but pitying the Miſery of others, he became a powerful publick Preacher; and an inſtructer of many in private alſo; whereupon the Devill raiſed up many Doctors and Fryars againſt him, and the Biſhop of Ely forbade him to Preach, Anno Chriſti 1529. Yet he continued three years Preaching with much Applauſe; yea the Biſhop himſelf, hearing him upon a time, commended him, and wiſhed that he had the like gifts himſelf.

Sathans Malice. The fruit of Grace.

His Charity.

He uſed often to viſit the Priſoners, to relieve the Needy, and feed the Hungry. Amongſt the Adverſaries which the Devill raiſed againſt him, one was Doctor Redman, who wrote to him to divert him from the Truth: To which he made this ſhort anſwer; Reverend Mr. Redman, It's enough for me that Chriſt's Sheep hear no Mans voice but Chriſt's; and as for you, you have no voice of Chriſt againſt me; whereas for my part, I have an Heart ready to hearken to any voice of Chriſt that you can produce. Thus fare you well, and trouble me no more from talking with the Lord my God.

His Letter to Dr. Redman.

Shortly after, complaint was made againſt him to Cardinal Woolſey, who ſent for him; But by the meanes of Doctor Buts, the Kings Phyſitian, a Favourer of good Men, he was choſen into the number of thoſe which laboured in the cauſe of the Kings Supremacy; whereupon he went to the Court, and Lodged in Doctor Buts his Chamber, Preaching many times in London. At laſt being weary of the Court, by the Lord Cromwel's means, he had a living given him in Wiltſhire, whither he preſently removed.

Gods Providence.

The place was called Weſt Kinſtone, neare Sarum, where with much diligence he inſtructed his Flock, and Preached zealouſly many times abroad in the Country. Hereupon ſome Popiſh Prieſts drew up Articles againſt him; and he was much moleſted by the Biſhop of London, and Warham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by whom he was cited to appear before him, and the Biſhop of London. Theſe Malicious perſons detained him for a long ſpace from his cure at Home, calling him three times every Week before them, which much troubled him, ſeeing they would neither Preach themſelves, nor ſuffer him to do his duty: Hereupon he wrote to the Archbiſhop, Expoſtulating with him, for ſo detaining him from his charge, and that not for no juſt cauſe, but only for Preaching the Truth againſt ſundry abuſes, which were crept into the Church. Yet this nothing prevailed till the King reſcued him out of their hands, and at the requeſt of the Lord Cromwell made him Biſhop of Worceſter. In which place he buſily employed himſelf in inſtructing his Flock, and giving them a good Example by his Holy life. He ſpent all his time in Study, Teaching, Preaching, Exhorting, Viſiting, Correcting, and Reforming to the utmoſt of his Power, and as the times could bear; and though he could not utterly extinguiſh the Reliques of Popery, yet he ſo wrought, that they ſhould be uſed with as little hurt, and with as much profit as might be. Yet neither there was he quiet; for one of great place accuſed him to the King for Preaching Sedition, but the King reſted ſatisfi'd with his anſwer.

He goes into Wiltſhire. Popiſh Malice.

He writes to the Archbiſhop.

He is made biſhop of Worceſter. A good Biſhop.

Sathans Malice.

His faithful Boldneſs.

At New-Years-tide the Biſhops uſed to preſent the King with a New-Years-gift, and Biſhop Latimer, amongſt the reſt, preſented him with the New-Teſtament, wrapped ped up in a Napkin, with this Poſie about it, Fornicatores, & adulteros judicabit Dominus: Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge. But the ſix Articles coming out, and he ſeeing that he could not retain his Office with a good conſcience, of his own accord he reſigned his Biſhoprick: And when he put off his Rochet in his chamber amongſt his friends, he gave a skip in the floor for joy, feeling his ſhoulders lighter, and being (as he ſaid) diſcharged of ſo heavy a burthen. This was Anno Chriſti 1539, after which he betook himſelf again to his mean Parſonage, at Weſt Kingſton in Wiltſhire not farre from Briſtow.

Whereof the King was very Guilty.

He reſigns his Biſhoprick. Note.

Yet here, by the malice of certain Popiſh Prieſts who ſlandered his Doctrine, he was much endangered; whereupon he had recourſe to Mr. Ralph Morice, who was Doctor Cranmers right hand, by whoſe intreaty the Arch-biſhop ſo prevailed with the King for him, that for the preſent he was freed out of his troubles; yet neither then would the Biſhops ſuffer him to be quiet, till he was layd up in the Tower, where he remained till Edward the ſixth's Reign. At which time being reſtored to his liberty, he continued a faithfull and painfull preacher all that Kings dayes; preaching twice every Sabbath, though he was 67 yeares of age.

He is again troubled and freed by the King.

His impriſonment in the Tower.

His painfulneſs in his Miniſtry.

His ſtudiouſneſs.

He roſe to his Study, Winter and Summer, at two a clock in the morning. He evidently fore-ſaw, and fore-told all thoſe plagues which England afterwards felt under Queen Mary; and fore-told concerning himſelf, that his preaching of the Goſpel would coſt him his life; and that Wincheſter was kept in the Tower for the ſame purpoſe, which afterwards proved ſo.

His Prophecies Steph. Gardiner.

In the beginning of Queen Marys Reign he was ſent for up by a Purſuivant, whereof he had notice ſix houres before he came to his houſe, yet inſtead of flying, he prepared himſelf for his journey. And when the Purſuivant came, he ſaid to him; My friend, you are welcome; I go as willingly to London to give an account of my Faith, as ever I went to any place in the world; and I doubt not but as God hath made me worthy formerly to preach his Word before two excellent Princes, ſo he will enable me to bear witneſſe to the Truth before the third, either to her eternal comfort, or diſcomfort.

He is ſent for.

Flight Refuſed.

His Courage.

The Purſuivant having delivered his Letter, told him, that he was commanded not to ſtay for him, and ſo immediately departed: His Adverſaries hoping that he would have fled: But Latimer haſted after to London, and as he rode through Smithfield, he ſaid, that Smithfield had groaned for him a long time. Coming before the Council, after many mocks & ſcorns, he was ſent to the Tower, where the Lord gave him ſuch a valiant ſpirit, that he did not onely bear the terribleneſſe of impriſonment, but derided and laughed to ſcorn the doings of his enemies. This aged Father being kept in the cold winter without a fire, bad the Lieutenant's man to tell his Maſter, That if he did not look better to him, perchance he would deceive him. The Lieutenant, thinking that he intended to make an eſcape, charged him with his words, to whom he anſwered, You think I ſhall burn, but except you let me have a fire, I ſhall deceive your expectation; for I am here like to ſtarve with cold. Thus he continued a long time in the Tower, with as much patience as a man in his caſe could poſſibly do; and at laſt, from thence he was carried to Oxford, with Cranmer and Ridley, where they ſpent their time in Brotherly conference, fervent prayer, and fruitful writing. Yea, many times he continued ſo long in fervent prayer, that he was not able to get up without help. Three things he more eſpecially prayed for.

He is Tempted.

A Prediction.

Comfort in Affliction.

His Impriſonment.

He is ſent to Oxford.

1. That as God had appointed him to be a Preacher of his Word, ſo that he would give him grace to ſtand to his Doctrine, that he might give his hearts blood for the ſame.

His fervent Prayers.

2. That God of his mercy would reſtore his Goſpel to England once again, once again, which he often inculcated in his prayer, and that with ſo much ardour, as though he had ſeen God before him, and ſpoken to him face to face.

Prayer.

3. That the Lord would preſerve Queen Elizabeth, and make her a comfort to this comfortleſs Realm of England. The Lord moſt graciouſly anſwering all thoſe his requeſts. At laſt he was condemned, and with Doctor Ridley was carried to be burned. When he came to the ſtake, he lift up his eyes with an amiable and comfortable countenance, saying, Fidelis est Deus, &c. God is faithful, who will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able, &c. When the fire was brought, he said to Doctor Ridley, Be of good comfort Brother, and play the man, we shall this day light such a candle by Gods grace in England, as I trust shall never be put out.

He encourageth Dr. Ridley

When he was stripped into his shroud, he seemed a very comly person to all that were present: And whereas in his cloaths he appeared a withered, and crooked, silly, old man, he now stood bolt-upright, as comly a Father as one might likely behold.

A special providence.

As he was burning, his blood ranne out of his heart in such abundance, as if all the blood in his body had been gathered thither, to the great astonishment of the beholders, according to his former request, That he might be so happy as to shed his hearts-blood for the Truth. When the fire was first kindled, he cryed, O father of heaven receive my soul: And so receiving the flame, and, as it were embracing it, having stroaked his face with his hands, and bathed them a little in the fire, he soon died with very little pain, or none at all, Anno Christi 1555.

His Death.

In a Letter to K. Hen. 8.

In a Letter to King Henry the eighth, he thus concludes; Wherefore, gracious King, remember your self, have pitty upon your soul, and think that the day is even at hand when you shall give an account for your Office, and of the blood that hath been shed with your sword: In the which day that your Grace may stand stedfast, and may have your Quietus est sealed with the blood of our Saviour Christ, which will onely serve at that day, is my daily prayer, &c.

The Life of John Philpot, who dyed Anno Christi 1555.

His Birth & education.

John Philpot was a Knight's son, and born in Hampshire, brought up at Schoole and sent from thence to New-Colledge in Oxford, where he studied the Liberal Arts, and the Tongues, and afterwards the Civil-Law, for six or seven years space.

His Character.

He was of a pregnant wit, and singular courage, fervent in spirit, zealous in Religion, of nature apert, and far from flattery, hypocrisie, and dissimulation.

His travels.

From Oxford he travelled into Italy, where he was in some danger for his Religion:

His return.

In King Edward the sixth's dayes he returned into England again, and had many conflicts with Bishop Gardiner. He did much good in Hampshire, being Arch-deacon of Winchester all King Edward's dayes.

A Convocation.

Anno Christi 1553 (which was the first year of Queen Mary) a Convocation was assembled, wherein Doctor Weston was Prolocutor, in the beginning whereof a disputation was begun between the Papists and Protestants; wherein Mr. Philpot was so earnest, that Doctor Weston commanded him to hold his peace, whereto he replyed, You perceive that I have stuffe enough for you, whereby I am able to withstand your false positions, and therefore you command me silence.

Mr. Philpots zeal.

If you will not give place (quoth the Prolocutor) I will send you to prison.

This is not (replyed Mr. Philpot) according to your promise made at first in this house; nor yet according to your brag made at Paul's Crosse, when you said, that men should be answered in this disputation to whatsoever they could say, and now of a dozen arguments that I have, you will not suffer me to prosecute one: But I see that a sort of you here, which hitherto have lurked in corners, and dissembled with God and man, are now gathered together to suppresse the sincere Truth of Gods Word, and to set forth your false devices, which by the sacred Scriptures you are not able to maintain.

The Queen dissolved the Convocation.

Six dayes after came a Mandate from the Queen to break up the disputation; whereupon Doctor Weston, who all along had used many unseemly checks, & taunts to the Protestants, thus concluded: It is not the Queens pleasure that we should spend any longer time here; and ye are all well enough, for you have the Word, and we have the Sword.

He is cast into prison.

And shortly after Mr. Philpot was cast into Prison, where he lay a year and a half before he was examined. Then he was sent for by Doctor Storie, and after some captious questions proposed to him, was committed prisoner to the Bishop of London's

Cole-

Cole-House, unto which was adjoyned a little Blind-house, with a great pair of Stocks, both for hand and foot, But thanks be to God, saith he, I have not Played of those Organs yet. There he found a Godly Minister of Essex, who desiring to speak with him, did greatly lament his infirmity; for through extremity of Imprisonment, he had yeelded to the Bishop of London, and was set at liberty; whereupon he felt such an Hell in his Conscience, that he could scarce refrain from destroying himself; and could have no Peace, till going to the Bishops Register, and desiring to see his Recantation, he tore it in peeces; whereupon the Bishop sending for him, bufferted him, pluckt off a great part of his Beard, and sent him to this Cole-House, where Mr. Philpot found him very joyfull under the Cross.

Mr Smith. Danger of Apostacy.

Popish cruelty.

Philpot being afterwards sent for to the Bishop, he asked him, amongst other things, why they were so merry in Prison, Singing and Rejoycing, as the Prophet saith, Exultantes in rebus pessimis, Rejoycing in your naughtiness. You do not well (said the Bishop) herein, you should rather lament and be sorry. To whom Master Philpot answered; My Lord, the Mirth which we make, is but in singing certain Psalms, as we are commanded by Saint Paul, to rejoyce in the Lord, Singing together in Hymns and Psalms; For we are in a Dark comfortless place, and therefore we solace our selves with singing of Psalms; lest, as Solomon saith, Sorrowfulness eat up our Heart: Therefore I trust your Lordship will not be Angry, seeing the Apostle saith, If any man be of an upright Mind, let him Sing; and we, to declare that we are of an upright minde to God, though we be in Misery, do solace our selves with singing.

Joy after Sorrow.

His conference with B. Bonner.

Then did the Bishop ask him, what his judgement was about the Sacrament of the Altar? To whom he answered, My Lord, Saint Ambrose saith, that the Disputation about matters of Faith ought to be in the Congregation in the hearing of the People, and that I am not bound to render an account of it to every Man privately, unless it be to edifie. But now I cannot shew you my mind, but I must run upon the Pikes and endanger my Life: Therefore, as Saint Ambrose said to Valentinian the Emperour, so say I unto you, Tolle Legem, & fiet certamen; Take away the Law, and I shall reason with you. And yet if I come in open judgment, where I am bound by the Law to answer, I trust I shall answer according to my Conscience, as freely as any that hath come before you.

After other Discourse (saith he) I was carryed to my Lords Cole-House again, where I, with my six fellow-Prisoners, do rouse together in the Straw as chearfully, we thank God, as others doe in their Beds of Down.

A prison a Palace.

A few days after he was called before Bonner, with the Bishops of Bath, Worcester, and Glouceſter, at which conference the Bishop of Worcester said: Before we begin to speak to him, it's best that he call to God for Grace, and to Pray that God would open his Heart, that he may conceive the Truth. Hereupon Master Philpot kneeling down said, Almighty God, who art the giver of all Wisdome, and Understanding, I beseech thee of thine infinite Goodness and Mercy in Jesus Christ, to give me (most vile Sinner) in thy sight the Spirit of Wisdome to speak and make answer in thy cause, that it may be to the contentation of the hearers before whom I stand, as also to my better understanding, if I be deceived in any thing.

His conference with the Bishops.

His Prayer.

Nay my Lord of Worcester (quoth Bonner) you did not well to exhort him to make any Prayer: For this is the thing they have a singular Pride in, that they can often make their vain Prayers, in which they Glory much: For in this point they are like to certain Arrant Hereticks of which Pliny speaks, that they daily sung Antelucanos Hymnos, Praises to God before the dawning of the day. Then said Master Philpot; My Lord, God make me, and all you here present, such Hereticks as they were: For they were Godly Christians, with whom the Tyrants of the World were offended for their Christian practises and well doing. But all their conference proved to no purpose; for the Bishops would not dispute, and Master Philpot would not take their words without Scripture and Arguments; so he was returned to his Cole House again.

Popish Ignorance.

And in another conference with Doctor Morgan, the Dr. asked him, How he knew that he had the Spirit of God, and not they?

His conference with D. Morgan.

Popiſh Prophaneſſe.

Phil. By the Faith of Chriſt which is in me.

Morgan. Ah, by Faith do you ſo? I ween it to be the ſpirit of the Buttery which your fellows had which have been burned before you, who were drunk the night before they went to their death, and I ween went drunken to it.

Mr. Philpots Zeal.

Phil. It appeareth by your ſpeeches, that you are better acquainted with the ſpirit of the Buttery then with the ſpirit of God: Wherefore I muſt now tell thee, thou painted wall, and hypocrite, in the name of the living Lord, whoſe truth I have told thee, that God ſhall rain fire and brimſtone upon ſuch ſcorners of his Word, and Blaſphemers of his people as thou art.

Morgan. What, you rage now?

Phil. Thy fooliſh Blaſphemies have compelled the ſpirit of God which is in me, to ſpeak that which I have ſaid to thee, thou enemy of all righteouſneſſe.

Morgan. Why do you judge me ſo?

Phil. By thy own wicked words I judge of thee, thou blind and blaſphemous Doctor; for as it is written, By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned. I have ſpoken on Gods behalf, and now I have done with thee.

Morg. Why then I tell thee Philpot thou art an Heretick, and ſhalt be burned, and afterwards goe to Hell fire.

Phil. I tell thee thou Hypocrite, that I paſſe not a ruſh for thy fire and faggots; neither, I thank my Lord God, do ſtand in fear of the ſame. But for the Hell fire which thou threatneſt me as my portion, it's prepared for thee, unleſſe thou ſpeedily repent, and for ſuch Hypocrites as thou art.

He is ſet in the Stocks.

After ſundry other examinations he was by the Biſhop ſet in the ſtock's in a houſe alone, of which he writes: God be praiſed that he thought me worthy to ſuffer any thing for his names ſake: Better it is to ſit in the ſtocks in this world, then to ſit in the ſtocks of a damnable conſcience. At laſt he was condemned for an Heretick: whereupon he ſaid, I thank God I am an Heretick out of your curſed Church, but I am no Heretick before God.

His Condemnation.

Being ſent to Newgate, he ſpake to the people as he went, ſaying, Ah good people, bleſſed be God for this day: Having notice given on the over-night that the next day he ſhould be burned, he ſaid, I am ready, God grant me ſtrength, and a joyfull reſurrection, and ſo he went to his chamber, pouring out his ſpirit unto the Lord in prayer, and giving him moſt hearty thanks for accounting him worthy to ſuffer for his Truth. Going into Smithfield, the way was very foul, whereupon two Officers took him up to bear him to the ſtake: Then he ſaid merrily, What, will you make me a Pope? Comming into Smithfield, he kneeled down, ſaying, I will pay my vows in thee O Smithfield: He kiſſed the ſtake, ſaying, Shall I diſdaine to ſuffer at this ſtake, when my Lord and Saviour refuſed not to ſuffer a moſt vile death for me? When the fire was kindled, with much meekneſs and comfort he reſigned up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1555.

He prepares for Death.

He is carried into Smithfield.

His Martyrdom.

In his Letters.

In a Letter which he wrote to John Careleſſe, then priſoner in the Kings-Bench, he thus writes: Indeed, my dear Careleſſe, I am in this world in hell, and in the ſhadow of death; but he that for my deſerts hath brought me down into hell, ſhall ſhortly lift me up unto heaven, where I ſhall look continually for your coming, and others of my faithful brethren in the Kings-bench. And though I tell you that I am in hell in the judgement of the world, yet aſſuredly I feel in the ſame the conſolation of heaven, I praiſe God. And this loathſome and horrible priſon is as pleaſant to me as the walks in the Garden of the Kings-bench.

His wonderful joy in Priſon.

And in a Letter that he wrote to his Siſter, he thus concludes: My diſſolution I look for daily, but the Lord knoweth how unworthy I am of ſo high an honour, as to die for the teſtimony of his Truth. Pray that God would vouchafe to make me worthy, as he hath done of long impriſonment. Pray, and look for the coming of the Lord, &c.

In another Letter he writes thus, Commend me to Mr. Elſing and his wife, and thank them for providing me ſome eaſe in priſon; and tell them that though my Lords Colehouſe be but very black, yet it is more to be deſired of the faithful then the Queens Palace, lace. The world wondereth how we can be merry in ſuch extream miſeries, but our God is omnipotent, which turneth miſery into felicity: Believe me there is no ſuch joy in the world as the people of Chriſt have under the Croſſe: I ſpeak by experience, therefore believe me, and fear nothing that the world can doe unto you, for when they impriſon our bodies, they ſet our ſouls at liberty with God; when they caſt us down, they lift us up; yea when they kill us, then do they ſend us to everlaſting life; and what greater glory can there be then to be made conformable to our head Chriſt, which is done by afflictions? O good God, what am I, upon whom thou ſhouldeſt beſtow ſo great a mercy? This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad in the ſame; this is the way, though it be but narrow, which is full of the peace of God, and leadeth to eternal bliſſe. Oh how my heart leapeth for joy that I am ſo near the apprehenſion thereof. God forgive me my unthankfulneſs and unworthineſs of ſo great glory. I have ſo much joy, that though I be in a place of darkneſſe and mourning, yet I cannot lament, but both night and day am ſo joyful, as if I were under no croſſe at all; yea in all the dayes of my life I was never ſo merry, the name of the Lord be praiſed for ever, and ever; and the Lord pardon my unthankfulneſs. Our enemies do fret, fume, and gnaſh their teeth to ſee, and hear, that we under this grievous affliction, can be ſo merry. Pray inſtantly that this joy may never be taken from us, for it paſſeth all the delights of this world. This is the peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding: This peace, the more his choſen be affected, the more they feel; and therefore cannnot faint neither for fire, nor water.

He defends Infant-Baptiſm.

Whilſt Mr. Philpot was priſoner in Newgate, a certain friend of his that ſcrupled the Baptizing of Infants, wrote to him for his judgement about it, to whom he wrote a large and learned Anſwer, proving by Scripture, by Arguments, by teſtimony of the Fathers, and by the conſtant practiſe of the Primitive Church, from the Apoſtles dayes, the lawfulneſſe and neceſſity of the ſame, which you may read in the Book of Martyrs, vol. 3. pag. 606. &c.

The

THO: CRANMER.

The Life of Thomas Cranmer, who dyed Anno Christi 1556.

His Birth and Education. His Marriage.

Thomas Cranmer was a Gentleman by birth, of a very ancient Family, born at Arselacthon in Nottinghamshire, brought up at School, and from thence sent to Cambridge. where, profiting much in learning, he was chosen fellow in Jesus Colledge. After which he married a wife, and thereby losing his Fellow-ship, he was chosen Divinity-Reader in Buckingham-Colledge, but not long after, his wife dying in childbed, the Master and Fellows chose him again Fellow into Jesus Colledge. After which he commenced Doctor in Divinity.

He is again chosen Fellow. His Prudence.

From thence he was chosen a Fellow in the Foundation of Cardinal Wolsey's Colledge in Oxford, but fore-seeing the danger which after followed, he refused that place. Whilst he was in Cambridge, the question arose about King Henries Divorce from his Brothers widdow; and the Plague breaking forth at Cambridge, Doctor Cranmer retired to Waltham-Abbey. At which time this fell out.

Gods Providence.

The King, to recreate himself, and to take private counsel with those in whom he most confided, who were the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and some others, went on hunting to Waltham, at which time he signified his minde to Steven Gardiner his Secretary, and to Fox his Almoner, willing them to search what was most expedient for him to do, to end well that controversie about his Marriage: And, as God would have it, these two men lodged in the house of one Master Cressie at Waltham, where also Doctor Cranmer was, having left Cambridge upon the forementioned occasion, and being Tutor to Master Cressies two sons. Gardiner and Fox thus meeting with him, and knowing him to be famous for learning, and piety, invited him to their good cheer, and asked his advice concerning the Kings cause. Doctor Cranmer was at first very loath to deliver his judgement, but being much importuned by them, he at last said.

D. Cranmers advice about the Kings divorce.

I cannot say much on the sudden in so weighty a businesse without study and meditation, but in my Opinion, seeing the King is in so great trouble of mind and conscience, nothing can more encrease it then so great delayes, and wandring in Romish suites; in which, whosoever are once entangled, can scarce ever extricate themselves out of the snares. I think it better therefore, that laying aside aſide all delayes, and Court-ſuites, wherein the King hath been too long toſſed with great affliction of minde, the judgement of Divines, both in our own and forraign Univerſities be ſearched out, which may be ſtrengthened with the Law of God, and as they ſhall by God's Word prove it lawful or unlawful, ſo let the King proceed, and have the cauſe then determined in his own Country, whereby he may live in lawful Matrimony, with a cheerful minde and quiet conſcience, which is much to be deſired by all his faithful Subjects.

When he had thus ſpoken with great Gravity, and Wiſdome; Gardiner and Fox reſenting that excellent Counſel, as given from God, wiſhing that the King had had ſuch Counſel given him before he ever ſent to Rome.

The day after, when they came to the King, he asked them what was done in his buſineſs: whereupon Fox told him of their meeting, and conference had with Doctor Cranmer: But proud Gardiner, ſeeking to inveſt himſelf in the Praiſe which was due unto another, would have made himſelf the Author of that Counſel, but the King neglecting his Speech, asked Fox if Cranmer were at Waltham ſtill? And being told that he was, he preſently ordered him to be ſent for, ſaying, I judge his counſel right, if I had known it two Years agoe, I had ſaved infinite charges, and I had lived with a more ſafe and quiet Conſcience. Gardiners Pride.

When Doctor Cranmer came to him, he much excuſed himſelf, as inſufficent to be engaged in ſo great a matter, yet beſought him to commit the Tryal of it to the beſt Learned Men in both Univerſities: Which advice the King liked well, yet required him to write his judgment upon it alſo, and commanded the Earl of Wiltſhire to provide him retired Lodgings, Books, and what ever elſe was neceſſary for ſo great a Work: which Task being finiſhed, and confirmed by Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers, he preſented it to the King: who (having read it) asked him whether he would juſtifie it before the Pope? Doctor Cranmer profeſſing his willingneſs, the King haſtened his diſpatch to Rome, and ſent other Learned Men abroad to forraign Univerſities to diſpute this queſtion amongſt the Divines there; where it was concluded, that no ſuch Matrimony was lawful by the Word of God. He writes his judgement.

When the Kings Ambaſſadors came to Rome, the Pope proffering them his Foot to kiſs, the Earl of Wiltſhire's Spaniel caught his great Toe in his Mouth, whereupon the Ambaſſadors ſcorned to kiſs after the Dog, and the Pope pulled in his Foot again. There Cranmer and the reſt proffered to defend, that, Jure Divino, the Brother ought not to Marry the Brothers Wife; but none appearing againſt them, the Pope made Doctor Cranmer his Penitentiary, and ſo diſmiſſed them. He is ſent to Rome. An unmannerly dog. The Popes Evaſion.

From thence Doctor Cranmer travelled to the Emperours Court at Vienna, proffering to diſpute with his Divines upon the ſaid queſtion: But Cornelius Agrippa in private Conference receiving full ſatisfaction from him, thereupon eaſily perſwaded other Learned Men that were in the Emperors Court not to contend with Cranmer, who (as he ſaid) was in the Truth, ſo that no Man contradicting him, Cranmer departed from the Emperor, and having travelled all over Germany, he brought home with him into England the Opinions and Sentences of the moſt Learned Men that lived in the Univerſities, and Courts of Princes. And in the mean ſeaſon others ſent for the King, paſſing through all the Univerſities of Italy and France, brought home likewiſe their Determinations in that point confirmed with their publick and Authentick Seals, agreeing with thoſe that Cranmer had brought out of Germany. In this journey too and fro he Learned all the New-Teſtament by heart. All learned men for the Divorce. His Induſtry.

Auguſt 23. An. Chriſti 1533. William Warham Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury dyed, and the King reſolved to place Doctor Cranmer in his Room, who was at this time in Germany about the King buſineſs, and was loath to take upon him an Office of ſuch a high Dignity in the Church: For he knew that there was an Oath to be taken to the Pope of Rome before he could be inſtalled in that place. He feared alſo what Iſſue the Kings Divorce might have, and was not ignorant of the Kings violent diſpoſition. He knew that ſudden and great Changes were dangerous, and that the Court, to which he was not accuſtomed, was full of deceipts, and Counterfeitings. That he muſt in all things obey the Kings will; and that if he Tripped in any thing never ſo little, there would His Prudence.

be ſome, who out of envy at his felicity, would tumble him down headlong when he began to fall. He alſo having buried his firſt Wife, was now falne in Love with a young Maid, that was neere to Oſianders Wife, whom he determined to Marry, though he knew it was forbidden by law for a Prieſt to marry, or for a Man to be made a Prieſt who had marryed a ſecond Wife.

Weighing theſe things ſeriouſly with himſelf, when he was ſent for by the King to return home ſo ſoon as he could, he ſtayed in Germany ſix whole months, framing one excuſe or other, hoping that in the mean time, ſome or other would get the Arch-Biſhoprick. But ſuch were the times then, that every man feared the ſlipperineſs of that place, and therefore declined it.

His ſecond Marriage.

His Humility

He is made Arch-Biſhop.

At laſt Doctor Cranmer privately marrying his wife at Norimberg, returned home, and was made Arch-biſhop, though againſt his will; for he refuſed the dignity offered him; becauſe he was to be tyed to the Pope, againſt all right and equity, and therefore he gave the Popes Bull into the Kings hands ſaying, That he would never receive a Biſhoprick of England but from him who was the Head of England, nor take an oath that was derogatory to the Kings authority. And thus being made Arch-Biſhop, he carried himſelf as formerly he had done, riſing every morning at five a clock to his ſtudy, and never being idle all the day. After dinner, if he had no ſuiters, he ſpent an hour at Cheſs, and ſo to his ſtudy again.

His Studiouſneſs.

His Character.

He oppoſed the Six Articles.

He was by nature very charitable, and gentle, ſo prone to forgive and forget wrongs, that it grew into a Proverb, Do my Lord of Canterbury a ſhrewd turn, and he will be your friend as long as you live. He ſtoutly oppoſed the ſix bloody Articles, and yet with ſuch humility and modeſty that the King could not be offended with him for it. He was ſo free from paſſion, that he never miſ-called the meaneſt of his ſervants. He was juſt in paying all men, ſo that when he was caſt into priſon he owed no man a farthing. He relieved many that were in want.

His Charity.

The whole weight of reforming Religion lay upon his hands, ſo that for ſixteen years together his houſe was never empty of learned men to aſſiſt in deciding Eccleſiaſtical controverſies. His charity to the poor was very great, for whom he provided lodgings, being ſick, lame, wounded, &c. and appointed an Almoner, Phyſician, and Chirurgion to attend them, having daily hot broth and meat ſent them from his own Kitchin.

Cranmer hated by the Papiſts.

He had many and great enemies of the Papiſts, eſpecially wily Wincheſter and his companions, who layed a traine to take away his life, at leaſt his Arch-biſhoprick, by bringing him within the compaſs of the ſix Articles: which by Doctor Parker, the firſt Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury in Queen Elizabeths dayes, is thus related. "Doctor Cranmer (ſaith he) being in great heavineſs for the death of the Lord Cromwel, "was accuſed by the Papiſts, and much threatned by them, and though he knew "that he was not ſafe for one moment of time, yet he changed not the cheerfullneſs "of his countenance, becauſe as yet he kept the Kings right, in the defence of the "Goſpel, by his ſingular wiſdom gravity and modeſty: But the King being ſoon entangled by converſing with Wincheſter, and his Popiſh party, they daily ſo deafned "him with their continual complaints againſt the Arch-Biſhop, that through weari"ſomneſs he was almoſt conſtrained to grant unto them the life of that moſt innocent "man: Yet, by Gods ſpecial providence, he was ſo rooted in his heart, that when "the Papiſts moſt preſumed, and the godly moſt feared his ruine, the King reſolved "to provide for his ſafety and welfare.

His diſputations with Gardiner.

In the mean time, proud and malicious Gardiner, whoſe favour and authority was thought to be greateſt with the King, provoked him often to diſputations about points of Divinity in the preſence of the King; In the which the King obſerved that Cranmer never departed from his innate gravity and modeſty, whereas Gardiner always rather affected a little glory then the truth. And when Gardiner, that he might leſſen the authority of the Scriptures, had by many ſophiſtical arguments endeavoured to prove, that thoſe called the Apoſtles Canons, were of equal validity, and authority with the ſacred Scriptures; Cranmer ſo enervated the force of all his arguments in the Kings hearing, by his ſolid, calm, and moderate anſwers, that the King ſaid in the preſence of many unto Gardiner, that Cranmer was an old Weather-beaten Souldier in Divinity, and was not to be Encountered by ſuch Freſh-Walter Souldiers as himſelf.

For this Gardiner ſwelling with pride, ſtirred up as many againſt Cranmer as poſſibly he could, judging that nothing could hinder their Counſels, and purpoſes, if he were taken out of the way.

At Canterbury, and all over Kent, by the procurement of Gardiner, many were ſuborned to accuſe Cranmer of Hereſie.

In the Parliament one Goſwick a Knight for Bedfordſhire ſaid openly, that all Heretical Sedition flowed from the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury and his Family. Some great Men about the King, hereupon laboured much to perſwade him, that by reaſon of theſe imputations, Cranmer ſhould be excluded from the Council-Board, and committed to the Tower of London till inquiry could be made concerning the Truth of thoſe reports; For (ſaid they) ſo long as he ſits in Council, for fear, Men will conceal that which they know, not daring to utter or reveal it. They alſo diſperſed Rumors that Cranmer was already Condemned in the judgment of the King, and ſhould be ſhortly beheaded as Cromwel had been a little before. All this while Cranmer, though he ſet a good Face on't, yet privately amongſt his Friends much bewailed the condition of thoſe Evil times, rather than his own. But the King diligently ſecarched out all theſe Treacherous deſigns of the Papiſts, and Marked whereunto they tended. Popiſh malice.

Once for Recreations ſake, after Supper, the King would go in his Barge upon the Thames, and being there, commanded his Barge-Men to land him at Lambeth Stairs; Some of the Arch-Biſhops Servants obſerving that he drew thitherward, preſently informed their Maſter, who haſted to the Bridge, either to ſalute the King as he paſſed by, to entertain him into his Houſe. The King ſeeing him, bid him come into his Barge, and ſetting him by him, had much Private conference with him, the Barge-men in the mean ſeaſon rowing hither and thither.

In this conference the King feignedly complained, that ſince the death of Cromwel, England was much troubled with Heretical Factions and parties, that it was to be feared, that if theſe wranglings about Religion were nouriſhed, more grievous Miſchiefs and Civil Wars would ariſe, and therefore that the diſſentions about Religion were to be Appeaſed; for which end, by the advice of his Biſhops and Nobles, he would endeavour to find out the Arch-Heretick, who was the author of this Miſchief, and whom being found, he intended ſeverely to puniſh, yea, Cruelly to burn him, thereby to prevent further diſorders. His conference with the King.

Cranmer (though he was ſomewhat affrighted) yet anſwered with a mild Countenance, that he liked the Counſel as wholeſome; that the whole Flock of Hereticks was to be reſtrained by the death of the Arch-Heretick; But he admoniſhed the King with Fatherly Gravity and Modeſty, that he would not judge them Hereticks, who relyed wholly upon the Word of God, and not to the Traditions or Laws of Men. Well (quoth the King) to deal plainly, we are told by many, that you are the Arch-Heretick of our Kingdome, and that in Kent, and all your Province, you hinder the Faith eſtabliſhed in Parliament by the ſix Articles, from being received by our people, and therefore tell Us plainly both what you think, and what you have done concerning them.

To this the Arch-Biſhop ſtoutly replyed, that he was ſtill of the ſame Opinion that he had expreſſed in Parliament when that Law was made; and that he had not offended againſt the Law ſince it was made. Then the King by little and little moderating the ſeverity of his ſpeech, asked him pleaſantly, whether his private Bed-Chamber was free from the breach of the ſix Articles? Cranmer (though he underſtood by the ſix Articles that it was a Capital offence for a Prieſt to be Marryed, and that the King knew well that he was a Marryed Man, yet) anſwered, That though he had marryed a Wife, yet it was in Germany before he took upon him the Arch-Biſhoprick; but for all that, he had done nothing againſt that ſevere Law: For (ſaith he) When the Law was once made, I never touched my Wife, but ſent her into Germany to her Kindred and Friends. His prudent anſwer.

By this plain anſwer without dawbing, Cranmer begat in the Kings minde ſuch an Opinion of his Learning, and Honeſty, that he cheared him up, telling him that thoſe Articles were not ordained for his ſake; and ſhewed him what were the chief Accuſations laid in againſt him; Which, Cranmer knowing to be falſe, and forged by the envy and malice of his Popiſh Adverſaries, he intreated the King to appoint Inquiſitors, whereby the Truth might be ſifted out: For (ſaith he) I am not afraid to undergoe the hazzard of a Judgment.

The Kings great favour to Him.

The King, truſting to his ingenuity, bad him ſearch, and try out his own cauſe himſelf. But Cranmer replyed, that it would ſeem unequal to his Adverſaries, that he ſhould be made Cenſor of his own Acts, and therefore ſtill deſired another Judge. But the King ſtill affirmed that he would make none other the Inquiſitor of his life, having put ſo much truſt and confidence in him alone, knowing that he would certainly, and fully relate the Truth without a Lye, of his own deeds, whether they were good or bad: After which words the King diſmiſſed him.

He is betrayed by his own Servant.

Preſently after Doctor Cranmer ſent Doctor Cox, his Vicar general, and Maſter Anthony Huſſey, his Secretary, with Ample Commiſſion, to ſearch out the Plots which were contrived againſt him by the Papiſts of Canterbury, who ſpent a Moneth or two, and yet did little, being Perſons that favoured the Popelings.

In the mean time his Adverſaries at Court, urged much that he might be impriſoned, and might then be examined of the Hereſies laid to his charge, preſuming, that if once he were removed out of the Kings ſight, they might eaſily over-whelm him with feigned crimes, and ſo work his deſtruction. And the King being tired with their dayly importunities, granted that if he was manifeſtly convinced of any Crimes either againſt Church or State, he ſhould be carryed to Priſon. Hereupon Gardiner and his Aſſociates reſolved the next day to ſend him Priſoner to the Tower, and the King concealed his purpoſe, that he might ſee how far their Malice would extend, and yet reſolved to ſecure him: For about Mid-night he ſent Maſter Denny, one of his Bed-Chamber, whom he moſt confided in, as not liking the Popelings, to Lambeth for Doctor Cranmer, who being rouſed out of his Sleep, came preſently to the King, who in theſe words told him what he would have him doe. Almoſt all my Counſellors (ſaith he) are urgent to have you impriſoned, becauſe almoſt all England is defiled with Hereſies, which, they ſay, proceeds from you, and certain Learned Strangers whom you keep in your Houſe, and therefore they would have you under cuſtody, whilſt the cauſe is enquired after, without which they cannot find out the Original; and to morrow is the Day appointed for your commitment, and therefore conſider whether it be well done or no.

A deſign to have committed him to the Tower

The King reveals it to Him.

Doctor Cranmer heartily thanked the King for giving him this warning, ſaying, that he refuſed not to goe to Priſon, nor to ſtand in Judgment, truſting to his innocency, and clear Conſcience, affirming that he would rather hazard a juſt Judgment, than lye under unjuſt Suſpitions. Onely he deſired that ſince his Doctrine and Faith were called into queſtion, he might have Learned and equall Judges to hear the ſame. But the King pittying the plain Simplicity of the Man, who would thus expoſe himſelf to the Malice of his Mortal Enemies, ſaid to him; Are you ſo Fooliſh? For if you be once led away from your Dignity, and from the light and ſight of Men, many falſe and perjured Witneſſes will ariſe againſt you, which otherwiſe durſt not come into your preſence? Wherefore, ſeeing you neither provide for your Dignity nor Safety, I will give you counſel, that you be not over-whelmed by your Spightful Adverſaries. To Morrow they will ſend for you; they will Object againſt you the crimes of Hereſie, and commit you to Priſon; Then do you requeſt them, that ſince you are one of my Privy-counſel, they would deal with you, as they would be dealt by in the like caſe, viz. That they would produce your Accuſers in open Judgement, whom if you be not able to anſwer, you will Patiently endure impriſonment. But if they regard not this your juſt and equall Requeſt, but will proceed to impriſon you, Appeal to my Preſence, and Audience, by delivering this Token to them to Superſede their Decree, with which words he drew off his Ring from his Finger, and delivered it to Cranmer, and ſo diſmiſſed him.

The King ſecures Him.

The next morning Gardiner and his complices met in the Counſel-chamber, ſent to Lambeth for Cranmer, but when he came, would not let him in. The Nobles and Courtiers that passed by, marvelled much thus to see the Primate of all England, and the most inward Counsellor of the King, thus shut out, and sitting amongst Serving men that waited for their Masters. This being told to Doctor Buts the King Physitian, being moved with the indignity of the fact, he went presently to drive away the gazers, and to honour the presence of so worthy a Father. He is basely Abused.

to

But presently Dr. Buts was sent for to the King, and when he came to him, he said; I have seen an unusual matter, and such a thing as was never before heard of. What's that (quoth the King?) Cranmer (said he) the Primate of the Kingdome, is become some bodies Serving man, and hath stood almost this hour before the door of the Counsel-chamber waiting upon some Master. Ha! (said the King) do my Counsellors so disgracefully use the Primate? And being moved with the indignity of the thing, he presently sent a command that Cranmer should be admitted into the Counsel-chamber. The King informed of It.

When he was entred, it was declared to him, that the King and his Counsellors were informed, that all England was turned from the Catholick Faith, and depraved with Heresie, which proceeded from him and his Family, and that therefore he must be committed to the Tower, whilst a speedy inquisition was made to know whether those things were true or no. Cranmer desired that his accusers, witnesses, and proofs that they had against him might be produced, and that it might be lawful for him to answer presently, and thereby to defend himself, alledging that it was very unequal that the Primate of England, and a Counsellor, whose faith was never doubted of, nor came into question, should be thus disgracefully thrust into Prison upon bare suspitions, to the prejudice of his cause: urging many other reasons why they should deal more gently, and mildly with him. But when neither intreaties, nor arguments could prevaile, but that needs to prison he must go, Cranmer said, that he was very sorry that they forced him to appeal to the King from themselves, with whom he had so often communicated in counsel, and from whom he expected equal dealing upon all occasions; and thereupon delivering the Kings Ring to them, he commanded them to suspend their Decree, and to present themselves before the King. He appeals to the King.

Then said the Lord Russel (afterwards Earl of Bedford) Did not I tell you that the King would never suffer him to be imprisoned, unlesse he were guilty of high Treason against his Majesty? and so they went with Cranmer to the King.

The King sharply rebuked them, telling them that he looked for more wisdom, and gravity amongst them, than to keep Cranmer out of the Counsel-chamber, to force him to stand at the door amongst Serving-men: Asking them whether any of themselves would endure such a disgrace? And withall swore (striking himself upon the breast) that he was more beholding to Cranmer then to any man whatsoever, and that he had tryed him, and knew that no Prelate could exceed him in his fidelity to his King, and therefore that all that loved him, should hold Cranmer in highest price and estimation. The King checks his Counsellors.

The King speaking thus, when all others held their peace through fear, the Duke of Norfolk answered, It was not our purpose to hurt the Arch-bishop at all, but that keeping him in custody whilst the Inquisition depended, his innocency being known, he might come out with greater credit. But (said the King) I will not have Cranmer so handled, nor any that are dear to me. But I perceive some crooked, and cankred hearts raise these Tragedies, which unlesse they be quiet, I will interpose my authority to restrain them; and so he departed in a chase, and all the Counsellors shook hands with Cranmer, desiring to be reconciled to him: And he being of a most sweet, and mild disposition, easily forgave all offences, blotting them utterly out of his mind; and from that time forward he lived secure from all treacheries, being in such high favour with the King. He is reconciled to Them.

But when Doctor Cox, and Hussey, lay loitering at Canterbury (not without suspition) and did nothing in the inquisition, the King secretly sent Doctor Lee to search out what was done in Cranmers behalf; who going speedily to Canterbury, acquainted himself The King provides for his Safety.

himſelf with ſome godly perſons, by whoſe directions he ſearched the houſes of ſome Popiſh Prieſts at mid-night, where he found Letters written from Gardiner, which opened the whole plot againſt Cranmer. Theſe he immediately carryed to the King, who viewing of them, from that time forwards began to withdraw his affections from thoſe Popellings; and withall, acquainted Cranmer with thoſe Letters, bidding him beware of his enemies, now he knew them.

Two Judaſſes.

Amongſt the Letters that were found in Kent, one was written by the Suffragan of Dover, another by Doctor Barber, a Civilian, which two men were well eſteemed of by the Arch-biſhop, and promoted by him, and he alwayes ſhewed them great favour. When the Archbiſhop had their Letters, he called theſe two men into his ſtudy, and ſaid unto them, You two are the men in whom I have alwayes put moſt confidence, and to whom I have alwayes communicated all my ſecrets, you muſt now give me ſome good counſel; for I am ſhamefully abuſed by two whom I have truſted as my ſelf; but theſe perſons have not onely diſcloſed my ſecrets, but alſo have taken upon them to accuſe me of Hereſie, and are become witneſſes againſt me: I require you therefore to give me faithfull advice how I ſhall behave my ſelf towards them, &c. Marry (quoth Doctor Barber) ſuch villains and knaves deſerve to be preſently hanged without further tryal. Hanging is too good (ſaith the Suffragan) and if there want an Executioner, I would be the Hangman my ſelf.

ex ore tuo, &c.

At theſe words the Archbiſhop, lifting up his eyes to heaven, ſaid; O Lord, and moſt merciful God, whom may a man truſt in theſe dayes? It's true which is ſaid, Curſed be he that truſts in man, and makes fleſh his arme. There was never man uſed as I am; But Lord thou haſt evermore defended me, and lent me one good Maſter (meaning the King) without whoſe protection I could not be ſafe for one day, I praiſe thy holy name for it. Then did he pull out of his boſome thoſe two Letters, ſaying, Know you theſe Letters my Maſters? With that they fell down on their knees, asking forgiveneſſe with many tears. Well (ſaid the gentle Archbiſhop) God make you both good men, I never deſerved this at your hands: But ask God forgiveneſſe, againſt whom you have highly offended.

Gods Providence.

Thus we ſee how his enemies from time to time endeavoured by all means to have brought him into diſpleaſure with the King: Yet it pleaſed God ſo to over-rule the King's heart, that he would never be alienated from him; which favour the King continued to him ſo long as he lived, and in King Edward the ſixth's dayes he continued in his place, and much helpt forward the work of Reformation. But in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, he was a principal man whom ſhe maligned.

He is hated by Queen Mary.

He is committed to the Tower.

Before he was committed to the Tower, ſome of his Friends perſwaded him to fly, and to reſerve himſelf for better times; But he anſwered ſtoutly, If I were accuſed of Theft, Murther, or any other wickedneſs, perhaps I could more eaſily be perſwaded to fly;

He is removed to Oxford.

From thence he was removed to Oxford; where again he was called before the Pope's Delegate, and the Queens Commiſſioners; to the latter he did obeyſance, but to the Pope's Delegate he would do none. Before them he made a worthy Confeſſion of his Faith.

He was kept in prison almost three years, and the Doctors in Oxford laboured by many subtle tricks to draw him to a Recantation; Removing him to the Dean's house of Christ-Church, where he had dainty Fare, Recreations, and what else might intice him from Christ to the world: They promised him life, the Queens favour, his former dignity, and what not, if he would but with his hands subscribe to a few words by way of Recantation; which if he refused, there was no hope of pardon.

The Life of Conrade Pellican, who died Anno Chriſti 1556.

His birth and education.

Conrade Pellican, was born of Godly and Honeſt Parents, at Rubeac a Towne of Suevia, neer the Hyrcinian Wood, Anno Chriſti 1478. And being carefully Educated by his Parents, Anno Chriſti, 1484. He was by them ſent to School to Steven Kleger of Zurick, who uſing him gently, brought him in love with Learning.

At thirteen years of Age he went to Heidleberg, And after ſixteen Months Study there, returned home, and his Parents being poor, he became an Uſher in the Grammer School: Many times going to a neighbour Monaſtery to borrow ſome Books, the Fryers Solicited him to become one of their Fraternity, and when he was but 16. years old he aſſented to it, his Parents not oppoſing, becauſe they had not where-withall to maintain him. So that Anno Chriſti, 1493. he took upon him the habit of the Fryer-Minors, to the great joy of all that Society, who uſed him very kindly, and brought him up in all the Ceremonies belonging to their Worſhip.

He enters into a Monaſtery

His Unkle Jodicus Gallus, coming from Heidleberg to Rubeac, was much troubled that his Nephew was become a Fryer, and therefore perſwaded him if he did not like that courſe of Life, to leave it whilſt he was a Novice; But our Conrade thinking that it would be a great diſgrace to him to fall from his purpoſe, refuſed, ſaying, That he would ſerve God in that courſe of life, wherein he thought he ſhould pleaſe God, and whereby he hoped to attain Eternal Life. At the end of the year he fell ſick of the Plague, but being let Blood, it pleaſed God beyond all expectation, to reſtore him to Health.

Recovers of the plague.

He goes to Tubing.

Anno Chriſti, 1496. He went to Tubing, where he ſtudied the Liberal Arts, and was much admired in that Univerſity for his quick Wit. He ſtudied alſo School-Divinity and Coſmography, wherein he profited exceedingly; And meeting with a Converted Jew, he borrowed of him an Hebrew Book, of the Prophets and by his extraordinary pains, found out firſt the Letters, then the Reading and Signification of them, and being a little aſſiſted by Capnio, the Judge of the Imperial Chamber at Wormes, he grew very perfect in it: and hearing that there was a certain Prieſt at Ulme which had bought ſome Hebrew Books of a poor Jew, he went to him, and amongſt them, met with part of a Grammer, about the Conjugations of Verbs, and Tranſmutation of the Letters, which he wrote out, and it proved a great help to him; For he had ſpoken before with many Jews at Wormes, Frankefurt, Ratisbone, &c. and none of them could ever reſolve him, in any one Queſtion of Grammer.

He ſtudyes the Hebrew.

It fell out by Gods Providence that that year the Book-Seller of Tubing had bought an Hebrew Bible compleat, of a very ſmall print, which therefore none cared for. This Pellican hearing of, intreated him to let him look into it, for ſome few dayes: The Book-Seller was content, telling him that for a Florence and a Half he might buy it: Pellican much rejoyced to hear this, intreating his Father-Guardian to be his ſurety, and ſo having obtained it, he thought himſelf a Richer Man than ever was Cræſus, and preſently wrote to his Unkle at Spires, beſeeching him to beſtow two Florences upon him, which he much needed for the buying of a certain Book. This his Unkle ſent him, whereupon he fell cloſe to reading of the Bible, and as he went along, made a Concordance, gathering the Roots, and ſetting down all thoſe Words which were ſeldome found: And thus he went over the whole Bible from the midſt of July, to the end of October: Then carrying to Capino a Specimen of his Works, he was amazed at ſo much work in ſo ſhort a time.

He buyes an Hebrew Bible.

His Induſtry.

Anno Chriſti 1501. being Twenty three years old, he was ordained a Presbyter, and the ſame year the Plague waxing hot at Rubeac, his Father and Brother dyed of it, leaving none but this our Conrade and his Siſter: Therefore to ſolace himſelf in his Sorrows, he wrote out the ſeven Penetential Pſalmes, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, adding ſome Prayers to be uſed upon that occaſion.

He ordained a Prebyter.

Anno Chriſti, 1502. He was made Divinity-Reader in the Covent at Baſil. About the ſame time John Amerback began to print Saint Auguſtines Works, wherein, Pellican was very helpful to him, for which cauſe Amerback, and John Froben were ever after his great Friends, and would never ſuffer him to want any good Book. Then at the inſtance of Cardinal Raymund the Popes Legate, he was made firſt Licentiat, then Doctor of Divinity, and afterwards the Popes Legate took him with him towards Rome, being affected with his Learning, but falling ſick of a Fever by the way, he returned to Baſil.

He is preferred at Baſil.

He goes towards Rome.

Whilſt he thus continued a Fryer, he was of great eſteem amongſt them, becauſe of his Learning and Integrity. But it pleaſed God at laſt, that by Reading Luther's Books, and conference with Learned and Godly Men, he began to diſ-relliſh the Popiſh Errors, and ſo far to declare his diſlike of them, that he was much hated, and perſecuted for a Lutheran. But about the ſame time the Senate of Baſil choſe him Lecturer in Divinity in that City, together with Oecolampadius; where he began to read, firſt upon Geneſis, then on Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes.

His Converſion

He is choſen Lecturer at Baſil.

Anno Chriſti, 1526. He was by the means of Zuinglius ſent for to Zurick, and being come, was moſt Courteouſly entertained by him. There he laid down his Monks Coul, and Marryed a Wife, by whom he had a Son, which he named Samuel, being then Preaching upon the Hiſtory of Samuel. That Wife dying he Marryed again, but had no Children by his ſecond Wife. He was preſent at the Diſputation at Bern about Religion.

He is ſent for to Zurick.

He marrieth a wife.

His ſecond marriage.

After Zuinglius his death, there were choſen into his room Henry Bullinger for Paſtor, and Theodoret Bibliander, for Divinity-Reader, who was an excellent Linguiſt, and began to read upon Iſay, to the great aſtoniſhment of his Hearers, for that he was not above 23. years old. Pellican at the earneſt requeſt of Learned Men, Printed all his Lectures and Annotations, which were upon the whole Bible, excepting only the Revelations, which portion of Scripture he not intending to write upon, cauſed the Commentary of Sebaſtian Meyer upon it, to be bound with his, to make the Work Compleat. He Tranſlated many books out of Hebrew, which were printed by Robert Stevens, as alſo the Chaldee Bible he Tranſlated into Latine. He wrote alſo an Expoſition in Dutch upon the Pentateuch, Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Iſay, and Jeremy, to convince the Jews; For which end alſo he Tranſlated the Learned Diſputation of Ludovicus Vives with the Jews, into Dutch; As alſo many books of Ariſtotle, and Tully; That ſo Ingenuous perſons might learn Philoſophy in their own Language, as the Grecians and Romans in former times were wont to doe. He judged it alſo neceſſary to learn the Turkiſh Language, who were now grown their neer Neighbours, that by the help thereof he might be the better able to bring them to the Chriſtian Faith.

At these words the Archbishop, lifting up his eyes to heaven, said; O Lord, and most merciful God, whom may a man trust in these dayes? It's true which is said, Cursed be he that trusts in man, and makes flesh his arme. There was never man used as I am; But Lord thou hast evermore defended me, and lent me one good Master (meaning the King) without whose protection I could not be safe for one day, I praise thy holy name for it. Then did he pull out of his bosome those two Letters, saying, Know you these Letters my Masters? With that they fell down on their knees, asking forgiveness with many tears. Well (said the gentle Archbishop) God make you both good men, I never deserved this at your hands: But ask God forgiveness, against whom you have highly offended.

The Life of Conrade Pellican, who died Anno Chriſti 1556.

His birth and education.

Conrade Pellican, was born of Godly and Honeſt Parents, at Rubeac a Towne of Suevia, neer the Hyrcinian Wood, Anno Chriſti 1478. And being carefully Educated by his Parents, Anno Chriſti, 1484. He was by them ſent to School to Steven Kleger of Zurick, who uſing him gently, brought him in love with Learning.

At thirteen years of Age he went to Heidleberg, And after ſixteen Months Study there, returned home, and his Parents being poor, he became an Uſher in the Grammer School: Many times going to a neighbour Monaſtery to borrow ſome Books, the Fryers Solicited him to become one of their Fraternity, and when he was but 16. years old he aſſented to it, his Parents not oppoſing, becauſe they had not where-withall to maintain him. So that Anno Chriſti, 1493. he took upon him the habit of the Fryer-Minors, to the great joy of all that Society, who uſed him very kindly, and brought him up in all the Ceremonies belonging to their Worſhip.

He enters into a Monaſtery

His Unkle Jodicus Gallus, coming from Heidleberg to Rubeac, was much troubled that his Nephew was become a Fryer, and therefore perſwaded him if he did not like that courſe of Life, to leave it whilſt he was a Novice; But our Conrade thinking that it would be a great diſgrace to him to fall from his purpoſe, refuſed, ſaying, That he would ſerve God in that courſe of life, wherein he thought he ſhould pleaſe God, and whereby he hoped to attain Eternal Life. At the end of the year he fell ſick of the Plague, but being let Blood, it pleaſed God beyond all expectation, to reſtore him to Health.

Recovers of the plague.

He goes to Tubing.

Anno Chriſti, 1496. He went to Tubing, where he ſtudied the Liberal Arts, and was much admired in that Univerſity for his quick Wit. He ſtudied alſo School-Divinity and Coſmography, wherein he profited exceedingly; And meeting with a Converted Jew, he borrowed of him an Hebrew Book, of the Prophets and by his extraordinary pains, found out firſt the Letters, then the Reading and Signification of them, and being a little aſſiſted by Capnio, the Judge of the Imperial Chamber at Wormes, he grew very perfect in it: and hearing that there was a certain Prieſt at Ulme which had bought ſome Hebrew Books of a poor Jew, he went to him, and amongſt them, met with part of a Grammer, about the Conjugations of Verbs, and Tranſmutation of the Letters, which he wrote out, and it proved a great help to him; For he had ſpoken before with many Jews at Wormes, Frankefurt, Ratisbone, &c. and none of them could ever reſolve him, in any one Queſtion of Grammer.

He ſtudyes the Hebrew.

It fell out by Gods Providence that that year the Book-Seller of Tubing had bought an Hebrew Bible compleat, of a very ſmall print, which therefore none cared for. This Pellican hearing of, intreated him to let him look into it, for ſome few dayes: The Book-Seller was content, telling him that for a Florence and a Half he might buy it: Pellican much rejoyced to hear this, intreating his Father-Guardian to be his ſurety, and ſo having obtained it, he thought himſelf a Richer Man than ever was Cræſus, and preſently wrote to his Unkle at Spires, beſeeching him to beſtow two Florences upon him, which he much needed for the buying of a certain Book. This his Unkle ſent him, whereupon he fell cloſe to reading of the Bible, and as he went along, made a Concordance, gathering the Roots, and ſetting down all thoſe Words which were ſeldome found: And thus he went over the whole Bible from the midſt of July, to the end of October: Then carrying to Capino a Specimen of his Works, he was amazed at ſo much work in ſo ſhort a time.

He buyes an Hebrew Bible.

His Induſtry.

Anno Chriſti 1501. being Twenty three years old, he was ordained a Presbyter, and the ſame year the Plague waxing hot at Rubeac, his Father and Brother dyed of it, leaving none but this our Conrade and his Siſter: Therefore to ſolace himſelf in his Sorrows, he wrote out the ſeven Penetential Pſalmes, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, adding ſome Prayers to be uſed upon that occaſion.

He ordained a Prebyter.

Anno Chriſti, 1502. He was made Divinity-Reader in the Covent at Baſil. About the ſame time John Amerback began to print Saint Auguſtines Works, wherein, Pellican was very helpful to him, for which cauſe Amerback, and John Froben were ever after his great Friends, and would never ſuffer him to want any good Book. Then at the inſtance of Cardinal Raymund the Popes Legate, he was made firſt Licentiat, then Doctor of Divinity, and afterwards the Popes Legate took him with him towards Rome, being affected with his Learning, but falling ſick of a Fever by the way, he returned to Baſil.

He is preferred at Baſil.

He goes towards Rome.

Whilſt he thus continued a Fryer, he was of great eſteem amongſt them, becauſe of his Learning and Integrity. But it pleaſed God at laſt, that by Reading Luther's Books, and conference with Learned and Godly Men, he began to diſ-relliſh the Popiſh Errors, and ſo far to declare his diſlike of them, that he was much hated, and perſecuted for a Lutheran. But about the ſame time the Senate of Baſil choſe him Lecturer in Divinity in that City, together with Oecolampadius; where he began to read, firſt upon Geneſis, then on Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes.

His Converſion

He is choſen Lecturer at Baſil.

Anno Chriſti, 1526. He was by the means of Zuinglius ſent for to Zurick, and being come, was moſt Courteouſly entertained by him. There he laid down his Monks Coul, and Marryed a Wife, by whom he had a Son, which he named Samuel, being then Preaching upon the Hiſtory of Samuel. That Wife dying he Marryed again, but had no Children by his ſecond Wife. He was preſent at the Diſputation at Bern about Religion.

He is ſent for to Zurick.

He marrieth a wife.

His ſecond marriage.

After Zuinglius his death, there were choſen into his room Henry Bullinger for Paſtor, and Theodoret Bibliander, for Divinity-Reader, who was an excellent Linguiſt, and began to read upon Iſay, to the great aſtoniſhment of his Hearers, for that he was not above 23. years old. Pellican at the earneſt requeſt of Learned Men, Printed all his Lectures and Annotations, which were upon the whole Bible, excepting only the Revelations, which portion of Scripture he not intending to write upon, cauſed the Commentary of Sebaſtian Meyer upon it, to be bound with his, to make the Work Compleat. He Tranſlated many books out of Hebrew, which were printed by Robert Stevens, as alſo the Chaldee Bible he Tranſlated into Latine. He wrote alſo an Expoſition in Dutch upon the Pentateuch, Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Iſay, and Jeremy, to convince the Jews; For which end alſo he Tranſlated the Learned Diſputation of Ludovicus Vives with the Jews, into Dutch; As alſo many books of Ariſtotle, and Tully; That ſo Ingenuous perſons might learn Philoſophy in their own Language, as the Grecians and Romans in former times were wont to doe. He judged it alſo neceſſary to learn the Turkiſh Language, who were now grown their neer Neighbours, that by the help thereof he might be the better able to bring them to the Chriſtian Faith.

Annotations on the Bible.

His Works.

Then

Then with extraordinary labour he made Indexes to divers books. He alſo compared the Bible of Munſter printed at Zurick, and that other of Leo Judæ, and Bibliander, with the Hebrew text word by word, leſt any thing ſhould be omitted. And thus having been Hebrew Profeſſor at Zurick for the ſpace of thirty years, wherein he was moſt acceptable to all, not onely in regard of his excellent learning, and indefatigable pains, but alſo in regard of his ſweet, and holy Converſation: At laſt falling into the pain of the ſtone, and other diſeaſes, he departed this life upon the day of Chriſts Reſurrection, Anno Chriſti 1556, of his Age 78.

His Death.

Lavater ſaith, that he heard this Conrade Pellican often ſay, that when he firſt began to ſtudy the Tongues, there was not one Greek Teſtament to be gotten in all Germany, and that the firſt which he ſaw was brought out of Italy; that though a man would have given a great ſum of gold for a Copy of it, it could not be obtained: How happy are we in theſe latter Ages, that have them at ſo eaſie rates! He was a candid, ſincere, and upright man, free from falſhood, and oſtentation.

His Character.

The Life of John Bugenhagius, who dyed An. Chriſti 1558.

His Birth & Education.

John Bugenhagius was born at Julin, near to Stetin in Pomerania, Anno Chriſti 1485. His parents were of the rank of Senators, who bred him up carefully in learning, till he had learned the Grammar and Muſick: Inſtructing him alſo in the principles of Religion, and ſo ſent him to the Univerſity of Grypſwald, where he profited in the ſtudy of the Arts, and the Greek Tongue. Being twenty years old, he taught School at Trepta, and, by his learning and diligence, made the School famous, and had many Scholars, to whom alſo he read daily ſome portion of Scripture, and prayed with them: and meeting with Eraſmus his Book againſt the Hiſtrionical carriage of the Fryars, and the Idolatry of the times, he gat ſo much light thereby, that he was ſtirred up to inſtruct others therein, and for that end in his Schoole he read Matthew, The Epiſtles to Timothy, and the Pſalmes, to which he added Catechiſing, and alſo expounded the Creed, and the ten Commandments; unto which exerciſes many Gentlemen, Citizens, and Prieſts reſorted.

He goes to the Univerſity.

He teacheth School.

His converſion.

From the School he was called to preach in the Church, and was admitted into the Colledge of Presbyters: Many reſorted to his Sermons of all ranks, and his fame ſpread abroad: Inſomuch as Bogeſlaus, the Prince of that Country, employed him in writing an Hiſtory of the ſame, & furniſhed him with mony, Books, and records for the enabling him thereto: Which Hiſtory he compleated in two years, with much judgement and integrity.

He is made a Presbyter.

He is imployed in writing a Hiſtory.

Anno Chriſti 1520. one of the Citizens of Trepta, called Otho Slutovius, having Luther's Book of the Babyloniſh Captivity ſent him, he gave it to Buhengagius, as he was at dinner with his Colleagues, who looking over ſome leaves of it, told them that many Hereticks had diſquieted the peace of the Church ſince Chriſt's time, yet there was never a more peſtilent Heretick then the Author of that Book; ſhewing in divers particulars how he diſſented from the received Doctrine of the Church. But after ſome few dayes, having read it with more diligence, and attention, he made this publick Recantation before them all: What ſhall I ſay of Luther? All the world hath been blind, and in Cimmerian darkneſſe, onely this one man hath found out the Truth. And further diſputing of thoſe queſtions with them, he brought moſt of his Colleagues to be of his judgement therein: Inſomuch as the Abbat, two ancient Paſtors of the Church, and ſome other of the Fryers, began zealouſly to diſcover the deceits of the Papacy, and to preach againſt the ſuperſtitions, and abuſes of humane Traditions, and to perſwade their auditors wholly to truſt to the merits of Chriſt. After this Bugenhagius read Luther's other works diligently, whereby he learned the difference between the Law and the Goſpel, Juſtification by Faith, &c. and taught theſe things alſo to his hearers, perceiving that the opinions of Auguſtine and Luther agreed together about all thoſe matters.

A raſh cenſure.

His Recantation.

Divers converted by Him.

He ſtudies Luther.

But

In Luthers abſence Bartholmew Bernhard, Paſtor of Kemberg married a Wife, whereupon much controverſie aroſe, whether the Marriage of Miniſters was forbidden onely by the Popes Law, and how farre the Monks vows of Caſtity did binde. Luther hereupon being ſent to for his judgement, eaſily cut in ſunder the ſnares of thoſe Laws, and of the impious vows, as Alexander did the Gordian knot with his ſword. At this time Suavenius and Bugenhag ſojourned with Melanchon, whereupon when thoſe Propoſitions of Luther were ſent to him, Bugenhag read them with much diligence, and afterwards having ſeriouſly thought of them, he ſaid, This buſineſſe will cauſe a great mutation in the publick ſtate of things. About the ſame time alſo Carolaſtadius raiſed a controverſie about bringing in the Judicials of Moſes into the Civill State, and removing Images out of the Churches. Againſt theſe Bugenhag with ſome others oppoſed themſelves, declaring, that the overthrowing of Images was ſeditious, and that Chriſtian Commonwealths ought not to be governed by the Jewiſh Judicials. Whereupon at Luthers returne out of his Pathmos, by the Suffrages both of the Univerſity and Senate, Bugenhag was choſen Paſtor of the Church of Wittenberg, which he taught and governed with much felicity, and in many changes of Affaires, for the ſpace of thirty ſix years, never leaving his ſtation, neither for war, nor peſtilence; and when he was profered riches, and preferment, both in Denmark by the good King, and in Pomeren by the good Prince, yet he would never leave his charge, though he lived but poorly in it.

A good Paſtor.

His Humility.

Anno Chriſti 1522. he was ſent for to Hamburg, where hee preſcribed to them a form both of Doctrine, Ceremonies, and Calling of Miniſters, where he erected a School alſo in the Monaſtery of St. John, which afterwards grew very famous. And Anno Chriſti 1530. being ſent for to Lubeck, hee preſcribes to them alſo an order both for Preaching, and Diſcipline, and ſet up a School in the Monaſtery of St. Katherine.

He is ſent for to Hamburg.

And to Lubeck.

Anno Chriſti 1537. he was ſent for by Chriſtian King of Denmark, and Duke of Holſatia, to reform Religion in his Dominions, and to erect Schooles; at which time he ſet forth a Book about the Ordination of Miniſters, formerly agreed upon by Luther and his Colleagues, to which he added ſome Prayers, and a Form or Directory for holy Adminiſtrations. And about fourteen daies after the Coronation of King Chriſtian, Bugenhag inſtead of the ſeven Biſhops of Denmark, ordained ſeven Superintendents, who for the time to come ſhould ſupply the Office of the Biſhops, and ſhould take care of all Eccleſiaſtical affaires. Theſe he ordained in the preſence of the King and his Councill, in the chief Church of Hafnia. He alſo preſcribes what Lectures ſhould be read in the Hafnian Academy. He appointed Miniſters in the Kingdomes of Denmark, and Norway, to the number of four and twenty thouſand.

And to Denmark.

Anno Chriſti 1542. Henry Duke of Brunſwick being expelled his Country by the Elector of Saxony, and the confederate Princes, that imployed Bugenhag, Anthony Corvinus, and Martin Gorlicius, adding ſome of the Nobility to them, to viſit the Churches and Monaſteries in that Dukedome, and to ſee them reformed. At which time they ſet forth a Form of Ordination for that Country.

He is ſent into Brunſwick.

The year following, the Senate of Hildeſia ſent for him to Reform their Churches, where he with Corvinus, and Henrie Winckle, wrote them a form of Ordination, and placed Paſtors and Miniſters in their ſix Churches, the overſight of whom was committed to Jodicus Iſerman; and the Church of the Canons was ſhut up.

Anno Chriſti 1533. he proceeded Doctor, at the inſtigation of John Frederik Elector of Saxonie, himſelf with his Counſellors being preſent to hear the publick diſputations of Luther, Cruciger, Bugenhag, and Æpine. The queſtions were, De Juſtitia. De Eccleſia. De diſcrimine Miniſterii Evangelici, & Poteſtatis Politiæ; and Bugenhag, making an Oration about the laſt of theſe, the Prince was exceedingly well pleaſed with it.

He proceeds Doctor.

Thus far we have the happier part of Bugenhags life; But ſhortly after followed many confuſions, and warres both of the Princes and Divines; in which the Princes were taken priſoners, Wittenberg was beſieged, and other miſeries and miſchiefs of war brought exceeding much grief to this good old man, as the death of that godly King Joſiah did to the Prophet Jeremiah; yet did he not give way to deſpondencie, ſo as either to fly or change his mind; But he kept up his ſpirits by fervent, and frequent prayer to God, which yeelded him great conſolation; the rather conſidering that in ſo great tempeſts, the poor Ship of Chriſt's Church was not ſwallowed up and devoured: For Prince Maurice, who was made Elector of Saxony, changed nothing in Religion, as ſome feared, and others hoped that he would; But ſeuding for Melancthon, Bugenhag, and Cruciger from Wittenberg to Lipſich, he deſired them to take care of the Church and Univerſity, and ſo gratifying them bountifully, diſmiſſed them.

His Conſtancy.

His peaceable diſpoſition.

The controverſies and Quarrels which ſprung up in the Church by Flacius Illericus, were the greateſt grief to him: For it was well known, that he neither in the time of War, nor afterwards, altered any thing either in the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church, often urging that Text, Give to Cæſar the things that are Cæſars, and to God the things that are Gods. He was alwayes very averſe to ſeditious Counſels, and moſt conſtant in reteining the true Doctrine of Chriſt, and though many aſperſions were caſt abroad of him, yet would he never omit the neceſſary labours belonging to his office.

His Conſtancy in prayer.

His death.

Preachers pattern.

The laſt Act of his life, through Gods goodneſs, was quiet, and peaceable; For when his ſtrength was ſo waſted, that he could no longer preach, yet he reſorted daily to Church, where he poured forth fervent prayers both for himſelf, and the afflicted condition of the Church of God at that time. Afterwards falling ſick (though without much pain) he continued inſtant in prayer, and holy conference with his friends, and drawing near to his end, he often repeated, This is life eternal, to know thee the onely true God, and him whom thou haſt ſent, Jeſus Chriſt: and ſo quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1558, and of his Age 73.

He was a faithfull Paſtor, juſt, mercifull to the poor: ſevere, and ſtout in reproofs; an earneſt defendor of the Truth againſt Errors; ardent in prayer, &c. He joyned with Luther in the Tranſlation of the Bible: which being finiſhed, every year upon that day, he invited his friends, and made a feaſt, which he called, the Feaſt of the Tranſlation of the Bible.

He was alwayes well content with his ſtation and condition at Wittenberg, and would never remove though he was earneſtly preſſed to have removed to places of more honour, power, and profit. He attended his charge with great fidelity, admirable aſſiduity, and extraordinary pains. In his Sermons he was very modeſt, and ſo devout, that ſometimes, forgetting himſelf, he would ſpend ſome hours in preaching.

HisWorks.

He wrote a Commentary upon the Pſalmes; Annotations upon the Epiſtles to Gal. Epheſ. Phil. Colloſ. Theſſ. 1. & 2. to Timothy 1. & 2. to Titus, Philemon, Hebr. Alſo Annotations upon Samuel, Jonah, and Deuter. beſides ſome Epiſtles to ſundry friends.

The

P. MELANCTHON

The Live of Philip Melancthon, who died Anno Christi 1560.

Philip Melancthon was born at Bretta in the lower Palatinate; Anno Christi, 1497. of honeſt parents, of a middle rank, by whom he was ſet to School to learne Grammer of John Hungarus, a learned and honeſt man; and to learne Greek of George Simler; and afterwards they ſent him to Heidelberg at twelve years of age, where he had Logick and Phyſicks read to him, and attaining ability to make a verſe, he fell to reading Poetry and Hiſtory. There alſo, being very young, he inſtructed the Sons of Count Leonſtein, and Commenced Bachelor of Arts, Anno Chriſti, 1511. and of his age fourteen, with generall approbation. After three years ſtudy there, the air not agreeing with him, and being denyed his degree of Maſter of Arts, by reaſon of his youth, he removed to Tubinge, Anno 1512. He alwayes uſed to carry his Bible about with him, reading often in it both at Church and elſewhere, yet was he carried away with the common errors of the times, of which himſelfe ſaith, I tremble to think with what blind devotion I went to Images, whilſt I was a Papiſt. He privatly at Tubinge taught the Law, and read over very diligently all the Books of Gallen, and with Oecolampadius, read over Heſiod. He ſtayed in that Univerſity four years, where he profited ſo much in the Arts, Tongues, and Philoſophy, that he read publick Lectures in the Schools out of Virgil, Terence, and Tully, and was imployed in overſeeing the Preſſe. He ſtudied the Mathematicks, Law, and Phyſick, in all which he profited much, There he commenced Maſter of Arts, Anno Chriſti 1513. and of his age, Seventeen.

His birth and education.

He goes to Heidelberge.

He goes to Tubinge.

His imPloyments.

Mr. of Arts.

Luther about that time beginning to oppoſe the Pope. In Auguſt 1518. Philip Melancthon was ſent for from Tubinge, by Frederick Duke of Saxony, to the Univerſity of Wittenberge, to teach the Greek Tongue. He conſulted with Capnio, who adviſed him to imbrace the invitation, whereupon Auguſt 25. he came to Wittenberg. About which time Eraſmus wrote thus of him. Philip Melancthon is a moſt learned, and excellent Grecian: He is a youth and ſtripling, if ye conſider his age? but one of us, if ye look upon his variety of knowledge, almoſt in all Books. He is very exquiſite in the learning of both the Tongues. I pray Chriſt this young man may live long amongſt us; He will quite obſcure Eraſmus.

He goes to Wittenberg.

His great learning.

His Lectures.

Four dayes after he came to Wittenberg, he made a moſt learned, and polite Oration in the Univerſity, with ſo much grace as was admirable. He came to Wittenberg when he was but 22. years old: There he began to expound Pauls Epiſtle to Titus, out of Greek, to the great admiration of his Hearers, which flockt exceedingly to his Lectures, and Luther alſo was exceedingly taken with the ſame, as himſelf profeſſeth in a Letter to Spalatinus, ſaying, Phillippum Græciſſimum, eruditiſſimum, humaniſſimum habe commendatiſſimum: auditorium habet refertum auditoribus, imprimis omnes Theologos ſummos, cum mediis & infimis, ſtudioſos facit Græcitatis, When he firſt began to teach, he found the precepts of Arts either falſe, or obſcure, or out of order, and therefore taking the labour upon him, he made learned Syſtemes almoſt of all Arts, cutting of what was falſe, illuſtrating what was obſcure, and rightly placing what was out of order, ſo that Anno 1519. he publiſhed his Rhetorick, the year after his Logick, and ſhortly after his Grammer, with other Arts in order.

Luthers teſtimony of him.

His great pains.

His Diſputation with Eccius.

Anno 1519, he went with Luther to Liſpwich, where he Diſputed with Eccius, and though Eccius contemned him for his youth, and called him ſaccum diſtinctionum, yet he got himſelf much credit, and gave ſome experience of his abilities in controverſies.

He defends Luther.

Anno Chriſti 1520. he expounded the Epiſtle to the Romans, which Commentary Luther printed without the privity of Melanchthon. The year after, when the Divines of Paris had condemned Luthers Doctrine, and Books, he wrote an Apology for him, againſt their furious Decree.

His Works.

Anno Chriſti 1522. he printed his Common-places; and his Commentaries on both the Epiſtles to the Corinthians, Anno 1523, he publiſhed his Annotations upon Geneſis, with ſome other Books. The year after, taking Joach. Camerarius along with him, he went to viſit his friends, and at his return at the requeſt of the Lantgrave of Heſſe, he wrote an Epitome of the Eccleſiaſtical Doctrine renewed. and a Treatiſe of the differences between the righteouſneſs of the world, and of Chriſt. He turned into Latine the Proverbs of Solomon, and wrote prefaces to the Pſalms and Lamentations. Anno 1525. In the wars of the Booriſh Anabaptiſts he confuted the Articles, whereby they ſought to juſtifie their Rebellion, and in the end of that year, he was ſent for to Nohimberg, to direct the Senate in the erecting of a School.

Anno 1527. he was imployed in viſiting the Churches in Saxonie, Anno Chriſti 1529. the Elector of Saxonie took him with him to the Convention at Spire, where by the conſent of the Proteſtant Princes, He drew up a confeſſion of Faith with great pains, and exactneſſe which by them was preſented to the Emperour Charls the Fifth.

He is ſent for into England.

Anno Chriſti 1534, Henry the eighth King of England ſent to invite him into England with promiſe of Courteous entertainment, and good preferment, hoping by his means to draw the Proteſtant Princes, of Germany into a league with him againſt the Pope. But Melancton refuſed to goe, rendring the reaſon in a Letter that he wrote to Camerarius, wherein is this paſſage; Perhaps many things are reported amongſt you concerning England, that it lyeth open now for the Religion of the purer Doctrine, but I have intelligence from a good hand, that the King hath no great care of the affairs of the Church, onely this good comes of his rejecting the Popes Authority, that for the preſent no cruelty is uſed towards thoſe that are deſirous of better Doctrine.

He refuſeth to goe.

Gods mercy His great imployments.

Anno Chriſti 1536. He went abroad to viſit, and refreſh himſelf with his friends, where falling off a ladder, he hurt his Backbone, which put him to a great pain, but through Gods mercy, he recovered: and the year after he went to the Convention at Smalcald, where (by reaſon of Luthers ſickneſs) almoſt the whole burthen lay upon him of managing the buſineſs about religion. A while after he went to Hagenaw to meet the Proteſtant Divines there, and fore-ſeeing, that he ſhould fall into a mortal Diſeaſe, he made his Will, and left it with Cruciger, ſaying,

Note.

A Prediction.

Viximus in Synodis & jam moriemur in illis,

Imploy'd in Synods, living, oft, was I:
Now in a Synod, I am like to dye.

Accordingly

Accordingly in his journey he fell very ſick, yet through God's mercy, and the care and skill of the Phyſician, he recovered again, his healt hbeing much furthered by the earneſt prayers of Luther, and Cruciger. In his Diſputation with Eccius, Eccius brought a very ſubtil Argument, which he being not able ſuddenly to anſwer, ſaid, Cras tibi reſpondebo, I'le anſwer you to morrow: to whom Eccius re plyed, That is little for your credit if you cannot anſwer it preſently: Whereupon he ſayd; Sir, I ſeek not mine one glory in this buſineſſe but the Truth. To morrow (God willing) you ſhall hear further. Power of Prayer. His humility.

When the Wars for Religion brake out in Germany, he foreſaw in a dream the Captivity of the Elector of Saxonie, and the Lantgrave of Heſſe, fifteen days before they were taken. And when Melancthon did juſtly bewaile thoſe ſad times, he was accuſed to the Emperor as an enemy to his affairs: whereupon the Emperor ſent to Maurice the Elector to ſend him to him, which he refuſed to do. He was ſent alſo to the Council of Trent, but whilſt he ſtayed at Norimberg for the Publick Faith, the Warre brake out betwixt Maurice of Saxony, and the Emperour, about the Lantgrave of Heſſe; whereupon he returned to Wittenberg again: and ſhortly after the plague breaking out there, the Univerſity was removed to Tergaw: But he ſaid, He feared not that Plague, but a far whorſe Plague, which threatned the ruine of the commonwealth. Whilſt he was with the Palatine at Heidelberg, he had news brought him of the death of his wife, who had lived piouſly, and lovingly with him in wedlock 37. years: At the hearing whereof he expreſſed himſelf thus, Farewell Kate, I ſhall follow thee ere long. He had many contentions with the Popiſh party, both by Diſputations, and writing. The laſt Lecture that he read was upon that Text in Iſay. Lord, who hath believed our report: he was very careful before hand to prepare himſelf for death, having this Diſtich oft in his mouth, A prophetical dream. His wife dieth. His patience.

Sic ego quotidiè de lecto ſurgo, precando,
Ut mens ad mortem ſit duce læta Deo.

March the 27. before his death he was ſent for by the Elector of Saxony, to Lipſich for the examination of thoſe which were maintained by the Elector there for the ſtudy of Divinity, which examination he had held many years: There he continued in that employment till April 4. at which time he returned to Wittenberg.

April the 8th. his ſickneſs ſeiſed upon him, whereof he died. It was a Feaver, which cauſed him that he could ſcarce ſleep that night. Hereupon Doctor Peucer, his ſon-in-Law, intended to ſend for Camerarius, between whom and Melancthon there had been a very ſtrong bond of friendſhip for the ſpace of 40. years. His ſickneſſe.

Seven dayes before he died, many perſons, worthy of credit, betwixt nine and ten a clock at night, ſaw in the clouds over the Town of Wittenberg, five Rods bound together, after which two vaniſhing, the other three appeared ſevered in divers places; the branches of the Rods turning towards the North, the handles towards the South: of which Prodigy, when Philip was informed, he ſaid, Herein I reioyce, that Gods fatherly puniſhments are not Swords, but Rods, which parents uſe to correct their children withall: and I fear a dearth. A Prodigy.

The night following he ſlept pretty well, and waking about three a clock in the morning, he ſang ſweetly, and roſe out of his bed.

April 13. To make an end of his writing which he was to propoſe on Eaſter day he followed his ſtudy hard that morning, which was the laſt thing that he wrote for his publick Reading. On Eaſter Eve he carried it to the Printing-houſe, after which he went to Church, and in the afternoon went againe to the printing-houſe, to ſee how the work went forward; which was his laſt going abroad. His deportment in his ſickneſſe.

About four a clock that evening, he ſate upon the ſtairres, which went up into his ſtudy. leaning upon his elbow; At which time Joachim Camerarius came from Lipſich to viſit him, and entering into his houſe, found him in that poſture: they ſaluted each other with great familiarity, and about five at clock that evening his Feaver ſeiſed on him; ſo that that night he had a very grievous fit, yet in the morning he had a little ſleep, being April 14, Eaſter day. After which he roſe out of his bed, and though he was ſcarce able to goe, yet he would have read his Lecture publickly, which his friends diſſwaded him from, conſidering his great weakneſſe.

April the 15. before dinner, he profeſſed his deſire to depart hence, ſaying, I deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt.

April the 16. Camerarius was minded to return home, but as they ſate at Breakfaſt together, on a ſudden ſuch a weakneſſe came upon Melancthon, that he deſired to goe to Bed, ſo that Camerarius layed aſide his purpoſe of departure.

April the 17. Camerarius took his leave of him, commending him to God; whereupon Philip ſaid, Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, that ſitteth at the right hand of his Father, and giveth gifts unto men, preſerve you, and yours, and us all. This night he was very ſick, and in his prayers cryed out, O Lord make an end.

April the 18. his water was very troubleſome, and he was much pained with thee ſtone. About eight a clock that morning the Paſtors of the Church viſited him, to whom he ſaid. By the goodneſſe of God I have no Domeſticall grief to diſquiet me, although my Nephewes and Neeces ſtand here before me, whom I love very dearly. Yet this is my comfort, they have godly parents, who take care of them as I have done ſo long as I was able. But publick matters affect me, eſpecially the troubles of the Church in this evill and Sophiſtical age: But through Gods goodneſſe our Doctrine is ſufficiently explained, and confirmed. Then ſpeaking to the eldeſt daughter of his Son-in-Law, Doctor Peucer, he ſaid, I have loved thee, my daughter, ſee that thou honour thy parents, be dutifull to them, and fear God, and he will never forſake thee: I beſeech him to defend thee, and keep thee; About nine a clock he ſpake to his Son-in-Law, who was his Phyſitian, ſaying; What think you of my diſeaſe? have you any hope? ſpeak plaine, The Phyſitian anſwered, God is your life, and the length of your dayes, to whom we commend you; but if we look at naturall cauſes, your diſeaſe is dangerous; for your weakneſſe is great, and encreaſeth every moment. I think the ſame (quoth he) and am ſenſible of my weakneſſe.

A while after he made them ſearch for ſome ſheets of paper, wherein he had begun to write his Will, purpoſing to declare his judgement about all the heads of Religion, and to teſtifie it to poſterity, which was the chief uſe of Teſtaments amongſt the antient Fathers; but they could not be found, whereupon he began to frame it a new, ſitting at a table, but through weakneſs was not able to proceed therein. Onely he wrote, that he had twice formerly ſet down a Confeſſion of his Faith, and a thankſgiving to God, and to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: But (ſaid he) my papers are intercepted, and therefore I will have my Confeſſion to be my anſwers concerning the Bavarian Articles againſt Papiſts Anabaptiſts, Flacians, &c.

His minde was ſincere and ſound to his laſt gaſp, his brain never more firm. Then he conferred with his Son-in-Law about the affairs of the Univerſity. About ſix a clock Letters were brought him from his friends at Franckfort Mart, concerning the perſecution of ſome godly men in France, whereupon he ſaid,
Note. That his bodily diſeaſe was not comparable to the grief of his mind for his godly friends, and for the miſeries of the Church. That night he had a very liitle reſt. About two a clock in the morning, he raiſed himſelf up in his bed, ſaying, that God had brought into his minde againe that ſpeach of Paul, If God be for us, who can be againſt us? After which he returned to his former complaints of the calamities of the Church: Yet (ſaith he) my hopes are very great, for the Doctrine of our Church is explained. And ſo he proceeded to earneſt prayers and groanings for the Church, and then betook himſelf to ſome reſt. About eight in the morning in the preſence of divers Paſtors, and Deacons, he made three Prayers, whereof this was one.

O Almighty,

O Almighty, Eternal, ever-living, and true God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, together with thy co-eternal Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, crucified for us, and raised again, together with thy holy Spirit, &c. Who hast said, Thou desirest not the death of a Sinner, but that he may be converted and live. As also, Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee. I confess unto thee that I am a most miserable Sinner, that I have many sins, and have been faulty many ways: But I am sorry with all my heart that I have offended thee. I pray thee for our Lord Jesus Christs sake, who was crucified, and rose again for us, to have pitty upon me, and to forgive all my sins, and to justifie me by, and through Jesus Christ thy Son, thine eternal Word and Image, whom, by thy unspeakable Counsel, and unmeasurable Wisdom and Goodness thou wouldst have to be for us a Sacrifice, Mediator, and Intercessor. Sanctifie me also by thy holy, lively, and true Spirit, that I may truly acknowledge thee, firmly believe in thee, truly obey thee, give thanks unto thee, rightly invocate thy name, serve thee, and see thee gracious to all eternity, and the Almighty true God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, and Men, the eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and Jesus Christ thy Son, thy eternal Word and Image, and the Holy Ghost the comforter. In thee O Lord have I trusted, let me never be confounded. Thou hast redeemed me O Lord God of Truth. Keep O Lord, and govern our Church, and Common-wealth, and this School, and give them wholsom peace, and wholsom government. Rule and defend our Princes; nourish thy Church, gather and preserve thy Church in these Countries, and sanctifie it, and conjoyne it with thy holy spirit, that it may be one in thee, in the knowledge and invocation of thy Son Jesus Christ, by, and for the sake of this thine eternal Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. After this he rested a while. His Prayer.

Then the Pastors and Deacons by turns read unto him, Psal. 24, 25, 26. Isa. 53. John 17. Rom. 5. and divers other Psalms and Chapters. After which he said, I often think upon that saying of St. John, The world received him not, but to those that received him, to them he gave power to be made the Sons of God, even them that believe in his name. After this he seemed to pray secretly, for a quarter of an hour, yea, for an hour or two he seemed to do little other then pray; and being at length asked by his Son in Law, whether he would have any thing? he answered, Nothing but Heaven, therefore trouble me no more with speaking to me. Then the Pastor prayed with him, and the others read again, and so about half an hour after six, he quietly and peaceably gave up the Ghost, having lived 63. years, 63. days: After he had spent in Preaching and writing 42 years, Anno Christi, 1560. His Death.

He was buried close by Luther; they having been faithful and intimate Friends in their lives. He took much pains in the University of Wittenberg, reading three or four Lectures every day, unto which many resorted. He was never idle, but spent all his time in reading, writing, disputing, or giving Counsel. He neither sought after great titles, nor riches. He could not be perswaded to take the degree of a Doctor, saying, That such honour was a great burden. He had many and great Enemies, who often threatned to banish him Germany, of which himself writes, Ego jam sum hic, Dei beneficio, quadraginta annos, & nunquam potui dicere, aut certus esse me per unam septimanam mansurum esse. I have, through Gods mercy, been here these fourty years, and yet I could never say, or be sure that I should remain here one week to an end. His Industry. His Humility. His great afflictions.

A little before his death, he said, Cupio ex hac vita migrare propter duas causas; primum ut fruar desiderato conspectu filii Dei, & cœlestis Ecclesiæ: deinde ut liberor ab immanibus, & implacabilibus Theologorum odiis. Why he desired death.

Amongst all his writings and disputations, he would never meddle with the controversie about the Sacrament, leaving that to Luther, and being loth publickly to manifest his dissent from him: Yet it is certain, that as they went to the Colloquie of Ratisbon, together anno 1541. he communicated his opinion to Luther, confirmed by the Testimonies of the ancient Fathers, both Greek and Latine; and when Luther had made some Annotations upon those sentences which contradicted his opinion, Melanchthon said, Mr. Dr. I could make the like Annotations, but sure they are not strong enough. After all his great labours in the Church and University, he carried away the usual reward of the world, reproof, accusations, injuries, and reproaches. His opinion about the Lords Supper.

Anno

He is in great danger.

Anno Chriſti 1555. A tumult being raiſed amongſt the ſtudents, he went forth to perſwade them to peace, when one of them ran at him with his drawn ſword, and if God by a ſpecial providence had not prevented, had ſlain him.

The Flacians hate him

The Flacians eſpecially, continually railed upon, and threatned him, whereupon he ſaid, Avide, & tranquillo animo expecto exilia, ſicut & ad Principes ſcripſi, dixerunt adverſarii, ſe perfecturos eſſe, ut non ſim habiturus veſtigium, ubi pedem collocare poſſem in Germania. Utinam hoc cito perficiant, ut filius Dei ad Judam dicit: Erit mihi vel in cælo morienti veſtigium: vel ſi vivam in hoc corpore, apud honeſtos, & Doctos viros, vel in Germania, vel alibi. At ſtultitiam inimicorum miror: qui ſeſe Dominos Germaniæ eſſe exiſtimant, & me his minis terreri, &c.

His Character.

He was ſomewhat ſickly, being ſometimes troubled with the Cholick, and Hypocondriacal wind. He had a ſtrong Brain, without which it had not been poſſible for him to have gone through ſo many, & great buſineſſes for ſo many years together. In his Diet he was content with a little. He was modeſt in all his Life: In his Apparel he had reſpect to his Health. He was liberal to all; affable and courteous.

His ſmall means.

One George Sabine, travelling to Italy, and Rome, for the improvement of his Learning; a certain Cardinal diſcourſing with him about Wittenberg, asked him what ſtipend they allowed to Melancthon? Sabine anſwered, Three hundred Florences by the year. Then ſaid the Cardinal, O ungrateful Germany, who makeſt no more account of the many, and great labours of ſo eminent a man.

His contentedneſs therewith.

On a time Prince Maurice, Elector of Saxony, asked Melancthon, if he wanted any thing for the ſupply of his Neceſſities? He told him, No. Then did the Elector bid him Ask what he would; to which he anſwered, that he had his ſtipend, with which he was well content; yet the Elector bid him again, Ask, to which he anſwered, Since your Excellency will have me to ask ſomething, I crave leave to be diſmiſſed from my place and employments; Whereupon the Elector intreated him to continue in them ſtill, wondring at his contentedneſs with ſo ſmall means.

Three difficulties.

When he was firſt himſelf converted, he thought it impoſſible for his Hearers to withſtand the evidence of the Truth in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel: But after he had been a Preacher a while, he complained that Old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon. He is called by one, Phœnix Germaniæ, & alter Elizæus. He uſed to ſay that there were three labours very difficult, Regentis, Docentis, Parturientis, of Magiſtrates, Miniſters, and Women in Travel. He made his own Epitaph:

Iſte brevis tumulus miſeri tenet oſſa Philippi:
Qui qualis fuerit neſcio, talis erat.

Here lies interred in theſe ſtones
Much afflicted Philips bones:
For always ſuch in life was he;
I know not what in death heel be.

Scripſit Melancthon volumina infinita, variis in locis impreſſa: Cujus tamen lucubrationes editas uſque ad annum 1541. Hervagius excudit Baſiliæ Tomis quinque, Anno Chriſti, 1546. But afterwards there were many more of his works publiſhed, the Catalogue whereof you may find in Verheiden.

JOHN LASCUS.

The Life of John Lascus, who dyed Anno Christi 1558.

John Lascus was born of a Noble Family in Poland, and brought up in Learning: Afterwards travelling to Zurick, in Helvetia, he was by Zuinglius perswaded to betake himself to the study of Divinity, and having thereby imbraced that Religion, which hath its foundation upon the word of God, he was very desirous to increase in holiness. His Birth and Education. He comes to Zurick.

He had a very great love to Christ, and his people; A great hatred to Popery and Superstition, and a great contempt of the world; so that, whereas he might have been preferred to great honour in his own Country, such was his love to Christ and his Church, and such his hatred to Popery, that he chose, with Moses, to suffer affliction with the people of God, rather than to live in worldly honour and peace amongst his friends. His Conversion. Christ best of all.

Coming into Frisland, Anno Christi 1542. he was called to be a Pastor at Embden, where he fed, and ruled his flock with great diligence. The year after, he was sent for by Anne, the Widow of Count Oldenburg, to reform the Churches in East-Frisland; and the next year after, by Albert Duke of Prussia, but when he agreed not with him in judgment about the Lords Supper, the work remained unperfected. Chosen Pastor at Embden. Reformation in East-Frisland.

He remained in Frisland about ten years, at the end whereof (the Emperor persecuting the Protestants) he was sent for by King Edward the sixth (upon Cranmer's motion) into England, where he gathered, preached unto, and governed the Dutch-Church, which remains to this day. He is sent for into England.

In the days of Queen Mary, Anno Christi 1553. he obtained leave to return beyond Sea, and went with a good part of his Congregation into Denmark, to the Royal City of Coppenhagen. But Noviomagus the Court Preacher, and a Lutheran, took occasion in a Sermon to impugne the errour (as he called it) of the Sacramentaries: Hereupon Lascus set forth a writing, wherein he asserted the truth, and confuted the error of Consubstantiation: This occasioned a conference between Noviomagus and him, where Lascus and his Church did not dissemble their opinion, but asserted the truth; He goes into Denmark. He is driven thence.

which the K. of Denmark [Christian] being informed of, made a decree that they should not stay in his Kingdom, except they would follow the Doctrine of Luther, and use the Ceremonies ordained by him. Lascus and his Church refused this, yet intreated that the decree might be deferred, which the King would by no means permit, but commanded them presently to depart his Kingdom.

His Afflictions.

By this means they were forced in a most cold Winter season, with their Wives great with Child, and their Children to depart out of Denmark, and the Hanse-towns refused to receive them: The Churches of Saxony also rejected them, not suffering them to live amongst them upon the like reason: At length that poor Congregation found entertainment in Frisland under the Lady Ann Oldenburg, and setled at Embden.

He removes to Francford He vindicates himself.

Anno Christi 1555, he went thence to Francford upon Main, where, with the consent of the Senate, he gathered a Church of Strangers, especially out of Belgia. From thence the year after he wrote a Letter to the King of Poland, and his Council, vindicating his Doctrine from some aspersions cast upon it by Westphalus, Timan, and Pomeran, shewing that their Doctrine about Consubstantiation was contrary to the sense of the Scripture, to the Analogie of faith, and to the general judgment of the Churches of Christ, and that it could not be retained without contumely to Christ: He complained also that his Doctrine about the Sacrament was only condemned by reason of prejudice: That his Adversaries dealt with him after the manner of the Papists, who carry their business, not by Scripture and Arguments, but by force; accusing all for Hereticks which close not with them in all things.

Lutherans censoriousness.

About the same time many Enemies rose up against him, and his Congregation, for differing from them about Christ's presence in the Sacrament, especially one Westphalus, who wrote bitterly against them, calling them Zuinglians, and affirming that all those which had suffered about that point in Belgia, England, or France were the Devils Martyrs. At last Lascus returned into his own Country, from which he had been absent twenty years.

Popish malice.

There he found Gods Harvest to be great, and the Labourers to be very few. His coming was very unwelcome to the Popish Clergy, who sought by all means to destroy him, or to get him banished, and therefore they accused him to the King for an Heretick, beseeching him not to suffer him to stay in the Kingdom; To whom the King answered, That though they pronounced him an Heretick, yet the States of the Kingdom did not so esteem him, and that he was ready to clear himself from those aspersions. When they thus prevailed not, they cast abroad reproaches, and all manner of lyes, as if he would stir up a civil War in the Kingdom: But it pleased God when he had spent a little time in instructing his Friends, that he sickned and dyed, Anno Christi 1560.

His death.

He was of an excellent wit and judgment, and took much pains to have composed that difference in the Churches about Christ's presence in the Sacrament, though it succeeded not. The King of Poland had him in such esteem, that he made use of his advice, and help in many great and difficult businesses.

His Works.

His works are these. Liber de Cœna Domini. Epistola continens summam controversiæ de Cœna Domini breviter explicatam. Confessio de nostra cum Christo communione, & corporis sui in Cœna exhibitione. Epistola ad Bremensis Ecclesiæ Ministros. Contra Mennonem, Catabaptistarum Principem. De recta Ecclesiarum instituendarum ratione Epistola tres. Epistola ad Sigismundum Regem Poloniæ. Purgatio Ministrorum in Ecclesiis peregrinis Francofurti. Forma, & ratio totius Ecclesiastici Ministerii Edvardi sexti in peregrinorum, maxime Germanorum Ecclesia.

The Life of Auguſtine Marlorat, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1562.

Auguſtine Marlorat was born in Lorrain, Anno 1506. His Parents dying whilſt he was young, and his kindred gaping after his Eſtate, thruſt him at eight years old into a Monaſtery of Auguſtine Friars, by which means (God ſo ordering it) he was brought up in Learning, and became a Preacher; and being addicted to the ſtudy of the Tongues, and the Reformed Religion, he would no longer live amongſt thoſe idle Drones, and Slow-bellies; but leaving them, went to the Univerſity of Lauſanna in the County of Bern, where he profited much in Learning, and came to the knowledg of the Truth, and from thence he was choſen to be the Paſtor at Vivia, near to the Lake of Leman: and from thence he was called to Roan, where was a populous Church, which he inſtructed and taught ſo holily, and with ſuch prudence, that his honeſty protected him againſt the rage and malice of his Adverſaries.

His Birth and Education.

Gods Providence.

He leaves his Monaſtery.

He goes to Lauſanna.

His Converſion.

He is called to Roan.

His Zeal and Courage.

Anno Chriſti 1561. he was preſent at the conference at Paſſy, between the Cardinal of Lorrain, and Theodore Beza, where he acquitted himſelf with much courage, appearing on the Proteſtants ſide againſt the Papiſts. The year following, when the Civil Wars brake forth in France, the City of Roan was beſieged, and after a hard ſiege, was taken by ſtorm, at which time this Auguſt. Marlorat, the chief Miniſter of the City, was taken alſo, and carried before Monmorency the Conſtable of France, who grievouſly chid him, and caſt him into a ſtreight Priſon; and the next morning the Conſtable and the Duke of Guiſe went to the Priſon, and calling for Marlorat, the Conſtable ſaid to him, You are he who hath ſeduced the People.

Marl. If I have ſeduced them, it's God that hath done it rather then I; for I have Preached nothing to them but Divine Truths.

His Conference with Monmorency.

Conſt. You art a ſeditious perſon, and the cauſe of the ruine of this great City.

Marl. As for that imputation, I refer my ſelf to all that have heard me Preach, be they Papiſts or Proteſtants, whether I ever medled with matters of the Politick State or no; but contrariwiſe I have, according to my ability, laboured to inſtruct them out of the holy Scriptures. To this the Conſtable with an Oath replyed, that he, and his Abettors, plotted together to make the Prince of Condie King, the Admiral Coligne, Duke of Normandy, and Andelot, Duke of Britaine. To this Marlorat anſwered, profeſſing his own innocency, and the innocency of thoſe noble perſonages. But the Conſtable ſwearing a great Oath, ſaid, We ſhall ſee within a few days whether thy God can deliver thee out of my hand, or no, and ſo departed in a great rage.

Blaſphemy.

Not long after at the inſtance of Bigot, Advocate for the King, an Indictment was drawn up againſt him, and ſome others, whereupon they were condemned of high Treaſon, for that he had been (as they ſaid) the Author of the great Aſſemblies which were the cauſe of Rebellion, and Civil Wars, and therefore as a puniſhment to ſatisfie the Law for theſe things, the Court adjudged and condemned the ſaid Marlorat to be drawn upon a Sled, and to be hanged upon a Gibbet before our Ladies Church in Roan. This done, his head to be ſtricken off from his body, and ſet upon a pole upon the Bridge of the ſame City, his Goods and Inheritance to be Confiſcated to the Kings uſe; and ſhortly after this Sentence was executed, viz. Anno Chriſti 1562. and of his age 56.

He is Condemned of Treaſon.

He was excellently learned, and of a moſt unblameable life, and had the teſtimony even of the Papiſts themſelves that heard him, that in his Sermons he never uttered ought that tended to Sedition or Rebellion. Yet his malitious Adverſaries were not content only to ſee him drawn upon an Hurdle, but the Conſtable alſo loaded him with a thouſand diſgraces and outrages; as alſo a Son of his, called Monbrun, who ſhortly after was ſlain in the Battel of Dreux. One Villebon alſo gave him a ſwitch with a wand, adding many reproachful ſpeeches thereto. But this meek Lamb bare all thoſe Indignities with admirable patience and meekneſs.

Popiſh rage and malice.

Gods judgments on Perſecutors.

His Martyrdome.

When he was come to the place where he ſhould ſuffer, he made an excellent ſpeech, as the time then permitted him; exhorting two that were to ſuffer with him to ſtand ſtedfaſt to the end, which they alſo did. When he was now dead, yet the rage of his Adverſaries ceaſed not there, but one of the Souldiers with his Sword ſtruck at his Leggs. But Gods judgments found out his Adverſaries very ſpeedily: For the Captain that apprehended Marlorat was ſlain within three weeks, by one of the baſeſt Souldiers in all his Company. Two of his Judges alſo died very ſtrangely ſoon after; viz. The Preſident of the Parliament by a flux of blood, which could be by no means ſtanched: The other, being a Counſellor, voyding his Urine by his fundament, with ſuch an intollerable ſtink, that none could come near him. The aforenamed Villebon alſo, that ſwitcht him, eſcaped no better: For a while after, the Marſhal Vielle Ville coming to Roan about publick affairs, invited Villebon to Dinner, and after Dinner, lamenting the miſeries of that City, he exhorted Villebon to endeavour the redreſs of many abuſes, being the Kings Lieutenant there; which Villebon took ſo ill, that he ſaid, If any man dare to tax me for not carrying my ſelf as I ought in my place, I would tell him to his face, that he lyed; which words he repeated ſo often over, that the Marſhal being urged very much therewith, ſtrake with his Sword at him with ſuch violence, that had he not received the blow with his hand, his head had been cleft to his teeth; ſo that for the preſent he eſcaped with the loſs of his hand, wherewith he had ſo diſhonourably ſmitten Aug. Marlorat at the place of Execution.

Gods judgments on his Enemies.

His Works.

Marlorat collected out of the beſt Writers of his time, adding the names of the Authors, and ſometimes inſerting his own opinions; Commentaries upon all the New Teſtament: As alſo upon Geneſis, Pſalmes, Canticles, Iſaiah. He left alſo a Theſaurus of the Doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, i. e. Totius Canonica Scriptura, in locos communes, dogmatum, & phraſium ordine Alphabetico digeſtum.

P. MARTYR

The Life of Peter Martyr, who dyed Anno Chriſti, 1562.

Peter Martyr was born at Vermile in Florence, Anno Chriſti 1500, of an antient and honourable Family. His Parents were very ſollicitous and careful for his Education; and his Mother being well skilled in Latine, trained him up in it from his Childhood, and read Terence his Comedies to him. Afterwards they placed him forth under the choiceſt School-maſters; and he being of a pregnant wit, and ingenious diſpoſition, gave great hopes in his minority of excelling in future times. His Birth and Education.

He was exceeding ſtudious and painful, ſpending no time idle. And finding that in the rich and flouriſhing City of Florence he met with many temptations to Luxury and Riot, at ſixteen years old he entered into a Monaſtery of Regular Canons of Saint Auguſtine, in Feſſula hard by Florence. This action of his much diſpleaſed and grieved his Father, well knowing that the ſeeming holineſs of thoſe Fryars was but meer Hypocriſie. And beſides, having no other Son, he much deſired that this Peter by Marriage ſhould have preſerved and propagated his Name and Family: But that which moved Peter Martyr to chooſe this courſe of life, was, that he might have leiſure to ſerve God, to follow his ſtudy, and to benefit himſelf, by the full and famous Library which was in that Monaſtery. His Diligence. He enters into a Monaſtery. The cauſes of it.

There he ſpent three years in the ſtudy of the Arts, and holy Scriptures, part whereof he learned by heart. Then he went to Padua, where, entering into a Monaſtery of the ſame order, he continued there almoſt eight years, in which time he almoſt wholly employed himſelf in the ſtudy of Philoſophy, ſpending both night & day in meditating thereupon, in Reading, Writing, and Diſputations. There he heard alſo the daily Lectures of famous Philoſophers which were Profeſſors in that Univerſity, as Branda, Genua, Conſalionerius, &c. And finding that Ariſtotle was in many places not appoſitly tranſlated into Latine, he reſolved to ſtudy the Greek Tongue, which accordingly he His remove to Padua. His imployments there he did with great pains, wanting fit Maſters to aſſiſt him therein, ſpending whole Nights in the Library of the Monaſtery, with Benedict Cuſanus, the Companion of all his Studies. By which diligence of his, he attained to ſuch readineſs, that he was able without help to underſtand the Greek Orators, Philoſophers, and Poets alſo, who differed in their Dialect from the former. During his abode there, he alſo heard the conſtant Lectures of three Divines.

He ſtudies Greek.

He is called to the Miniſtry.

When he was 26 years Old, the fraternity of that Monaſtery called him to the Office of Preaching, whereby he might put in practice his former private Studies, be ſerviceable to them, and make himſelf famous; and upon tryal, his learning, and abilities appeared to be ſuch, that he was honoured with the degree of a Doctor.

He began firſt to Preach in the Church of Brixia, and afterwards in the moſt famous Cities of Italy: In Rome, Bononia, Firmum, Piſa, Venice, Mantua, Bergomum, and Monſerrat. And all the time which he could gain from Preaching, he ſpent in the ſtudy of Philoſophy and Divinity. He Preached alſo privately, and read Lectures in the Colledges at Padua, Ravenna, Bononia, and Vercellis.

He ſtudies the Scriptures, and the Hebrew

Hitherto he had moſtly applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of the School-men, yet had ſpent ſome time in reading of the Fathers, but now he began to ſpend moſt of his time in ſearching the Fountain, the Old and New Teſtament; and finding that to enable him thereto, the knowledge of the Hebrew was very neceſſary, whilſt he was Vicar to the Prior in Bononia, he gat him one Iſaac, a Jew, for his Maſter, and applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of that Language; and though he had little help from his Maſter, yet by his ſingular diligence and induſtry, he attained good skill in the Hebrew tongue: And his name grew very famous in the chief Cities of Italy; whereupon the Superiours of his Order, approving his diligence, reſolved to advance him to ſome greater Dignity, and ſo by the conſent of all, he was made Abbat of Spoleta; which Office, when he had once undertaken, he carried himſelf ſo excellently therein, that he was admired of all, conſidering that hitherto he had been only employed in his Studies, and yet now ſhewed ſuch admirable wiſdome and dexterity in managing the affairs of his Monaſtery.

Removed to Spoleta.

His Prudence.

His Prudence appeared notably in theſe two examples. There were in Spoleta two Nunneries, and one Monaſtery of Auguſtinian Cannons Regular, where Martyr reſided. Theſe houſes, through the negligence of former Abbats, were ſo corrupted with Luxury and Uncleanneſs, that they were extreamly hated by all men. Doctor Martyr ſeeing this, by the Authority of his Office, reduced them quickly into order, by teaching, admoniſhing, exhorting, and ſometimes by uſing ſevere caſtigation, ſo that he procured great credit to himſelf, and love to his Order.

The other example was this: The Common-wealth of Spoleta, as moſt others in Italy, was divided into factions and feuds, whereupon not onely quarrels, but murther often enſued; and though the former Abbats had endeavoured it, yet could they never reconcile theſe differences. Our Martyr was not ignorant hereof, and yet looking upon it as his duty, reſolved rather to hazard the loſs of his life, than to ſuffer Chriſtians thus to intertear one another; and it pleaſed God ſo farre to bleſs his labours, that all the time of his living in that City, his Authority, Prudence, and Eloquence ſo far prevailed, that there was neither fight nor murther; no nor the leaſt footſteps of Faction appearing amongſt the people.

He is removed to Naples.

At Spoleta he continued three years, at the end whereof, by a publique Convention of the Superiours of the Order, he was made Governour of the Colledge at Naples, which for the amœnity of the place, and profits belonging to it, was of great eſteem.

His Converſion.

In that City, it pleaſed God, that he began to attain to more light and knowledg of the Truth than formerly he had: For by his ſtudy of the Scriptures, through the illumination of the Holy Ghoſt, he began to take notice of the errours and abuſes which were crept into the Church; whereupon (God inclining his heart thereto) he began to read ſome Proteſtant Authors, and gat Bucers Commentaries upon the Evangeliſts, and his Annotations upon the Pſalms; As alſo Zuinglius, De vera & falſa falſa Religione: & De Providentia Dei, &c. by which, he confeſſed afterwards, that he profited very much. He daily alſo conferred with ſome Friends which were addicted to the ſtudy of the Reformed Religion, to the mutual edification of both parties: The chief of theſe were Benedict Cuſanus, his old Friend: Anthony Flaminius, and John Valdeſius, a noble Spaniard, made a Knight by Charles the fifth, who after he had embraced the Truth in the love of it, ſpent his time in Italy, eſpecially in Naples; where by his Life and Doctrine he had gained many to Chriſt; and amongſt thoſe, divers of the Nobility and Learned Men, and ſome Noble Women, as the Lady Iſabella Manricha, who was afterwards Baniſhed for Chriſts Cauſe, &c. As alſo the Noble Galleacius Caracciolus, Marqueſs of Vico.

A Church being thus, by Gods providence, gathered in Naples, Peter Martyr joyned himſelf to it, and being deſirous to impart that light to others which God had revealed to him, he began to expound the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and that with great fruit: For not only the Fellows of his Colledge reſorted to it, but many Biſhops and Noble-men: But when he came to the words of Saint Paul, in 1 Cor. 3. 13, 14. Every mans work ſhall be made manifeſt, for the day ſhall declare it, becauſe it ſhall be Revealed by Fire, &c. and had interpreted them contrary to the received opinion, he ſtirred up many Adverſaries againſt him: For it's commonly thought that theſe words imply a Purgatory, whereas Martyr ſhewed, out of the ancient Fathers, that theſe words could not be ſo underſtood.

A Church in Naples.

Martyr teacheth.

But ſuch as were addicted to the Pope, and their Bellies, could by no means endure this interpretation of his; knowing that if Purgatory were overthrown, a great part of their profits by Maſſes, Indulgences, &c. would preſently ceaſe: Whereupon they accuſed Martyr, and ſo far prevailed, that his Lecture was put down; But Martyr refuſed to obey this ſentence as unjuſt; and truſting to the goodneſs of his Cauſe, appealed to the Pope, and at Rome, by the aſſiſtance of his Friends he overcame his Adverſaries: For at that time he had there potent Friends, as Cardinal Gonzaga, Gaſper Contarene, Reinold Poole, Peter Bembus, and Frederick Fregoſius, all Learned Men, and gracious with the Pope; who alſo acknowledged, that the Church needed ſome Reformation.

Appeals to to the Pope.

By theſe mens aſſiſtance he took off the Interdict, and was reſtored to his former liberty of Preaching, which yet he could not long enjoy: For before he had been three years at Naples, he fell into a grievous and mortal Diſeaſe, together with his old fellow-Student, Benedict Cuſanus, who alſo dyed there. But Martyr, by the goodneſs of God, and the diligence of his Phyſitians, was (though with much difficulty) cured. Whereupon the Superiours of his Order, ſeeing that the Air of Naples did not agree with him, in a publick Convention made him General Viſitor of their Order. In which Office he ſo demeaned himſelf, that good men much commended his Integrity, Conſtancy, and Gravity; and others feared him, not daring to diſcover their hatred againſt him.

He is made Viſitor General.

Not long after, in a publick Convention of the Superiours of his Order, he was made Prior of a Monaſtery in Luca: Some out of love preferred him to this place; others thinking that it would be his ruine; for there was an ancient grudge between Florence and Luca; the latter ſuſpecting that the Florentines ſought to enſlave them. But Martyr by his excellent Learning and Virtue, did ſo blind the hearts of thoſe of Luca to him, that, contrary to the expectation of his Adverſaries, himſelf being a Florentine, was no leſs eſteemed at Luca then if he had been born amongſt them. Whereupon they earneſtly deſired the Superiours of his Order, that by no means he might be removed from them.

Removed to Luca.

He is much beloved.

Martyr thus continuing at Luca, had in his Colledge many Learned men, and many hopeful youths, amongſt whom he ſetled ſuch a Diſcipline as might moſt advance holineſs of Life, Religion, and Learning. He took care alſo that the younger ſort ſhould be inſtructed in the three Languages; for which end he had Paul Laciſius of Verona to read Latine; Celſus, of the noble Family of the Martinengi, to read Greek; and Immanuel Tremelius, Hebrew to them; and that the younger ſort, together with the the Greek might ſuck in Divinity, himſelf daily expounded Paul's Epiſtles to them; and aſtewards required them to read over the ſame; and every Night before Supper, he publickly expounded one of David's Pſalms.

Very many out of the City reſorted to his Lectures of the Nobility and Senators. And that he might the better plant Religion in that Common-wealth, he Preached to them every Sabbath day: And what fruit his Miniſtry had, may be diſcerned by this, that in one years ſpace after his departure out of Italy, eighteen Fellows of that Colledg left their places, and the Papacy, betaking themſelves to the Reformed Churches; amongſt whom was Celſus Martinengus (afterwards Paſtor of the Italian Church in Geneva) Zanchy, Tremelius, &c. Many Citizens alſo of Luca went into voluntary exile, where they might enjoy the Goſpel with peace and ſafety.

The fruits of his labours.

Whilſt Peter Martyr was at Luca, there met in that City the Emperour Charles the fifth, the Pope Paul the third, and Cardinal Contarene, coming Legate out of Germany; who for old acquaintance ſake, quartered with Peter Martyr, and had daily much conference with him about Religion. Moſt men thought that Martyr would be in no ſmall danger, by reaſon of the preſence of the Pope; becauſe that his envious Enemies would ſuggeſt ſomething to the ſuſpicious old man, which might turn to Martyrs great trouble. But becauſe he was ſtrengthned with his own Authority and Learning, and had much room in the hearts of the people, having alſo great Friends, they ſtirred not for the preſent, but waited a fitter opportunity, intending rather ſecretly to ſet upon him: And that they might the better try the patience of the people of Luca, they (by the Popes command) ſeized upon a Fryar of his Colledge, and caſt him into Priſon, accuſing him for violation of their Religion; which thing ſome Noble-men of Luca taking grievouſly, who knew the piety and innocency of the man, breaking open the Priſon, took him out, and conveighed him forth of the City, and bad him fly for his life: But it pleaſed God that by a fall, he brake his Legg, whereby being again apprehended, he was ſent Priſoner to Rome.

His Enemies Policy.

A Godly Friar Impriſoned.

And delivered.

Again apprehended and ſent to Rome.

This buſineſs ſucceeding anſwerable to their deſires, they intended preſently to fall upon Martyr, whereupon they laid wait for him in every place: And they put in an accuſation againſt him at Rome, and in all the Colledges of his Order they ſtirred up his old Enemies againſt him; telling them, that now the time was come wherein they might recover their former liberty (ſo they called licentiouſneſs) and to be revenged on Pet. Martyr: So that by theſe mens inſtigations they met at Genoa, not as uſually, the Superiours of the Order, but thoſe eſpecially that bore the greateſt hate to Martyr, or envied him moſt. Theſe men ſummon Martyr preſently to appear at Genoa: But he being informed of the ſnares that were laid for him, which his Enemies (being blinded with malice) could not conceal: And alſo being admoniſhed by his Friends to take heed to himſelf, there being many that ſought his life; he reſolved not to go to this Aſſembly, but rather to convey himſelf elſe-whither, where he might be ſafe from the power and malice of his Adverſaries.

They proceed againſt Martyr.

He reſolves to flye.

Hereupon, firſt of all he conveyed part of his Library to Chriſtopher Brent, a Godly Senator of Luca, who ſhould take care to ſend it to him into Germany; the other part he gave to the Colledge: and ſo ſetting all things in order in the Colledge, he privily departed out of the City, only with three Companions, Paul Lacis of Verona, who was afterwards Greek Profeſſor at Stratsborough, Theodoſius Trebel, and Julius Terentian, with whom he continued a faithful friendſhip unto the Death.

His flight.

Departing from Luca, purpoſing to viſit his own Country, he went to Piſa, where to ſome Noble men he adminiſtred the Lords Supper; and meeting there with ſome faithful Meſſengers, he wrote to Cardinal Pool, and to ſome of his Friends at Luca. In theſe Letters he ſhewed what great errours and abuſes were in the Popiſh Religion, and in the Monaſtical life, with whom he could no longer communicate with a ſafe Conſcience. He alſo ſhewed the other cauſes of his departure, viz. the hatred and ſnares laid for him by his Enemies. He ſignified alſo what pains and care had taken for their inſtruction, and what a grief it was to him that he could not more plainly and openly inſtruct them in the Chriſtian Faith. The ring alſo, which was the enſign of his dignity, he ſent back, ſhewing that he would not imploy any of the Colledge-goods to his private uſe.

Coming to Florence, he met there with a godly and learned man [Bernardin Ochine] who being cited to Rome, was going thitherward; but being warned of the danger by his Friends, he conſulted with Martyr, and upon deliberation, both of them reſolved to leave Italy and to go into Germany. His retreat into Germany.

And accordingly, firſt Ochine departed and went to Geneva, and from thence to Ausburg, and two dayes after, Peter Martyr followed, going firſt to Bononia, then to Ferrare, then to Veronay, where being courteouſly entertained by his old Friends, He went thence over the Alps into Helvetia. In this Journey, when he came to Zurick, he was very kindly entertained by Bullinger, Pellicane, & Gualter, & by the other Miniſters belonging to that City, to whom he proffered his ſervice, if they needed it; But having at this time no place voyd in the Schools, they told him that they much deſired his company, and pains, but for the preſent they had no imployment for him, yet would they gratefully remember his kind profer to them. He comes to Zurick.

He often uſed to ſay, that as ſoon as he came to Zurick, he fell in love with that City, deſiring of God that it might be a refuge to him in this his baniſhment: which Prayer was afterwards granted; though in the interim God pleaſed to make uſe of his labours in other places and Nations for his own glory, and the good of many.

From thence he went to Baſil, where after he had abode about a month, he, with Paul Lacis was called to Strasborough, by the means of Martin Bucer. In which place he was made Profeſſor of Divinity, and Lacis of the Greek Tongue. There he continued five years, in which time he interpreted moſt of the Bible; and what his excellency in teaching was, may be hence collected in that, being joyned with Martin Bucer, a great Divine, and eminent for learning, yet Martyr was not accounted inferiour to him; He was very ſkilful in Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. He had an admirable dexterity in interpreting Scripture; was a very acute diſputant, and uſed always to expreſs himſelf very clearly, knowing that ambiguity of words is the cauſe of much contention. He lived in moſt intire Friendſhip with his Collegue, Maſter Bucer. He goes to Baſil. He is choſen to Strasborough. His excellent Learning.

At Strasborough being unmarried, he lived with his Friends that came with him out of Italy, being contented with a very ſmall ſtipend, which yet afterwards was augmented: For having forſaken his Country, his honours and riches for the teſtimony of Chriſt, he thought it unfit to be ſolicitous, or to trouble any about the increaſe of his ſtipend; the rather becauſe he was of a frugal diſpoſition, ſo that his ſtipend did not only ſuffice, but he ſpared ſomthing out of that little towards the ſupport of his friends. His Frugality.

Finding ſome inconvenience of living ſingle, by the advice of his Friends, he married an honeſt and noble Virgin, Katherine Damp-martin, who afterwards dyed in England, without iſſue, having lived with him eight years. She was one that feared God, was loving to her Husband, prudent in adminiſtring houſhold affairs; liberal to the Poor, and in the whole courſe of her life, pious, modeſt, and ſober. His firſt marriage. His Wives character.

After her death, by the command of Cardinal Poole, her body was digged up and buried in a dunghil; and when he could find no other cauſe for it, he pretended that it was, becauſe ſhe was buried too near to St. Frideſwide: For though this Cardinal had formerly loved Martyr very well, yet when he once forſook Italy, he did not only give over loving him, but ſhaking off his ſtudy of the true Religion, which for a time he had ſeemed to like, he became a great hater of Martyr, and a bitter proſecutor of the Profeſſors of the Truth, which occaſioned him to deal ſo with Martyrs Wife, ſeeing that he could not Burn her Husband as he deſired. But in Queen Elizabeths days, her body was again taken up, and with great ſolemnity buried in the chief place of the Church; and to prevent the Popiſh malice for the time to come, her bones were mingled with the bones of St. Frideſwide, that they ſhould not be diſtinguiſhed aſunder. Card. Pools malice.

The occaſion of Peter Martyrs going into England, was this; King Henry the eighth being dead, and his Son Edward the ſixth ſucceeding, by the advice He is ſent for into England.

advice of the Protector, Edward Duke of Somerſet, and Doctor Cranmer, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, he aboliſhed the Popiſh Religion, and reformed the Church according to the Word of God; for which end he thought beſt (that a godly Miniſtry might proceed from the ſame) to reform the Univerſities. And Peter Martyr being at this time famous for his learning and skill in affairs, was judged moſt fit for this employment; whereupon the Arch-biſhop, by the command of the King, ſent for him over; and An. Chriſti 1547. by the conſent of the Senate of Strasborough, he went into England, Ber. Ochine accompanying him, who alſo was ſent for by the ſaid Arch-biſhop. At their arrival, the Arch-biſhop entertained them for a time in his houſe, uſing them with all curteſie and humanity; but after a while, the King ſent Martyr to Oxford, to be Profeſſor of Divinity, where he firſt began to expound the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, becauſe therein were many heads laid down which concerned the controverſies of thoſe times.

He goes into England.

He is ſent to Oxford.

The Papiſts, (whereof as yet there were many at Oxford) at firſt, patiently bore Martyrs teaching, and frequented his Lectures, and indeed ſeemed to admire him for his Learning: But ſome others of them, eſpecially the Heads of Houſes, laboured to reſtrain the Students from going to his Lectures; but yet proceeded no further. But when he came to declare his judgement about the Sacrament, they could bear it no longer; and therefore, that they might not only procure him envy, but bring him into danger, they firſt began to load him with their uſual accuſations amongſt the vulgar, that he taught contrary to the Doctrine of their Fore-fathers; that he would extirpate their wholſome, and decent ceremonies; that he prophaned the Sacrament of the Altar, and did (as it were) trample it under his feet.

Popiſh malice.

Then (without acquainting him with it) they affixed papers upon all their Church doors in Engliſh, declaring that to morrow there ſhould be a publick Diſputation againſt the real preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament. By this means, the day after they filled the Schools, they diſpoſed their party in every place, commanding them to make a noiſe, to raiſe tumults, and if need were, to fight with any that ſhould oppoſe them. Many ran to this fight, not only of the Scholars, but of the Townſmen, ſome to ſee the event of this buſineſs, others to aſſiſt their Friends, in caſe they ſhould fall together by the ears.

They combine againſt Martyr.

Martyr in the mean time being wholly ignorant of all this, was in his houſe, preparing himſelf after his uſual manner to read his Lecture, till ſome of his Friends (obſerving the unuſual concourſe of people) went to him, opened the whole buſineſs to him, entreating him to keep home, and not to expoſe himſelf to peril, ſeeing that his Adverſaries were ſo prepared, that they ſeemed reſolved rather with Armes, than with arguments to oppoſe him. He anſwered, that he could not neglect his Office, that he was never the Author of any tumutls, whereof themſelves were witneſſes; neither would he now give his Adverſaries any occaſion of raiſing a tumult, for that he would only read according to his uſual cuſtome: For (ſaith he) there are many amongſt them that expect the Lecture, to whom I may not be wanting. And ſo going towards the Schools, accompanied with his moſt faithful Friends, there met him Doctor Smiths boy, which Smith was one of the principal ſticklers in this Tragedy.

His Friends diſſwade him from going to the Schools.

His anſwer.

This boy gave him a Letter from his Maſter, wherein he challenged him to a Diſputation. Then did Martyrs Friends again earneſtly ſollicite him to return home, telling him of the danger he was running into. But he was ſtill reſolute, and ſo going to the Schools, when his Adverſaries provoked him, he endeavoured by a modeſt ſpeech to quiet them, ſaying; that he refuſed not to diſpute, only diſliked the time, for that he came to read his Lecture; and ſo having ſomewhat quieted them, he went on with his Lecture to the great admiration of all. For they which before admired him for his ſingular learning and eloquence, now much more admired him for his admirable conſtancy. For that, notwithſtanding the murmures of the people, and the rage of his Adverſaries, he went on without the leaſt change of his colour, or heſitation in his voyce, or titubation of his tongue, or trembling of his members, or any thing elſe that might imply the leaſt fear.

Smiths challenge.

Martyr goes on.

His Learning and Courage admired.

Having

Having ended his Lecture, his Adversaries began again with great clamour to provoke him to a Disputation, nor would they accept of his modest excuse, when he told them, that he would Dispute, but at another time; that he was not now prepared for it, they having concealed their questions from him, without setting them up in publick as they used to do. To this they replyed, that he which had read his Lectures about the Lords Supper, could not be unprovided to dispute upon the same subject. To which he again answered, that he durst not undertake such a work without acquainting the King with it, especially seeing the thing tended to sedition. He told them also, that to a lawful disputation was required, that the questions should be agreed on; that Moderators should be appointed, by whose judgment all things should be determined; and lastly, that they should have Notaries to write the Arguments on both sides: Whereas (saith he) none of these things be ready, and besides, the Night draws on, that we shall want time to discusse so great a Controverste.

He is again challenged.

His answer.

His Adversaries would not be satisfied with these his most just Reasons, but all were like to fall together by the ears: Whereupon the Vice-Chancellor interposed his Authority, requiring Peter Martyr, and Smith, to meet at his House with their Friends on both sides, where they should agree upon the questions, and the time, and order of disputing; and in the mean time he commanded the Beadles to dissolve the Assembly; and so taking Peter Martyr by the hand, he led him forth, and safely conducted him to his own House. Martyr being delivered from this danger, yet least he should seem to decline the disputation, being accompanied with some of his Friends, at the hour appointed went to the Vice Chancellors House with Doctor Sidal, and Curtop, who at that time were Zealous defenders of the Truth, though afterwards in Queen Maries days they deserted it. Smith did the like, bringing with him Doctor Cole, and Oglethorp, and three other Doctors of Divinity. Long they contended about the Laws of the Disputation; but at length the questions were agreed upon, and time, and place appointed for the Disputation, and so they parted; and in the mean time, by their mutual consents, the King was made acquainted with it, who against the day, sent down his Delegates to order the Disputation aright. But Smith being conscious to his raising the former tumult, before the day came, fled first into Scotland, and from thence to Lovane in Brabant. Yet at the day appointed, the Kings Delegates came, the Bishop of Lincoln, Doctor Cox, Doctor Hide, Mr. Richard Morrison, and Doctor Nenyson. In the presence of these, Peter Martyr Disputed four days with three of the Popish Doctors, Tresham, Chad, and Morgan, wherein he shewed excellent learning; and because the Adversaries scattered abroad many false reports, Martyr afterwards printed the whole Disputation.

A tumult raised. Quieted by the Vice-Chancellor.

The Disputation.

Not long after, the Commons in Devon-shire and Oxford-shire rose up in Arms, amongst whom many threatned the death of Martyr, so that he could neither read his Lectures, nor safely remain in the City; whereupon, by his Friends, he was safely conveyed to London, which the King much rejoyced at; and when his Wife and Family could not with safety remain at his House, his Friends hid him, till as the seditious multitude were departed out of the City. For the Kings raising two Armies, quickly suppressed them, punishing with Death the Ring-leaders of those Rebellions, and Martyr thereupon returned to Oxford to his wonted labours.

A Rebellion.

Martyr goes to London.

The Rebellion suppressed.

But his restless Popish Adversaries, who had been formerly beaten by Arguments, and durst not again return to Arms; yet to shew their spite, often raised tumults before his House in the Night, throwing stones at his Door, and breaking his Windows: Wherefore the King, being careful to provide for his safety, made him Dean of Christs-Church alotting to him a fine House, and pleasant Garden; and so, though he had formerly taken the Degree of a Doctor amongst the Pontificians, yet he took it again according to the rights of that University.

Martyr made Dean of Christ-Church.

He was much prized by the godly King, highly esteemed by Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, Hooper, and all that loved the truth in the University. Cranmer made much use of him, and his advice about reforming the Church, and setling the government of it: But when those bloody Marian dayes came; wherein Religion was eradicated, the Church laid waſt, and holy men ſhut up in Priſons, Martyr alſo was forbidden the exerciſe of his place; and commanded not to ſet a foot out of his own doors, nor to carry any thing thence: Whereupon he preſently wrote to his Friends, ſhewing what danger he was in, pleading the publick Faith given to him when he was ſent for by King Edward the Sixth; and by this means, leave being given him, he came from Oxford to London, repairing immediately to Arch-Biſhop Cranmer, his intire, and old Friend: About which time a report was ſpread that Cranmer wavered, and was ready to change his Religion; which he hearing of, ſet forth a writing, wherein he profeſſed himſelf ready to maintain the Doctrine of Religion which was Authorized by King Edward, to be agreeable to the Word of God, and the Doctrine of the Apoſtles: And herein he was incouraged by Peter Martyr, whom the Arck-Biſhop choſe to joyn with him in defending the ſame againſt all Oppoſers: But this was denyed, and the Arch-Biſhop ſent to the Tower.

He goes to London.

It was alſo debated in the Queen's Councel, whether Peter Martyr ſhould be Impriſoned, becauſe (as ſome ſaid) he had done much hurt to their Religion: But after debate, it was concluded, That becauſe he came into England upon the publick Faith, he ſhould be ſafely diſmiſſed. Whereupon ſending him publick Letters ſigned with the Queens own hand, He, and Bernardine Ochine went firſt to Antwerp, from thence to Cologne, and laſtly to Strasborough, from whence he came. Yet when he firſt took ſhip, his Adverſaries (vexing at his eſcape) urged, that it was fit he ſhould be drawn out of the ſhip, and caſt into Priſon, as a publick Enemy to the Pope: Yet it pleaſed God, that the Maſter of the Ship (being a godly man) hid him at his Houſe fourteen days, till his Adverſaries had given over ſeeking for him, and then conveyed him ſafely to Antwerp; from whence (as we heard before) he went to Strasborough, where he was entertained with much joy by his old Friends, and reſtored to his former place.

He goes beyond Sea.

Gods mercy to Him.

His return to Strasborough.

Yet there the Devil alſo raiſed him up ſome Enemies, who ſuggeſted to the Senate that he differed in judgment from the Auguſtine-Confeſſion about Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament of the Lords-Supper, which might cauſe much trouble in the Church, and that he refuſed to ſubſcribe the Articles of Agreement between Luther and Bucer about this matter: Whereupon he wrote to the Senate, That there was nothing in the Auguſtine-Confeſſion rightly underſtood which he did not concur with, and that if his Text at any time ſhould lead him to ſpeak of that ſubject, he would do it with ſuch modeſty that it ſhould be offenſive to none, and that his not ſubſcribing to the Agreement between Luther and Bucer (wherein amongſt other things they had ſet down, That they which wanted true Faith, did yet nevertheleſs eat the body of Chriſt) ought not to be objected to him, for that he could not aſſent thereto, but he muſt give offence to the Helvetian, Engliſh, and French Churches, and to them at Geneva alſo: Yea, and that Bucer himſelf in England had taught far otherwiſe. With this Anſwer the Senate well ſatisfied; And he, and Zanchie taught diligently both Divinity and Philoſophy in that City, yet his reſtleſs Adverſaries did nothing but aſperſe him, and ſeek his diſgrace; firſt, more privily, and then more openly, which made him to think upon a remove; and God in his wiſe providence ſo ordered it, that about that time Pellican dying at Zurick, the Senate there choſe Martyr in his room, and preſently ſent to him to come to them, they wrote alſo to the Senate at Strasborough to give way to it: Which they did, though very unwillingly; Martyr himſelf being deſirous to imbrace that call, in regard of the oppoſition which he met with at Strasborough, ſo that Anno Chriſti, 1556. (to the great grief of his Friends, who loved him very dearly) he departed to Zurick, John Jewel (afterwards Biſhop of Sarum) accompanying him.

His call to Zurick.

His friendſhip with Bullinger.

His high eſteem.

There he was entertained with much joy, both by the Senate, Schools, Miniſters, and all good Men: And he at firſt reſided for a while with his old Friend Bullinger, with whom he lived with much intire Friendſhip, which continued to their death. Alſo by his ſweet and holy carriage, he won the love of all; Inſomuch that the Senate, to ſhew how highly they eſteemed him, made him free of their Common-wealth, that he might not live as a Stranger, but as a Citizen amongſt them.

He

He had Buried his Wife in England, at Oxford, (whose body, the bloody Bishops afterwards caused to be digged up under Queen Mary, and to be Buried in a Dunghil) whereupon, at the desire of his Friends, and to obtain issue, six years after the Death of his former, he Married again one Catherine Marenda, who for Religion had left her own Countrey, and lived at Geneva, and had a good testimony of the whole Church there.

Popish cruelty.

His second Marriage.

As he was highly prized by them of Zurick, so he loved them exceedingly, as may appear by two notable examples. Celsus, the Pastor of the Italian Church at Geneva being dead, many of that Congregation having been Martyrs old Disciples, and very dear to him, chose him to be their Pastor, and sent to request his coming to them; many also of his old English Friends that lived as Exiles there, much pressed it: Yea, and Calvin also wrote to him, desiring him to imbrace the Call. Martyr being thus importunately pressed to remove thither, and having many engagements to incline him that way, yet referred the whole matter to be determined by the Senate and Ministers at Zurick, and they, understanding that there were other able, and fit men to be placed over the Italian Congregation, denying their consents to part with him, he resolved to stay, notwithstanding all solicitations to the contrary: And afterwards, when in Queen Elizabeths days, he was much importuned to return into England, and had large proffers made him from the Queen, yet he would not leave his flock till his death.

His love to Zurick.

A faithful Pastor.

He refuseth to goe into England.

And how ready he was to be serviceable to other Churches, may appear by this example: The year before his death the King of France had appointed a meeting of the Bishops and Nobility at Possy, whereupon they of the reformed Religion in France, thought that it was a very seasonable time to procure a conference about Religion, which might much tend to the peace and liberty of the Church: Upon this the Churches chose certain Delegates, which in that Parliament should move for the liberty of Religion: And they chose also many learned men who should dispute with their Adversaries about the same; and because the singular learning, and incomparable dexterity of Peter Martyr in disputing was sufficiently known, they in the first place made choyce of him for one, and sent one Claudius Bradella, with Theodora Beza to Zurick, to try his willingness to accept of that imployment; and when he had declared his readiness, shortly after came Letters from the King, the Queen Mother, the King of Navar, the Prince of Conde, and the Admiral Coligni to the Senate of Zurick, to desire them to send Martyr; withal sending him a safe Conduct; whereupon he undertook the journey, and when he came to Possy, he made an Oration to the Queen, exhorting her to seek, not only the quiet of France, but of other Churches, by promoting true Religion, shewing also what a blessing she might expect from God thereby.

His readiness to do good.

He goes into France.

His speech to the Qu. Mother.

The Queen entertained him kindly, and so did the King of Navar, the Prince of Conde, and the Admiral of France: But the Cardinal of Lorrain sought to hinder the disputation all that possibly he could; yet when he could not prevail, five of each party were chosen out to dispute the business about the Lords Supper in private, having onely two Notaries present; and after several days disputation, something was drawn up as the result of all, which (with some explanations) Beza, Marlorat, Martyr, Spina, and the Lord of Sole subscribed unto; But when the same was presented to the Cardinal, and Popish Bishops, they complained of their Disputants as having consented to that which was Heresie; and so by their Authority they brake off the Disputation, and departed: Whereupon Martyr addressed himself to the Queen, seeing that he was like to do no good there, desiring license to depart, which she consented to, and he returned to Zurick with a large testimony of his worthy carriage, and a guard from the Prince of Conde, and the Admiral for his safety.

Popish subtilty.

A Disputation.

It breaks off.

His return to Zurick.

Thus having worn out himself with his indefatigable labours, and having his spirits much exhausted with grief for the afflicted condition of the Churches of France, he fell sick of a Feaver, made his Will, and to his Friends that visited him, he spake chearfully and comfortably, telling them that his body was weak, but inwardly he enjoyed

His sickness.

He made before them an excellent Confeſſion of his Faith, concluding thus, This is my faith, and they that teach otherwiſe to the withdraving men from God, God will deſtroy them. He gave them his hand, and bid them farewel, and commending his ſoul to God, he ſlept in the Lord, and was Buried honourably Anno Chriſti 1562. and of his Age 62.

The Life of Amſdorfius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1563.

His Birth & Education. Nicholas Amſdorfius was Born in Miſnia, of noble Parents, Anno Chriſti, 1483. and brought up in Learning. Anno Chriſti 1502. from School he went to the Univerſity of Wittenberg, about that time that Luther began to Preach againſt Indulgences: And contrary to the cuſtome of the Nobility of thoſe times, he applied his minde to the Study of Theology, and contemplation of Heavenly things. In An. Chriſti, 1504. he commenced Maſter of Arts, and afterwards Licentiate in Divinity. He timely embraced the Truth that brake forth in thoſe times, and not conſulting with fleſh and blood, Preached it to others.

His converſion.

He accompanied Luther to Wormes, Anno Chriſti, 1521. when he was called to give an account of his Faith before Cæſar, and the States of the Empire. In the time of Luther's receſs into his Pathmos; He, with Melanchthon, Juſtus Jonas, and John Dulcius, being ſent to by the Elector of Saxony for their judgments about the Maſs, declared that it was an horrible prophanation of the Lords Supper; whence enſued the aboliſhing of it out of all Churches in Wittenberg. Anno Chriſti, 1523. he wrote in a Book Dedicated to the Elector of Saxony, that the Pope was Antichriſt.

He oppoſeth the Maſs.

He goes to Magdeburg.

Anno Chriſti, 1524. Luther being ſent for to Magdeburg, went thither, and having Preached to them, commended to them, and afterwards ſent Amſdorfius, to gather and inſtruct the Churches there, who faithfully laboured eighteen years in that place.

He alſo made John Amandus Superintendent of thoſe Churches, and Michael Volmetius Maſter of their School.

Anno Chriſti 1541. he was ſent by the Elector of Saxonie to govern the Church at Naumberg, in the Palatinate; where alſo, the year after, he was ordained Biſhop by Luther, three other Paſtors alſo impoſing their hands upon him, who were, Nicholas Medler, Paſtor of Naoburg, George Spalatine, Paſtor of Aldenburg, and Wolphgang Steinus, Paſtor of Lencopetra. In the midſt of theſe digladiations amongſt Divines, Amſdorfius came to his old age, having now attained to eighty years, at which time he quietly ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1563. THE

W. MVSCVLVS

The Life of Musculus, who dyed Anno Christi 1563.

His Birth & Education.

Wolfgangus Musculus was born at Dusa in Lorrain, An. Christi 1497. of honest Parents, who seeing his aptness to Learning, bred him at School. When he was young, he fell sick of the Plague, but it pleased God to restore him. He had an exceeding prompt wit, and had such an ardent desire to his Book, that he was never aweary of reading and writing, so that he rather needed a Bridle, than Spurs, never departing from School, and his Book, till he was forced.

A speciall Providence.

He is sent abroad.

When he was grown up to some bigness, his Parents sent him abroad into other Countries with slender provision, that by singing at doors (as the manner of those times was) he might get his living, and thereby learn patience, temperance, and humility, and might follow his Book the better. Being thus sent from his Parents, he came to Rapersvil in Alsatia, where a certain Widdow entertained him, and in which place he went to School, but met with much hunger, and want, till as by his honest and modest deportment, he became known to the noble Earl of Rapersvil, from whom he received many favours.

From thence after a while he went to Slestade, and gat into the School; and being naturally much addicted to Poetry, he spent his time in reading such Authors: And thus he continued till he was fifteen years old, about which time he returned to visit his Parents, and going into the Monastery of Lexheim by the way, at the time of their Even-song, he joyned with them in singing, and the Prior taking notice of him, and liking his ingenious countenance and voyce, followed him out of the Church when all was ended, and enquir'd of him what he was? and whether he liked to live in a Monastery? and withal proffered (if he would accept of it) to admit him into that Monastery to cloath him, and provide other necessaries for him at his own cost.

Gods Providence.

He

He being very glad of this proffer, went to his Parents, acquainted them with it, and they (looking upon it as a great Mercy) went presently with him to the Monastery, where the Prior, according to his promise, entertained him as is own Son, and afterwards sent him to the Bishop for Orders. There he lived till he was thirty years old, and when others were Drinking, and Playing, he, with a Book in his hand, would walk into a grove to study: For though in his youth he was of a chearfull, and merry Disposition, and much delighted in Liberall Exercises both of Body and mind, yet he disliked the illiberall Contests of his Fellows, who spent their time in Dice, and Drinking, and such-like Practises. His studyousness.

But in the mean time he had a great want of Books, that Monastery having no Library belonging to it; yet at last he found a great heap of Parchments, at the Roof of the house, amongst which he met with some of Tullies Works, and all Ovids: These therefore he read over, especially Ovid, being so much addicted to Poetry that many times he made verses in his sleep; and could make a verse upon every thing he met with, and grew so perfect therein, that with Ovid he could say; He affects Poetry and Musick.

Sponte sua carmen numeros veniebat in aptos:
Quicquid conabar dicere, versus erat.

And together with his Poetry, he applyed himself to Musick, which the Prior taking notice of, caused him to be taught to Play on the Organs. At twenty years of Age he studied Divinity, and excelling all the other Monks in Learning, and Eloquence, was presently chosen a publick Preacher; and being often told by an old Man in that house, Si vis fieri bonus Concionator, da operam ut sis bonus Biblicus: If you will be a good Preacher, study to be well acquaintd with the Scripture: He betook himself night & day to reading, & meditation upon the Bible. He first Preached in the Church of Lixheim, and in three other Churches belonging to that Monastery; but his zeal and Eloquence making him famous, he was requested to preach in divers other places. He studies Divinity. He studies the Scriptures.

About the year 1518, Luthers Books began to come abroad into the World, and Musculus having some of them sent him, read them with much seriousness, and delight; and God thereby revealing the Truth to him, he became a zealous maintainer of it, not onely in the Monastery by Conference, and Disputations, but in his Publick Sermons also, so that he was commonly called the Lutherane Monk; and whereas Luther was charged by some with Heresie, he stoutly defended him, saying, It may be Luther may erre in some things, which is common to the Nature of Man, yet he is not therefore to be accounted an Heretick: According to the saying of Saint Augustine, Errare possum, Hæreticus esse nolo, I may err, but I will not be an Heretick. And his Labours proved not fruitlesse. For (through Gods Blessing upon them) he converted many of that Fraternity, who afterwards left their Abbey, and became zealous Professors of the Truth unto death. His conversion. He converted many.

And divers others also abroad were converted by him, and amongst them a certain Nobleman, called Reinhard of Rotenburg, who was Captain of the Castle at Lutzelsteine, & Protector of that Colledge; He was a man of much account with the Palatine; by whom he was protected from many dangers and snares that were laid for him, especially by the Bishop, and some old Monks that were obdurate in wickedness, and therefore more opposite to the Truth. He vvas often in great peril of his life, and yet by special providences preserved: So that, perceiving that in that place, he could neither injoy safety nor freedome in the service of God, as he desired, he resolved to leave the Monastery, and to go elsewhere: which resolutions he communicated to some of his Friends. Gods providence. Popish malice.

But in the mean time the Pryor died, and he by common consent of all, was chosen to succeed him, Musculus looked upon this as a design of the Devil by these baits of honour, pleasure, and profit, to withdraw him from his zealous purposes of propagating the Truth, and to tie him to that kind of life, that he was resolved against: and thereupon he refused the choice, and put it upon another. Tentation resisted,

His marriage. He alſo married a wife, called Margaret Bart, an honeſt, and vertuous Virgin. At his departure, the new Prior gave him a Supper, after which he bade him, and the reſt of the Fryers farewell, who were now but ſix, three alſo of which ſhortly after followed him. At this time he had but four Florences, to which the Pryor added four more, and ſo about midnight (that he might the more ſafely eſcape his enemies) he departed, being accompanied with a Kinſman called Nicholas Wagner, directing his courſe to Strasborough, whether alſo he came Anno Chriſti 1527, and of his age thirty, and was entertained by the Miniſter, Theobald Niger, who alſo made him a Wedding-feaſt. But his money waxing ſhort, and ſeeing little hopes to be called to the work of the Miniſtery, he placed his wife forth as a ſervant to Maſter Theobald Niger, and agreed with a Weaver to teach him his trade: comforting himſelf in the mean time with this Diſtich.

His poverty

Eſt Deus in cœlo, qui providus omnia curat;
Credentes nuſquam deſeruiſſe poteſt.

A God there is, whoſe providence doth take,
Care for his Saints, whom he will not forſake.

Anabaptiſts Life. But it fell out that this Weaver was an Anabaptiſt, and kept one of their Teachers in his houſe, who according to their uſual cuſtome, laboured not at all, but ſpent his time in eating, drinking, and ſleeping: With him Muſculus could not agree, but often objected that of the Apoſtle to him, He that will not labour, ought not to eat. This occaſioned his Maſter to fall out with him, and having paid him his wages at two moneths end, he turned him out of doors, contrary to his former bargain.

Muſculus now not knowing how to ſupply his wants, it fell out that at that time the Senate at Strasborough were mending their fortifications about the City: Thither he went, and was hired to labour in that work amongſt others: but the ſame night, going to ſee his wife, ſhe told him that an Officer had been there to requeſt him to come to the great Church, where the Conſul, and Bucer would ſpeak with him. He not knowing the occaſion, was much troubled at it, yet went to the place appointed, and when he came thither, the Conſul commanded him to goe to the Village of Dorlitzheim, and there to preach every Sabbath, and to teach the people (who were prone to Sedition) peace and obedience. Muſculus with joy taking this as a call from God, went every Sabbath thither, being but three miles off, and preached to them; and all the week lived with Bucer (who writing ſo bad a hand, that the Printers could not read it, yea many times himſelf could ſcarce read what he had written) imployed Muſculus to tranſcribe his Comments on Zephany which were then in Printing.

Gods providence.

He preacheth at Dorlitzheim.

After certain months preaching in that Village, and his wife growing near the time of her travel, the Magiſtrates ſent him and his wife to live there, where his hearers entertained him kindly, and provided neceſſaries for his family; onely himſelf was fain to lie upon the ground in a little ſtraw whilſt his wife lay in. Thus this man of God was willing to ſuffer poverty for Chriſt's cauſe, who amongſt the Papiſts might have lived in much plenty. In that Town he preached a whole year without receiving any thing for his pains; But afterward the Senate of Strasborough allowed him a ſtipend out of the publick Treaſury for the ſupply of his wants. There alſo he began to teach School; wherein he carried himſelf with ſo much induſtry, and affability, that he won much love.

Chriſt beſt of all.

He teaches School.

Not far off there was a Monaſtery, in vvhich once a year there vvas a Feaſt, and a Sermon, to vvhich (at the requeſt of his neighbours) Muſculus went. The Fryer that preached, choſe this Text, Without Faith it's impoſſible to pleaſe God. In his Sermon he inveighed bitterly againſt the Lutherans, and in particular againſt them of Strasborough, as Apoſtates, &c. wherewith many of his Hearers were much pleaſed.

Heb. 11. 6.

The

The Sermon being ended, and the Fryer coming down out of the Pulpit, Muſculus called to him, ſaying, Thou wicked wretch, hear me a little, and I'le make thy wickedneſs appear to all the Congregation. And going up into the Pulpit he took the ſame Text, opened the words, and preached excellently of the nature and benefit of ſaving faith, and vindicated them of Strasborough from thoſe aſperſions which the Fryer had caſt upon them: wherewith the people were much pleaſed, but the Fryer ſhrunk away. Then came the Steward of the Monaſtery running in, and interrupted him, ſaying, Sirrah, give over, who ſet you up to preach in this place? To whom he anſwered, Who gave you authority to ſet up a lying Fryer, to preach and traduce the Senate, and people of Strasborough, whom I am bound to defend, and vindicate from ſuch falſe aſperſions? and ſo he went on in his Sermon; But then the Steward began to entreat him to give over, leaſt he cauſed a tumult; but he bad him hold his peace, and entreated the people to be quiet, and ſo went on to the end of his Sermon without any diſtraction.

Muſculus his zeal.

Satans malice.

The fame of this action begat him much credit amongſt all good men at Strasborough, ſo that at the years end he was ſent for to Strasborough, and made a Deacon, though he in modeſty would have refuſed it, as judging himſelf unfit and unworthy of it; And thus he continued two years longer in that place: And whereas in Doſna, a Village belonging to Strasborough, the people would by no means ſuffer the Maſs to be aboliſhed, he, by one Sermon there ſo wrought upon them, that preſently they caſt it out of their Church, together with all the Popiſh trumpery.

His humility.

Power of the VVord.

At Strasborough, whilſt he was a Deacon, he was a conſtant hearer of Capito and Bucer, and finding his own defect for want of Hebrew, he fell to the ſtudy of it, wrote out a Lexicon with his own hand, and profited ſo much therein, that he did not only underſtand the Bible, but the Rabbins alſo.

He ſtudies Hebrew.

Anno Chriſti 1531. the Citizens of Ausburg ſent to Strasborough to requeſt the Senate to ſend them Muſculus to be their Paſtor. This requeſt he himſelf oppoſed with all his might, as judging himſelf unfit, and unable thereunto; had not Bucer, and the Senate interpoſed their authority to require his acceptance. When he came thither, he preached ſix years before the dregs of Popery where wholly purged out of that City; yea the ſtate of it was very troubleſome, not only by reaſon of the Popiſh party, who with all their might oppoſed the Reformation; but alſo by reaſon of ſome Anabaptiſts, who like Serpents had crept in to diſturb the growth of the Goſpel, and the peace of the Church: Yea, they carried themſelves very impudently, and tumultuouſly, coming into the Church at Sermon-time, ſtepping up into the Pulpit, and labouring to diffuſe their errors, and to poyſon the people therewith, inſomuch as the Magiſtrates were forced for the publick peace ſake, to caſt them into priſon.

He is ſent for to Ausburg.

His humility.

He goes to Ausburg.

Anapabtiſts trouble the Church.

Their impudence.

Thither Muſculus went daily to them, & though they called him a Viper, a falſe Prophet, a Wolfe in Sheeps cloathing, &c. yet he bore all with patience, and carried them food, and other neceſſaries, not ſpeaking a word about their opinions till he had ſo far inſinuated into their affections that they began to love him exceedingly. Then began he to confer familiarly with them, to hear them with patience, and with ſolid arguments to convince their errors, whereupon by degrees, he converted them all, and brought them to make publick recantations, which by more rugged dealings they would never have yeelded to.

Some of them impriſoned.

His holy Policy.

He converts them.

He had alſo many conflicts with the Popiſh party, and wrought ſo far with the Senate, that Anno Chriſti 1534. they caſt out the Maſs, and Idolatry out of moſt of the Churches, only allowing to the Papiſts eight to ſay Maſs in, but not to preach in. And afterwards, Anno Chriſti 1537. he ſo prevailed, that Popery was caſt out of thoſe Churches alſo, and the City wholly imbraced the reformed Religion.

Reformation in Ausburg.

There he ſtudied the Greek Tongue, and profited ſo much therein, that he tranſlated divers parts of Chryſoſtome, Baſil, Cyril, Athanaſius, &c. At that time alſo by his own induſtry he learned Arabick, not having ſo much as a Grammer to help

His induſtry. help him; only by obſerving the proper names (which are the ſame in all languages) he found out the Letters, and ſo attained to the reading and underſtanding of that tongue. He taught at Ausburg eighteen years with much diligence, and profit. His Sermons were very piercing like a two-edged ſword, both in comforting the afflicted, and convincing the obſtinate. Anno Chriſti 1536, there was a Synod appointed at Iſenac in Thuringia, to which Luther, and many other Divines out of upper and lower Germany reſorted, about compoſing the difference concerning the Lords Supper, to which Muſculus was ſent by the Senate of Strasborough; as alſo to a Diet at Wormes and Ratisbone, where he was Scribe at the Diſputation between Melanchthon, and Eccius, which afterwards he publiſhed.

Preachers. pattern.

He goes to Donavert. Anno Chriſti 1544, the Inhabitants of Donavert embracing the Goſpel, ſent to the Senate at Ausburg, for one of their Miniſters to aſſiſt and further them in their Reformation, who thereupon ſent Muſculus to them, and when he came thither, he Preached every day for a quarter of a year together, and ſo returned to Ausburg.

A Diet at Ausburg. His zeal & courage. Anno Chriſti 1547. Charles the fifth, having ended the Smalcaldian war, called a Diet at Auſpurg, whither himſelf, his Brother Ferdinand, the Electors, Cardinals, and Biſhops came: Then was Muſculous put out of his Church; yet did he not ceaſe to preach in another, during that Diet, with as much zeal and freedom of ſpeech as formerly, which procured him much hatred from the Popiſh party, who ſet ſpies to intrap him. They alſo accuſed him to the Emperor, as one that ſtirred up the people againſt the Clergy; by reaſon whereof he was in ſuch danger, that the Senate was fain to appoint three men to guard him to, and from the Pulpit. Tumults were raiſed before his door, his windows broken, and himſelf rail'd upon; yet he bore all with a ſtout courage, and ſent the Senate word, That if they would ſtick cloſe to the cauſe of God, he would venture his life with them.

Popiſh malice.

His courage and conſtancy. His zeal. The year after the Senate embraced the Interim, which he wrote, and preached boldly againſt; inſomuch that he was hated, and lived in great danger: Hereupon he reſolved to leave the City, and acquainting the Conſul with his purpoſe, one evening, with one only Citizen in his company, he left his Wife, and eight Children, and departed out of the City; and changing his Apparel at a Friends Houſe, that he might paſs unknown, he went to Zurick, where he ſtayed a while with Bullinger, and from thence to Baſil, his Wife and Children following him within a few days; but they ſtaying at Conſtance, he went thither to them, and the Sabbath following he Preached to the Citizens of Conſtance, upon that Text; Joh. 6. 66, 67, 68, 69. From that time many of his Diſciples went back, and walked no more with him, &c. Out of which words he ſhewed how grievouſly thoſe Cities had ſinned, which to pleaſe men, had baſely deſerted the Goſpel of Chriſt. Then he exhorted them of Conſtance not to follow ſuch examples, but rather after the examples of the Apoſtles in this Text, conſtantly to adhere unto Chriſt, who only hath the words of eternal life. The very next day the Spaniards coming to beſiege Conſtance, he with his family removed to Zurick: Thither Cranmer ſent for him to come into England, but being grown aged, and his Wife ſickly, he excuſed his going thither.

Flight in perſecution.

He preaches at Conſtance.

He is ſent for into England.

He is choſen to Bern. After ſix months ſtay there, he was called to Berne to be the Divinity Profeſſor in their Schools, whither he went, and where he diſcharged his place for fourteen years together with much diligence and praiſe. He Printed many works, all which he wrote out with his own hands; whereby his great labour, and ſedulity may eaſily be diſcerned. He ſo loved his preſent imployment, and place of habitation, that though he had many invitations to places of more eminency and profit, yet he would never imbrace the ſame, but continued at Bern till his death.

His induſtry.

His ſelf-denyal.

His amity with his Collegues. He lived in much peace and concord with his fellow Miniſters, and Profeſſors, and was very loving to his Wife and Children; in domeſtical troubles moſt patient; very merciful to the Poor, eſpecially to Exiles and Strangers; of a ſparing and temperate Diet, whereby he lived in health to his latter end. walking, and holy meditation therein. He went very upright, had a fresh colour, sharp sight, admirable strong teeth; and lastly, his hands and feet well performing their office. His Character.

But the year before his death he began to be crasie; partly by reason of his great age, but especially being worne out with infinite cares, and labours; as also by reason of a great cough which of a long time had been troublesome to him. By these means he had many fits of sickness that year, out of which, through Gods mercy, and the care of his Physicians, he somewhat recovered, yet himself discerned that his end approached, and therefore he daily prepared himself for it, laying aside all worldly cares and businesses, that he might the better meditate upon his approaching death, as may appear by these Verses which he made a little before his death. He prepares for Death.

Auguſt the twenty-second, being the Lords-day in the Morning, Muſculus, feeling no distemper, went to Church to hear the Sermon, and about the midst of it, he was seised with a violent Feaver; yet continuing to the end of the Sermon, he went home, and sat down to Dinner, supping a little broath, but waxing worse, he was led to a Bed in his Study, from which he never rose afterwards. His last Sickness.

So soon as he was laid, he grew extream hot and burning, whereupon by the advice of his Physician, he was let blood: He had also some Physick given him, which yet staied not with him. Muſculus, perceiving his end to draw near, caused his Sons to be sent for, whom he saluted, and blessed, after which he never seemed to mind either Wife or Children. John Haller (one of the Ministers) asking him of the state of his soul, and how he would dispose of his outward estate? He answered, I thank God, I have nothing that troubles my Conscience. And as concerning my Doctrine, as I taught, so I thought, do think, and will think to the end. As for my Wife and Family, I commend them to your, and your Colleagues care, desiring you to be Fathers and protectors to them. Haller in his own, and his Brethrens name, promising to satisfie his desire, he thanked them, and never after made mention of any worldly thing: And so shortly after he quietly resigned up his spirit unto God in the presence of the Ministers and Professors of the University, who were come to visit him. The day after he was honourably buried, Anno Chriſti 1563, and of his age 66. His Death.

This Epitaph was set upon the Wall, near to his Grave.

The

The Life of Hyperius, who dyed Anno Christi 1564.

His birth & education.

Andreas Gerarus Hyperius was Born at Ipres in Flanders, An. Christi 1511. His Father was a Counsellor, famous in that City. His Mother was Katherine Coets, of a noble Family. These set their Son to School be-times, and being reasonable well grounded in Grammer, at eleven years old, they placed him with James Pap, a good Poet, to be trained up by him. When he was thirteen years old he travelled through the Islands of Flanders. Then was under the tuition of John Lacteus, where he learned the French Tongue. His Fathers desire was that he should not only be brought up in Learning, but also in good Manners and Vertue. But whereas, by reason of the VVars between Charles the Fifth, and the King of France, he could not send him to Paris, he kept him at home to write amongst his Clerks.

His Fathers death.

Anno Christi 1525, his Father fell sick, and dyed, charging his VVife, that as soon as ever the VVars were ended, she should send his Son Andrew to be brought up in Learning at Paris; And Anno Christi 1528. Peace being made between the Emperour and King, Hyperius was accordingly sent to Paris, and commended to the tuition of Anthony Helhucius (who was a Senator of the Parliament at this time) and of John de Campis, a Licentiat in Divinity. The former was to supply him with necessaries, and the latter to forward him in his Studies.

He goes to Paris.

Hyperius sojourned long in the House of de Campis, and heard also the Logick-Lecture in the Colledge of Calviac. In that Colledge one of the Lecturers was Joachim Ringleberg, a very learned man, with whom Hyperius had contracted a very strict bond of Friendship: And by his help, besides Logick, he learned Rhetorick and Physick.

He returns into his Country. And back to Paris.

At the end of three years he returned into his own Country to visit his Friends, and to see whether any of his Patrimony remained; and finding that there was yet enough to maintain him, Anno Christi, 1532. he returned to Paris, purposing now to betake himself to the Study of Divinity: and accordingly he frequented the Divinity-Schooles: Sometimes also he heard the Physick-Lectures, which naturally he was much affected with. He frequented likewise the Lectures of the Professors of the Tongues, as Cleonard, Sturmius, and Latomus. Then he had an earnest desire to travel through France, both to learn the Language more perfectly, and the better to acquaint himself with their manners. VVhereupon every year in January, February, and March, when the Lectures ceased, taking some of his fellow Students along with him, he went into sundry Provinces, and visited the most famous Universities: So that at the times fore-mentioned, in three years space he had travelled through the greatest part of France and Italy.

His travels through France.

His return into his Country.

Anno Christi 1535. he returned into his own Country, and presently went to Lovane, where having remained a while, he travelled through the Low-countries, as Gelderland, Friesland, Holland, Zealand, &c. And Anno 1537. and of his Age 26. he travelled into upper Germany to visit the Universities, and acquaint himself with the famous men therein. For which end he went to Colen, Marpurg, Erford, Lipsich, and Wittenberg, and so returning into his Country he was earnestly importuned by his Friends to take some cure upon him, that having now spent his patrimony, he might live the more quietly amongst his Friends; and, unknown to him, they had procured from the Pope a Patent, whereby he was enabled to receive large revenues out of certain Monasteries: only they wanted a confirmation from the Emperors Chancellor, the Archbishop of Palermo: But it fell

fell out by Gods Providence, that the Arch B. denied his conſent, being informed by Hyperius his competitors, that Hyperius had been in upper Germany, which then was accounted a great crime. Gods Providence.

Hereupon Hyperius, not willing to be a burden to his Friends, by the advice of ſome learned and godly men, reſolved again to travel; firſt intending for Italy; but being hindred by reaſon of the wars, he ſailed into England, where he might eaſily hear from his Friends if any preferment fell in his own Country. In England his care was to acquaint himſelf with ſuch men as were moſt famous for learning. Upon which occaſion he fell into the company of Charles Montjoy, Son to William Lord Montjoy, whom Eraſmus had made famous by his writings. He uſed Hyperius very courteouſly, and conferred with him about many things, and finding his excellent wit, he invited him to his houſe, proffering him a large ſtipend. This offer he embraced, and lived moſt ſweetly with him four years, imploying himſelf in his ſtudies all that while. He goes into England. His imployment there.

Anno Chriſti 1540, at the charges of Montjoy, he viſited the Univerſity of Cambridge, about which time the Lord Cromwell was beheaded, and alſo Doctor Barnes was burned for Religion, with ſome others; and on the other ſide ſome others ſuffered death for adhering to the Pope, and denying the Kings ſupremacy. There was alſo publiſhed a dangerous Edict againſt Strangers.

Hereupon Hyperius reſolved to return into Germany; but before he went, he viſited the Univerſity of Oxford, and from thence went to London, where he bade farewel to Montjoy, who would have kept him longer, and ſailed to Antwerp; from whence going into his own Country, he remained a while quietly with his Friends: But hearing the fame of the Univerſity of Strasborough, and of Bucer in particular, he was very deſirous to go into thoſe parts, and ſo taking leave of his Friends, he went to Marpurg, intending to get Letters of commendation from Gerard Noviomag (to whom he was formerly known) to the learned men at Strasborough. This was Anno Chriſti 1541, and of his age 30. He goes into his own Country. Thence into Germany.

His coming was very acceptable to Noviomag who preſently ſollicited him earneſtly to ſtay at Marpurg, aſſuring him of a Profeſſors place, and a liberal ſtipend. And ſhortly after he dealt with John Ficinus, the Princes Chancellor, to ſubſtitute Hyperius in his own room, pleading his age, and infirmities, which made him unfit to undergoe the burden of his place. Ficinus diſliked not the motion, and therefore ſending for Hyperius to him, he requeſted him to ſtay at Marpurg, and to give them ſome taſte of his Learning, telling him, that if he was liked, he might have a good ſtipend ſetled on him: And ſhortly after Noviomag dying, Hyperius was choſen into his Profeſſors place, and ſo read upon Paul's Epiſtles, where Noviomag had left. And thus continuing unmarried two years, he at laſt purpoſed to marry, and accordingly, Anno Chriſti 1544, he married Katharine Orthia, a vertuous Widdow of good parentage, who had two Children. Her he always loved dearly, and had by her ſix Sons, and four Daughters. His entertainment a Marpurg. His employment. His marriage.

In that place he lived two and twenty years, performing the duty of his place with admirable fidelity, diligence, and zeal, to promote Religion and Learning: And beſides his daily task, he took ſomtimes other opportunities to teach the people. He ſet up an order of Preaching in the Schools with much labour and trouble; himſelf appointing what ſubjects ſhould be handled: Looking over the young Students Sermons, and hearing them in private, before they preached them in publick, correcting what was amiſs either in their voice or geſture: Such as did well, he commended, ſuch as did ill, he blamed, and endeavoured to reform. He inſtituted alſo once in two years an examination of the Students in Divinity; as alſo a diſſertation, wherein ſome queſtion being propoſed, every one was to give in his judgment upon the ſame. Theſe exerciſes he ſet up, and diligently promoted them, though he had no reward for his pains. His great Labours.

In his private ſtudies he was very indefatigable, alwaies writing, reading, or meditating, whereby he much impaired his health. He much deſired to call back the Haſſians to the example of the Primitive Churches, and aboliſhing the Popiſh His care to Reform the Church.

fooleries out of the ſervice of God, to eſtabliſh a holy Scriptural, Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. And in theſe employments, having worne out himſelf, he fell into a great Catarrh, and Cough, complaining alſo of the pains of his head, breaſt, and ſides, which often were ſo great, as made him ſwear, as if he had been ſeiſed upon with a Feaver.

His Sickneſſe.

In his ſickneſs he conferred much with Divines that came to viſit him, eſpecially with Wigand Orthius, about the Univerſity, the ſtudy of Divinity, and Reforming the Church.

January the thirtieth, being the Lords-day, when the Sacrament was adminiſtred, he deſired it to be brought to him alſo, receiving it with the reſt of his Family. The day after feeling himſelf worſe, he directed his Wife what to do after his death; as alſo his Children, whom he exhorted to fear God, honour their Mother, and to carry themſelves juſtly and honeſtly towards all men. When many came to viſit him, he made before them a confeſſion of his Faith, profeſſing his conſtancy in that Doctrine which he had taught them, and ſo taking his leave of them, he quietly ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti, 1564. and of his age 53.

He exhorts his wife and children.

His Death.

He was very learned in the Tongues, better in the Liberal Arts, and Phyloſophy, beſt of all in Divinity, and the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories. He had an excellent faculty both in teaching, and diſputing. His labours were ſuch as tended to the ſhortning of his life. In life and manners he was very exemplary; in food and apparel always temperate; in feaſts Modeſt. In his conference and converſation juſt, and courteous. And how dear he was to all, both in City and Univerſity, appeared by thoſe many tears which were ſhed at his Funeral.

His Chatacter.

His works were theſe: De ratione ſtudii; Dialectica, Rhetorica, Arithmetica, Geometrica, Goſmographica, Optica, Aſtronomica, Phyſica: In Ethica Ariſtotelis Scholia, De ſtudioſorum vita, & moribus: de Ratione ſtudii Theologici: De formandis concionibus: De Theologo: De quotidiana Lectione, & meditatione ſac. literarum: De Catechoſi: De publica in pauperes beneficentia: De Scholis Eccleſiaſticis: De conjugio Miniſtrorum: De Providentia Dei, &c. which are particularly ſet down by Verheiden.

THE

JO: CALVIN

The Life of John Calvin, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1562.

MAſter John Calvin was born at Noviodune, a Famous City of France, June the ſixth, Anno Chriſti, 1509. His Fathers name was Gerard Calvin, his Mothers Joan Franca, both of good Repute, and of a Competent Eſtate. Gerard was a very Prudent Man, and therefore well eſteemed of, both by the Nobility, and others of the Country: He gave his Son John very Liberal Education from his Child-hood. His Birth. His Education.

From the Grammer-School, he ſent him to Paris, and placed him with Maturinus Corderius, a Man well eſteemed both for his Probity, and Learning, and of chiefeſt account amongſt all the School-Maſters in France for his Training up of Youth. From thence John Calvin was Tranſlated to the School at Montacute, where he had Hiſpanus for his Maſter, under whom, by reaſon of his ſharp Wit, he profited ſo much, that from the Grammer, he proceeded to the Study of Logick, and other Arts.

His Father from the beginning, deſigned him to the Study of Divinity, which he judged him to be very much inclined to, being Religiouſly addicted from his Child-hood, and a ſevere reprover of his School-Fellows faults. And being thus reſolved, he procured a Benefice of the Biſhop for him, in the Cathedral Church of Noviodune, as alſo a Cure in a Neighbour Village. called Biſhops-Bridge, where himſelf was born, though afterwards he removed to the City of Noviodune, in which place our John before his Ordination Preached divers Sermons to the People. But this purpoſe of his (both their minds changing) was afterwards altered; For his Father ſeeing that the Study of the Law was a certainer ſtep to Riches and Honour, altered his minde upon that account, and his Son growing into acquaintance with a certain Kinſman of his, called Peter Robert Olevitane, was by him inſtructed in the True reformed Religion, whereupon he addicted himſelf to the ſtudy of the Sacred Scriptures, and began to abominate and withdraw himſelf from the Superſtitious Services in the Popiſh Church. He is deſigned to Divinity. He is deſigned to the Law. His converſion.

He goes to Orleance.

Upon this occaſion he went to Orleans, where Peter Stella, the moſt famous Lawyer in France, read his Lectures, whoſe Auditor John Calvin was, and in a ſhort ſpace wonderfully profited in that ſtudy: So that many times, occaſionally ſupplying his Maſters room, he rather ſeemed a Doctor, then a learner of the Law: And when he was about to depart, all the Profeſſors in that Univerſity, proffered freely to beſtow the degree of a Doctor upon him, as having ſo well deſerved of the Univerſity. But all this while he neglected not the ſtudy of the ſacred Scriptures, and Divinity; inſomuch as few in that City, that were addicted to the reformed Religion, but they came to him to be ſatisfied in their doubts, and went away admiring his learning and zeal. And ſome that were intimately acquainted with him at that time, teſtified, that his manner was conſtantly to continue his ſtudies till mid-night, and in the morning ſo ſoon as he wakened, to ruminate what he had read overnight, whereby he fixed it in his memory, neither would he ſuffer himſelf to be diſturbed during the time of his meditation: And the better to fit him for his ſtudies, he alwayes ſupped very ſparingly. By which practiſe he attained to excellent Learning, and he had a very good memory: Yet withall, hereby he contracted ſuch weakneſſe of ſtomack, as brought upon him many diſeaſes, and at laſt an immature death.

He ſtudies the Scriptures.

His Studiouſneſs.

He goes to Biturg.

About this time the Univerſity of Biturg grew famous, for that they had procured out of Italy the eminenteſt Lawyer of his time, Andrew Alciat, whom our John alſo would needs be a hearer of: Thither therefore he went, and during his abode there, he grew into familiar acquaintance with Melchior Wolmarus, a German, the publick Profeſſor of Greek in that Univerſity, a man famous for Religion, and Learning. Under him he ſtudied the Greek tongue, for which benefit he ſo much prized him, that afterwards he dedicated to him his Comment upon the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

He ſtudies the Greek,

He Preacheth.

Whilſt he was imployed in theſe ſtudies, he neglected not that of Divinity, ſo that he preached divers Sermons in a neighbour-Town called Liveria. But whilſt he was thus buſied, news came to him of his Fathers death, which called him back into his his own country: And having ſetled his affaires there, he went back to Paris, being now about four and twenty years old; at which time he wrote that excellent Commentary upon Seneca de Clementia, being much affected with that Author, whom he uſed to ſay, agreed very well with his Genius. After a few moneths ſtay at Paris, he grew acquainted with all that profeſſed the Reformed Religion; and amongſt the reſt with Stephen Forgeus, a famous Merchant, who afterward ſealed the Truth with his blood.

He goes to Paris.

From hence forward, at the earneſt requeſt of all the godly that held their private meetings in Paris, he layd aſide all other ſtudies, and wholly applyed himſelf to that of Divinity, wherein alſo he found the eſpecial aſſiſtance of God. At this time Nicholas Cope was Rector of the Univerſity at Paris, who being to make an Oration upon the Kalends of November, at which time the Pontificians uſed to celebrate their All-Saints day, at the inſtigation of John Calvin, he ſpake of Religion more purely & clearly then they uſed to doe. This the Sorboniſts could not bear, and the Parliament of Paris was angry at it, inſomuch as they cited him to appear before them, which accordingly he was about to ſubmit to; but as he went, ſome of his friends adviſed him to take heed of his adverſaries; whereupon he returned home, and immediately after left France, and went to Baſil, where his Father was a Profeſſor of Phyſick.

His Danger.

The Officers ſent by the Parliament, ſearching for Cope, went into Maſter Calvins houſe, who by chance not being at home, they ranſacked his ſtudy, and amongſt his Papers found many of his friends Letters, which had like to have endangered the lives of many. So bitterly were the enemies of the Church at that time enraged againſt the people of God, eſpecially one John Morinus, whoſe abominable cruelty is infamous till this day. But it pleaſed God to divert that Storm by the prudent, and pious diligence of the Queen of Navar, the onely Siſter of King Francis, a woman of an admirable wit, and exceeding tender of the welfare of the Profeſſors of the Reformed Religion. She alſo ſent for Mr. Calvin into her Court, uſed him very honourably, and heard him gladly. But Mr. Calvin finding Paris too hot for his abode, went to

Is delivered by the Queen of Navar.

Xantone,

Xantone, where ſojourning with a friend, at his requeſt he drew up ſhort Chriſtian admonitions, which were diſperſed amongſt certain Prieſts to be taught to their people, that ſo their people might by little and little be drawn to ſearching out of the Truth. He goes to Xantone.

Shortly after he went to Nerac, a City of Aquitane, where he viſited that good old man James Faber Stapulenſis, who being formerly a Profeſſor of the Mathematicks, and Philoſophy in Paris, was perſecuted for the Truth by the Sorboniſts, but by the friendly help of the Queen of Navar was delivered and ſent to this Town of her juriſdiction: This good old man received young Mr. Calvin with very fatherly affections, propheſying that in time to come he would prove a famous inſtrument for the building up of the French Church. Thence to Nerac.

From thence Mr. Calvin went again to Paris, being called thereto by the ſpeciall providence of God: For at this time that wicked Servetus was come thither diſperſing his poyſon againſt the Sacred Trinity; who hearing of Calvin, pretended that he was deſirous to confer with him; and a time and place was appointed for their meeting, whither Calvin went, not without perill of his life, who was fain to hide himſelf from the rage of his enemies; But when he had waited long for him, Servetus came not, being indeed afraid of the very ſight of Maſter Calvin: This was Anno Chriſti 1534. Infamous for the abominable cruelty exerciſed againſt the poor Saints of God, eſpecially againſt Gerard Ruffus, a Maſter of Art of Sorbon, and Caroldus an Auguſtinian Monk, who under the protection of the Queen of Navar, had for a year or two very much propagated the truth; which the Divel envying, now ſtirred up his inſtruments to pull them out of the Pulpit, and to caſt them into priſon: Yea, King Francis himſelf was ſo irritated, by reaſon of certain papers againſt the Maſs, ſcattered about the City, and fixed to his Chamber door, that he preſently commanded a publick Proceſſion, wherein himſelf and his three children aſſiſted, with a bare head, carrying a Torch in his hand to expiate that wickedneſs, and commanded eight of the Saints of God to be burned alive, in four principall parts of the City; Swearing publickly, that he would not ſpare his own children if he knew them to be infected with thoſe damnable Hereſies. Again to Paris to confer with Servetus. 1534. Eight Martyrs.

Calvin beholding theſe ſad ſpectacles, went preſently after to Orleans, where he publiſhed his famous Book which he called Pſychopannychia, againſt that error long before broached, and now again revived, of them which held The Soules ſleeping after they were ſevered from the bodies: And ſo purpoſing to bid adieu to France, he aſſociated to him his old friend with whom he had ſojourned at Xantone, and travelling through Lorrain, went towards Baſil: But being not far from the City of Meton, they fell into great ſtraits, for one of their ſervants who had gotten all their money, being mounted upon a luſty Horſe, ran away from them, and could by no means be overtaken, ſo that they were fain to ſend their other ſervant to borrow ten crowns, which with much adoe carried them to Strasborough, and from thence to Baſil. There Mr. Calvin quickly became an intimate friend to thoſe famous men, Simon Grynæus and Wulfgang Capito: He ſtudied alſo the Hebrew tongue, and though he endeavoured by all means to conceal himſelf, yet was he forced to publiſh his Inſtitutions, which he called but the foundation of a far greater work. He goes to Orleans. His ſervants Knavery. He goes to Baſil. Studies Hebrew.

The Proteſtant Princes in Germany hearing of this bloody act of King Francis, were much provoked by it, yet did the King at this time ſeek their friendſhip, and to excuſe his cruelty, by the advice of William Bellaius Langæus, he ſent them word that he had onely puniſhed certain Anabaptiſts, who ſet up their fanatick ſpirits inſtead of Scripture, and ſhewed themſelves contemners of all Magiſtrates. Which diſgrace put upon the true Religion, Mr. Calvin not enduring, took occaſion from thence to publiſh that his incompatable Book, prefixing a Preface to King Francis, which ſurely he never read, or elſe it would have provoked him to have given a great wound to the Babyloniſh Whore: For that King (therein not like his Succeſſors) was a great weigher of matters, had a good judgement to diſcern the Truth, was a favourer of Learned men, and not altogether eſtranged from the Profeſſors of the Goſpel. But neither he, nor the people of France either ſaw, or heard thoſe things, the ſinnes of the King and people haſtning Gods wrath againſt them. Popiſh lyes.

He goes to the Dutches of Ferrara

Maſter Calvin having publiſhed this Book, and performed that Office of duty to his Country, had a great deſire to Viſit the Dutches of Ferrara, the Daughter of Lewis the Twelfth of France, a Woman Famous for her Piety, and thereby alſo to have a ſight of Italy. To her therefore he went, and endeavoured to confirm her in the Truth, ſo that ſhe loved him dearly all his Life after, yea even after his death honoured his memory.

He goes to Geneva.

Returning out of Italy (into whoſe borders, he uſed to ſay, that he went, that he might return again) he came into France, where ſetling his affairs, and taking along with him his onely Brother, Anthony Calvin, he intended to return to Baſil or Straſborough; but all other ways being ſtopped, by reaſon of Wars, he went to Geneva, without any purpoſe of ſtaying there. Yet preſently after it appeared, that it was ſo ordered by Divine Providence: For a little before, the Goſpel of Chriſt was almoſt Miraculouſly brought into that City by the labour and induſtry of two excellent Men, William Farell of the Delphinate, ſometimes a Schollar of Faber Stapulenſis; and Peter Viret, a Bernate, whoſe Labours God afterwards wonderfully bleſſed and proſpered.

Is ſtayed There.

Calvin hearing of theſe worthy Men (as the manner is amongſt the Godly) went to viſit them, to whom Maſter Farell (being a Man indued with an Heroicall Spirit) ſpake much to perſwade him rather to ſtay with them at Gevena, than to goe any further. But when he ſaw that perſwaſions would not prevail, he ſaid thus unto him; I proteſt unto thee in the Name of the Omnipotent God, that if thou thus proceedeſt to frame excuſes, and wilt not joyn with us in this Work of the Lord, that the Lord will curſe thee, as ſeeking thy own, rather than the things of Jeſus Chriſt. Calvin being terrified with this terrible Threatning, ſubmitted to the Judgement of the Presbytery, and of the Magiſtrates, by whoſe Suffrages, together with the conſent of the people, he was choſen not onely their Preacher, but alſo Profeſſor of Divinity: The firſt he refuſed, the ſecond he accepted of, Anno Chriſti 1536. in the Month of Auguſt. This year became Famous by a ſtricter League between the Bernates, and the City of Geneva, as alſo by the Entertainment of the Goſpel at Lauſanna, where a free Diſputation was held between the Pontificians, and the Proteſtants, at which Maſter Calvin was preſent.

Choſen Divinity Profeſſor. 1536.

His prudence to reform Geneva.

Then did Maſter Calvin publiſh a certain form of Chriſtian Doctrine, fitted for the Church of Geneva, as yet ſcarce crept out of the Pollutions of Popery. He added alſo a Catechiſme, not that which we have by way of Queſtion and Anſwer, but one much ſhorter, Containing the Chief Heads of Religion. Then did he, together with Maſter Farell, and Caroldus (moſt of their Colleagues through fear forſaking them) attempt to form a Church amongſt the Citizens: For which end he propoſed, that all the People being gathred together, ſhould publickly forſwear Popery, and withall, ſhould ſwear to obſerve the Chriſtian Religion, and Diſcipline contained in a few Heads; which thing (through Gods Mercy) was effected Anno Chriſti 1537. Though many of the Citizens refuſed, the City being yet ſcarce free from the ſnares of the Duke of Savoy, and the Dregs of Popery, and many being much enclined to Factions: Yet a publick Scribe reading them, the Senate and people of Geneva ſwore together to thoſe Heads of Chriſtian Religion and Diſcipline.

1537.

Anabaptiſts hinder the Reformation.

The Devil being much enraged at this Excellent Work, having tryed a Thouſand ways by open Enemies to overthrow it, and not prevailing by thoſe ways, he ſought under the pretence of Piety to deſtroy it: ſtirring up firſt the Anabaptiſts, and then Pater Caroli, not onely to diſgrace it, but as much as in them lay, utterly to have ſubverted it. But the Lord was Wiſer, and ſtronger than Satan, as the event ſhewed: For Calvin with his Colleagues in a publick, and Free Diſputation, did with that Gravity out of the Word of God, Confute the Anabaptiſts, March the Eighteenth, 1547. that (which is ſeldom ſeen) from that time forwards there never appeared any of them in that Church. But the other diſturber of their Churches Peace, Peter Caroli, cauſed greater, and longer Troubles, whereof this is a brief account.

This impudent Sophiſter was bred in the Colledge of Sorbon, from whence at laſt

he

he was caſt out for an Heretick, whereupon he went firſt to Geneva, then to Lauſanna, and from thence to Neocom, but ſo infected, and inflamed by the Devil, that whereſoever he came, he left an Impreſſion of his Foul Spirit: And when he ſaw himſelf oppoſed by the Proteſtants, he went to the Papiſts, and from them to the Proteſtants again: And at laſt brake forth into open railing againſt Maſter Farell, Viret, and Calvin, as if they held ſome Corrupt Opinions about the Sacred Trinity. Peter Caroli an Heretick.

Hereupon there was a full Synod Aſſembled at Bern, in which Peter Caroli was Condemned for his Calumny, and thereupon removed. But ſhortly after he went to Mediomatrice, that he might hinder the Work of the Lord, Happily there begun by Maſter Farell: From thence writing an Epiſtle, he railed upon the Godly, giving hope to the Papiſts that he would return to them again: Yet was he ſent to Rome, that he might give ſatisfaction to the Pope himſelf. There he was received with ſcorn, and being oppreſſed with Poverty, and Infected with the French-Pox, at laſt with much adoe he gat into an Hoſpital, where ſhortly after he dyed Miſerably; and this truly was his unhappy end. A Synod at Bern. Gods judgment on Hereticks.

About the ſame time Maſter Calvin, obſerving that there were many in France that knew, and were convinced of the Truth, and yet indulged themſelves, as if it were enough that they reſerved their Hearts for Chriſt, though they were preſent at the Popiſh Services, publiſhed two Elegant Epiſtles: One to exhort the flying of Idolatory, directed to Gerard Ruffus whom we mentioned before: The other of the Popiſh-Prieſt-Hood, directed to the ſame Man, who was now made Biſhop, and was fallen from his former zeal. But whilſt Maſter Calvin was thus employed, he met with grievous Seditions at home. Calvins care to reform Others.

The Goſpel indeed was entertained, and Popery abjured in Geneva; but many were not reformed of the Profane and Scandalous Courſes in which they had been Indulged, and which they had learned of the impure Popiſh-Clergy: and thoſe Ancient Feuds, which had ſprung up by reaſon of the Savoyan Wars amongſt the Chiefeſt Families, were not yet laid aſide. Theſe at firſt were gently admoniſhed, and when that prevailed not, more ſharply Reprehended; and when yet they continued to be ſtubborn, and Refractory, and the City by the Factions of certain private Perſons, was divided into Parties, ſo that by no meanes they would endure to be brought into that order to which they had been ſworn, Maſter Farell, Calvin, and Caroldus, inſpired with an Heroicall Spirit, did openly profeſs that they could by no meanes Adminiſter the Holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper to Perſons who were at ſuch bitter Enmity amongſt themſelves, and ſo utterly averſe to all Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. A ſedition at Geneva.

Another Evil that fell out was this; A difference there was in ſome Eccleſiaſtical Rites between the Bernates and the Genevians; The Genevians uſing Common Bread at the Sacrament, and a different ſort of Fonts; They alſo aboliſhed all Holy Dayes but the Lords-Day, whereupon the Bernates Aſſembled a Synod at Lauſanna, Decreed, that Wafers ſhould be uſed in the Sacrament, and required that in Geneva, the ſame practiſe ſhould be obſerved: But the Colledg of Miniſters at Geneva deſired that firſt they might be heard; and for this end appointed a Synod at Zurick. Another Evill.

Upon this occaſion the Syndics which were choſen for that year at Geneva (who for the time are the chiefeſt Magiſtrates) Aſſembling the Captains of the Seditious Perſons, ſo far prevailed (though Maſter Calvin and his Colleagues interpoſed, and deſired firſt to be heard) the greater part overcoming the better, that theſe three Worthy Servants of Chriſt were commanded within two Dayes to depart the City, becauſe (as was aleadged) they refuſed to Adminiſter the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. When this Decree was brought to Maſter Calvin, he ſaid, Truly if I had Served Men, I ſhould have had but an ill Reward; but it's well that I have ſerved him who doth always perform to his Servants what he hath once promiſed. Calvin is baniſhed. His Holy Speech.

Who would not now have thought, that this buſineſs muſt needs have brought Deſtruction upon the Church of Geneva? But the Event ſhewed the wonderful Wiſdom of God in turning it to good; partly by employing the Labours of theſe his Servants elſe- God above the Divell.

elſwhere, by variety of Experiences to fit them for greater Employments: partly that the Seditious Perſons in Geneva, overthrowing themſelves by their own Violence, that Church might be purged from many Pollutions. So wonderful doth God ſhew himſelf in all his wayes, eſpecially in the Admirable Government of his Church.

Calvin goes to Zurick, and ſo to Strasborough.

At the time appointed theſe three Worthy Fathers (to the great grief of all Good Men) left Geneva, and went to Zurick, where, gathering a Synod of the Helvetian Churches, the Synod Decreed, and by the interceſſion of the Bernates, tryed the mindes of the Genevians for their Re-admiſſion; But when that prevailed not, Calvin went to Baſil, and from thence to Strasborough; where, by the deſire of the Senate, and the importunity of thoſe bright Stars, which at that time ſhined in that Church, Bucer, Hedio, Capito, Niger, and their Colleagues, he was deſigned to be the Profeſſor of Divinity, with a Competent Sallary allowed; which place he diſcharged with the great Applauſe of Learned Men; and by the conſent of the Senate, he planted the French Church there, and ſetled Diſcipline in it. Thus was the Expectation of Sathan fruſtrated, Calvin ſetled in another place, and a New Church Erected for the former Subverted.

Is made Profeſſor of Divinity.

Yet in the mean time did not the Devil ceaſe to endeavour wholly to Eradicate the Church of Geneva: for which end he ſtirred up ſome Wicked Men, yet under the pretence of Piety, to bring in that Decree of changing Common Bread into Wafers; indeed onely to ſtir up New Controverſies: Wherein alſo Sathan failed not of his purpoſe, many Godly Men upon this occaſion abſtaining from the Sacrament, till Maſter Calvin by his Holy Letters had perſwaded them not to contend for a thing ſo indifferent in it ſelf. By this means Unleavened Bread was again brought into uſe in the Genevian Church: Concerning which, Calvin being afterwards reſtored, would never contend, and yet withall did not Diſſemble his Judgement about the ſame.

Unleavened bread brought into Geneva.

But behold! Preſently after fell out a far greater Evil, Anno Chriſti 1539, which yet by the Prudent Diligence of Maſter Calvin was quickly Extinguiſhed, which was this; There was the Biſhop of Carpentoratum, called James Sadolet, a Man of great Eloquence, which yet he abuſed to the ſubverſion of the Truth, for which cauſe he was made a Cardinal. This Man ſeeing the Flock deprived of ſuch able and Vigilant Shepherds, thought it a fit time to Enſnare them; For which end he wrote Letters under the pretence of his Neighbour-Hood, directed to his Dear Friends (as he called them) the Senate, Councell, and the People of Geneva, in which he Omitted no Arguments, whereby he might perſwade them to return into the Boſome of the Romiſh Church. And at this time there was no Man in Geneva, that would undertake to anſwer the ſame; ſo that probably theſe Letters would have done much miſchief, but that they were written in a Forragin Language. But when Maſter Calvin at Strasborough had read them, forgetting all the Wrongs which had been done him, he returned an anſwer ſo Speedily, Truly, and Eloquently, that the Cardinal, deſpairing of accompliſhing his end, wholly gave over his Deſign.

Sathans Subtilty.

Neither indeed did Maſter Calvin defer till this time the Manifeſting of his Paſtoral Bowels, which he yet retained to the Genevians, eſpecially to thoſe that ſuffered with him in the ſame cauſe, as may appear by thoſe excellent Epiſtles which he wrote to them the ſame Year wherein he was baniſhed. Wherein his Principall Scope was to exhort them to Repentance, to bear with the Wicked, to maintain Peace with their Paſtors, and to be frequent in calling upon God; as alſo to ſtir them up to expect light after thoſe deadly Miſts of Darkneſs, which he told them would follow, as alſo the Event ere long made to appear.

Calvins care of Geneva.

About the ſame time alſo he publiſhed his Inſtitutions much enlarged, and his Commentary upon the Romans, dedicated to Simon Grynaus his Dear Friend, and that Golden Book of his concerning the Lords-Supper, which he made for the uſe of his French Church, which Galaſius afterwards turned into Latine. In which he handled the Doctrine of the Sacrament ſo Dextrouſly, and Learnedly, that it ſerved to Determine the unhappy Controverſies about it, to the ſatisfaction of all Good and Learned Men.

men. Neither was his happineſſe leſſe in reclaiming many Anabaptiſts from their errors, amongſt whom were theſe two principall men, Paul Volſius, who afterwards was a Paſtor in the Church of Strasborough: the other was John Storder, who afterwards dying of the Plague, Mr. Calvin by the advice of Bucer married his Widow, called Idellita, a very grave and honeſt Matron.

Anabaptiſts Reclaimed.

Calvin marries.

In theſe ſtudies and labours did Mr. Calvin continue at Strasborough to the year 1541. In the which year the Emperour Charles the fifth aſſembled two Diets, the one at Worms, the other at Ratisbone, for compounding the differences about Religion: At both which, by the deſire of the Divines of Strasborough, Mr. Calvin was preſent, to the great advantage of the Churches, eſpecially of his own French Congregation, and where he was moſt lovingly entertained, and highly prized by Philip Melanct hon, and Gaſper Cruciger, ſo that Philip called him His Divine. He alſo had much private conference with them about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and they could not but very well approve of his opinion therein.

He goes to two Dites.

But now the time was come wherein the Lord purpoſed to ſhew mercy to his poor Church at Geneva: For one of the Syndics, who had promoted the Decree for their baniſhment, did ſo miſdemean himſelf in his Office, that being found guilty of ſedition, whilſt he thought to eſcape out at a window, being a fat man, he fell down, ſo bruiſed himſelf, that within a few dayes after he died. Another of them had his head cut off for a Murther; The other two, having done the Common-wealth much diſſervice in an Ambaſſy wherein they were employed, were faign to fly their Country, and were condemned in their abſence.

Gods judgments on his Enemies.

Thoſe evill inſtruments being thus removed, the City of Geneva began to call for their Farell and Calvin; But when by no means they could recover Farell from Neocom, where he was now ſetled, they uſed all their endeavours to procure Calvin; and for that end they ſent Ambaſſadors to Strasborough, uſing alſo the interceſſion of thoſe of Zurick, to requeſt that Mr. Calvin might be ſent back to them.

He is ſent for to Geneva.

The Senate of Strasborough were exceeding unwilling to hearken to it. Calvin himſelf, although he had not changed his mind towards the Genevians for the miſcarriages of ſome wicked men, yet abhorring to enter into new troubles, but eſpecially becauſe he found the Lord bleſſing his Miniſtry at Strasborough, did abſolutely refuſe to return. Beſides Bucer, and the other Paſtors, did profeſſe their great unwillingneſſe to part with him.

Hardly Obtained.

But the Genevians ſtill preſſing hard for him, Bucer at laſt thought that their requeſts ſhould be condeſcended to, at leaſt for a time, which yet was not granted by Mr. Calvin himſelf, till they had urged him with the judgement of God in caſe he refuſed, and with the example of Jonah. But this falling out juſt at the time when Calvin, with Bucer, was going to viſit the Diet at Ratisbone, his return was delayed for a time; and in the mean time the Genevians obtained of the Bernates that Peter Viret ſhould go from Lauſanna to Geneva; and indeed this made Mr. Calvin farre more willing to return to Geneva, when he ſaw that he was to have ſuch a Colleague, by whoſe labours and counſels he might be much furthered in reforming that Church.

So after ſome moneths Mr. Calvin went to Geneva, Sept. 13. Anno Chriſti 1541. being ſingularly welcomed by the people, and eſpecially by the Senate, who acknowledged the wonderfull mercy and goodneſs of God towards them, in reſtoring him to them again. And whereas the Senate of Strasborough had decreed that after a time he ſhould return to them again, they of Geneva would never give over till they had reverſed that Decree, which at laſt was yeelded to by them of Strasborough, yet with this Proviſo, that that penſion which they had ſetled upon him ſhould ſtill be continued to him; But Mr. Calvin could never be perſwaded to receive it, caring for nothing leſſe then for riches. Mr. Calvin being thus reſtored to his Church, and perceiving that the City needed ſuch bridles, he profeſſed that he could not comfortably exerciſe his Miniſtry amongſt them, except together with the Doctrine of the Goſpel, they would embrace the Presbyterian Government, for the well regulating of the Church. Hereupon Elders were choſen, and a Model of the Presbyterial Government

His return to Geneva. 1541.

His ſelf-denyall.

Government was drawn up, Conſonant to the Word of God, and Grateful to the Citizens, which the Devil afterwards ſought by all his Artifices to deſtroy, but all in vain.

He ſettles the Presbyterian Governme nt.

He wrote alſo a Catechiſme in French and Latine, nor much different from the former, but much Larger, divided into Queſtions and Anſwers, which indeed was an Admirable piece, and found ſuch approbation and entertainment abroad, that it was turned into High-Dutch, Engliſh, Scottiſh, Low Dutch, Spaniſh, yea and Immanuel Tremelius turned it into Hebrew, and Henry Steven's turned it into Greek alſo.

His great Labours.

His ordinary Labours were theſe. Every other Sabbath he Preached twice; Munday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday he read his Divinity Lectures. Every Thurſday he aſſiſted in the Conſiſtory for the Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical-Diſcipline. On Frydays he read a Lecture for the clearing of ſome hard Places of Scriptures. Beſides which, he wrote many Commentaries upon the Scriptures: Anſwered many Adverſaries to the Truth; Wrote many Letters to ſundry Places, of Advice, and Direction, in weighty buſineſſes. So that we have cauſe to wonder how it was poſſible for one Man to undergoe ſo many buſineſſes.

He made very much uſe of Farell and Viret, and yet himſelf Contributed much more to them. And Truly their Familiarity, as it was much envyed by the Wicked, ſo it was very Gratefull to all good Men. And it was a very Pleaſant ſight to behold theſe three Men, ſo famous in the Church, and all agreeing in the Work of the Lord, and yet ſo excelling in ſeveral Gifts of the Spirit. Farell exceeded in a certain greatneſs of Mind, whoſe thundring Sermons could not to be heard without Trembling, and whoſe Ardent Prayers would lift a Man up into Heaven. Viret did ſo excell in ſweet Eloquence, that he chained his Hearers to his lips. Calvin, look how many Words he ſpake, with ſo many Grave and Pithy Sentences he filled the minds of his Hearers: So that (ſaith Maſter Beza) I often thought that the Gifts of theſe three Men meeting in one, would make up a compleat Paſtor.

A compleat Preacher.

Beſides the forementioned Labours of Maſter Calvin, he had alſo the Charge and buſineſs of a Family to look after; Beſides many Forraign buſineſſes; For God ſo bleſſed his Miniſtry, that from all parts of the Chriſtian World he was ſought to, partly for Advice in matters of Religion, and partly to hear him Preach: So that at the ſame time there was an Italian Church, an Engliſh Church, and a Spaniſh Church, beſides the Church of Geneva, that that City ſeemed too little to Entertain all that came to it for his Sake.

He is much ſought To.

Thus, though he was loved of the Good, and feared of the Wicked; and things were excellently ſetled; Yet he did meet with many Oppoſitions for the Exerciſe of his Graces: For as ſoon as he returned to Geneva, being mindful of that ſaying of our Saviour, Seek firſt the Kingdom of God, and his Righteouſneſs, and all other things ſhall be added unto you: His firſt, and chiefeſt care was, by the conſent of the Senate, to ſetle ſuch an Eccleſiaſtical Polity as was moſt Conſonant to the Word of God: From which afterwards it ſhould not be Lawful, either for the Miniſters or People to Recede. But before Proof was made of it, not only ſome of the Common-People, but even of the chief Men that had caſt off Popery, and given their Names only to Chriſt, ſhewed their hatred againſt it. Yea ſome of thoſe Miniſters which continued there, when theſe three Good Men were caſt out (though the chiefeſt of them afterwards left their Stations) being found guilty of ſundry Wickedneſſes) although (being convinced in their Conſciences, they durſt not oppoſe it, yet) underhand they manifeſted their diſlike of it, and would by no meanes be brought into order: and that pretending the example of other Churches, wherein no Excommunication was uſed. Yea ſome of them cryed out that it would Introduce the Popiſh Tyranny again.

The Presbytery Government kickt at.

But Maſter Calvin overcame theſe difficulties by his Conſtancy, joyned with ſingular Moderation; ſhewing that not only the True Doctrine, but Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline was alſo to be fetched out of the Word of God, and that his had the Approbation of the moſt Learned men of that age, as Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, Zuichius, Melanchthon, Bucer, Capito and Myconius, which he proved out of their writings:

Its vindicated by Him

With-

Withall telling them, that other Christian Churches were not to be Condemned which had not proceeded so far, nor those Pastors which found that their people needed not such a bridle: And lastly, he shewed what a vast difference there was between the Popish Tyranny, and the easie Yoak of the Lord: So that he at last obtained that his Discipline was written, read, and confirmed by the Suffrages of the people, and generally received, November the twentieth 1541.

But though these things were so happily carryed on, yet Master Calvin, considering that he was like to meet with some difficulties in the Exercise of it, did his utmost endeavour that Viret, who was only lent them by the Bernates for a time, and Farel, who was now setled at Neocome, might be joyned with him as his perpetual Fellow-Pastors; but he could not possibly effect it: Viret presently after returning to Lausanna, and Farel remaining at Neocome, so that the whole praise of setling the Genevian Church is due to Master Calvin alone.

1542. He comforts the persecuted.

The year following, viz. 1542. Master Calvin met with many Afflictions, some at home, but especially by the enflamed fury of the Adversaries of the Truth abroad, in France and Italy, whence they drave away many Professors of the Gospel, for the Comforting of whom, he layd out himself exceedingly, writing many encouraging Letters every way, both to those that were escaped, and to those also that yet remained within the reach of the Lions Jaws.

Famine and Pestilence.

The same year also there fell out two other great Evils, Famine and Pestilence, it's usual Companion; and at this time the custom of Geneva was, that such as were Infected with the Pestilence, should be removed into an Hospital out of the City, where, being in need of a constant and Sedulous Pastor, when, by reason of the Danger most Men refused it, there were three that offered themselves, viz. Calvin, Sebastian Castalio, and Blanchet; and Lots being cast between these three, it fell upon Castalio, who notwithstanding his former forwardness, now shamefully drew back; and refused it; and when Calvin would have cast Lots again, the Senate, and Blanchet (who now took this Work upon him) would not suffer it.

Sathans Malice

About this time also other Mischiefs fell out; For Peter Tossanus, the Pastor of Montbelgard, was much troubled about the Controversie of the Lords Supper; And at Basil, where the Foundation of Church Government was scarce layd (do Myconius what he could to the contrary) it was by some Evil affected Persons subverted; and both these Men had recourse to Master Calvin for his Counsel. And at Neocome, though Master Farel laboured with good success, yet the Work of the Lord was much Obstructed, partly by open force, and partly by that Apostate Peter Caroli, of whom we spake of before; about which business we may discern Master Calvins labours, partly by his printed Letters, and partly by the Testimony of such as were Eye-witnesses of it.

Popish Impudence.

But there was a far more audacious Act of the Sorbonists at this time, who neither having Authority from God nor Man, yet dared to impose sundry Articles of Christian Religion, as they called them, but such indeed as were stuffed with so many errors, and foolleries, wherein that society of men did abound, as that it was a wonder how any Man that had the use of reason should assent thereunto, yet many, partly through fear, and partly through ignorance, subscribed them. Wherefore Master Calvin answered them, learnedly confuting their Errors by solid Arguments, and so set forth their fooleries, that every Man which was not wilfully blind might easily discern the same.

He answers the Sorbonists.

1543.

Thus ended this year, to which the next succeeded, no whit milder, either in regard of the Famine or Pestilence, which infested all Savoy; and Master Calvin proceeding according to his accustomed manner, confirmed his own at home, and strongly opposed the Adversaries abroad; publishing his four Books about Free-will, which he dedicated to Phil. Melanchthon, against Albert Pighius, the greatest Sophister of his Age, and who had singled out Calvin for his Antagonist, being promised a Cardinals Hat, if he could carry away the Victory from him. But being frustrated of his Labour, he gat that which the enemies of the Truth only deserve, viz. That he stank amongst Learned and Good Men, himself being deceived by the Devil. How much Melanchthon esteemed of those Books of Master Calvin, himself Testifies in his Epiſtles which are in Print. Maſter Calvin alſo the ſame Year wrote to the Church at Montbelgard, whereby the Mouths of Calumniators may be ſtopped, who accuſe him of two much Rigidneſs in the Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline.

He answers Pighius.

1544. Caſtalio's Errors.

The year following, which was Anno Chriſti, 1544. Maſter Calvin declared his Opinion about the purpoſe of the Church of Neocome in Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures; And at home Sebaſtian Caſtalio, whom we mentioned before, being a light Man, and very Ambitious, having Tranſlated the New-Teſtament into French, was Exceedingly diſpleaſed, that Maſter Calvin did not approve of it; Yea, he grew ſo Angry, that he vented divers Errors, and not content there-with, he publickly Preached, that the Canticles of Solomon, was an Impure and Obſcæne Song, and therefore would needs have it Expunged out of the Sacred Canon; and becauſe the Miniſters Oppoſed him, he railed exceedingly againſt them; which they Judging unfit for them to bear, called him before the Senate, where being heard with much Patience, he was at laſt Condemned of Slanders, and Commanded to depart out of the City.

His Puniſhment.

From thence he went to Baſil, where being at laſt admitted, what his carriage was there, is beſides my purpoſe. The year before, the Emperor Charles the fifth, being to War againſt the King of France, had promiſed the Germans that they ſhould not be moleſted for their Religion, till a General Council ſhould be called, which as he told them, he would take care to be effected. This the Pope Paul the third was much Incenſed at, and publiſhed an harſh Expoſtulation againſt the Emperor, becauſe he had equalized the Hereticks with the Catholicks, & had thruſt his ſickle into another Mans Harveſt: The Emperour anſwered, That which he thought to be Reaſon: But Maſter Calvin, becauſe he ſaw in the Popes Letters, that the Truth of the Goſpel did ſuffer, together with the Innocency of good Men, took him up very roundly, and repreſſed his Impudence.

He confutes the Pope.

At this time a Diet was Aſſembled at Spires, upon which occaſion Calvin publiſhed the Book Of the neceſſity of Reforming the Church, then which that Age produced not a Book of that Subject, that was more weighty and Nervous. The ſame year alſo Maſter Calvin in two Books, did ſo Confute the Anabaptiſts and Libertines (who had Revived the Monſtrous Hereſies of former Ages) that whoſoever read them, except he was willing to it, could not be deceived by them, and they which had been formerly deceived, could not but be reclaimed to the Truth. Yet the Queen of Navar was offended with his Book againſt the Libertines, being ſo bewitched with two of the chief Patrons of that Hereſie; Quintinus and Pocquetus, whom Calvin had noted by Name, that though ſhe was not otherwiſe tainted with their Errors, yet ſhe had a great Opinion that they were good men, and therefore took her ſelf to be wounded through their ſides: which when Maſter Calvin underſtood, he wrote to her with Admirable Moderation, as not unmindful of her Dignity, nor of all the good ſhe had done for the Church of God, and yet withall, as became a Faithfull Servant of Jeſus Chriſt; He reprehended her Imprudence, for admitting ſuch men, and aſſerted the Authority of his Miniſtry, and he ſo far prevailed, that the men of that Abominable Sect of Libertines, which began apace to Flock into France, afterwards kept themſelves in Holland and the Countries Adjacent.

He confutes the Anabaptiſts and Libertines.

He pacifies the Q. of Navar.

The Labours of this year being finiſhed, the ſucceeding year being 1545, brought New and greater Labours with it: For the Plague increaſing in the City, and Neighbour Villages, ſeemed as if it would devour all be fore it, and Coveteouſneſs ſo prevailed with the Poor People, who were imployed to attend the Rich in their Sickneſs, and to cleanſe their Houſes, that by an Horrible Conſpiracy amongſt themſelves, with a Peſtilentious Ointment, they anointed the Poſts, Threſholds and Doors of many Houſes, whereby a more grievous Peſtilence enſued; and theſe Wicked Inſtruments of the Divel had bound themſelves to Sathan by an Oath, that by no Torments they ſhould Confeſs their wickedneſs: Yet many of them being taken in the City and Villages, were puniſhed according to their deſerts.

1541.

The plague diſperſed by wicked Perſons.

They are Puniſhed.

It's almoſt Incredible what Envy and Reproach, this Act brought upon Geneva, and eſpe-eſpecially upon Maſter Calvin, as if the Devil ſhould rule there altogether, where he was moſt oppoſed. This year was alſo Infamous by that Abominable and cruel Edict which the Parliament of Aquitane ſet forth againſt the Poor Waldenſes of Merindol, Cabriers, and thoſe Parts, whereby moſt unheard-of Cruelties were Exerciſed, not againſt ſome few, but againſt all of them, without any Diſtinction of Ages or Sex, yea to the very burning of their Towns.

Popiſh cruelty againſt the Waldenſes.

Some of theſe that eſcaped flying to Geneva, Maſter Calvin was the more afflicted for them, and careſull of them, becauſe, a little before, he had written Conſolatory Letters to them, and ſent them faithful Paſtors for the Inſtructing of them purely out of the Goſpel, and had alſo (where they were in danger before) preſerved them by his Interceſſion to the Germane Princes, and Helvetians. The unhappy Controverſie alſo of the Lords Supper ſprang up again; Oſiander, a man of a Proud and monſtrous Wit, Reviving it out of the Aſhes: For the quenching of which flame Maſter Calvin did what poſſibly he could, as may appear by his Letters which he wrote to Melanctbon about the ſame. But the Intemperancy of Oſiander was ſuch, that he would by by no means hearken to the wholſome Counſel that was given him by thoſe two men.

Oſianders Errors.

In the mean while, the Plague ſtill raging in the City, took away many good men: Whereupon Maſter Calvin out of the Pulpit Thundred againſt many Wickedneſſes, eſpecially againſt Whoredome, which was not laid aſide, notwithſtanding that Judgement of God amongſt them. Good Men aſſented to this which Maſter Calvin ſpake, but ſome there were of the great Men of the City, which hindred the Reformation hereof, till at laſt they ruined themſelves thereby: And to all theſe Evils this was added to compleat them, that now (though very unſeaſonable) the Controverſie about the Priviledges of the City ſprang up, neither could the faithfull Paſtors be ſuffered to diſpoſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Goods taken from the Pontificians, as they ought to be. About this buſineſs were many Clamours, many Complaints, and much Pains taken by writing, and conference, but they proved all in vain; whereupon Maſter Calvin did publickly profeſs, that he could not endure ſo many Sacriledges, which he knew would at the length be ſeverely puniſhed by God, yet withall, he acknowledged the Juſtice of God, in that the Goods which were formerly ſo unjuſtly gotten by the Maſs-Prieſts, God would not ſuffer them to be brought into the Churches Treaſury.

Plague continued. He thunders againſt Sin.

He abhors Sacriledge.

Maſter Calvin yet met with two more things which did afflict him this year. A wicked fellow was returned to Geneva, his own Country, who for a time had lived as an Hermite in France. This Man pretending to the Reformed Religion, Maſter Calvin (who was very Acute in prying into mens Minds, and Manners) taking notice of him, Admoniſhed him firſt gently, and afterwards more freely, and at laſt reproved him for carrying himſelf more Proudly in the Congregation then beſeemed him. The Man not bearing this, eaſily found out ſuch as had been reproved for their wickedneſs by Maſter Calvin, by whoſe favour and help he might be aſſiſted; ſo that a Paſtor being to be choſen in the room of one that was Dead, this man by the help of his Companions, ſought the place, and ſo far prevailed, that the Senate commanded that in the Election regard ſhould be had of him. Maſter Calvin with his Colleagues oppoſed it, ſhewing how far this is ſeeking to intrude himſelf was Diſſonant from the Word of God, and at length obtained of the Senate, that they ſhould proceed in their Election according to the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions formerly agreed upon.

A Hermites wickedneſs.

At this ſame time alſo there were many in France, who being falne at firſt through fear of Perſecution, began at laſt to pleaſe themſelves with this conceit, that it was no ſin to be preſent with their bodies at the Popiſh ſervices, ſo they kept the True Religion in their Hearts. This pernicious Error was long ſince Condemned by the Fathers: Againſt theſe Maſter Calvin wrote, and confuted that error; and becauſe theſe perſons thought him too rigid, he adjoyned to his own, the opinions of theſe learned and godly Divines, Philip Melanctbon, Bucer, Peter Martyr, and the Church of Zurick, ſo that the name of theſe Nicodemites ſtank amongſt all good men, for ſo were they called who cloaked their errors with his example.

The Nicodemites.

1546. Geneva in Danger.

The next year, being 1546. proved nothing milder then the former. For frequent intelligence came of the preparations of the Emperor, and the Popes frauds againſt the Proteſtants: Wherefore Mr. Calvin judged it neceſſary to confirm the mindes of the Citizens againſt the terrour of theſe reports, eſpecially conſidering the impudency of many wicked men, who were ſo farre from being curbed by all the bridles of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, that on the contrary they raged the more, and ſought to break them all in ſunder. Theſe men having gotten one Amedius Perrinus, a vain, bold, and ambitious man, for their Captaine; (for indeed he had long before procured to be choſen the Captaine General by the Suffrages of the people,) This man ſuppoſing (as the truth was) that neither he, nor ſuch like himſelf could ſtand whilſt the Eccleſiaſtical Lawes were in force, and eſpecially whilſt Mr. Calvin did ſo thunder againſt their laſciviouſneſſe, began now to diſcover what he, and his aſſociates had been long contriving; which being taken notice of, and ſpeedily prevented by the authority of the Senate, he indeed held his peace, but the contrived wickedneſſe preſently brake out more openly.

Perrins Wickedneſs.

Calvin Accuſed.

For ſhortly after, one of the Senators in a publick aſſembly of the people blamed Calvin as one that taught falſe Doctrine; ſuborned (as was ſuppoſed) hereunto privately by two of the Colledge of Paſtors, both of them being Drunkards, and therefore no whit leſſe fearing the ſeverity of the Laws then the others forementioned. But Mr. Calvin made little account of this barking. Yet this man that thus accuſed him, was called before the Senate, and his cauſe being heard, was condemned for ſlander, and thoſe two drunken Miniſters which had ſet him on, were removed out of their places, being forbidden going into Taverns: Whereby we ſee, that the wickedneſs of the wicked returns upon his own pate.

His enemies Puniſhed.

1547. The German Church in great Danger.

The troubles of this year being thus ended, the next year, which was 1547, proved far worſe, indeed that Age ſaw not a more calamitous time then that was; The Churches of Germany ſeeming to be utterly ſubverted, the Proteſtant Princes taken, and Cities yeelding up themſelves, after ſo great labour uſed, and ſo great difficulties paſſed through in planting the Goſpel amongſt them, with what great grief the godly ſoul of Mr. Calvin was afflicted for the deſolations of the Churches, is not eaſie to expreſs, eſpecially if we conſider that great affection which he bore to them, though farre remote from him, which indeed was no other then if he had bore them all upon his ſhoulders. And indeed he was wonderfully grieved when he heard of thoſe holy men, his worthy friends Philip Melanchthon, Bucer, Peter Martyr, &c. in ſo great danger that they ſeemed nearer death than life.

His tender affections to Them.

But yet, that Mr. Calvin bore up with a valiant mind in this tempeſt, appears both by his writings and by his carriage; For being much vexed at home by ſundry wicked men, yet would he not ſtart at all from his fixed courſe. To ſpeak ſomewhat of his domeſtick troubles, Mr. Calvin wholly imploying himſelf to ſhew, that the life of Chriſtianity did not ſo much conſiſt in vain ſpeculation as in practiſe, he neceſſarily met with thoſe enemies which did not onely oppoſe all piety, and honeſty, but threatened warre to their own country: The chief of theſe was that Perrinus, before mentioned, who with his companions had brought themſelves into this condition, that they muſt needs uſe extremity; For which end they appealed from the Presbytery to the Senate. The Presbytery on the contrary pleaded their Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, agreeable to the Word of God, and ſetled by Authority; and therefore they deſired the Senate that their priviledges might not be infringed. The Senate concluded that the Eccleſiaſtical Laws being eſtabliſhed, ought not to be violated. But when this audacious fellow would not otherwiſe be ruled, the Senate decreed that he ſhould be depoſed from his Captainſhip, and live a private life.

Perrins Wickedneſſe.

He is Puniſhed.

Though all theſe things were tranſacted before the Senate, yet was Mr. Calvin wonderfully afflicted by them; For once upon a publick hearing, there was ſuch a tumult raiſed, that they were very near imbruing their hands each in others Blood; which ſedition Calvin with his Colleagues hearing of, interpoſed themſelves, though it was with the perill of his life (the faction of the wicked being moſt againſt him) and ſtopped it. Yet theſe men proceeding in their wickedneſſe, hated him the more more for it. So that Mr. Calvin ſharply reproved them for it in his Sermons; and Gods judgements threatned by him proved not in vain: For one of them writing an infamous Libel, and affixing it to his pulpit, wherein were contained many railings againſt the ſacred Miniſtry, and particularly againſt Mr. Calvin, that he deſerved to be thrown into the River of Rhodanus: This man being apprehended and convicted of theſe, and many other horrid Blaſphemies, had his head cut off. And after his death there was another Libell found written by his own hand, containing Blaſphemies againſt Moſes, and Chriſt himſelf, with which impiety there was no doubt but that he had infected others.

At this very time, and in the middeſt of theſe troubles, Mr. Calvin wrote his Antidote againſt the Seven Seſſions of the Councell of Trent. He alſo, ſending Letters to the Church of Chriſt in Roan, confirmed them againſt the fraud of a certain Franciſcan Fryer, who had ſpread the poyſonſom Doctrines of the Libertines and Carpocratians amongſt them. He writes againſt Trent.

The year following, which was 1548, the evill of the aforenamed faction in Geneva brake forth again: The Devil (which is almoſt incredible) abuſing thoſe perſons to be inſtruments thereof, who indeed were the greateſt enemies to it, viz. Farel, and Viret. Theſe men coming to Geneva made a grave Oration in the Senate about compoſing their differences, Mr. Calvin required nothing but that thoſe men ſhould mend their manners, and Perrinus with his aſſociates promiſed any thing, ſo he might be reſtored to his former place. But Perrinus being reſtored to his place, he, and his wicked companions grew ſo impudent, that they cut their cloathes croſſe on their breaſts that they might know each other; others of them called their dogs by the name of Calvin: Others inſtead of Calvin called him Cain: others out of an hatred to Mr. Calvin, profeſſed that they would not come to the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. 1548. Sathans Subtilty. Calvin Reproached.

All which Mr. Calvin and his Colleagues did boldly, and faithfully reprove, and when they were called before the Senate, the innocency of the good men eaſily carried away the victory. So that the Amneſtie [or forgetfulneſſe of wrongs] was ſolemnly ſworn to Decemb. 18. But it afterwards appeared that all this was done thorough diſſimulation, and that Perrin ſought nothing thereby, but to be choſen a Syndic, that he, and his might by that meanes have the more liberty to act all their wickedneſſe, as the event declared. An Amneſty.

Mr. Calvin in the midſt of theſe broils, was ſo farre from giving over his accuſtomed labours, that (as if nothing had moleſted him) he wrote learned Commentaries upon ſix of Pauls Epiſtles: as alſo by weighty Arguments confuted the Interim, which was publiſhed for the deſtruction of the German Churches, ſhewing withall the right courſe for the reſtoring of thoſe Churches. He diſcovered alſo in a Book, the vanity and falſhood of Judiciall Aſtrology, which many began now to give too much heed to; And being ſaluted by Letter from Brentius, now in exile, he wrote conſolatory Letters to him, in which friendſhip it had been happy if Brentius had continued. Bucer alſo being a baniſhed man in England at this time, Calvin wrote to him to declare and open his mind more fully about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and comforted him in a moſt friendly manner. He alſo wrote Letters of advice to the Duke of Summer-ſet, now Protector of England (who afterwards ſuffered an unworthy death) about ſuch matters, as if his counſell had been hearkened to; it had been happy for England, and perhaps the Church there had happily advoyded many of thoſe ſtorms which afterwards befell it. He confutes the Interim. And Aſtrologers. He writes into England.

In the midſt of theſe contentions the Church of Geneva did wonderfully encreaſe, which did exceedingly torment the Devil and his inſtruments, and Mr. Calvin was very ſolicitous to entertain, and provide for ſuch as were Baniſhed for the name of Chriſt: Which care of his it pleaſed God ſo to bleſs the year following, that the fury of thoſe wicked men, though it was not quite extinct, yet for the preſent it was laid aſleep: And truly he had need of ſuch a truce, being grievouſly afflicted with a domeſtick accident: For at this time he loſt his dear Wife, a very choice woman; yet did he bear this accident with ſuch conſtancy, that therein he gave an excellent example of fortitude to the whole Church. The Church increaſeth in Troubles. 1549. His wife Dyes.

The ſame year there aroſe a great Contention in the Saxon Churches about Things Indifferent: Whereupon ſending to Maſter Calvin for his Judgment, he freely declared his Opinion to them. He alſo Admoniſhed Melanthon of his Duty, whom ſome Accuſed for two much ſoftneſs in this Point; But Maſter Calvin afterwards found it to be a falſe Charge. For at this time, it was unknown with what mind and Spirit the whole Troop of Flaccians were carryed, which afterwards raiſed ſuch great Troubles to the Church, and were Acted with ſuch fury and Impudence, as if they had been hired by the Pope of Rome, to carry on his cauſe. But it pleaſed God to Compenſate this Wound inflicted upon the Churches of Germany, by a great Bleſſing upon the Helvetians: For Farel and Calvin going to Zurick, when many thought that Maſter Calvin did too much favour the Doctrine of Conſubſtantiation, in a Synod of all the Helvetian and Rhetian Churches, he ſhewed his agreement with them; and indeed there was no great difficulty to bring good men and lovers of the truth into an harmonious Concord.

The Flaccians.

A ſweet concord.

This agreement of the Helvetian & Rhetians Churches was written, which did more and more unite Bullinger and Calvin, and the Church of Zurick with that of Geneva. Maſter Calvin alſo about this time wrote two Learned Epiſtles to Lælius Socinus, the Poyſon of whoſe Opinions did not appear till after his Death; for in his life time, going through the Churches he had deceived Melanthon, Calvin, and Camerarius; But afterwards it appeared, that he had much favoured Servetus, Caſtallio, and Ochin, and their mad Opinions: for his Commentary upon the firſt Chapter of John comming forth, ſhewed that he went beyond the Impiety of all thoſe Hereticks, which had corrupted the moſt Divine Portion of Scripture.

He writes to L. Socinus

Anno Chriſti 1550. ſucceeding, the Church of Chriſt enjoyed Peace, and then it was Decreed in Geneva, that the Miniſters, not only in their Sermons, which many neglected, and others heard with ſmall profit; But from houſe to houſe at many ſeaſons of the Year ſhould divide the City amongſt them, and require of every Family an account of their Faith; by which means it's ſcarce credible what profit came to the people thereby. Another Decree for the aboliſhing of Chriſtmas-Day, and that no Holy-Day ſhould be obſerved but the Sabbath only; which did ſo offend ſome Looſe Perſons, that they bruited abroad, that Maſter Calvin had aboliſhed the Sabbaths, to bring the greater Odium upon him. This Offence taken by ſome, occaſioned Calvin to write his Book of Scandals, Dedicated to Laurence Normendius, his intimate Friend.

1550. Peace in the Church. Miniſters pattern.

Holy-Days aboliſhed.

Anno Chriſti 1551. Great contentions brake out in the Church, and this year was begun with the Death of Bucer, to the great grief of the whole Church, and of Maſter Calvin eſpecially, who always highly priſed him. About the ſame time dyed Joachim Vadian, a Senator of Geneva, a man endued with ſingular learning and Piety; Whereupon the wickedneſs of the factious Perſons brake forth again, which had ſlept a great while. Theſe men would by no means ſuffer the Exiles which fled thither for Religion, to injoy the priviledges of the City; and not content therewith, Maſter Calvin having been forth to Preach beyond the Rhodanus, as he came home, they entertained him with ſcorns, and one Raymund, his Colleague, having occaſion one Evening to paſs the Bridge over the Rhodanus, they had almoſt caſt him into the River; And laſtly, they raiſed a great Tumult in the Church of Saint Gervaſe, becauſe a Child being brought to be Baptized, the Miniſter refuſed to give him the name of Balthazar (which Name had been for ſome reaſon, Forbidden by their Law.) Neither could Maſter Calvin tell how to cure theſe Evils, but by his Invincible Patience.

Wickedneſs diſcovered.

A Tumult.

About the ſame time another miſchief invaded the Church of Geneva, which was occaſioned by one Jerome Bolſec, a Fryar Carmelite of Paris, who had indeed laid aſide his Coul, but not his Monkiſh Mind. This Man firſt fled to the Dutcheſs of Ferrara, whom he deceived, till being found out, he was driven from thence. Then pretending to be a Phyſitian, he came to Geneva, but the Learned Phyſitians there, rejecting him; that he might manifeſt himſelf a Divine, he vented ſome falſe and abſurd Opinions about Predeſtination, firſt in private, and then in the publick Congregation.

Bolſec.

Him

Him therefore did Maſter Calvin Confute, firſt with a moderate Reproof only, then ſending for him to him, he laboured to inſtruct him better; But he, either puffed up with his Monkiſh Pride, or provoked by the ſeditious Perſons, ſeeking by him to provoke Maſter Calvin, took the boldneſs upon the ſixteenth of October to Preach upon this Text, He that is of God, heareth the Words of God, and they which hear them not, are not of God; whence he took occaſion to Preach up Free-Will, and that Predeſtination was out of Works foreſeen; withall reproaching the True Doctrine, and ſhewing himſelf ſeditiouſly proud; and he became the more bold, becauſe, ſeeing Maſter Calvin's Seat empty, he judged him to be abſent: But indeed Maſter Calvin coming late, ſate behind ſome others; and when the Fryer had done, Maſter Calvin ſuddenly ſtanding up, though he had thought of no ſuch thing before, then truly, if at any time, he ſhewed what a man he was; confuting the Fryer with ſo many Teſtimonies of Scripture, with ſo many places out of Saint Auguſtine, and laſtly, with ſo many weighty Arguments, that all were aſhamed of what he had taught, but only the impudent fellow himſelf: Inſomuch that one of the Magiſtrates of the City apprehended him, and Committed him to Priſon for a Seditious perſon, and after hearing and examining his cauſe, the Judgment of the Senate of the Helvetian Churches being alſo requeſted, upon the twenty third day of December, He was publickly Condemned for Sedition, and Pelagianiſme, and baniſhed the City, being threatned with ſevere Puniſhment, if he were afterwards found either in the City, or Territories belonging to it.

Confuted by Calvin.

Bolſec Puniſhed.

After this going into a Neighbour Town, he was the cauſe of many and great ſtirs there, till he was twice expelled the Country of the Bernates. From thence going into France, he ſought to get into the Miniſtry in the Reformed Churches, which he found in a Peaceable condition; firſt in Paris, then in Orleans, pretending great Penetency for his former miſcarriages, and of his own accord, ſeeking Reconciliation with the Church of Geneva: But preſently after, when he ſaw the Churches under Affliction, he fell back to his Popery, loading the Reformed Churches with many Reproaches.

He falls back to Popery.

At the ſame time, the Colledge of Miniſters at Geneva, in a publick meeting aſſerted the true Doctrine of Predeſtination, which Calvin put into writing: So that all the Devil gat by theſe Contentions was, that that head of Chriſtian Religion which before was very Obſcure, was now very clearly opened to the underſtanding of all that were not Contentious.

The year following which was 1551. it further appeared what a flame this wicked Varlet had kindled, though Condemned by the Common Judgment of ſo many Churches. For the difficulty of the Queſtion having not been ſufficently explicated by the Ancients, did ſtir up, eſpecially ſome curious Wits, to make inquiry into the ſame. By which means the factious Perſons (ſuppoſing that they had gotten an excellent Advantage againſt Maſter Calvin) thought that by removing him they might ſubvert all things: So that it cannot be imagined what ſtirs aroſe, not only in the City, but alſo in other places, as if the Devil had ſet all his Engines on work to raiſe contentions. For though there was a ſweet agreement amongſt the chief Paſtors of the Churches, yet there were not ſome wanting in the Country of the Bernates which Accuſed Calvin, as if he had made God the Author of ſin: Being forgetfull how far he had profeſſedly oppoſed that Curſed Tenet, when he had confuted the Libertines.

1551. New Stirs.

Calvin falſly Accuſed.

At Baſil, Caſtalio, a good and ſimple Man, though he did all things cloſely, yet it was diſcerned that he defended Pelagianiſme, and Melanchthon had ſo begun to write of theſe things, that though he had formerly ſubſcribed Calvin's Book againſt Pighius, yet he ſeemed to brand the Genevians, as if they held the Fate of the Stoicks. The Pontificians alſo, though they had been a thouſand times confuted, yet renewed their old ſlanders. Theſe things did much trouble Maſter Calvin's mind, and ſo much the rather, becauſe the efficacy of Error was ſo great at this time, that the mouth of Truth in ſome places ſeemed to be ſtopt by publick Authority. Neither was this a Controverſie of a few years.

Caſtalio's Errour.

This ſame year that good Hermite, whom we mentioned before, appeared publickly lickly to dispute with Calvin, who had suffered a repulse when some years before he had sought to creep into the Ministery; whereupon he turned Lawyer, and the Patron of the factious persons. Their cause came to be heard before the Senate, with a great contention on both sides; The first, fighting with impudency, and the favour of the wicked, but Mr. Calvin defending his Doctrine only with the authority of truth. And the truth prevailed, Mr. Calvins writings being judged pious and Orthodox by his very Adversaries. But the repentance of this his adversary is not to be passed over In silence; for a few years after, when he lay upon his death-bed, he professed that he could have no peace of conscience till Mr. Calvin had forgiven him, which he not onely did speedily, but comforted and confirmed him to his last hour.

The Hermites wickedness.

His Repentance.

Calvins charity to him.

Anno Christi 1553. The malice of the factious brake out so impetuously, that not onely the Church, but even the Common-wealth, was brought into extream hazard thereby; for they proceeded so far by their Clamours and Threats, and by their number oppressing the Liberty of Good Men, that the Ancient Edicts about Constituting of Senators was by them dissolved; and pretending that they were afraid of the forreign Exiles, they took from them all their Weapons and Swords (except when they Travelled abroad) so that nothing seemed remaining, but when they had got all the power into their own hands, that they should then effect what they had often aimed at.

1553. Geneva Indangered.

The Devil also then Ministred another occasion of Troubles, for the ancient Enemy of the Sacred Trinity, and of the True God, Michael Servetus a very Monster, Composed of many Ancient and Prodigious Heresies, having gone about a long time as a Physitian, and spread his Blasphemies under the name of Michael Villanovanus, at last published a great Book at Vienna, belonging to Geneva, the Printer whereof was Arnollet of Lyons, the Corrector to the Press William Guerotius, long agoe addicted to the factious Genevistes, but a few Moneths before being like to be punished for his Whoredomes, and other Wickednesses, was fled from Geneva to Lyons.

M. Servetus.

This Servetus having published his Book, stuffed with Blasphemies, was at Vienna cast into Prison for the same, but making an escape, he came (by a secret Providence) to Geneva, thinking to pass further, but (as God would have it) being discovered, and Master Calvin acquainting the Magistrates with it, they cast him into Prison: Much means was used to bring him to a sight of his Wickedness, and to Repentance for the same; But when this desperate wretch (encouraged by some of the chief of the factious persons) would not be brought to a Recantation of his abominable Blasphemies, by the Common consent of all the Helvetian Churches, he was Condemned to Death, and upon the seven and twentieth of October, without any signe of Repentance, was burned alive.

Servetus Imprisoned.

He is Burned.

The same year Master Farell being very sick, Master Calvin went to Neocome to visit him; But his Disease prevailing, he left him for Dead; Yet it pleased God wonderfully beyond Expectation to raise him up again, to the great Joy of the Church.

Whilst the businesses of Servetus were in Agitation, there rose up amongst the factions, one Bertelerius, a most impudent man, who for many wickednesses was suspended from the Sacrament by the Presbytery; whereupon he went to the Senate, desiring by them to be absolved, which being effected, there was no doubt but the Raines of Ecclesiastical Discipline being let loose, all things would grow into confusion; Therefore Master Calvin in the name of the Presbytery opposed it, shewing that the Christian Magistrate ought to preserve, not to destroy the Ecclesiastical Constitutions: Yet the false clamours of the Adversaries prevailed, who said that the Presbytery encroached upon the Authority of the Magistrate, so that in a Meeting of the Common-Counsel it was Decreed, that the last Appeal ought to be to the Senate, who might absolve whom they thought fit. After which, the Senate, not much minding the business, suffered this Bertelerius Surreptitiously to get Letters of Absolution from them, confirmed by the Seal of the Common-Wealth. But Perinus and his Companions, hoped that one of these two things would follow, viz.

Bertelerius his Wickednesses.

The Presbytery Slandered.

An unjust Decree.

That

that either Calvin would not obey this mandat of the Senate,& ſo he would be oppreſſed by the people in a tumult; or elſe that he would obey it,& then it would be eaſie for them to diſſolve the Decrees of the Presbytery,and ſo open a door to all licentiouſneſs.

But Mr. Calvin (though he had notice of this but two days before the Sacrament was to be Adminiſtred, in the Moneth of September) in the time of his Sermon, lifting up his voice, and ſtretching forth his hand, ſpake much againſt the contemners, and Profaners of thoſe Sacred Myſteries: But I (ſaith he) following Chryſoſtome, will rather ſuffer my ſelf to be Slaine, than this Hand of mine ſhall reach the Holy Elements to thoſe that have been Judged contemners of God. This Speech (which is wonderfull to obſerve) did ſo far prevail with them (who otherwiſe were Head-ſtrong enough) that Perinus ſent privately to Bertlerius, commanding him not to obtrude himſelf upon the Sacrament, and ſo (through God's Mercy) the Sacrament was peacably Adminiſtred, and received with a certain Trembling, as if God himſelf had been preſent in their ſight. Calvins Courage. The good Succeſſe.

In the Afternoon Maſter Calvin Preached upon that Text in the Acts, wherein Paul took his leave of the Church of Epheſus, wherein he profeſſed that he was not the Man that would himſelf oppoſe or teach others to oppoſe the Decree of the Magiſtrate, exhorting the Congregation to perſevere in that Doctrine wherein they had been taught, as if he had taken his laſt farewell of Geneva. And ſeeing (ſaith he) things are come to this paſs, give me leave (Brethren) to uſe the words of the Apoſtle to you, I commend you to God, and the words of his grace; which words as they wonderfully daunted the wicked, ſo they prevailed much more with the godly party, to put them in mind of their duty.

The day after Mr. Calvin with his Colleagues, and the whole Presbytery intreated the Senate, and the Common Councell that they might be heard before the people, whilſt they ſhould give in reaſons for the abrogating of that fore-named Law. This was eaſily aſſented to, their minds being wonderfully changed; and it was decreed, that that Law ſhould be ſuſpended, and that the judgement of the four Helvetian Cities ſhould be deſired therein; and that nothing in the mean time ſhould be acted that was prejudicial to the Laws formerly eſtabliſhed. An unjuſt decree Reverſed.

Thus this tempeſt was rather diſperſed then wholly quieted, which beyond hope, being diverted from Mr. Calvin, the factious ſought to bring it upon the head of Mr. Farell: For Maſter Farell, as ſoon as he was recovered of his great ſickneſſe, came to Geneva, and there in a Sermon ſharply reproved the factious, partly relying upon the juſtneſſe of the cauſe, and partly upon his age, and that ancient Authority which he had amongſt them. But they, complaining that he had done them much wrong, when he was returned to Neocome, appointed him a day to anſwer it before the Senate, and withall ſent to the Senate at Neocome that he might appear at the day appointed. He came therefore again to Geneva, yet not without danger, whilſt the factious cryed out that he deſerved to be thrown into the River of Rhodanus: but an honeſt young man of the Citizens adviſed Perinus, that Mr. Farell, the common Father of the City, might be no way wronged; joyning alſo with himſelf another honeſt young man, they gave notice to the well affected Citizens, that they ſhould ſtand by Mr. Farell at the day of hearing, which alſo they did; ſo that his Adverſaries being aſtoniſhed and deterred hereat, of their own accord craved pardon, and Mr. Farell was diſmiſſed. Mr. Farell in Danger. Yet Delivered.

About this time a grievous calamity befell the Church of England by the immature death of that godly Prince, King Edward the ſixth, which was a grievous wound to all the Reformed Churches. Yet at this ſame time Mr. Calvin wrote his learned Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. John. King Edwards Death.

Geneva (as we heard before) having inflicted deſerved puniſhment upon Servetus, not as upon a Sectary, but as upon a monſter for his horrible impieties and Blaſphemies, by which for thirty years ſpace he had infected the Chriſtian world both by his teaching and writings: It cannot be imagined how this ſtirred up the rage of Sathan, ſuch a flame ariſing from hence as ſet Poland firſt, then Tranſſylvania and Hungary all on fire, which himſelf ſeemed to fore-tell by the ſpirit of Sathan, when in the beginning of his Book he ſet this ſentence out of the Revelation, There was a great Battle in heaven, Michael, and his Angels fighting with the Dragon: For his aſhes being ſcarce cold, a great controverſie ſprung up about the puniſhing of Hereticks: Some holding that they ought to be reſtrained, but not to be puniſhed with death. Others, thinking that it could not be clearly ſtated out of Gods word, what was Hereſie; thereupon ſaid, that it was lawfull to hold either part in all the Heads of Religion, and that all men (though holding a wrong opinion) were to be left to the judgement of God. This latter opinion ſome good men inclined to, fearing that the contrary Tenet might kindle the cruelty of Tyrants againſt the godly. The principal of theſe were Sebaſtian Caſtalio, and Lælius Socinus, therein pleading their own cauſe: The former indeed more cloſely, and the latter more openly, as one that ſtudyed to vindicate the clear authority of the Scripture, in a certain Preface, to the perverting of the holy Bible; and in his Annotations upon the firſt Epiſtle of Paul to the Corinthians, had endeavoured to draw men from the written Word of God, as an imperfect Rule, as if Paul had taught to ſome of his Diſciples that were more perfect then the reſt, a certain more hidden Divinity then that which he had committed to writing.

1554. Calvin confutes Them.

Hereupon Mr. Calvin Anno Chriſti 1554, ſet forth a copious confutation of all the Doctrine of Servetus, which was ſubſcribed by all his Colleagues: adding many reaſons why, and how farre a Magiſtrate might proceed in puniſhing ſuch an one as was lawfully convicted of Hereſie. The Adverſaries on the contrary publiſhed a Rapſody, collected partly out of the writings of the ancient Fathers, which they perverted to their own ends and partly out of the writings of certain unknown Fanaticks, and under the name of Martin Bellius, which indeed was Caſtalio, though afterwards he forſwore it, and falſifying alſo the name of the City, in which they falſly pretended that it was publiſhed.

Caſtilio's Hereſies.

Confuted by Beza.

To this Book, ſwarming with many other Errors and Blaſphemies, Mr. Beza anſwered, thereby to free Mr. Calvin from that labour, who was now buſie in writing his learned Commentaries upon Geneſis, and in diverting other dangers from the Church: For the factious went on to innovate things in the City, and though the Amneſtie was again renewed before the Senate upon the ſecond of February, yet they daily grew worſe and worſe, ſo that Maſter Calvin was much buſied both in blaming and reproving them for their wickedneſs, and in endeavouring to ſtrengthen the godly againſt the poiſon of their impiety; For they had proceeded to ſuch a heigth of wickedneſs, that they turned part of the ſacred Scriptures into obſcæne ſongs, and uſed to beat ſtrangers whom they met in the night, and ſometimes alſo to rob them.

Horrid Impieties.

Calvin aſperſed.

They alſo privately uſed the Books of Bolſecus, Caſtalio, and other corrupt men, that they might renew the controverſie about Predeſtination; yea, they proceeded to ſcatter abroad a falſe and ſcandalous libell, wherein they grievouſly aſperſed that worthy ſervant of Chriſt Maſter Calvin. Caſtalio alſo ſent another Latine Book to be privately Printed at Paris, to which Maſter Beza anſwered, and Maſter Calvin alſo confuted ſome of the fooleries of the ſame kind. About this time the care of the Engliſh exiles lay heavy upon him, ſome of which were come to Veſalia, others to Embden, and others to Franckford, all ſending to Maſter Calvin for advice and counſel: Neither was he a little troubled for the audaciouſneſs of ſome of the Paſtors (encouraged by the ſecret favour of others) of the French-Church, long ſince planted by him at Strasborough: And in ſhort how great pains he took this year for ſeveral Churches, may appear by the multitude of Epiſtles wrote by him, by which he ſtirred up many Noble-men to imbrace the Goſpel, and ſtrengthned many of the Brethren, ſome of which were in extream danger, and others already caſt into Bonds.

The Engliſh exiles provided for by Him.

We ſpake before of the ſweet Harmony that was between the Helvetian and Rhetian Churches, about the Doctrine of the Sacrament. This concord did exceedingly diſpleaſe the ſpirit of error; therefore he eaſily found out one that might eaſily reinkindle the fire which before was extinguiſhed, viz. Joachim Weſtphalus, who was

was seconded by Heshusius, then a Minister of the Word, but afterwards a Bishop, of whom we shall speak more afterwards: Hereupon Master Calvin published an Explication of that Agreement, which, by how much it Imbittered their Spirits, by so much the more it satisfied all Good Men that were Lovers of the Truth. Jon. Westphalus.

The year following, viz. 1555. By the special Mercy of God, brought Peace along with it to the Church of Geneva, which was now quiet from it's Domestick stirs; For the factious ruined themselves: God discovering their Horrible Treason to the State, by the means of one of the Conspirators, who, in his Drunken fit, discovered it; whereupon some of them were beheaded, others of them were banished, who though a while after they vexed the City, yet perished shamefully in the end, leaving an Example of the just Judgment of God upon such Persons, though it may be deferred for a time. Thus the Common-Wealth was freed from these Pests. To which another Mercy was added by the answer of the four Helvetian Cities, to whom the Question about the Discipline (which we spake of before) had been proposed, who Unanimously confirmed the Ecclesiastical Polity as it had been before setled, contrary to the Expectation of the factious. 1555. Gods judgements on the Wicked.

Yet something was not wanting whereby Master Calvin might be further exercised: For he took great pains in Constituting the Church in Polonia by the Will of the King: In Comforting the Afflicted in England, who where much troubled by reason of the Cruel Burning of those three Bishops and Martyrs, Incomparable for Piety, viz. Nicolas Ridley, John Hooper, and Hugh Latimer, who suffered amongst many other Worthy Men, and shortly after, that great Cranmer, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury: As also in comforting the Imprisoned Brethren in France, especially those five Valiant Martyrs, who this year was burned at Camerac. He comforts the English in Persecution. And the persecuted French.

But at home the Errors of Servetus began to spring up again, whose Blasphemies Mattheus Gribaldus was observed to favour, a Lawyer of some note, and the Lord of a Towne not far from Geneva: This man coming to Geneva, was brought to Master Calvin by some Italians who had been his Scholars when he taught at Padoa; But Master Calvin refused to give him his hand, till they could agree about some of the chief Heads of Divinity, viz. about the Sacred Trinity, and Divinity of Christ, till when he would by no means be perswaded to doe it; and because he refused, Master Calvin told him, that an heavy Judgment of God hung over his head for his pertinacious Impiety, which shortly after came to pass: Being first forced to fly to Tubing, where he was entertained by the favour of Vergerius, and being afterwards taken at Berne, upon a feigned Submission, was Dismissed: But returning to his old course, and entertaining and favouring Gentilis (of whom we shall speak anon) God found him out, and prevented his punishment by Man, by striking him with the Plague, whereof he dyed. Gribaldus favours Servetus. God's judgement on Him.

About this time also, Master Calvin met with another Tryal: For certain, Neighbour Ministers, who were underhand encouraged by Bolsecus, thinking to get themselves a name by opposing so great a Man, and indeed they lay under many other Scandals, railed exceedingly against Mr. Calvin, as if he made God the Author of Sin, because he would exclude nothing from the Eternal Fore-sight & ordination of God. Mr. Calvin being little moved with these calumnies, was yet at last provoked by their Importunities, so that he obtained of the Senate leave to goe with their Ambassadors to Berne, there to defend himself and the Truth before the Bernates, which accordingly he did, and so prevailed, that one Sebastian was branded with Infamy, and Banished: Bolsecus also was commanded to depart out of their Coasts: So all these Calumnies ended in Smoak: And one Andreas Zebedæus, who had been his most bitter Accuser, after Master Calvin's Death, himself also lying upon his Death-bed at Novidune, a Towne four Miles distant from Geneva, sending for some of the chief Citizens, did of his own accord Confess the Truth, which before he had opposed, and detesting his former Actions, caused all his Papers to be burnt before his, and their Faces. Calvin accused by some Ministers. They are punished for It.

was preaching, which handled him ſo roughly, that it made him come down from the Pulpit: Hereupon many falſe rumours were ſpread abroad, which were ſo grateful, eſpecially to the Papiſts, that at Noviodune his own country, the Prieſt had returned publick, and ſolemn thanks for the death of Calvin: But the prayers of good men prevailed for his health, and he was ſo farre from dying of that diſeaſe, that rather being increaſed in his ſtrength, he undertook a longer journey then he was uſed to do, viz. to Frankford, being invited thither to pacifie ſome controverſies, which were ſprung up in the French Church there. At length returning home, though ſomething impaired in his health, yet remitted he nothing of his daily labours, publiſhing the next year his very learned Commentaries upon the Pſalmes, to which he prefixed a very precious Preface.

Faction and Famine.

Weſtphalus Confuted. And Caſtalio.

The reſt of the year being very full of tumults by reaſon of ſome factious Miniſters, and God ſending a Famine alſo, yet Mr. Calvin ſpent it in defending the Truth againſt Joachim Weſtphalus; and when notwithſtanding, Weſtphalus continued his prattle, Mr. Beza anſwered him, and ſtopped his mouth. Then alſo Mr. Calvin, and Beza, both confuted the calumnies of Caſtalio againſt the eternal Predeſtination of God which he had ſpread abroad, yet concealing his name.

Perſecution in Paris.

At this time a grievous perſecution riſing at Paris againſt the godly, it was a great affliction to Mr. Calvin; many being taken when they were aſſembled in St. James his ſtreet for the celebration of the Lords Supper, being about eighty in number (the reſt eſcaping by the benefit of the dark night) who the next morning were led to priſon, loaden with ſcornes and reproaches, though ſome of them were noble women of good account. Againſt theſe ſheep of Chriſt the Kings anger was enflamed, not onely by thoſe about him, but by the very occaſion of the times: For this fell out at the ſame time when the Kings Army had received ſuch a notable defeat at Saint Quintan: Beſides theſe godly perſons were forced to meet in the night, becauſe they could not do it in the day, which further irritated him: Hereupon alſo thoſe old lying ſcandals were raiſed againſt them, eſpecially by one Democarus, a Doctor of Sorbon, who charged the Chriſtians as the cauſe of all the evils which befel the Kingdom.

Chriſtians Slandered.

There were alſo ſome falſe witneſſes ſuborned againſt them, which the credulous multitude was too apt to believe; there were therefore ſeven of them brought forth to be burned, amongſt whom there was a noble woman, who with ſix others ſhewed admirable patience: and whereas they were accuſed for promiſcuous whoredomes at their meetings, eſpecially by the Sorboniſts, who thought the more to incenſe the King thereby, a godly and learned man, who had lately been their Paſtor, eaſily confuted thoſe lies, and the German Princes Interceding in their behalf (which Mr. Calvin procured with admirable celerity) the tempeſt was in a good meaſure blown over.

Lies Confuted.

Calvins care for Them.

The next year being 1558, proved very happy to the Common-wealth of Geneva, by reaſon of that ſtrict League made betwixt them and the Bernates. But a grievous perſecution brake out againſt the Church of Chriſt in France again; and at home the Hereſies of Servetus were revived by Valentine Gentilis, mentioned before. To ſtop the former, Mr. Calvin ſent Letters to the German Princes, which opened to them the great calamities which the Churches groaned under, requeſting them to intercede for them, and in the mean time himſelf endeavoured by his daily Letters to ſupport them under their afflictions. And for Gentilis, who was a man of an unhappy, but ſagacious, and ſubtill wit, preſently after the burning of Servetus, he gat his book, and Calvins confutation of it, and not weighing the Truth in the ballance of the Sanctuary, but of carnal wiſdome and reaſon, he concludes that the Father was the onely one God of himſelf, who propagated Eſſence to the other two perſons, ſo that he began to profeſſe that there were three Gods, three Eternals, Omnipotent, and Immenſe Gods: and to prove it, he wreſted not only the ſacred Scriptures, but the Council of Nice alſo, and rejected Athanaſius his Creed, as alſo the Teſtimonies of all the Ancients, viz. of Ignatius, Tertullian, Iræneus, and Lactantius, by a certain unheard-of impudence; yea, he did not onely reject all the Orthodox Writers which followed the the Nicene Councel, but reproached them as wicked men. Other Blaſphemies alſo followed this about the Hypoſtatical Union. He infects Some.

He firſt vented theſe things in private (as he pretended, for Diſputation ſake) to ſome of the Italian Congregation; whereupon an aſſembly being called on purpoſe, Mr. Calvin, before ſome choice Senators, and all the Miniſters, and Elders, having patiently heard them, confuted them ſo fully out of the Word of God, that all the Italians preſently ſubſcribed to the Orthodox Faith, except onely ſix, who afterwards being called one by one, ſubſcribed with their hands, but not with their hearts, as time made to appear. Gentilis therefore returning to his old courſe, and going on to ſpread his former Blaſphemies, is apprehended, diſſemblies not his opinion, being heard as much, and as long as he would. At length, ſeeming to be convinced by Mr. Calvin, he feigned incredible repentance, and gave in a Recantation ſigned under his own hand. Hereupon he was diſmiſſed, firſt taking an oath that he would not go forth of the gates of the City; But preſently contrary to the ſame, he flyes into Savoy to Matthew Gribaldus, and preſently after two of his Diſciples, Alciat and Blandatra followed him, who afterwards proved the infectors of Tranſylvania, and the Countries adjacent. Is Confuted. Tranſylvania Infected

But Gods judgement hanging over the head of Gentilis, he ſtaied with Gribaldus (both of them caſting off the other two as illiterate fellows) and there he wrote a Book againſt Athanaſius and Calvin, and ſo going to Lions, he there printed it, dedicating it to Gaienſis a Præfect, who was altogether ignorant of the Blaſphemies contained in it. Whilſt he was at Lyons he was apprehended by the Papiſts, but when he ſhewed them that he had written a book againſt Calvin, he was diſmiſſed, as one that had deſerved well of their Church.

From thence he went into Tranſylvania to Blandatra, Alciat, and their companions; but they, having now ſucked in the Hereſies of Samoſatenus, and he not well agreeing with them therein, Chriſt indeed drawing him forth to condigne puniſhment, he returned into Savoy to his friend Gribaldus; but Gods plague had now ſwept away that Peſt, and Mr. Calvin alſo was dead at Geneva. Hereupon Gentilis, either infatuated by God, or thinking that there was none left at Geneva that could anſwer him, went ſtrait to Gaienſis, who was juſtly offended with him; who therefore preſently apprehending him, by the juſt judgement of God, ſent him to Berne, there to be tried; where being convicted both of Perjury, and many manifeſt impieties, after many wayes were uſed to bring him to repentance, but in vain, he had his head cut off, thereby ſuffering a juſt reward for all his impieties. He is puniſhed with Death.

Towards the latter end of this year, in October, Mr. Calvin was taken with a Quartane Ague, which Phyſicians ſay, is deadly to old perſons, which though it held him but eight moneths, yet it ſo debilitated his lean, and over-worne body with his inceſſant labours, that he never throughly recovered his health again: Yet all this time, though his Phyſicians warned him, and his friends diſſwaded him from his preaching, and Lectures, yet did he continually buſie himſelf night and day in dictating, and writing Letters every way, often ſaying, That nothing was more troubleſome to him then an idle life. At this times alſo he publiſhed the laſt Edition of his Inſtitutions in Freneh and Latine, and his learned Commentary upon Iſaiah. Calvin falls Sick. He hates Idleneſſe.

The year following, viz. 1559, was famous for the League entered into between the two moſt potent Kings of Spain and France, which was ſtrengthned by affinity betwixt them, which was likely to prove fatall to Geneva, but that the counſel of the Pontificians who abuſed the ſimplicity of King Henry of France, hindered it. For King Henry publiſhed moſt ſevere Decrees, and caſt ſome of his Senators into priſon, who had declared their judgements freely, that he ought to proceed gently in matters of Religion, till a Generall Councel could be called; having this in his eye principally, to reſtore the Duke of Savoy to his Country, that by his help he might utterly deſtroy Geneva. 1559. A perſecution in France.

In the mean time Maſter Calvin (though ſickly) laboured hard at Geneva, comforting and confirming the afflicted Churches and Brethren; as alſo by his frequent and fervent prayers, craving help of God. And behold the wonderful work of God! whilſt all things were full of terror, the King of France in the great Marriage-ſolemnity The King of France Slain.

nity which was made for the confirmation of the Peace, in his Running at Tilt, received his Death's Wound, and that by the hand of the Captaine of his Guard, by whom, a little before, he had Apprehended and Impriſoned the aforeſaid Senators. This Death of the King was expiated (as he thought) by the Cardinal of Lorraine, who upon the one and Twentieth of December, cauſed that Learned Lawyer, Faithful Counſellor, and Holy Martyr of Chriſt, Annas Du Bourg, to be unjuſtly and Cruelly Burned. But by the ſingular Bleſſing of God, in the midſt of theſe Calamitous times, the Hearts of the Genevians were ſo raiſed up, and confirmed, that in the very ſame Year, and almoſt Moment of time, in which two ſuch Potent Kings, had contrived their Deſtruction, by the encouragement of Maſter Calvin, they laid the Foundation of, and built a Famous School, Adorning it with eight Maſters for Boyes, as alſo with Hebrew, Greek, Philoſphy, and Divinity Profeſſors; which being finiſhed to the Honour of God Omnipotent, Maſter Calvin in a great Aſſembly, in the chiefeſt Church, read, and declared thoſe things which conduced to the perpetual Eſtabliſhment of ſo Holy and profitable a Foundation, whereby he did as it were ſolemnly Conſecrate it.

A School built at Geneva.

The year after, which was 1560. Maſter Calvin was by ſome loaden with much Envy, as if he had ſtirred up an Aſſembly againſt Francis the Second, the heir of his Fathers Kingdome; which Aſſembly was called, The tumult of Amboiſe; whereas indeed Maſter Calvin never underſtood what it was, as alſo both by Word of Mouth, and by his Letters to Friends, he diſliked it.

Sancarus his Hereſies.

This Year one Sancarus of Mantua (Italy being Fatal to the Polonians) began to Teach, that Chriſt was Mediator only according to his humane Nature; accuſing all of Arianiſme, that ſhould ſay, that he was Mediator alſo according to his Deity, as if thereby they made the Son leſſe than the Father. This Calumny, and all his other Doctrine, was notably confuted, as by Philip Melanchthon, and Peter Martyr, ſo alſo Mr. Calvin, at the requeſt of the Polonians, did briefly, but ſtrongly confute the ſame; and foreſeeing what ſhortly after came to paſs, that whilſt ſome more unskilful Perſons would take upon them to confute Sancarus, if they took not heed, would fall into the Error of them which held three Gods: He eloquently admoniſhed them, that taking heed of Blandatra, and his followers, they ſhould ſo aſſert Chriſt to be our Mediator, according to both his Natures, that in the mean time they ſhould not Multiply Deities: But this Labour of his was Vaine towards them that were to Periſh.

The Bohemian Waldenſes.

About this time the Bohemian Waldenſes ſent two of their Brethren to Maſter Calvin to deſire his Judgment about ſome matters of Religion, whom he Lovingly ſatisfied, Exhorting them alſo that they would enter into a neerer Conjunction with other Reformed Churches. At the ſame time alſo, Queen Mary being Dead, and Queen Elizabeth Succeeding, many of the Godly French, Relying upon her Piety, and Humanity, fled for Refuge into England, with the conſent of that Reverend Man, Edmund Grindal, Biſhop of London; and they craved leave of her that one might be ſent from Geneva to plant a French Church there: whereupon Galacius was ſent.

Towards the latter end of this Year King Francis of France dyed ſuddenly, and that in ſuch a Juncture of time, when all things ſeemed ſo deſperate, that they could not be Cured but by God himſelf; And King Charles the Ninth a Child, was ſcarce entered into his Kingdome, when by a Herald Letters ſubſcribed with his Name, were brought to Geneva, wherein he complained that many were ſent out from thence, that infected his Kingdom, deſiring that they might be preſently called back, Threatning, that otherwiſe he would not let paſſe the Revenging of that Injury.

Maſter Calvin being hereupon ſent for by the Senate, anſwered in his own, and in his Colleagues names, that at the Requeſt of the Churches of France, they had Exhorted certain men that were found in the Faith, and of an Holy Life, whom they judged fit for the Work, that they ſhould not be wanting to lend their help to their Country in ſo Holy a Cauſe, eſpecially the Churches craving Aſſiſtance from them for their further edification: And that this they had done, not to disturb the Kingdome, but that the people might be taught the Gospel of peace; and if they were accused for any thing further then this, that they were ready to answer their accusers before the King: So this business went no further.

The same year Master Calvin and Master Beza, answered the impudent book of Tileman Hushusius. Master Calvin also confuted those Blasphemies which Gentilis had published at Lyons against him, and Athanasius: He published also his Lectures upon Daniel, which he dedicated to the French Churches, and as he interpreted that Prophet, so in his Præface he was himself a Prophet, foretelling the tempest that hung over them. At which time also Francis Balduinus, (afterwards called Ecebolius, because he had changed his religion three or four times) being suborned by the Cadinal of Lorrain, and by evill meanes reconciled to the King of Navar, dispersed a certain Book up and down the Court, written either by himself, or (as some rather thought) by Cassander, wherein he stiled himself a pious and moderate man, which Book was worse then the Emperors Interim, for that under the specious pretence of restoring moderation, he sought to bring in all the Popish corruptions. Master Calvin being informed hereof, published an answer to this Book, to which some other answers were shortly after added, which made a full discovery of, the wit and purpose of Balduinus, which this railer could by no means digest; whereupon he never gave over to brand Calvin and Beza with his impudent reproaches; till the year after, being grown odious both to God and men, of both Religions whom he had so often deceived by his turning, whilst he was following a suit of Law at Paris, he wore away, and ended his wretched life.

Gods judgements on Him.

In the year 1562. God gave peace and liberty to the French Churches, by a publick Edict of the Kings: But not long after the King of Navar, being suborned by Popish subtilty, presently after the Duke of Guise had committed that abominable massacre at Vassy, began that civil war which continued many years after, to the miserable devastation of France: and it cannot he spoken how much Master Calvin was affected, and afflicted therewith, which so far increased his disease, that it was easie to divine, that it would not be long before he was translated to a better life, yet did he not desist from exhorting and comforting every one, no nor from preaching and reading his ordinary Lectures. And the same year he published that excellent confession of Faith, which was sent to the States of the Empire met together at Franckford, in the name of the Prince of Conde, and of all the Godly in France, who besides the injuries which they sustained by an unjust war, were unworthily traduced to the Germans, as if they held many false and monstrous opinions.

Civil war in France.

One thing also is not to be pretermitted, that on the nineteenth of Decemb. Master Calvin lying in bed sick of the Gout, being the Sabbath day, and the North-wind having blown two dayes strongly, said to many that were present, Truly I know not what is the matter, but I thought this night I heard warlike drums beating very loud, and I could not perswade my self but it was so: Let us therefore go to prayers, for surely some great businesse is in hand. And this very day there was a great Battail fought between the Guisians and the Protestants not far from Paris, news whereof came unto Geneva within a few days after.

A prodigy.

The year after, which was 1563. Master Calvins disease did so far increase, that it was almost incredible that so weak a body, exhausted with so many labours, and worne out with so many diseases, should yet retain so valiant and generous a mind: So that even then he could not be perswaded to favour himself, and if at any time he abstained from his publick labours (which yet he never did but when by necessity he was enforced thereto) yet he was busie at home, either in giving counsel to those that sought it, or in dictating to his Scribes; The witnesses whereof are those two serious admonitions to the Polonians, to take heed of those Blasphemous persons which denyed the Sacred Trinity. The Answers which he returned to the Brethrens Messengers, who were now met in a Synod at Lyons; his Commentaries upon the four books of Moses, which himself turned out of Latin into French. And lastly, his commentary upon Joshua, which he now began, and finished a little before his death.

In

1564. His laſt Sermon.

In the year 1564. Feb. the ſixth, Maſter Calvin being ſhort-winded by reaſon of a ſtopping in his lungs, preached his laſt Sermon, and from thence forward he ſpake little, onely now and then he would be carried to the Congregation, the laſt time being March the laſt, his diſeaſes (being contracted by the incredible labours both of his mind and body) were very many: For (beſides that naturally he was but of a weak body, leane, and inclinable to a Conſumption) he ſlept little, and ſpent a great part of the year in Preaching, Teaching and dictating. For at leaſt ten years together he abſtained from dinners, taking no food at all till Supper; ſo that it was a wonder how he could eſcape a Ptiſick ſo long. He was often troubled with the head-ach, which his abſtinence onely could cure; whereupon he ſometimes faſted thirty ſix hours together. But partly through ſtraining his voice, and partly through his too frequent uſe of Aloes (which was taken notice of too late) he was firſt troubled with the Hemorhoids, which at length proved ulcerous, and beſides, for five years before his death he did many times ſpit blood: And when his Quartan Ague left him, the gout took him in his right leg, then the Collick, and laſtly the Stone, which yet he never diſcerned till a few months before his death.

The causes of his Sickneſs.

The Phyſicians applyed what remedies poſſibly they could; neither was there ever man that was more obſervant of their rules: But in reſpect of the labours of his mind, he was extreame negligent of his health, ſo that the violent paines of head-ach could never reſtraine him from preaching. And though he was tormented with ſo many and violent diſeaſes, yet did never any man hear him utter one word that did unbeſeem a valiant or Chriſtian man. Onely lifting up his eyes to heaven, he uſed to ſay, How long Lord? For he often uſed this Motto in his health, when he ſpake of the calamities of his Brethren (which always more afflicted him then his own.) When as his Colleagues admoniſhed and earneſtly intreated him, that in his ſickneſſe he would abſtain from dictating, but eſpecially from writing himſelf: He anſwered, What? would you have me Idle when my Lord comes? March the tenth when all the Miniſters came to him, they found him cloathed, and ſitting at his little Table where he uſed to write and meditate; He beholding them (when he had rubbed his fore-head a while with his hand, as he uſed to doe when he meditated) with a cheerful countenance, ſaid, I give you hearty thanks (my dear Brethren) for the great care you have of me, and I hope within theſe fifteen dayes (which was the time that they were to meet about Church-cenſures) I ſhall be preſent at your Conſiſtory: For then I believe God will declare what he will determine concerning me, and that he will receive me to himſelf. Accordingly he was preſent that day, which was March the four and twentyeth, and when all their buſineſſes were quietly diſpatched, he told them that God had given him ſome further delay, and ſo taking a French Teſtament in his hand, he read ſome of the Annotations upon it, and asked the Miniſters judgements about the ſame, becauſe he had a purpoſe to amend them. The day after he was ſomewhat worſe, as being tyred with the former dayes labour.

His great Patience.

He will not intermit his Labours.

His ſpeech to the Miniſters.

He goes to the Senate.

March the ſeven and twentyeth he cauſed himſelf to be carried in his chair to the Senate door, and then leaning upon two, he walked into the Court, and there he preſented to the Senate a new Rector for the School, and with a Bare head, he Returned them thanks for all their former favours: And in Particular, for the Great Care they had of him in his ſickneſſe: For I perceive (ſaith he) That this is the Laſt time that I ſhall come into this place. Which words he could Scarce utter, his Voice failing him: And ſo with many Tears on both ſides, he bade them Fare-well.

He receives the Sacrament.

April the Second, which was Eaſter-day, though he was very weak, yet he cauſed himſelf to be carried to the Church in his chaire, where after Sermon he received the Sacrament of the Lords Supper at Maſter Beza's Hands, and with a Chearfull Countenance, though weak voice, ſang the Pſalme with the reſt of the Congregation, ſhewing, though in a dying countenance, ſignes of much inward joy.

He makes his Will.

April the five and twentieth he made his Will in this from: In the Name of God Amen, Anno Chriſti, 1564. Aprill the five and twentieth, I Peter Chenalat, Citizen, and Notary of Geneva, do witneſs, and profeſs, that being ſent for by that Reverend Man John Calvin, Miniſter of the Word of God in the Church of Geneva, and a free Denizen of

of the ſame City, who then truly was ſick in Body, but ſound in Mind, told me that his purpoſe was to make his Teſtament, and to declare his laſt Will, deſiring me to write it down as he ſhould Dictate unto me with his Tongue, which I profeſs I did preſently Word by Word as he told me; neither did I Adde, or Diſminiſh any thing from that which he ſpake, but have followed the very form ſuggeſted by him: which was this. In the name of the Lord, Amen, I John Calvin, Miniſter of the Word of God in the Church of Geneva, oppreſſed, and Afflicted with divers Diſeaſes, ſo that I eaſily think that the Lord God hath appointed ſhortly to lead me out of this World; I therefore have Determined to make my Teſtament, and to commit to my Writing my Laſt Will in this Form following. Mr. Calvin's Will.

Firſt, I give thanks to God, that taking pitty of me whom he created and placed in this World, hath delivered me out of the deep Darkneſs of Idolatry into which I was plunged, and that he brought me into the light of his Goſpel, & made me a partaker of the Doctrine of Salvation, whereof I was moſt unworthy: Neither hath he only gently and Graciouſly born with my faults, and ſins, for which yet I deſerved to be rejected by him, and driven out; but hath uſed towards me ſo great meekneſs and mildneſs, that he hath vouchſafed to uſe my Labours in Preaching and Publiſhing the Truth of his Goſpel. And I witneſs and profeſs, that I intend to paſs the remainder of my Life in the ſame Faith, and Religion which he hath delivered to me by his Goſpel, and not to ſeek any other Aid or Refuge for Salvation then his free Adoption, in which alone Salvation reſteth. And with all my heart I embrace the Mercy which he hath uſed towards me for Jeſus Chriſt his Sake, Recompenſing my faults with the Merit of his Death and Paſſion, that ſatisfaction may be made by this means for all my ſins and crimes, and the remembrance of them may be blotted out. I witneſs alſo, and profeſs that I humbly begge of him, that being waſhed and cleanſed in the Blood of that Higheſt Redeemer ſhed for the ſins of Mankinde, I may ſtand at his Judgement Seat under the Image of my Redeemer.

Alſo I profeſs that I have diligently done my endeavour, according to the meaſure of Grace received, and bounty which God hath uſed towards me, that I might preach his Word Holily and Purely, both in Sermons, Writings, and Commentaries, and Interpret his Holy Scripture Faithfully. I alſo witneſs and profeſs, that I have uſed no Juglings, no Evil and Sophiſtical Arts in my controverſies and Diſputations, which I have held with the Enemies of the Goſpel, but I have been converſant candidly, and ſincerely in maintaining the Truth.

But (out alas!) that Study, and Zeal of mine (if it be worthy ſo to be called) hath been ſo remiſs and languiſhing, that I confeſs innumerable things have been wanting to me to the well performing of my Duty; and unleſs the immeaſurable bounty of God had been preſent, my ſtudies had been vain, and vaniſhing away. Moreover I acknowledge that unleſs the ſame bounty had been preſent unto me, the Goods of the mind which God hath given me, would have made me guilty of the greater ſin, and ſlothfulneſs before his Judgement-Seat. For which cauſes I witneſs, and profeſs, that I hope for no other help for Salvation but this only, that ſeeing God is a Father of Mercy, he ſhewed himſelf a Father unto me, who acknowledge my ſelf a miſerable Sinner.

As for other things; After my departure out of this Life, I would have my body committed to the Earth in that order and manner which is uſual in this Church and City, till the bleſſed day of Reſurrection cometh.

As touching that ſlender Patrimony which God hath given me, concerning which, I have determined thus to Diſpoſe. Let Anthony Calvin my moſt dear Brother be mine Heir; but, only for honour ſake, let him take before hand, and have to himſelf the Silver Charger which was given me by Varannius for a gift, wherewith I deſire him to be contented: For whatſoever things remain in mine Inheritance, I requeſt, and commit them to his Faith, that he return them to his children when he ſhall dye. I bequeath ten Golden Scutes to the School of Boyes from the ſame my Brother, and Heire. Alſo ſo much to poore Strangers. So much to Joane, the Daughter of Charles Coſtan, and of my Kinſwoman. But to Samuel and John, the Sonnes of my ſaid Brother, I deſire to have given to them forty Golden Scutes by mine Heir when he dieth. To Anne, Suſan, and Dorothy, his Daughters, thirty Scutes of Gold: But to David their Brother, becauſe of his Lightneſs and Miſcarriages, but five and twenty Scutes of Gold. This is the whole Summe of the whole Patrimony, and Goods which God hath given me, ſo near as I can eſtimate it, ſetting a Price upon my Library, my Moveables, and all my Houſhold goods, with all other my faculties. If there be found any thing above, I would have it to be diſtributed to all thoſe children, the Sonnes and Daughters of my Brother: Neither do I exclude that David, if he prove a good Husband. If there ſhall be any Surpluſage above that Summe, I believe there will be no great matter, eſpecially when my Depts are paid, the care whereof I have committed to my ſaid Brother, upon whoſe Love and Fidelity I Relye: For which cauſe I will and appoint him, to be the Executor of my Teſtament, and together with him the Worſhipful man Laurence Normendy, giving them power to take an Inventory of my Goods without any more Accurate Diligence of the Court. I alſo Permit them to Sell my Moveables, that out of the Mony made thereof, they may Execute my Will above Written. Dated this Twenty fifth of Aprill, Anno Chriſti, 1554.

When this Will was made and confirmed, Maſter Calvin ſent to the four Syndics, and all the Aldermen, deſiring to ſpeak with them all, yet once more in the Court before his Death, whither he hoped to be carryed the next day. The Senators anſwered, that they would rather come to him, deſiring him to have a regard to his Health: And the day after when they came all to him from the Court, after Mutual Salutations, and Pardon craved for their coming to him, whereas he rather would have come to them, and profeſſing that he had long deſired to ſpake with them, though he had deferred it till now, even till he found the Approaching of his Departure out of this World, he ſaid,

Honoured Maſters,

His ſpeech to the Senators.

I give you great thanks, that ye have honoured me thus far, having not deſerved it from you, and for that you have ſo often born with mine infirmities; which to me hath always been an Argument of your ſingular good will towards me: And albeit in performance of mine Office it could not be but that I muſt undergoe many bickerings, and divers aſſaults, becauſe every good man muſt be Exerciſed therewith; yet I know, and acknowledge, that none of theſe things have falne out through your default; and I earneſtly beſeech you, that if I have not always done that which behoved me, you rather would have regard of my Will than of my Ability. For I can truly teſtifie that I have been heartily ſtudious of the Welfare of your Common-Wealth; and howſoever I have not fully performed mine Office, yet ſurely I have ſtudied the Publick Good according to mine Ability, and except I ſhould acknowledge that the Lord hath uſed my Service, ſometimes not unprofitably, I could not avoid the Crime of Diſſembling. But this I requeſt of you again and again, that I may be excuſed by you for that the things are ſo little, that I have publickly and privately Performed in compariſon of thoſe things which it behoved me to have done. Certainly of mine own accord, I acknowledge that I am much Indepted to you for this cauſe alſo, that ye have Patiently born with my too much vehemency ſometimes; which ſin alſo I truſt God, that he hath forgiven me.

But as touching the Doctrine that you have heard from me, I take God to witneſs, that I have not raſhly and uncertainly, but purely and ſincerely taught the Word of God intruſted unto me, whoſe Wrath I ſhould otherwiſe have felt now hanging over me, as I am certainly aſſured that my Labours in teaching it, hath not been diſpleaſing to him. And I teſtifie this the more willingly both before God and you, becauſe I doubt not but that the Devil (according to his cuſtome) will raiſe Wicked, Light and Giddy-Headed People to corrupt the Sincere Doctrine which you have heard from me.

Then conſidering the unmeaſurable Benefits which God had conferred on that City, he ſaid;

I am a very good Witneſs out of how many great Dangers the hand of the great and beſt God hath delivered you. Moreover, you ſee in what Eſtate you now are; therefore whether your affairs be Proſperous or Adverſe, let that be always Converſant before your eyes, that God is he alone that eſtabliſheth Kingdomes, and Cities and therefore will be Worſhiped by Mortal Men. Remember what that great David doth teſtifie, that when he Enjoyed a deep Peace he fell foulеſt, and ſhould never have riſen again, if God of his ſingular ſingular Goodneſs, had not reached out his hand to him. What then ſhall becomeof ſuch Punies, if he fell being ſo ſtrong and powerfull a Man? Ye had need of great humility of Mind, that ye may walk circumſpectly, and with great reverence before God; and truſtupon him onely, being ſure that it will always be, as ye have often found, that by his Aid you may ſtand ſure, although your ſafety and welfare may be hung, as it were, upon a very ſlender Thread. Wherefore if Proſperity befal you, take heed, I pray you, that ye be not puffed up with Pride like Profane Perſons, but rather give thanks to God with lowlineſs of Mind. But if Adverſity ſhall happen unto you, and death ſhall ſtand before you on every ſide, yet truſt in him that hath raiſeth up the Dead; yea then eſpecially think that ye are ſtirred up by God, that ye may more and more truſt in him alone. And if ye deſire that this your Common-Wealth may be preſerved in a firm Eſtate, ſee that you be not defiled with any Filthineſs. For he is onely the Higheſt God, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, he will Honour thoſe that Honour him, and caſt down thoſe that deſpiſe him. Honour him therefore according to his own Precepts, and dayly think of this, that we are farre from doing that which is required of us.

I know the Diſpoſitions and Converſations of every one of you, and I know that you have need of Exhortation. There is none of thoſe that excell moſt, unto whom many things are not wanting; Therefore let every Man look about him, and let him ask of the Lord thoſe things which he underſtands himſelf to ſtand in need of. We ſee what Vices reign in the greateſt Counſels in the World; Some are ſtark cold, and neglect the Publick, taking care onely for their own Private Affairs: Others are Indulgent to their Private Affections: Others uſe not the Excellent gifts God hath beſtowed upon them as they ought: Others Proudly Boaſt of their own Parts, and upon a certain Confidence therein, expect that every Man ſhould ſubſcribe to their Opinions. I exhort Old Men that they envy not the Younger, whom they find Adorned with Excellent Gifts from God: I admoniſh the Younger, that they carry themſelves Modeſtly without Arrogance; and let not one Moleſt another. Avoyd Contentions, and all that bitterneſs of Spirit, which diverts many from the right Way in the government of the Common-Wealth. And ye ſhall the better avoid theſe things, if every Man contain himſelf within his own Sphear, and all Adminiſter the part of the Common-Wealth Faithfully which is committed to him. I pray you for Gods Sake, let there be no place for Favour or Hatred in the judgement of Civil-cauſes. Let none pervert Right by ſubtile and cunning Tricks. Let no Man hinder the Laws from prevailing. Let no Man depart from that which is juſt and equall. If Siniſter Affections ſhall beginne to ariſe, let him reſiſt them Conſtantly, looking upon him that hath placed him in his Throne, and begge of him his Holy Spirit. To conclude, I begge of you again that you pardon mine Infirmities, which I acknowledge and confeſs before God, Angels, and your Worſhipfull ſelves.

Having thus ſpoken, he prayed unto God to multiply his gifts and Bleſſings upon them more and more, and to govern them by his Holy Spirit, for the ſafety and good of the Common-Wealth. And giving his Hand to every of them, he diſmiſſed them all, who departed full of ſorrow and heavineſs, as from their Common-Father, with many tears.

Aprill, the Eight and twentieth, the Miniſters of Geneva being come to him, he ſpake thus unto them.

His ſpeech to the Miniſters.

Brethren, after my Deceaſe, ſtand faſt in this Work of the Lord, and be not Diſcouraged; for the Lord will preſerve this Church, and Common-Wealth againſt the Threatnings of the Enemies. I pray God keep you from Diſſentions: Embrace one another with Mutual charity. Think again, and again what you owe to this Church wherein the Lord hath Placed you, and let nothing divert you from your Duty: Otherwiſe it will be eaſie for ſuch as ſeek them, to find out Evaſions; but ſuch ſhall find that God cannot be deceived. As ſoon as I came to this City, the Goſpel indeed was Preached, but the Affaires were very Troubleſome, many conceiting that Chriſtianity was nothing elſe but to overthrow Images: And there were not a few Wicked Perſons, from whom I ſuffered many moſt unworthy things: But the Lord our God ſo confirmed and ſtrengthened me (though by Nature I was not bold) that I gave not Place to any of their Endeavours. Afterwards wards when I returned hither from Strasborough, I followed this Vocation with an unwilling Mind, because it seemed to me that it would prove unfruitful, for I knew not what the Lord had Determined, and matter was full of many and great Difficulties: But going on, at last I found that God had much Blessed my Labours. Stand fast therefore in this your Vocation: Retaine that Order that is begun, and do your utmost endeavours that the People may be kept in Subjection to your Wholesome Doctrine: For some are wicked and stubborn. Things as you see are, through Gods Mercy, well setled, and therefore ye shall be left without Excuse before God, if through your Slothfulness they be unsetled again. I Professe, Brethren, that I have lived with you conjoyned in true love, and sincere Charity, and that I now so depart from you. If you have found me any with Pettish in this my Disease, I crave Pardon of you, and give you very great thanks, that ye have sustained the Burthen imposed upon me, during the time of my Sickness.

Having thus spoken, he gave his hand to Each of them, who departed from him with much sorrow, and weeping.

A while after Master Calvin, understanding by Letters from Master Farell to Master Viret, who now was an old Man of eighty years old and sickly, was yet Determined to visit him, and was now onward of his journey; he wrote thus to him to stay him.

His Letter to Mr. Viret.

Farewell my best and sincerest Brother, and seeing God will have you to out live me in this world, live mindfull of our Friendship, which as it hath been profitable for the Church of God here, so the Fruit thereof tarrieth for us in Heaven. I would not have you to weary your self for my Sake. I hardly draw my Breath, and I expect dayly when it will wholly fail me. It is enough that I Live and Dye to Christ, who is Gaine to his, both in Life and Death. Again Farewell. May 11. Anno Christi, 1564.

Viret comes to Him.

Yet for all this Letter, the good old Man came to Geneva, and having fully conferred with Master Calvin, returned back to Neocome.

The rest of his days, even till his departure, Master Calvin spent almost in Perpetual Prayer, with his Eyes fixed upon Heaven, and his Voice full of Sighes, by reason of his short Breath.

May, the seven and twentieth, being the day whereon he departed, he seemed to speak more strongly, and with lesse Difficulty; but this was but a Lightning before Death. In the Evening about Eight a Clock, on the sudden, certain signes of present Death appeared; at which time Mr. Beza being newly departed from him, some ran to acquaint him therewith; whereupon he presently returned, but found him to have yeilded up his Spirit into the hands of God, without the least strugling, yea not so much as sending forth one Groan, having had his Understanding, Memory, and Voice even to the Last Gasp, being much more like to one that was fallen asleep then Dead. So that that day at Sun-Setting, that great bright Light was taken out of this World.

His Death.

That Night, and the Day following, there was great Weeping and Wailing all over the City. Many Citizens and Strangers desired to see him after he was Dead, and amongst the rest, Queen Elizabeths Ambassadors, who being sent into France, were then there. The next day after being the Sabbath, his Body was Coffined; and in the afternoon he was carryed forth, the Senators, Pastors, and Professors of the School, and almost the whole City following the Coarse, not without abundance of Tears: He was buryed in the Common-Church-Yard, without much Pomp, no Tombstone being added, as himself commanded; Whereupon Master Beza made these Verses.

Beza's verses on Him.

Calvinum aſſidue comitata Modeſtia vivum.
Hoc tumulo manibus condidit ipſa ſuis.
Ote beautum ceſpitem tanto hoſpite!
O cui invidere poſſunt cuncta Marmora!

His Character.

He was a man of an incredible and moſt ready memory, in the middeſt of almoſt infinite diſtractions, and of a moſt exact judgement. He was very regardleſs of means, and preferment, even when it was often offered: He eat little meat, took very little ſleep, was wholly compounded of ſweetneſs and gravity: Diſcreet and mild he was in bearing with mens infirmities; yet would he ſeverely without diſſimulation reprove their vices, which freedom he alwayes uſed from a child: Such a Preacher he was, that like another Orpheus, he drew England, Spain and Italy to him, filling Geneva with ſtrangers.

His admirable Pains.

Such a voluminous writer, that (as it was ſaid of Saint Auguſtine,) he wrote more then another can well read. His writings were ſo eagerly received, that as moſt rare and precious peaces they were forthwith tranſlated into all Languages. What ſhall I ſpeak of his indefatigable induſtry, even beyond the power of nature, which being parallelled with our loitring, I fear will exceed all credit? and may be a true object of admiration, how his lean, worn, ſpent, and wearyiſh body could poſſibly hold out.

He read every week in the year three Divinity Lectures, and every other week over and above, he preached every day, ſo that (as Eraſmus ſaith of Chryſoſtom) I do not know whether more to admire the indefatigableneſs of the man, or his hearers. Yea, ſome have reckoned up that his Lectures were yearly one hundred eighty ſix, his Sermons two hundred eighty ſix, beſides every Thurſday he ſat in the Presbytery. Every Fryday, when the Miniſters met in conference to expound hard Texts, he made as good as a Lecture. Yea, beſides, there was Scarce a day, wherein he ſpent not ſome part either by word or writing, in anſwering the queſtions and doubts of ſundry Paſtors, and Churches that ſought unto him for advice and counſel: Over and above which, there was no year paſſed wherein came not forth from him ſome great volume or other in Folio, ſo that in few years (beſides many golden Tractates, and ſundry exquiſite anſwers, which upon ſhort warning he made to principall adverſaries) his huge explications upon the five books of Moſes, Joſhua, Job, Pſalms, all the Prophets, and upon the whole New Teſtament, came forth into the world fuller of pithy ſententious matter then of Paper.

These things conſidered what breathing-time could he find for idleneſs, or looſe thoughts? In his laſt grievous ſickneſs procured by his intollerable labours, he could Scarce be compelled by his friends to pretermit his daily task of preaching, and reading his Divinity Lectures, and at home, when he could not go abroad, he rather wearied others with continual dictating to them, then himſelf. Nothing was more frequent in his mouth then this, Of all things an idle life is moſt irkeſome to me: and when his friends uſed all their endeavours to perſwade him to favour and reſpect himſelf: Why (ſaith he) will ye have God finde me idle at his coming? Yea, ſuch conſcience did he make of miſpending a minute, that he was loath to detaine the Miniſters that came to viſit him from their publick exerciſes. What wonder then is it, that he ſcarce attained to the age of 56. Yea, rather it's a wonder that he lived ſo long. Indeed he lived but 54. years ten months and ſeventeen dayes, the half of which time he ſpent in the holy Miniſtry of the Goſpel. Many ſlanders were caſt upon him, As that he was Ambitious. But how could that be, whereas he preferred his abode in the Common-wealth, and Church of Geneva, before all other places, which he called the ſhop of poverty. Others charge him that he ſtudied to heap up riches, whereas his laſt Teſtament ſhews that he was a very poor man; for all his goods, yea and his Library being ſold very dear (ſaith Maſter Beza) Scarcely amounted to three hundred crowns: And Calvin himſelf in his life time hearing of this impudent ſlander, anſwered: If I cannot perſwade men whilſt I am alive, that I am no great monied man, yet my death will

ſhew it. And the Senate at Geneva can teſtifie that his ſtipend being very ſmall, he was ſo far from being not contented there-with, that when they offered to enlarge his penſions, he utterly refuſed the ſame: and by the ſmall eſtate which he left at his death it appears alſo, that either his gifts were not great, or elſe that he ſpent as God ſent. Some reproached him for his Brother A. Calvin, becauſe he was divorced from his wife, who was proved an Adultereſſe: What would theſe men have ſaid, if he had kept an Adultereſſe in his houſe? May they not as well reproach Jacob, David, yea, and Chriſt himſelf, for that one of his Diſciples was a Divel, as himſelf told them? Some ſaid that he was given to delights and luxury: His many great Books eaſily confute this ſlander. Some gave out impudently that he ruled in Geneva both in Church and Common-wealth, ſo that he ſometimes ſate upon the Tribunal? But for theſe things neither they which knew him, nor enſuing ages who may collect his manners out of his writing, will give any credit to them. But its far more eaſie to calumniate then to imitate him.

His works. Omnia Calvini opera quæ diverſis chartarum formis edita, ſi uno forme genere imprimerentur, juſte magnitudinis Tomas. 20. in Folio efficerent. Moſt of them are mentioned particularly in his life.

The Life of William Farellus, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1565.

His Birth and Education. WIlliam Farellus was born in the Delphinate, of a Noble Family, Anno Chriſti 1589. and ſent to Paris to be brought up in learning, and was one of the firſt that made a publick Profeſſion of the Goſpel in France. But when perſecution aroſe, he fled into Helvetia, the better to propagate the Goſpel, where he grew into familiarity with Zuinglius, Oecolampdius, Bartholdus, and Hallerus.

Flight in perſecution. Anno Chriſti 1524. he went to Baſil, where he profered a publick diſputation with the Popiſh Divines of that place, but the Maſters of the Univerſity would not ſuffer it, ſaying, That his Theſes ſavoured of the new Doctrine; till the Senate being informed hereof, gave him free liberty of diſputing, and then Farellus ſet up his Theſes publickly in the Colledge, which were theſe. Chriſtus nobis perfectam vivendi regulam præſcripſit. Chriſti mandata, ſunt obſervanda: inquibus iis qui continentia donum non habent, matrimonium præcipitur. Alienum eſt Evangelii luce, & Judacium, deſcrimen veſtitus, ciborum & aliarum ceremoniarum obſervare. Perculoſa ſunt preces multorum verborum, contra Chriſti mandatum. Chriſti mandata non ſunt in conſilia convertenda nec contra. Soli Deo Sacrificia offerenda, qua Spiritus dictat, &c.

He challengeth the Papiſts.

His Theſes.

When theſe Poſitions were divulged, the Biſhops Vicar, the Rector, and Governours of the Univerſity forbad all under them, upon pain of excommunication, either to diſpute or to harken to them. The Senate on the contrary thinking that this command derogated from their authority, commanded their Pariſh Miniſters, and ſtudents of the Univerſity that they ſhould be preſent, and if they did otherwiſe, they forbad them the uſe of their mills, furnaces and Merchandize. Hereupon a Diſputation enſued in a great Aſſembly of the Clergy and Citizens. But ſhortly after the Biſhops Vicar, and the Rector of the Univerſity, and their Popiſh faction drove him by force from Baſil, their darkneſſe not enduring the light. Neither was the ſervant greater then his Maſter.

He is driven from Baſil.

From thence he went to Mont-Bellicard, and to ſome other places, where he preached the Goſpel with ſo much fervour and zeal, that it was evident unto all, that he was called of God thereunto.

His Labors. Anno Chriſti 1527. he went to a certain Town called Æliu, where he preached the Goſpel, and was admoniſhed by Oecolampadius to mingle prudence with his zeal.

Anno

Anno Christi 1528. he went to Aquileia amongst the Bernates, where he preached Christ, and undauntedly opposed Antichrist; Disputing also with divers at Berne, whereupon ensued a wonderfull change in Ecclesiastical Affairs. Anno Christi 1528. he with Viret went to Geneva, where they Planted the Church, and propagated the Gospel, and many of the Citizens Imbraced it; Yet at first, not so much out of Love to the Truth, as out of hatred to Popish Tyranny. He goes to to Geneva.

Long he had not been there before the Bishops Officers drew him into the Bishops Court, which two of the Syndics much disliked, the rather because Farell promised them that he would prove all his Doctrine out of the Holy Scriptures; So that they accompanyed him into the Bishops Court, that they might see all things to proceed in Judgment Lawfully: But it fell out otherwise: For the Judge of the Court would by no means endure a Disputation, saying, If that be suffered, all our Mystery will be destroyed; And withall railing upon Farell, he said, Thou most wicked Devill, why camest thou to this City to Trouble us? I am not (answered Farell) as you call me, but I Preach Jesus Christ who was Crucified for our Sins, and rose again, and he that believeth in his Name shall be saved: This is the Summe of my Arrant: I am a Deptor unto all that are ready to hear, and obey the Gospel, desiring this only, that the Obedience of Faith may Flourish every where; and I came into this City to see if there were any that would lend me the hearing, and I will render an account of my Faith and Hope every where, and will confirm my Doctrine with my Blood if need be. Then cryed out one of the Court in Latine; He hath blasphemed, what need we any more Witnesses? He is guilty of Death. Hurle him into Rhodanus, Hurle him into the Rhodanus: It's better this one Lutheran should be put to Death, than that further troubles should be raised. Popish Malice. Popish rage. His zeal and Courage. The High Priests Charge.

Farell answered; Do not utter the words of Caiphas, but of God. Then one strake him on the Mouth with his Fist, and he was commanded to stand aside as if they would consult, and in the Interim he was shot at with a Gunne by the Vicars Serving-Man, but it hit him not, God defending his Servant. And though one of the Syndics favoured him, yet now the other shrunk from him, so that the Bishops Councel prevailed that he should be driven out of the City. Popish Malice. Gods Mercy. He is driven from Geneva.

And thus being accompanyed with some Citzens, he, and his partner Anthony Salner were expelled the City, but God turned it to the great good of others, for they Sowed the Seed of the Word in the Neighbouring Country, by the side of the Lake Lemannus, viz. at Orba and Granson. Neither yet (through Gods Power and Goodness) was the Work Interrupted at Geneva: For just at the same time came a Young Man of the Delphinate, called Anthony Frumentius, who entering into the City, Taught a Publick School, and together with the Rudiments of Grammer, he most happily layd the Foundation of Christian Religion in the hearts and mindes of his Schollars, which were not a few. A speciall Providence.

Anno Christi, 1541. Master Farell went to Metis, and Preached in the Church-Yard of the Dominicans: The Fryers, when they could not otherwise hinder him, Rang their Bells: But he having a strong Voice, did so strain it, that he went on Audibly to the end of his Sermon. The day after there came about three Thousand Persons together to hear the Word of God; but some that favoured the Gospel, intreated Master Farell so long to forbear, as till he might Preach without a Tumult. Then was he questioned by the Magistrates, by what Authority, or by whose Request he Preached. To which he answered, By the command of Christ, and at the Request of his Members: Gravely Discoursing both of his own Authority, and of the Excellency of the Gospel; Telling the Magistrate what his Duty was in reference therunto. But shortly after by the Command of the Emperour, the Citizens of Metis were forbidden to hear any Man Preach who was not Licensed by the Bishop, and some others. Whereupon Master Farell went from thence to Neocome, where he wholly employ himself in the Service of the Church, Performing the Office of a Faithfull Pastor to Extreame Old Age, with Admirable Zeale, and Diligence. He goes to Metis. He goes to Neocome.

When he hard of Calvin's sickness in the Year 1564. he could not satisfie himself, His Friendship.

His Death

ſelf, though he was ſeventy years old, but he muſt go to Geneva, to viſit him. He ſurvived Calvin one year, and odde months, and died aged 76 years, Anno Chriſti 1565.

Sathans Malice.

Anno Chriſti 1553, the Genevians (though they owed themſelves wholly to him) yet were carried on with ſuch fury, that they would have condemned Farel to death; and did ſuch things againſt him, that Calvin wiſhed he might have expiated their anger with his Blood.

The great effects of his Miniſtery.

This was that Farel, who (diſcouraged by no difficulties, deterred with no threatnings, reproaches, or ſtripes) gained to Chriſt multitudes in Montbelgard, Aquileia, Lauſanna, Geneva, and Neocome. There was in him, beſides piety, learning, innocency of life, and exemplary modeſty, a certain ſingular preſence of mind, ſharp wit, and vehemency of ſpeech, ſo that he rather ſeemed to thunder then ſpeak; and laſtly ſuch admirable fervency in his prayers, that he ſeemed to carry his hearers into Heaven with him.

PET: PAV: VERGERIVS

The Life of Vergerius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1562.

Peter Paul Vergerius, was a man excellently learned both in the Law and Popiſh Divinity, wherein he attained the higheſt degrees. Anno Chriſti 1530, at which time that famous Convention at Auſpurg was appointed, he was ſent by Pope Clement the ſeventh as his Legate into Germany, to improve his uttermoſt abilities to hinder a National Council, and accordingly he beſtirred himſelf to hinder and endamage the Lutherans; and that he might the better encourage the Popiſh Divines, viz. Faber, Eccius, Cochlæus, and Nauſea, to play the man in their Maſters cauſe, he beſtowed ſundry favours and gifts upon them. He alſo by his Legantine power, made Eccius Cannon of Ratisbone.

Sent Legate into Germany.

His Policy.

Anno Chriſti 1534, Paul the third ſent for him to Rome to give an account of the ſtate of affairs in Germany, which when he had done, the Pope deliberated with his Cardinals what courſe was fitteſt to be taken to prevent a National Council, till as Cæſar and the other Kings could be ſtirred up to war by their ſecret inſtigations; and ſo after a while he ſent back Vergerius into Germany, to promiſe the Princes, that a General Council ſhould be held at Mantua; But withal to preſcribe ſuch rules about coming to it, as he knew the Proteſtant Divines would not accept of. He had in charge alſo to ſtir up the Prince's minds againſt the King of England, and to profer his Kingdom to whoſoever would conquer it, and to try if by any meanes he could take off Luther and Melanchthon from proſecuting what they had begun. There were alſo nine Cardinals and Biſhops choſen out (the better to delude the Germans) who were to conſider of, and to preſcribe a form of Reforming the Church, which accordingly they did.

He is ſent for to Rome

He is ſent back into Germany.

Popiſh ſubtilty.

Hereupon Anno Chriſti 1535, he went back from Rome into Germany, to King Ferdinand, where he met with the Lantgrave of Heſſe, and opened to him the Popes purpoſe of calling a Council: After which he went to the reſt of the Princes to impart the ſame to them alſo. Then went he to Luther at Wittenberg, where with better diligence then ſucceſſe, he proſecuted what he had in Commiſſion to him.

He beſtirs himſelf in Germany.

About the end of that year, the Princes by their writing returned anſwer to Vergerius. And the year after, when Cæſar went to Naples, Vergerius was called home by the Pope, to whom he ſhewed the ſucceſs of his affair, viz. That the Proteſtants required a free and Chriſtian Council to be convened within the borders of Germany, as the Emperour had promiſed. That there was no hope of gaining Luther, and his aſſociates, but by their deſtruction: That the Proteſtant Princes would not hearken to any thing about England, and that the other Princes were very cold alſo in that cauſe; and that George Duke of Saxony had told him, that there was great danger from the Lutherans, which could by no other means be preventeo, except the Emperour and Pope would make war with them.

He gives an account to the Pope.

Hereupon the Pope commanded him to make all the haſt he could to Naples, to acquaint the Emperour herewith, eſpecially to excite him all he could to take up Armes againſt the Lutherans: But when Cæſar came to Rome, Anno Chriſti 1536, he preſſed the Pope for a Generall Council, deſiring to carry back with him into Germany the Patent for it. The Pope denyed not his requeſt, but told him that he would chuſe a City in Italy for it, and that he would preſcribe ſuch Rules for it as were moſt neceſſary for the Roman Church. Cæſar anſwered, that if he would call a Council, he much cared not where it was, preſuming that he could bring the greateſt part of the Germans along with him to it. Then did the Pope with his aſſiſtants draw up a Patent for it; at which time he made Vergerius firſt Biſhop of Modruſium, and ſhortly after of Juſtinople.

He is ſent to the Emperour.

The Emperor deals with the Pope about a Council.

Anno Chriſti 1537, the Pope intending to ſend another Legate into Germany, commanded Vergerius to acquaint him with the ſtate of the Country, and how he ſhould deport himſelf amongſt them; But both Maſter and Scholar loſt their labour with the German Princes.

Another Legat in vain.

Anno Chriſti 1541, Vergerius was again ſent into Germany, to the Convention at Worms, in the name indeed of the King of France, but in truth, that under that pretence he might the better promote the Popes affairs, at which time he wrote his book De unitate & pace Eccleſiæ: The ſcope whereof was to take off the Germans from thinking of a National Council. Thus Vergerius for a long time had been ſerviceable to the Popes, and had promoted their intereſt; He had alſo attained great favour with Princes and Kings: and King Ferdinand did ſo highly eſteem him, that he made him God-father to his Daughter Katherine: Yet at laſt he fell off from the Pope by this wonderfull occaſion.

He is well beloved.

After the Convention at Wormes he was called back to Rome, and the Pope being to make ſome Cardinals, intended to make Vergerius one; but ſome ſuggeſted that he had been ſo long in Germany, that he ſmelled of a Lutheran, which made the Pope to alter his purpoſe; which when Vergerius was informed of by Cardinal Ginucius, to whom the Pope had told it, he was wonderfully aſtoniſhed, and that he might purge himſelf, went into his own country, purpoſing to write a Book with this title, Againſt the Apoſtate Germans. But it pleaſed God, that whilſt he read over his adverſaries Books, with an inntent to coufute them, himſelf was converted by them: Whereupon, caſting off all deſires of a Cardinalſhip, he retired himſelf to his brother John Baptiſta, Biſhop of Pola, and communicating his thoughts to him, asked his advice.

He is ſuſpected for a Lutheran.

His wonderfull converſion.

He retires to his brother.

His Brother at firſt was much aſtoniſhed, and bewailed his condition; But after a while was perſwaded by him to read and ſtudy the Scriptures, eſpecially in the point of Juſtification by Faith, whereby it pleaſed God that he alſo ſaw the Popiſh Doctrines to be falſe, and ſo they both became zealous Preachers of Chriſt to the people of Iſtria, diligently inculcating the wonderful benefits which we have by Chriſt, and ſhewing what Works they be that God requires of us, that hereby they might reduce the people to the pure worſhip of God. But the Devil ſtirred up many adverſaries againſt them, eſpecially the Fryars, who accuſed them to the inquiſitors; amongſt whom was Hannibal Griſonius, and his companion Hierom Mutius, who afterwards writ an invective againſt Vergerius, traducing alſo Germany it ſelf, in a Book which he ſet out in hatred of Religion.

Biſhop of Pola is converted.

Gods mercy

Sathans Malice.

They are accuſed to the inquiſitors.

Griſonius upon this information went to Pola, and Juſtinople, ruſhing into the houſes of of the Citizens, ſea rching for forbidden Books. He preached alſo, and ſent forth the Popes Thunderbolt againſt ſuch as would not accuſe others that were ſuſpected for Lutheraniſm; by which means he enforced one friend to accuſe another, yea children to accuſe their own parents. In the chief Church of Juſtinople he ſang Maſs in a Glorious Cope, and told the people that God had plagued them for divers years with ſeveral Calamityes; one year (ſaith he) in your Olive-Trees, and a nother year in your Corn, and a third year in your Vines and Cattle, and your Biſhops are the cauſes of all theſe miſchiefs, neither can you expect to be freed from theſe Judgements except they be driven away.

Popiſh Malice.

A lying Prophet.

Hereupon Vergerius went to Mantua to his old friend Cardinal Gonzaga, to whom he was Familiarly known: But John Caſus, the Popes Ambaſſador to the Venetians, hearing of it, urged Gonzaga both by Letters, and Meſſengers not to entertain ſuch a Man any longer. Upon this Vergerius went to Trent, where the Council then was, to clear himſelf; Bnt when the Pope knew it, though he could willingly have Impriſoned him, yet leaſt any Suſpition ſhould have riſen, eſpecially in Germany, that the Councill was not Free, he Wrote to his Legate not to ſuffer him to be heard in the Councill, but to Command him to goe ſome whither elſe.

He goes to Mantua.

And to Trent.

Then he went to Nenice, where Caſus the Popes, Legate meeting with him, exhorted him by all means to go to Rome; but Vergerius knowing well his danger if he ſhould ſo do, refuſed.

And to Venice.

Then did Caſus a few daies after, Command him in the Popes name to go no more to Juſtinople: Whereupon he betook himſelf to Padua, where he was a Spectator of the Miſerable Condition of Francis Spira; Which ſo wrought upon him, that he reſolved to leave his Country, and all his outward Comforts, and go into Voluntary Exile, where he might freely profeſs Chriſt, and accordingly he went into Rhetia, where he Preached the Goſpel Sincerely, till he was called from thence to Tubing, by Chriſtopher Duke of Wittenberg, where he ended his Daies, Anno Chriſti, 1565. His Brother being Dead before him, not without the Suſpition of Poyſon.

Spira is a warning to Him.

He goes into Rhetia.

His Death.

He Publiſhed many Workes, which are Particularly ſet Dwon by Verheiden.

The Life of Strigelius who dyed, Anno Christi 1569.

His Birth.

Victorine Strigelius, was born at Kaufbira, an Imperiall City in Suevia, not farre from the Foot of the Alpes, Anno Christi, 1524. His Father was Doctor of Physick, who dyed in his Sonns Infancy. When this Strigelius was fit for it, his Friends finding him of a Prompt and ready Wit, set him to School in his own Country, where he quickly Drunk in the first Rudiments of Learning, and so Anno Christi, 1538. He was sent to the Universiry of Friburg, in which place the Popish Religion was kept up; But yet by the care of Erasmus, the Knowldge of the Arts, and Tongues much Flouriſhed.

His Education.

He goes to Friburg.

There he heard the Philosophical Lectures of John Zinckius, a Famous Physitian: And afterwards travelling into the Saxon Universities, when he hard Melanthon ask a Child, What was God? And, What was meant by the Word in the first of John? He wondered to hear such Answers from a Child, as the Popish Doctors were Ignorant of. Upon this occasion in the Eighteenth year of his Age, and in the Year of Christ, 1542. He went to Wittenberg, where he was Inflamed by God, with an Ardent desire to know the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches: For which end, he diligently attended on Luther's and Melanthon's Lectures, and wholly framed himself to the Imitation of Melanthon.

And to Wittenberg.

Anno Christi, 1544. He Commenced Master of Arts, and by the perswasion of Melanthon he Taught a private School at Wittenberg, where he did much good, and gat him self great Repute: But when the Wars in Germany waxed hot, he left Wittenberg, and went to Magdeburg, and from thence to Erphurd, where he Publiſhed some Orations, being about two and twenty Years old. Anno Christi, 1548. He went from thence to Jenes and there he Preached, and the year after Marryed a Wife, Barbara, the Daughter of that excellent Man Francis Burcard; which lived with him but two years. Anno Christi, 1553. His Marriage.

Anno Christi, 1556. There was a Meeting at Isenac, about the Controverſie raised by Major, concerning the Necessity of Good Works; Where by the consent of the Divines, Strigelius was appointed in a friendly manner to conferre with Menius about that Controverſie, and to conclude it not out of Humane Writings, but by the Word of God. The end of which Conference was, that Menius did solemnly promise before Frederick Duke of Saxony, and all the Ministers present, that he would not Recede from those Propositions, which were then agreed upon out of Gods Word.

He disputes with Menius.

Anno Christi, 1557. There fell out a new Controverſie between Facius and him, which brought on the Disputation at Vinaria, wherein these two Questions were handled; Whether in Regeneration the Qualityes onely are changed without the Substance, or whether together with the Qualities there be a Creation of a new Substance? Strigelius held, That there was only a change of the Qualities; his Adversary said, There was a change in both. The other Question was a bout the manner of Working; De modo agendi.

And with Flacius.

His imprisonment.

His Sickneſſe.

Anno Christi, 1559. He, together with Aquila, Pastor of Jenes, was carryed away to Prison, the Markes whereof he carryed to his Grave; The reason of it was, because they refused to consent to a Book which they of Jenes had publiſhed against the Divines of Wittenberg. In Prison he fell very sick, insomuch as the Prince suffered him to go to his own House, but yet made him a Prisoner there. Then did Christopher, Duke of Wirtenberg, and Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, Mediate for his Releaſe Releaſe, and yet could not obtain it; But at laſt the Emperour Maximilian (interpoſing his Authority) procured it, after he had been a Priſoner above three Years; And ſo for a while he returned to his former Labours in the Schooles. But perceiving that he could not be in ſafety in that place, he reſolved to depart, which the Univerſity underſtanding, wrote to him, earneſtly importuning his ſtay: To whom he returned thanks for their Love: but told them withall, That his Life was in continuall Danger by reaſon of Falſe Brethren, and therefore he was reſolved to goe where he might do more Good. And accordingly from thence he went to Libſich, where he ſpent his time in writing upon the Pſalmes; And afterwards, having it left to his Choice whither to ſtay at Lipſich, or to goe to Wittenberg (being ſent for thither) he choſe to ſtay where he was, and was choſen Profeſſor of Divinity in that Univerſity: Where he continued his Lectures till Anno Chriſti, 1566. At which time he came to deliver his judgement about the Lords Supper. Whereupon, by the Command of the Rector of the Univerſity, the doors of the Colledge were ſhut againſt him, and he not ſuffered to read any more: Yet they would have reſtored him to his place, if he would have promiſed to meddle with that Point no more: But he refuſed to make any ſuch promiſe, and withall complained to the Elector of Saxony of the wrong done unto him; From whom he received a ſharpe Anſwer, and therefore leaving Lipſich, he went to Amberg in the upper Palatinate, where, after a ſhort ſtay he received Letters from the Elector Palatine, and the Univerſity; Inviting him to Heidleberg, whither he preſently went, and was made Profeſſor of Ethicks.

His releaſe.

His Flight in times of Danger.

He goes to Lipſich.

He is made profeſſor of Divinity.

He is ſhut out of the Schools.

His Courage.

He goes to Amberg.

And to Heidleberg.

In which place he took very great pains, both in reading his Lectures, and Writing: But his Body having Contracted ſome Diſeaſes by his former Impriſonment, Anno Chriſti, 1569. He fell very ſick, whereupon he ſaid; Sperare ſe finem vitæ ſuæ adeſſe, &c. That he hoped that his Life was at an end, whereby he ſhould be Delivered from the Fraud and Miſeries of this Evil World, and enjoy the Bleſſed Preſence of God, and his Saints to all Eternity; And accordingly preſently after, he quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti, 1569. and of his Age Fourty four. Having Taught the Churches both by Voice and Writings, in many great Changes, above Twenty three Yeares, attaining that which he had often deſired, viz. That he might not aye a lingring Death.

The Life of John Brentius, who dyed Anno Chriſti, 1570.

His Birth.

His Education

His Studiouſneſſe.

John Brentius, was born at Wile in the Imperiall Suevia, Anno Chriſti, 1499. His Father was Major of that City twenty four years, who carefully brought up his Son in Learning: And at eleven years old, ſent him to Heidleberg to School, and at thirteen years old he was admitted into the Univerſity: and at fifteen years old he Commenced Batchelor. There alſo he ſtudyed Greek and Hebrew, and was ſo ſtudious, that he uſually roſe at Midnight to his Book, whereby he contracted ſuch a habit, that he could never after whilſt he lived, ſleep longer then till Midnight; the reſt of the night he ſpent in Holy Meditations, and in his old Age he had a Candle by his Bed-ſide, and deceived the time by writing, and Meditation. Partly by his diligence, and partly by his acute Wit, and ſtrong Memory he profited ſo much both in the Arts and Tongues, that at eighteen years old he was made Maſter of Arts.

His converſion.

His Zeal.

About this time Luther's Books coming abroad, Brentius by reading of them, came to the knowledge of the Truth, which he willingly embraced: And being deſirous to propagate it to others, he began to read upon Matthew, firſt to ſome Friends of his own Colledge, but his Auditors increaſing out of other Colledges, he was fain to read in the publick Schools; for which the Divines hated him, becauſe he grew ſo popular, ſaying, That neither was the place fit for Divinity-Lectures, nor he fit for ſuch a Work, being not yet in Orders: Whereupon to take away that Objection, he entred into Orders, and preached often for other men to the great delight of his Hearers.

He is made Miniſter.

Preachers Patterne

Power of the Word.

From thence he was called to be a Paſtor at Hale, in Sweveland, where his Gravity, Geſture, Phraſe, Voice, and Doctrine, did ſo pleaſe the Senate, that though he was but twenty three years old, yet they choſe him to that place; and he carryed himſelf with ſuch Gravity, Holyneſs of Life, integrity of Manners, and diligence in his calling, that none could contemn his Youth: And the Lord ſo bleſſed his Labours there, that many were converted to the Truth, yea, amongſt the very Popiſh Prieſts, ſome ſome of them were converted, others left their places for ſhame, and went elſe-where.

He uſed much modeſty, and wiſdom in his Sermons, and when (in the beginning of his preaching there) the Popiſh Prieſts railed exceedingly upon him and his doctrine, and the people expected that he would anſwer them accordingly; He, contray-wiſe went on in teaching the fundamental points of Religion, and as he had occaſion, confuted their errors without bitterneſs from clear Scripture arguments, whereby in time he ſo wrought upon them, that he brought them to a ſight of their errors and to a deteſtation of their Idolatry. His Prudence.

About this time Muncer and his companions roſe up, and ſtirred almoſt all the Boors in Germany to take Arms againſt the Magiſtrates and rich men, abuſing Scripture to juſtifie their proceedings; Whereupon Brentius was in great danger, for many cryed out that his oppoſing Popery, and caſting out the old Ceremonies was the cauſe of theſe Tumults; Yet when as the Boors in Hale were riſen up, and threatned to beſiege the City of Hale, and the Magiſtrates and Citizens were in ſuch fear that they were ready to fly, or io joyn with the Boors; Brentius encouraged them, and told them that if they would take Arms, and defend their City, God would aſſiſt them, &c. and ſo it came to paſſe; for ſix hundred Citizens beat away four thouſand of thoſe Boors. He alſo publiſhed a Book in confutation of their wicked opinions, and ſhewed how diſſonant they were to the Word of God. Anabaptiſts Madneſſe. Sathans Policy. Gods Mercy.

Preſently after roſe up that unhappy contention between Luther and Zuinglius about Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament, which continued divers years, to the great diſturbance of the Church, ſcandal of the Reformed Religion, and hinderance of the ſucceſs of the Goſpel: And when a conference was appointed for the compoſing of that difference, Luther, Brentius, and ſome others met with Zuinglius, and ſome of his friends, but after much debate they departed without an agreement. Another Contention. Diviſion Dangerous.

Anno 1530. was the Diet held at Auſpurg, unto which the Proteſtant Princes brought their Divines with them, and amongſt others Brentius; at which time George Marqueſſe of Brandenburg told the Emperor, That he would rather ſhed his blood, and loſe his life, or lay down his neck to the headsman, then alter his Religion. Here the Divines drew up that famous Confeſſion of Faith, which from the place is called the Auguſtane Confeſſion. Brentius at his return home married a wife, Margaret Grætenna, famous for her chaſtity, modeſty, and piety, by whom he had ſix children. Brandenburgs courage and Zeal. Auguſtane Confeſſion. His Marriage.

Ulricus Prince of Wirtemberg, intending to reform Religion in his Dominions, thought it the beſt way firſt to Reform the Univerſity of Tubing, and conſidering where he might have a fit man for ſo great and difficult a work, he at laſt reſolved upon Brentius, whom he ſent for, and who, with much diligence, prudence, and fidelity, accompliſhed that work. He goes to Tubing.

Anno Chriſti 1547, the Emperor with his Army coming to Hale, Brentius (who was now returned thither) hoped to prevaile with the Captain, that no Souldiers ſhould be quartered in his houſe; but when he came home, he found the Souldiers beating at his door, and ready to break it down; and when they perceived that Brentius was Maſter of that houſe, one of them ſet an Halbert to his breaſt, threatning to kill him if the door was not preſently opened: Whereupon they were let in, and he cauſed meat and drink to be prepared for them, and in the mean time conveighed away all his papers; and when he ſaw the fury and rage of the Souldiers, he conveighed himſelf and his family out at a back-door. His trouble at Hale. Unruly Souldiers. His Policy.

The next day came a Spaniſh Biſhop with his train, and putting forth the Souldiers quartered in Brentius his houſe, ſearched his ſtudy, looked over his papers, and letters, and finding ſome letters to his friends, wherein he juſtified the Proteſtant Princes in taking Armes againſt the Emperor, he preſently carried them to the Emperor, whereby Brentius was in great danger, and was fain to hide himſelf in a very high Tower, and not being ſafe there, he changed his apparrel, leſt his wife and children, and with one onely companion paſſed through the Spaniards ſafely, and wandred up and down the fields all that night. But when the Emperor was removed with his Army, he returned to Hale again, Popiſh Malice. His Flight. Gods Mercy.

Anno Chriſti 1548, when Cæſar had publiſhed his Book called the Interim, the Proteſtant The Interim

Proteſtant Princes and Magiſtrates required the judgements of their Divines upon it: And the Magiſtrates of Hale deſired Brentius to tell them his judgement; who when
His courage he had conſidered it, told them, That it was a wicked Book, and altogether contrary to the Scriptures, and that he would loſe his life before he would aſſent to it. This coming to Caſar's eares, he ſent a Commiſſary to Hale, charging him to bring Brentius to him,
His danger. either alive or dead, when the Commiſſary came thither, he inſinuated himſelf into Brentius's acquaintance, invited him to his table, perſwaded him to walk abroad with him, having prepared Horſes to carry him away: But that ſucceeding not, he called the Senate together, and having ſworn them to keep private what he ſhould tell them, he imparted his Commiſſion, telling them how acceptable it would be to the Emperor, if they would ſend Brentius to him, but if they refuſed, the Emperor would deſtroy their City, &c.

It pleaſed God that whilſt he was thus perſwading the Magiſtrates, there came in A miracle of mercy. one of the Magiſtrates, later then his fellows, and the Commiſſary not minding it, did not tender the Oath to him. So when they were diſmiſſed, this man wrote to Brentius, Fuge, fuge, Brenti, cito, citius, citiſſime; which note was brought to him as he ſate at ſupper. Having read it, he told his family that he muſt goe forth upon buſineſſe, but he would returne ere long.

His flight. As he was going out of the City, he met the Commiſſary, who asked him whither he went? He anſwered; To a ſick friend in the ſuburbs who had ſent for him: Well (ſaid the Commiſſary) to morrow you muſt dine with me. He replyed, God willing: and ſo they parted. Being thus eſcaped, he hid himſelf in a thick Wood, and for ſome weekes together he lay in the Wood all day, and every night came into a Village to A good Paſtor. a friends houſe where he lodged. He wrote alſo to the Magiſtrates of Hale, that if they could, and would protect him, he was ready to come back, and not to forſake his flock; but if they could not, he did not deſire that they ſhould endanger themſelves for his ſake. They anſwered, That they could not protect him, and therefore left him free to go wither he pleaſed.

He goes to Wittenberg. Preſently after Ulricus Prince of Wittenberg invited him to him, and ordered him to be ſo private, that he himſelf might not know where he was, that if he was asked, he might ſafely deny his knowledg of him: Yet upon ſuſpition, his Caſtle was ſearched, but Brentius was in another place, where in his retirement he wrote a Comment upon the ninety third Pſalm. Afterwards he went to Baſil, as to a ſafer place, where his Wife died of a Conſumption. From thence he removed to the Caſtle of Horrenberg in the Hyrcanian Wood, where he changed his name, and gave out that he was the Keeper of the Caſtle; and whilſt he was there, he frequented the Sermons in a neighbour Town, where the Miniſter uſed to ſpin out his Sermons to a great length, Whereupon Brentius took occaſion modeſtly to tell him of it, to whom the Minſter anſwered, You Caſtle keepers think all time too long at Church, but no time too long that you ſpend in drinking. Brentius ſmiling at it, ſaid no more. Whilſt he was there, he perfected his Comment upon Iſaiah, and ſome other Works. Afterwards he had great proffers made him by the Citizens of Magdeburg, by Edw. the Sixth, King of England, and the Duke of Boruſſia, who proffered him large ſtipends and Kingly gifts, but he refuſed them all; and thus continued in baniſhment for the ſpace of two years.

God preſerves him.

He goes to Baſil.

And to Hornburg.

He is invited to ſeverall places.

The Dukes courage. Anno Chriſti 1550, Ulricus Duke of Wirtemberg dyed, and his Son Chriſtopher ſucceeding, reſolved to reſtore the Miniſters which were driven away by the Interim to their Charges within his Dominions, and to perfect the Work of Reformation: And for that end, ſent for Brentius, and kept him in his Caſtle of Stutgard, that he might have his Advice and Aſſiſtance, in carrying on that Work. Neither was he diſcouraged by the Admonition of the Princes, and Biſhops, nor by the threats of the Reformation.

He causſed Brentius to write a Confeſſion of Faith, and of the Doctrine of Chriſtian Religion, and about the chief points in Controverſie, which he intended to ſend to
He goes to Trent. the Council of Trent, and accordingly he did ſend it by two Ambaſſadors, and Anno Chriſt. 1552. Brentius, with three other Divines went after, either publickly in the Council to defend that Confeſſion, or to refute ſuch Decrees as ſhould be made againſt

againſt it: But no anſwer could be extorted from thoſe Fathers, neither could theſe Divines be heard, nor were once called into the Councill; Whereupon, after a while they returned home, not without great danger. About that time Brentius Marryed again, one Katherine Iſenman, a choice Woman, who was a great comfort to him all the reſt of his life; by whom alſo he had twelve Children. His ſecond marriage.

The year after the Paſtor of Stutgard dying, Brentius was choſen into his room. In which place he continued all his life, and carryed himſelf with much Sedulity, Piety & Prudence in the ſame; always maintaining love and concord with his Colleagues. And in his Sermons he preached over the Pentateuch, and the Goſpels of Matthew and Mark. And whereas one Peter a Soto, a Spaniard, wrote a Confeſſion of the Romane Faith, and made ſome Annotations upon the forementioned Confeſſion of Wirtenberg, labouring to beſpatter, and traduce it, Brentius anſwered this out of the Scriptures and Fathers, defending the Doctrine of the Proteſtants againſt the Opinions of the Papiſts, and the Decrees of the Councill of Trent, which he confuted, ſo that a Blind Man might perceive the Idolatry of the Romaniſt's, to be Condemned by the Word of God. He is choſen to Stutgard. He defends his confeſſion of Faith Anno Chriſti, 1557. He was ſent by his Prince to the Conference at Wormes, which came to nothing, becauſe the Popiſh party would not ſuffer that the Scripture ſhould be the Judge of their Controverſies. In his old Age he wrote upon the Pſalmes: And whereas there were many Monaſteries in Wirtenberg, out of which the Fryers were driven, he perſwaded his Prince to turn them to Schooles, for the training up of Youth in Learning, which was accordingly done; and once in two years Brentius viſited thoſe Schools, and took notice how the Schollars profited in Learning, and encouraged them to make a dayly Progreſs therein. He had almoſt finiſhed his comment upon the Pſalmes, when as his old Age, worn out with Studies and Labours, put a Period unto the ſame, and his end was haſtened by grief for the immature Death of his Prince, for whom he profeſſed that he would willing have ſacrificed all his Eſtate, and his own life alſo. He goes to Worms. Monaſteries turned to ſchooles. His ſickneſs.

Falling into a Feaver, whereby he perceived that his end approached, he made his Will, wherein he ſet down a Confeſſion of his Faith: And ſending for the Miniſters of Stutgard, he cauſed his Sonne to read it to them, and requeſted them to ſubſcribe their hands as Witneſſes to it. He alſo received the Sacrament, and exhorted them to unity in Doctrine, and Love among themſelves. He was exceedingly patient in all his ſickneſs, neither by word, nor geſture ſhewing the leaſt impatience; always ſaying, That he longed for a better, even an eternal Life. The night before his death, he ſlept ſweetly, and when he awaked, the Miniſter repeated the Apoſtles Creed, and asked him whether he dyed in that Faith: to whom he anſwered, Yea, which was his laſt word, and ſo he quietly reſigned up his Spirit unto God, Anno Chriſti, 1570. and of his Age ſeventy one. He was buryed with much honour, and had this Epitaph. He makes his Will. His Patience. His death.

Voce, ſtylo, pietate, fide, candore probatus
Johannes tali Brentius ore fuit.

With voice, ſtile, piety, faith, and candor grac'd,
In outward ſhape, John Brentius was thus fac'd.

He was of a bigge ſtature, of a firm health, in which he continued to his old Age, had ſtrong ſides, a clear, and full voice; had many excellent virtues, went through many great dangers, with an undaunted ſpirit. His piety to his Parents was very ſingular, and his love to God and his Church exemplary. His character.

He wrote many things, which are printed in nine Tomes: Moſt of which are mentioned before in his life. His Works.

The Life of Peter Viretus, who dyed Anno Christi, 1571.

His birth & education.

Peter Viretus was born at Orba in the Country of the Bernates, brought up in Learning at Paris, where he began to be acquainted with Farell, whom afterwards he helpt much in setling the Churches in those parts; But principally the Church of Lausanna, where he spent many years in the Ministery, and writing Books, to his great praise. And when Calvin was sent to the Conference at Worms, Anno Christi 1541. and from thence to Ratisbone, he obtained of the Senate of Lausanna, that Virete should supply his place at Geneva till his return: And when he came back, he much importuned that Virete might still continue there, affirming that it would much conduce to the good of the Church at Geneva to enjoy his Labours; but he would needs return to Lausanna to his former charge.

He goes to Lyons.

Afterwards, at the earnest entreaty of the French Churches he went to Lyons, where, in the middest of the Civill Wars, and the Pestilence which followed, he, with his Colleagues, governed the Church with much prudence; till, by the Jesuits means, Anno Christi, 1563. there was a Proclamation sent abroad, that none but such as were Native French, should be Preachers in the Protestant Churches, upon which occasion many forraign Ministers were driven out of France, and amongst the rest Mr. Virete. Then at the earnest request of the Queen of Navarre, he went to Berne, where he continued untill his Death, which was Anno Christi, 1571. and of his Age sixty. He was much bewailed of all good men.

He goes to Bern.

His death.

Whilst he lived, he was of a very weak Constitution, and the rather by reason of Poyson which a Priest had given to him at Geneva; As also because of some wounds that he had received from a Priest that lay in wait for him in another place, where he was left for dead. He was very Learned, of a sweet disposition, and so exceeding Eloquent, that he drew many to be his Hearers, which were no friends to Religion; and they were so chained to his Lips, that they never thought the time long wherein he Preached, but always wished his Sermons longer.

Popish malice.

His character.

His Eloquence.

At Lyons which was a Populous City; he preached in an open place, and turned some thousands to the Truth, and Faith in Christ; Yea some that passed by, with no purpose to hear his Sermon, Yet did he so work upon them, that they neglected their other business to hearken to him. At that time France enjoyed those three excellent Preachers, Calvin, Farell, and Virete: Calvin, was famous for his Learning, Farel, for his earnestness, and Virete for his Eloquence: Whereupon Beza made these verses.

The great fruit of his Ministry.

J. JVEL

The Life of John Juel, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1571.

John Juel was born at Buden, in Devonſhire, Anno Chriſti 1522. His Father was a Gentleman that carefully trained him up in piety, and learning. His ſingular promptneſſe of wit and induſtry, accompanied with ingenuity, and modeſty, procured him much love from his Maſter. His Birth & Education.

At thirteen years old, he was ſent to Oxford, and admitted into Merton Colledge under tuition of Maſter Parkhurſt, who was as carefull to ſeaſon him with pure Religion, as with other learning: Afterwards he removed to Corpus Chriſti Colledge, where his proficiency in learning was ſo remarkable that he took his degree of Bachelor with much applauſe, and ſhortly after was choſen (before many his Seniors) to read the Humanity Lecture, which he performed with [redacted] accurateneſſe, diligence and excellency, that many came from other Colledg[redacted] him, and amongſt others, Maſter Parkhurſt his former Tutor, who (the L[redacted] being ended) ſaluted him thus. He goes to Oxford. He is choſen Humanity Lecturer.

Olim Diſcipulus mihi, charè Juelle, fuiſti,
Nunc ero Diſcipulus, te venuente, tuus.
Dear Juel, thou a Scholar waſt of mine;
Hereafter, though unwilling, Ile be thine.

He was very ſtudious, and his onely recreations from his ſtudies, was reading to his Scholars, diſputing with others, and ruminating what he had before read: His life was His ſtudiouſneſs.

such, that the Dean of the Colledge (though a Papist) thus said, I should love thee Juel if thou wert not a Zuinglian: In thy Faith I hold thee an Heretick, but surely in thy life thou art an Angel: Thou art very good and honest, but a Lutheran. In the end of King Henry the Eighth's reigne, he commenced Master of Arts, but he flourished much more under Edward the sixth, at which time Peter Martyr being the Divinity Professor in Oxford, Juel observed his Art, copied out his Sermons and Lectures, and became most intimate with him: He preached at Sunningwell, and was famous for his Latine Sermons ad Clerum: He ever loved Eloquence, but not effeminatam, sed virilem: Prudentibus viris non placent phalerata, sed fortia.

His esteem of Peter Martyr.

But about the beginning of Queen Maries reign, the Popish party of that Colledge prevailing, they expelled him the house for his Religion; After which he tarried a while at Broadgates Hall, where the fame of his learning drew many Scholars to him, and the University chose him for her Orator: There he stayed so long till the Inquisition caught him, urging upon him subscription, under pain of Proscription, and horrible tortures. Now was he brought into such straights, that consulting with flesh and blood he set his name to the paper, whereby he approved some articles of Popery. This much obscured the glory of his after sufferings, and nothing promoted his safety; For snares being laid for him, he had certainly been caught, had he not, by Gods special providence, gone that very night that he was sought for accidentally a wrong way to London, and so by going out of the way, he found the safest way; But afterwards he repented of this publick Subscription, by publick confession, and contrition.

He is expelled the Colledge.
Brought into the inquisitions.
Humane infirmity.
A speciall providence.
His Recantation.

As he travelled on foot in a snowy winters night toward London, he was found in the way by Master Latimers servant starved with cold, and faint with weariness, lying on the ground, panting, and labouring for life, or for death rather, by whose means he was preserved; Yet when he came to London he found no safety, looking every hour to be delivered up to that cruel butcher Bonner, and to be slaughtered at his shambles: whereupon he fled from his Native-Soyl, and wandring beyond Sea, was disappointed of all his friends, and means to procure him so much as a nights lodging: yet through Gods mercy he came safe to Franckfurt, where, presently after he made an excellent Sermon, and in the end of it, openly confessed his fall in these words, It was my abject, and cowardly minde, and faint heart that made my weak hand commit this wickedness: which confession was mixed with hearty sighs, and tears, and concluded with earnest supplication; First, to Almighty God whom he had offended, and then to his Church which he had scandalized: and there was none in that Congregation but ever after imbraced him as a dear brother, yea, as an Angel of God.

Gods providence.
Flight in persecution.
He goes to Franckfurt
His Repentance.

From thence he was often invited by kinde Letters from Peter Martyr to Strasborough, whether at last he went, and where he found many Divines, Knights and Gentlemen, who were fled from England, having left their estates, honours, kindred and deerest friends for the testimony of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. When he came to Strasborough, Martyr invited him to his Common-Table, and used his help in compiling of his Commentary upon Judges, and afterwards when Martyr was sent for by the Senate of Zurick to succeed Pellican in the Hebrew Lecture, and exposition of Scripture, he took Juel with him, being accompanied also with many other English Exiles, who for a while were maintained by the charity of some Londoners; till Steven Gardiner having notice of it, by impoysoning and impoverishing their benefactors, stopped the current of their bounty; Yet in this extremity, the Lord raised up Christopher, Prince of Wirtemberg, bountifully to relieve them.

He goes to Strasborough
From thence to Zurick.
Charity to the Exiles.
Popish malice.
Gods Mercy

The Senators of Zurick also, at the request of Bullinger, opened the treasury of their liberality to them: Also Calvin, Zuinglius, Melancthon, Pellican, Lavater, Gesnor, and all the greatest ornaments of Religion and Learning in all reformed Churches were very kind to the English Exiles.

Juel spent most of the time of his banishment in Peter Martyrs house, bettering him, and being bettered by him: He took much paines also in composing the differences and contentions amongst his Brethren, arising from the difference of opinion concerning cerning ceremonies, and Church diſcipline: and thoſe which groaned moſt under the burthen of affliction, he perſwaded them to patience in bearing their part of Chriſts Croſſe, ſhutting up all with that ſweet cloſe often repeated by him, Hæc non durabunt ætatem: Bear a while, theſe miſeries will not endure an Age; Which words proved a Propheſie; for it pleaſed God in mercy to his Church ſhortly after to cut off that bloody Queen Mary who lived not out half her dayes, and to ſet up Queen Eliazbeth to be a Nurſing Mother to his Church.

A blessed peace-maker.

A prediction

Queen Mary dyes.

Queen Elizabeth ſucceeds.

In the beginning of whoſe Reign thoſe Exiles returned home, and Juel amongſt the reſt. Preſently after his return, he with ſome others were appointed to diſpute at Weſtminſter with ſome of the Popiſh party, but the Papiſts declining the Diſputation, it came to nothing. Shortly after the Queen imployed him into the Weſt, to viſit the Churches, to root out Superſtition and to plant true Religion, where he took much pains in breaking the Bread of Life, where he firſt drew the Breath of Life.

A diſputation appointed.

His paines in Reforming the Church.

After this he was made Biſhop of Salisbury, though with much reluctancy, looking upon it as a great burthen. In that office he took much paines both by Preaching & Governing, & was very careful in providing faithful Paſtors, and in reforming abuſes.

He is made Biſhop.

He preaches at Pauls Croſſe.

His challenge to the Papiſts.

Anno Chriſti 1560, he was called to preach at Pauls Croſs, where he took that Text, 1 Cor. 11. 23. For I received of the Lord that which alſo I delivered unto you, &c. In which Sermon he confirmed largely the Proteſtants Doctrine concerning the Sacrament of the Lords Supper by Scriptures and Fathers, adding this ſolemn Proteſtation, That if any Learned man of all our adverſaries, or if all the Learned men that be alive, are able to ſhew any one ſufficient ſentence out of any old Catholick Doctor or Father, or out of any old Generall Council, or out of the holy Scriptures of God, or any one example of the Primitive Church, whereby it may be clearly and plainly proved, That there was any private Maſſes in the world at that time for the ſpace of ſix hundred years after Chriſt; or that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was ever adminiſtred to the people under one kind; or that the people then had their Commons Prayers in a ſtrange tongue that they underſtood not; or that the Biſhop of Rome was then called a Univerſal Biſhop, or the Head of the Univerſal Church; or that the people were taught to believe that Chriſts Body is really, ſubſtantially, corporeally, carnally, or naturally in the Sacrament; or that his Body is, or may be in above a thouſand places at one time; or that the Prieſt did then hold up the Sacrament over his head; or that the people did then fall down and worſhip it with divine honour; or that then the Sacrament was hanged up under a Canopy; or that in the Sacrament after the words of conſecration, there remained onely the accidents or ſhews, without the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine; or that the Prieſt then divided the Sacrament in three parts, & after received all alone himſelf, or that whoſoever had then ſaid that the Sacrament is a figure, pledge, token, or remembrance of Chriſts body, had therefore been judged for an Heretick; or that it was then lawfull to have thirty, twenty, fifteen, or five Maſſes ſaid in one Church in one day; or that Images were then ſet up in Churches, that the people might worſhip them; or that the Lay-people were then forbidden to read the Word of God in their own language, If any man alive can prove any one of theſe Articles, by any one clear or plain clauſe, or ſentence of Scripture, ancient Fathers, or any one Generall Council, or any example of the Primitive Church, I here promiſe that I will give over my opinion and ſubſcribe to him. Yea I further promiſe, that if any of all our Adverſaries be able clearly, and plainly to prove in manner aforeſaid, that it was then lawfull for a Prieſt to pronounce the words of conſecration cloſely, and in ſilence to himſelf; or that the Prieſt had then authority to offer up Chriſt unto his Father; or to receive the Sacrament for another, as they now do; or apply the virtue of Chriſts death and paſſion to any man by means of the Maſs, or that then it was thought a ſound doctrine to teach the people that the Maſs ex opere operato is able to remove our ſins; or that any Chriſtian man called the Sacrament his Lord and God; or that the people were then taught to believe that the Body of Chriſt remaineth in the Sacrament ſo long as that bread remaineth without corruption; or that a Mouſe, Worm, or other creature may eat the Body of Chriſt; or that Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion. As I ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again, if any of them can clearly prove any of theſe things in the manner aforeſaid, I promiſe to yield, and ſubſcribe unto him. Indeed they have long boaſted of Antiquity, &c. but when they are are put to their proofs, they can produce nothing. I ſpeak not this out of arrogancy (thou Lord knoweſt it, that knoweſt all things) but becauſe it is in the cauſe of God, and for aſſerting his Truth, I ſhould doe God great injury if I ſhould conceal it.

His charity. His great pains. A great Biſhop.

He was very bountiful in relieving the Poor, and wiſe in compoſing litigious ſtriſes. Beſides his publick employments, he read much, and wrote much; ſcarce any year in all the time of his Biſhoprick paſſed, wherein he publiſhed not ſome famous Work or other: Diu vixit, licet non diu fuit, He lived long in that ſhort ſcantling of his life. At Meales, a Chapter being firſt read, he recreated himſelf with Scholaſtical combats between young Schollars whom he maintained at his Table; the Conquerors were bountifully rewarded. After Meales, his doors and eares were open to all ſuits and cauſes; and then he retired to ſtudy.

His Family government

At nine a Clock at night, he called all his ſervants to an account how they had ſpent that day, and after Prayer, admoniſhed them accordingly: Then he returned to his ſtudy, where often he ſate till after midnight. When he was layd in Bed, one that waited upon him, read ſome part of an Author to him: which done, commending himſelf to the Protection of his Saviour, he took his reſt.

He had the art of Memory.

His memory was raiſed by art to the higheſt pitch of humane poſſibility; for he could readily repeat any thing that he had penned after once reading it: And therefore uſually at the ringing of the Bell, he began to commit his Sermons to heart; and kept what he learned ſo firmly, that he uſed to ſay, That if he were to make a ſpeech premeditated, before a thouſand Auditors ſhouting or fighting all the while, yet could he ſay all that he had provided to ſpeak. Many Barbarous, and hard names out of a Callender, and forty ſtrange words, Welſh, Iriſh, &c. after once, or twice reading at the moſt, and ſhort meditation, he could repeat both forwards, and backwards without Heſitation. And Sir Francis Bacon reading onely to him the laſt clauſes of ten lines in Eraſmus his Paraphraſe, in a confuſed and diſmembred manner; he ſitting ſilent a while, on a ſudden rehearſed all thoſe broken parcels of ſentences the right way, and the contrary, without ſtumbling.

His Death. foreſeen by him. His preparation for death. Preachers pattern. Gal. 5. 16.

Long before his ſickneſs he foretold the approaching, and in his ſickneſs, the preciſe day of his death: And he was ſo far from declining it, that by faſting, labour, and watching, he ſeemed rather to accelerate it, that it might be the readyer to entertain death, and meet his Saviour. Being very weak, as he was going to Preach at Lacock in Wiltſhire, a Gentlemen meeting him, friendly admoniſhed him to return home for his healths ſake, telling him that it was better the people ſhould want one Sermon, then be altogether deprived of ſuch a Preacher. To whom he replyed, That it beſt became a Biſhop to dye Preaching in a Pulpit; Alluding to that of Veſpaſian, Oportet Imperatorem ſtantem mori. And thinking upon that of his Maſter, Happy art thou, my Servant if when I come, I find thee ſo doing. His Text whereon he preached at Lacock, was, Walk in the Spirit; and preſently after Sermon his diſeaſe growing more and more upon him, he was foreced to take his bed.

His ſpeech to his Family in his ſickneſs. Death deſired.

In the beginning of his ſickneſs he made his Will, and gave moſt of his Eſtate to his ſervants, to ſcholars, and to the poor of Sarum. The Saturday following, calling all his houſhold about him, he expounded the Lords Prayer, Cantator cygnus funeris ipſe ſui: Wherein he ſaid, It hath always been my deſire that I might glorifie God, and honour his name by ſacrificing my life unto death for the defence of his Truth: But ſeeing God hath not granted my deſire, yet I rejoyce that my Body is exhauſted, and worn away in the Labours of my holy calling, &c. And now that my hour is at hand, I earneſtly deſire you to pray for me, and to help me with the ardency of your affections, when you perceive me through the infirmity of the Fleſh, to languiſh in my Prayers: Hitherto I have taught you) but now the time is come wherein I may, and deſire to be taught and ſtrengthened: by every one of you. Then he deſired them to ſing the 71 Pſalm, himſelf alſo joyning as well as he could, ſometimes alſo interpoſing ſome words of particular Application to himſelf, and in the end he ſaid, Lord now let thy Servant depart in Peace: Break of all delays: Lord receive my Spirit, &c. Then one ſtanding by, prayed with Tears, that if the Lord pleaſed, he would reſtore him to his former Health: Juel over hearing him, ſeemed to be offended, and ſaid, I have not lived ſo, that I

I am ashamed to live longer, neither doe I fear to dye, because we have a Mercyful Lord. A crown of Righteousness is layd up for me: Christ is my Righteousnesse. Father, let thy will be done, thy will I say, and not mine, which is imperfect and depraved. This day quicklylet me see the Lord Jesus, &c. And so after a few fervent inward prayers and sighs of longing desire, the soul returned to him that gave it, Anno Christi 1571, and of his Age 50. Ambrose His Faith. His Death.

Concerning his Apology for the Church of England, Peter Martyr thus wrote to him Tua Apologia, Frater charissime, non tantum mihi omnibus modis, & numeris satisfecit: verum etiam Bullingero, ejusq; filiis, & generis, nec non Gualthero, & Wolphio: tam sapiens, mirabilis, & eloquens visa est, ut ejus landanda nullum modum faciant, nec arbitrantur quicquam hoc tempore perfectius editum fuisse, &c. i.e. Thy Apology, dear brother, hath not onely fully satisfied me, but it seems also so wise, admirable and eloquent to Bullinger, and his sons; as also to Gualter, and Wolphius, that they can never make an end of praising it; and they believe that there hath not been so compleat a Book published in this Age, &c. Martyrs testimony of his Apology.

The Life of Zegedine, who dyed Anno Christi 1572.

Steven Kis, sirnamed Zegedine, from the place were he was born, which was a Town in the lower Pannonia, was born Anno Christi 1505, brought up in learning, first in the School of Zegedine, under the eye of his Parents; then was sent to Lippain, and after a while to Julia, in all which places he made an excellent progresse in Learning, and profited to admiration. His birth & education.

His parents being dead, he betook himself to teaching a School, and for his admirable dexterity therein, he procured to himself great favour, and authority amongst all sorts of persons. About which time (hearing the fame of Luther and Melancthon) he had a great mind to go to Wittenberg, but wanting opportunity in sundry regards, he went to the University at Cracovia, where having studied a while, he was made a Reader to others, and grew very famous; and having gotten some money there, Anno Christi 1541 he went to Wittenberg, where he studied Logick and Divinity three years, being a diligent hearer of the Lectures of Luther and Melancthon all that while; and so at the end of that terme, he returned into his own country, where he was received by the Hungarian youths with great applause in every place. He goes to Wittenberg. His diligence and zeal.

And being hired in the City of Thasniadine, he not only instructed youth in the knowledge of the Arts, but he preached Jesus Christ also to the people, before unknown unto them. This comming to the ears of the Kings Treasurer he sent for him, fell upon him, beat him, and drove him out of the City. There he lost two hundred Books, and was so barbarously kicked by this Tyrant with his Iron spurs, that he was almost slain. Thus wandring up and down as an exile, Anno Christi 1545, he was called to Julia, where he was made Governour of an illustrious School, and he again began to live comfortably; But on a sudden came news to him of the death of Luther, which was a very great grief to him. His first imployments. Inhumane cruelty. He is called to Julia.

The year after he was sent for to Cegledine, where he was hired to preach publickly in the Church, and with the leave of the School-master, he read Melancthons Common places in the Schooles, discovering many of the Popish errors, to his hearers; and God was pleased so to blesse his labours, that many learned young man went out of those Schooles. And to Cegledine.

Having continued there about two yeares and an half, Anno Christi 1548 he married his first Wife called Ursula; after which, leaving Cegledine, he was earnestly sent for by the Governour of Temeswert to govern the School there, which indeed was the most famous School in all those parts; where he not onely performed the office where- He goes to Temswert.

with

with he was intruſted, but Preached weekly to the people: But that Governour dying, there ſucceeded him one that was of a moſt rugged diſpoſition; being a Souldier, and a ſtrong Papiſt, who drove Zegedine from thence, together with divers other Proteſtants.

His manifold afflictions.

Being again an Exile, he wandred up and down, till he was called to Govern the School at Thurin, where he was received with great honour, Anno Chriſti, 1551. and according to his former cuſtome Preached to the people, who eagerly embraced the Truth, and loved him exceedingly. From thence, Anno Chriſti, 1553. he was called to Beckneſs, where he Preached to the people, and read Lectures in the Schools.

He is called to Thurin.

And from thence to Beckneſs.

Whilſt he was there, ſome Italian Souldiers were commanded by their Captain to kill Zegedine, out of an hatred to his Religion; But it pleaſed God that a Country man who heard the command, running haſtily to Zegedine, ſaid to him, Sir, what doe you here, when there are ſome Souldiers comming upon you to ſlay you? Therefore flye hence ſpeedily if you will ſave your life, and if you have any thing of worth, commit it to my cuſtody, who promiſe faithfully to keep it for you. Whilſt he was ſpeaking, the noiſe of the Souldiers was heard without, whereupon Zegedine ſlipt into his chamber, and taking a Bagge of mony, gave it to the man out of his window, intreating him to keep it ſafe. Preſently after the Souldiers ruſhing into his chamber, plundred him of all he had, together with his Books, and binding him, carryed him away with them to the Captain. But behold the gracious Providence of God! Amongſt thoſe bloody Souldiers there was one that favoured him, and conveighed him away, ſo that ſwimming over a River, he eſcaped, and returned home again, when the Souldiers were departed out of the Country. In his Bed-ſtraw he had left another Bagge of mony, which ſome Women, ſearching his chamber after his departure, had found, and now honeſtly reſtored to him again: But that man to whom he had given the Bagge out of the Window, could never after be heard of.

A ſpeciall providence.

He is taken priſoner.

Gods mercy.

Shortly after, his fame ſpreading abroad, he was called to Tholna to govern the School; wherefore taking only one Servant along with him, he went thither, Anno Chriſti 1553, where he ſpent moſt of his time in teaching School: But after wards, at the importunity of the Miniſter, he firſt began on Holy-Days, and after on Sabbath Days to Preach to the people. And his former Wife being dead, he marryed another, one Elizabeth, a woman no leſs vertuous than beautifull. And not long after he was choſen to Laſcovia to be their Paſtor; and was Ordained Miniſter by the Impoſition of Hands, Anno Chriſti 1554.

He is called to Tholna.

His ſecond marriage.

He is ordained.

And being now about fifty years old, he was made Doctor, and Superintendent of all that Baronry: But he had ſuch an earneſt deſire to breed up Youth in Religion and Learning, that notwithſtanding his other weighty imployments, he read not only in the Schools, but privately alſo in his own houſe to many; many ignorant Prieſts round about reſorting to his Lectures: Neither did he intermit his Pains, no not in ſickneſs, if he had but ſtrength to ſpeak that his Voice might be heard. And thus he continued four years at Laſcovia, where he had three Children born, Anne, Sarah, and Iſaac; and was often made uſe of by a Noble Lord called Mark Horvat, Governour of a Caſtle hard by, ſometimes to Preach, and other-ſometimes to decide the moſt intricate Controverſies.

His induſtry and zeal.

Anno Chriſti 1558, he was removed thence by the Authority of ſome Governours of Neighbouring Caſtles to Calmantſem, though much againſt his will: And Anno Chriſti, 1561. the greateſt miſery, and miſchief, that ever befell Zegedine in his Life, by Gods Permiſſion, now came upon him; The occaſion whereof was this.

He goes to Calmantſem.

Preaching upon Circumciſion-Day, he ſpake much of the ſignification of names, and amongſt others of Urſula, that it ſignified a Young Bear: Whereupon a violent woman of that name, Wife to Albert Turia, made a grievous complaint to her Husband, that Zegedine had o i purpoſe mentioned that name to diſgrace her before all the Congregation, and that it deſerved to be taken notice of: In the mean time comes into thoſe parts one Mambuts Beg a Turkiſh Captain, that was Governour of Quinque-eccleſia, whom the Citizens of Calmantſem entertained, and gave preſents to: Whereupon he adviſed them to preſent his Captain, the Vayvod of Copeſware, with four or five Ells of Cloth of Gold, or Silver, which was impoſed upon them as a Tribute to be paid to him; but whilſt they neglected to do it, the Vayvod being angry, came upon them as they were at a Sermon, and took many of them Priſoners, together with Zegedine, and carryed them a way to Copeſware. The reſt that ſcaped, gathering the Tribute, carryed it preſently to the Vayvod, entreating his Pardon, and the reſtitution of the Priſoners, eſpecially of Zegedine, but he told them, that he had now written to the Beg (or Lord) of Quinque-eccleſia, that he had taken ſome Priſoners, to whom therefore, if they would have them reſtored to liberty, they muſt go and petition for their releaſe.

He is taken Priſoner.

This they did, and things began to ſucceed according to their mind, ſo that the Captives were commanded to be reſtored: But the Citizens of Calmantſem having been many ways wronged by the Vayvod, ſought to the Beg to have him removed out of his place; But the craſty Vayvod by greater Bribes, perſwaded the Beg that all their Accuſations were falſe: Whereupon the Beg ſaid to them, I will have ſome of your Grave Citizens, together with your Miniſter brought unto me, by whom I may be informed of the Truth of theſe things. But when Zegedine came, he picked a Quarrell with him, and caſt him into Priſon: Whereupon his people, by rich preſents, endeavoured to procure his releaſe; and when they had almoſt obtained their requeſt, one wiſpered the Beg in his Ear, and told him, that he might have a thouſand Florens for his ranſome: Upon this ſuggeſtion the Covetous Turk ſtill detained him, and told them that he would not releaſe him till they had paid him a thouſand Florens: And when the mony came in ſlower than he expected, the barbarous Tyrant, chid Zegedines Keeper for uſing him too gently, which (as he ſaid) was the cauſe that his ranſome was not yet paid: Whereupon his Keeper bound and whipt him with thongs till he was bloody all over, and almoſt kill'd him.

Turkiſh Injuſtice.

He is again Impriſoned.

Barbarous Cruelty.

He is beaten cruelly

Afterwards the Beg promiſed that if they would procure the releaſe of the Daughter of the Major of Tolne, who was priſoner with the Hungarians, and bring her unto him, he would releaſe Zegedine. Her, therefore, Zegedines people of Calmantſem redeemed for three hundred Florens, and preſented her to the Beg, yet the Infidel falſified his promiſe, and kept him ſtill Priſoner. Then the Prince of Tranſilvania ſent Ambaſſadors, and a rich preſent to the Beg, requeſting the releaſe of Zegedine, yet nothing could prevail.

Breach of Promiſe.

Many Paſſengers that went that way, hearing of his miſerable Captivity, came to viſit him, and gave him mony, but his cruell Keeper extorted moſt of it from him, having a command from the Beg that he ſhould be kept with ſhort Commons: Yet he found that of Saint Paul performed to him, That all things ſhall work together for good to them that love God: For being bound with heavy and great chains, the Barbarous Turk, at the Importunity of ſome of the Citizens, was the eaſier prevailed with, to give him leave to go to ſome of their houſes, faithfully promiſing to return him to Priſon before night; and ſo having theſe Opportunities he preached to the Chriſtians, who earneſtly flocked to hear him. And it pleaſed God at laſt to encline the Hearts of ſome of the Courtiers to favour Zegedine, who were grieved to ſee him waſte away with the filth and ſtink of the Priſon, and thereupon adviſed the beſt way they could for his releaſe.

Charity to him.

His keepers Cruelty.

Gods providence.

He is favoured by the Courtiers.

During his impriſonment, the Beg uſed all means both by threats and promiſes, to draw him to abjure the Chriſtian Religion, and to turn Turk; but he always anſwered him ſtoutly, That ſuch arguments might prevail with children, but could not with him.

He is ſolicited to turn Renegado.

His courage.

Having leave at laſt, through Bribes, to lye amongſt the other Captives in a more open and cleanly place, he wonderfully refreſhed, and comforted them by his Godly exhortations, & conſolations drawn from the Scriptures, whereby they were much confirmed in the Chriſtian Faith: And whereas before they were almoſt pined through want of Food, God ſo ſtirred up the Hearts of ſome to bring relief to Zegedine, that all the reſt of the priſoners were provided for plentifully thereby.

He encourageth the Chriſtian Captives.

Gods mercy.

What he wrote in Prison.

Remaining thus in Prison he was not idle, but wrote there his Common-places and some other Works; and his Citizens having tryed all means, and used the intercession of all their friends for his release, began now almost to despair of obtaining it. And to adde to his Affliction, it pleased God in this time of his Imprisonment, (which was above a year) three of his Children dyed, which added much to his Amiction. But when all hopes failed, let us see by what means (through Gods mercy) he obtained his liberty.

Three of his children die.

The means of his deliverance.

It pleased God that a Noble Baron and his Lady passing by that way, saw this worthy man of God in so miserable a plight that the Lady much pittyed him; and afterwards being in Child-Bed, and ready to dye, she requested her Lord (who loved her dearly) for her sake to improve all his interest in the Beg to procure Zegedines liberty; which he with an Oath promised to perform, and accordingly engaged himself to the Turk that he should pay Twelve hundred Florens for his ransome; upon which he was released, and went about to divers Cities to gather his ransom, and God so enlarged mens hearts towards him, that in a short time he carryed Eight hundred Florens to this Baron, and so returned to his people at Calmantsem.

His Release

A great Danger.

The same year after being 1564. as he was going by Coach to Buda, when the Horses came neer the River Danubius, being very hot, and dry, they ran violently into the River: But behold the admirable providence of God! When they had swam some twenty Paces in the River, they turned back again of their own accord, and drew the Coach and him safely to the shore.

Gods Providence.

Fooliſh Pride.

The same year by Imposition of hands, he ordained three excellent men Ministers. About that time there came a bragging Fryer, and challenged him to a Disputation; which he willingly accepting of, the great Church was appointed for the place, and many of both sides resorted thither; and the Fryer came with much confidence, his Servants carrying a great Sack of Books after him. But in the Disputation, Zegedine did so baffle him, that all the Fryers friends shrunk away with shame, and the Fryer, with his great Sack, was left all alone, so that himself was fain to take it on his own shoulders, and go his way.

The Friar Baffled.

Gods judgment on a Persecutor.

His charity.

About that time the Vayvod, who had before betrayed him, coming to the place where Zegedine was, desired to speak with him, and requested him to forgive him, professing that he could rest neither night nor day, he was so haunted with Apparitions, and the Furies of his own Conscience; which Zegedine easily assented unto.

Another Danger.

Anno Christi 1566. Zegedine being very hot, invited a friend to goe with him to the River of Danubius to bathe themselves; but as they were swimming, his friend looking about him, saw not Zegedine, and wondering what was become of him so suddenly, at last espyed his hoary hairs appearing above water; and swimming swiftly to him; Zegedine was sunk, whereupon he diving to the bottom of the River, caught hold of him, and drew him forth, carrying him to a Mill that was not far off, where he laid him to bed: About midnight Zegedine, coming to himself, enquired how he came there, and who drew him out of the River; His friend told him the whole story, and kept him carefully till he recovered.

Gods Providence.

Anno Christi 1572. he fell into a lingring disease, in which he loathed Meat, slept little, was much troubled with Rhume, complained of Head-ach, and could find no ease, either sitting, standing, or lying; yet he drank much Milk; and thought that if he could procure some sleep, he might easily recover his former Health; whereupon he sent for a Chirurgion, who gave him a bitter potion, which caused him to fall asleep, but after a little while he quietly breathed forth his last, being sixty seven years old, Anno Christi 1572.

His Death.

His zeal against Heretucks.

He was a zealous assertor of the Truth against Arianism, Mahometism, and Papism, with all such Heresies Hungary at that time was much infected.

His Works.

His writings were these. Adsertio de Trinitate contra quorundam deliramenta, in quibusdam Hungariæ partibus exorta. Speculum Romanorum Pontificum. Loci communes Theologicæ. Tabulæ analyticæ de fide Christiana.

The

J. KNOX

The Life of John Knox, who dyed, Anno Chriſti 1572.

JOhn Knox, was born at Gifford in Lothaine in Scotland, Anno Chriſti 1505 of honeſt Parentage: Brought up firſt at School, then ſent to the Univerſity of Saint Andrews to ſtudy under Mr. John Mayr, who was famous for Learning in thoſe days, and under whom in a ſhort time he profited exceedingly in Philoſophy, and School-Divinity, and took his Degrees, and afterwards was admitted very young into Orders: Then he betook himſelf to the reading of the Fathers, eſpecially Auguſtines and Hieroms Works, & laſtly to the earneſt ſtudy of the holy Scriptures, by which, being through Gods mercy, informed of the Truth, he willingly embraced it, and freely profeſſed it, and imparted it to others.

His Birth and Education.

His Induſtry.

His Converſion.

But the Biſhops and Fryers could by no means endure that Light which diſcovered their darkneſs, and therefore preſently raiſed up a Perſecution againſt him; eſpecially David Beton, Arch-Biſhop and Cardinal, who cauſed him to be apprehended and caſt into Priſon, purpoſing to have ſacrificed him in the flames: But it pleaſed God by a ſpecial providence that he was delivered, and therefore preſently fled to Berwick to the Engliſh, where he preached the Truth of the Goſpel with great fruit, and defended it againſt the Popiſh party, ſo that his fame ſpread abroad exceedingly. He Preached alſo at Newcaſtle, London, and in ſome other places. So that King Edward the ſixth taking notice of him, profered him a Biſhoprick, which he rejected, as having Aliquid commune cum Antichriſto: Something in it common with Antichriſt.

His Zeal.

Sathans Malice.

He flies to Berwick.

His Humility.

King Edward being dead, the perſecution raiſed by Queen Mary made him leave England, and goe to Franckfort upon Maſne, where for a time he Preached the Goſpel to the Engliſh Congregation: but meeting with oppoſition there, both from Papiſts and falſe Brethren, he went to Geneva, where alſo he Preached to an Engliſh Congregation, and was very intimate with Maſter Calvin, continuing there ſome years.

He goes to Franckfort. And to Geneva.

Anno Chriſti 1559. and of his Age fifty four, the Nobility of Scotland, with ſome others others, beginning the Reformation of Religion, sent for him home; and at his coming to Edenborough he was lodged in the house of that worthy man James Sime, where he began privately to instruct such as resorted to him, amongst whom was the Laird of Dun, David Forresse, and Elizabeth Adamson, the Wife of James Baranne, Burgesse of Edenborough, and some others.

His zeal.

After a while Master Knox perceiving that divers, who willingly entertained the Doctrine of Christ, yet made no scruple to goe to Masse, and to communicate in the abused Sacrament after the Papistical manner, he began as well in private conference, as in his Ministery, to shew the impiety of the Masse, and the great danger of communicating with Idolatry, wherewith some being terrified in Conscience, the business began to be agitated from one to another. Hereupon the Laird of Dun invited Master Knox to Supper, where were present David Forresse, Master Robert Lockart, John Willock, and William Matland; at which meeting the Question was proposed and debated, and Master Knox did so fully, and Learnedly answer whatsoever was objected against his Doctrine, that William Matland concluded in these words, I see very well that all our shifts will serve nothing before God, seeing they stand us in so small stead before men.

The Mass abhorred.

After these reasonings the Masse began to be abhorred, and Master Knox, at the request of the Laird of Dun, went with him to Dun, where he remained a Moneth, Preaching every day to the people, the Principall men of that Country resorting to his Ministry.

The effect of his Ministry.

At the moneths end he went to Calder, whether resorted to him the Lord Erskin (afterwards Earl of Argile) Lord James, the Pryor of Saint Andrews (afterwards Earl of Murrey) where they heard, and so approved his Ministry, that they wished it had been more publick.

A while after the Earl of Glencarne sent for Mr. Knox to his place of Finlaston, where after he had Preached to them, he Administred the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to the Earl, his Lady, two of his Sons, and some others, and so he went back to Calder; to which place many resorted to him from Edenborough, and the Country round about, not onely to hear his Doctrine, but also to partake of the Holy Sacrament which before they had never received.

From thence he departed the second time to the Laird of Duns, where he Preached the Gospel with more liberty and boldness then he had before, and many of the Gentlemen of the Country, after they had heard his Doctrine, desired also to be made partakers of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and (through Gods mercy) his Ministry had such an impression upon their hearts, that they presently refused all Society with Idolatry, and bent themselves to the uttermost of their powers to maintain the Truth of Christ.

The Papists rage against him.

This so vexed the Fryers, that from all quarters they flocked to their Bishops to complain of Master Knox, so that he was summoned to appear in the Black-Fryers Church in Edenborough, the fifteenth of May following, and accordingly he appeared; Thither came also John Erskin of Dun, with divers other Gentlemen, which the Bishops taking notice of, durst not proceed against him: Insomuch that Master Knox the same day that he should have appeared before them, Preached in Edenborough in a greater Audience than ever he had before. The place where he Preached was in the Bishop of Dunkellins great lodging, in which place he preached ten days together, both forenoon and afternoon. Then did the Earl of Glencarne solicit the Earl Marshall to hear Master Knox, which he with his Counsellor Drummond did, and so liked his Doctrine, that he willed Master Knox to write unto the Queen Regent somewhat that might move her to hear the Word of God. This Master Knox was willing to doe, and wrote that which was afterwards Printed, called, A Letter to the Queen Dowager, which was delivered by the Earl of Glencarne into her own hands: The Queen after she had read the Letter, delivered it to that proud Prelate Becon, Bishop of Glascow, saying in Scorne, Please you my Lord to read a Pasquil?

His great pains.

He writes to the Q.

She scoffs at it.

He is called back to Geneva.

Whilst Master Knox was thus occupyed in Scotland, there came a Letter to him from the English Congregation which was setled at Geneva, Anno Christi 1555. being separated ſeparated from the contentious and ſuperſtitious company at Franckfort, requiring him in the name of God, that as he was their choſen Paſtor, ſo he ſhould repair to them for their comfort.

Upon this he took his leave in every Congregation where before he had preached, exhorting them to fervent Prayer, frequent reading of the Scriptures, and mutuall conference, till God ſhould give them greater liberty; and then he ſent before him to Diep, his Mother-in-Law Elizabeth Bowes, and his Wife; But himſelf, by the importunity of Robert Campbel ſtayed a while in Scotland, going to the Earl of Argile, then in Campbel Caſtle, where he taught certain days, the Laird of Glenurquaire being one of his Auditors, who intreated the Earl of Argile to retain him in Scotland: But he was reſolved upon his journey, and would by no means ſtay at that time; yet promiſing, that if the Lord bleſſed thoſe ſmall beginnings, whenſoever they pleaſed to command him, they ſhould find him obedient at their call.

Shortly after he paſſed over into France, and from thence went to Geneva, whereupon the Biſhops of Scotland ſummoned him, and for Non-appearance, condemned him, and burnt his Effigies at the Croſſe of Edenborough. From which unjuſt Sentence, when Maſter Knox heard of it, he ſent an Appellation, which he directed to the Nobility and Commons of Scotland.

He leaves Scotland.
He is condemned.
His appeal.

March the tenth, Anno Chriſti, 1556. certain of the Nobility of Scotland, ſent this enſuing Letter to Maſter Knox at Geneva.

Grace, mercy and peace for Salvation.

Dearly beloved in the Lord, the faithfull that are of your acquaintance in theſe parts (thanks be to God) are ſtedfaſt in the belief wherein you left them, and have a Godly thirſt and deſire from day to day to injoyn your preſence again, which if God ſo move your heart, and give you life, we deſire you in the name of the Lord that you return to us again into this place, where you ſhall find all faithful that you left behind you; who will not only be glad to hear your Doctrine, but ready to jeopard their Eſtates for the ſetting forth of the Glory of God, as he will permit time. And albeit the Magiſtrates of this Country be as yet but in the ſtate you left them; yet at the writing hereof we have no experience of any more cruelty uſed than was before; but rather believe that God will augment his flock, becauſe we ſee dayly the Fryers (enemies to Chriſts Goſpel) in leſſe eſtimation both with the Queens Grace, and the reſt of the Nobility of the Realme. This in few words is the mind of the faithful here preſent, and of others abſent, the reſt of our minds this faithfull Meſſenger will ſhew you, when he comes to you. Fare you well in the Lord.

He is ſent for into Scotland.

Glencarne. Argile.
Erskin. James Steward.

Maſter Knox, upon the receipt of this Letter, adviſed with Maſter Calvin, and other Miniſters, who upon mature deliberation, told him that he could not refuſe this call, unleſs he would ſhew himſelf rebellious againſt God, and unmerciſull to his Country: Whereupon he returned anſwer, that he would come to them ſo ſoon as he could ſettle the Affairs of that dear flock that was committed to his charge.

Shortly after he began his journey, and arrived in Scotland that very day whereon the Biſh ops ended their Provinciall council; and hearing that the Brethren were met at Dundee, he went to them, and earneſtly requeſted that he and his Brethren might joyn together to make a Confeſſion of their Faith; which being aſſented to, he went to Saints Johnſtons to them, where alſo he preached to the people; But preſently came a Summons that the Preachers ſhould appear before the Queen Regent at Striveling, which being known abroad, the Proteſtants repaired in a peaceable manner to Saint Johnſtons to accompany their Preachers to the Queen; and leſt ſuch a multitude ſhould affright her, the Laird of Dun, a zealous, Godly, and prudent man, went before to Striveling to acquaint the Queen that the cauſe of their meeting was onely with with their Preachers to give in a Confeſſion of their Faith, and to aſſiſt them in their juſt defence.

They are Proſcribed.

The Queen very craftily ſolicited him to ſtay the multitude, and the Preachers alſo promiſing to take ſome good order about their Affairs: Yet when the Preachers appeared not upon the day appointed, ſhe put them to the Herne, prohibiting all men upon pain of Rebellion, to aſſiſt, comfort, relieve or receive any of them; which treacherous dealing of hers ſo inflamed the multitude, that neither the exhortation of the Preachers, nor the command of the Magiſtrates could reſtrain them, but that they pulled down the Images, and all other Monuments of Idolatry in Saint Johnſtons. This being told to the Queen, ſhe was ſo much enraged at it, that ſhe vowed to deſtroy man, woman, and child in that place, then utterly to burn the Town, and to ſow it with Salt for a perpetual deſolation.

Images Demoliſhed.

The Queens Malice.

The Proteſtants write to the Queen

The Proteſtant Congregation hearing hereof, preſently wrote a Letter to the Queen, and cauſed it to be laid upon her Cuſhion where ſhe ſat at Maſs, wherein they declared, that except ſhe moderated her wrath, and ſtayed her intended cruelty, they ſhould be compelled to take the Sword in their juſt defence againſt all that ſhould purſue them for matters of Religion, and for their Conſcience ſake, which ought not to be ſubject to any mortal Creature, farther then Gods Word doth command, &c. They further requeſted that ſhe would permit them to live in that Peace and liberty which Chriſt had purchaſed for them by his Blood; that they might have his Word truly Preached, and the Holy Sacraments rightly Adminiſtred to them, for that they had rather expoſe their Bodyes to a thouſand deaths, then to hazard their Souls to perpetual Damnation by denying Chriſt, and his manifeſt Truth, &c.

Their Zeal.

The Earl of Glencarns courage and Zeal.

They wrote alſo another Letter to the Nobility of Scotland, which coming abroad, the Brethren in Cunningam and Kile met together at the Church of Craggy, where Alexander Earl of Glencarne, ſaid to them, Let every man do as his Conſcience ſhall direct him, I will, by God's Grace, ſee my Brethren at Saint Johnſtones, yea though never a man will go along with me, though I have but a ſpike on my ſhoulder; for I had rather dye with that company, then live after them. This ſpeech ſo encouraged the reſt, that they all reſolved to go forward.

In the mean time the Queen ſent her French Forces, and the Biſhops and Prieſts their bands againſt Saint Johnſtons; whereupon the Brethren repaired thither from all quarters for their relief; which the Queen hearing of, ſent the Earl of Argile, and the Pryor of Saint Andrews to them to know the cauſe of that great meeting? They anſwered, that it was only to reſiſt the cruel Tyranny decreed againſt them, and to protect the Town from ruin.

The Lords anſwered, that they were far otherwiſe informed.

Mr. Knox his ſpeech to the Lords

Then Maſter Knox ſpake thus unto them: The preſent troubles (honourable Lords) ought to move the hearts of all the true Servants of God, and of ſuch as bear any true love to their Country, and Country-Men, deeply to conſider what will be the end of this intended Tyranny. The rage of Sathan ſeeks the deſtruction of all thoſe in this Realm that profeſs the Name of Chriſt. Therefore I moſt humbly require you, my Lords, in my name to tell the Queen, that we, whom ſhe in her blind rage doth thus perſecute, are faithful Servants to God, and obedient Subjects to the Authority of the Realm, whereas that Religion which ſhe maintains by fire, and Sword, is not the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt, but expreſly contrary to the ſame, a ſuperſtition deviſed by mans brain, which I offer my ſelf to prove againſt all men in Scotland which will maintain the contrary, Gods Word being admitted for Judge. Tell her alſo from me that this her enterpriſe ſhall not proſperouſly ſucceed in the end, and that herein ſhe fights againſt God.

The Queens Subtilty.

Her Perfidiouſneſſe.

The Lords promiſed to deliver his Meſſage; yet did the Queen ſtrait-way ſend her Herauld to them, to command them preſently to depart the Town upon pain of Treaſon. But when ſhe perceived their number to increaſe, and their reſolutions, fearing the event of a Battel, ſhe, upon a parley and large promiſes, prevailed with them to depart home. But before their departure, Maſter Knox Preached a Sermon, wherein he exhorted them to conſtancy, adding, I am perſwaded that this promiſe ſhall be no longer kept, then till the Queen and her French-men can get the upper hand. Which ſhortly

ſhortly after fell out accordingly; For when ſhe was entred Saint Johnſtons, ſhe, contrary to promiſe, garriſoned it, ſaying, That ſhe was not bound to keep promiſe with Hereticks. This was ſo diſtaſtfull to the Earl of Argile and the Pryor of Saint Andrews, that they forſook the Queen, and went toward Saint Andrews, ſending to the Laird of Dun and ſome others to meet them there, which accordingly they performed, taking Maſter Knox along with them, who in the way, preached in Carrel one day, in Anſtruddor the ſecond, intending the third day to Preach at St. Andrews.

The Biſhop of Saint Andrews hearing hereof, preſently raiſed a Hundred ſpearmen, & went thither on the Saturday, whereas the Lords had none but their houſhold ſervants about them; and at the ſame time the Queen and her Frenchmen lay at Faikland twelve Miles from Saint Andrews. The Biſhop ſent word to the Lords, that if John Knox offered to Preach the next day, he ſhould be ſaluted with a dozen of Calivers, whereof the moſt part ſhould light on his Noſe. The Lords after long deliberation ſent for Maſter Knox, to hear his opinion herein; yet withall, adviſed him to forbear for his own ſafety, and not to preach that day in contempt of the Biſhop. The Biſhop oppoſed Knox.

To which Maſter Knox anſwered, God is my witneſs, that I never Preached Chriſt Jeſus in contempt of any man, neither doe I now intend to preſent my ſelf in that place with reſpect to my own commodity, or for the hurt of any creature: But to forbear preaching to morrow, except I be violently withholden, I cannot out of Conſcience conſent to it: For in this Town and Church, God was pleaſed firſt to call me to the Honour and Office of a Preacher, from which I was driven by the Tyranny of the French, and procurement of the Biſhop, as ye all know well enough. How long I continued Priſoner, what Torments I ſuſtained in the French Gallies, and what were the ſobs of my heart, is now no time relate: This only I cannot conceal, which many heard me ſpeak when my body was far from Scotland, that I certainly hoped in open Audience to Preach in Saint Andrews before I departed this Life. And therefore, my Lords, (ſaith he) ſeeing God, above the expectation of many, hath brought me to this place where firſt I was called to the Office of a Preacher, and from which I was moſt unjuſtly removed, I beſeech your Honours not to hinder me from preſenting my ſelf to my brethren: And as for the fear of danger that may come to me thereby, let no man be ſollicitous; for my life is in the cuſtody of him whoſe Glory I ſeek, and therefore I cannot ſo fear their boaſts and Tyranny, as thereby to be deterred from doing my duty, when God of his Mercy offereth me ſuch an occaſion. I deſire the hand and weapon of no man to defend me, only I crave Audience; which if it be denyed me here at this time, I muſt ſeek further where I may have it. His anſwer to the lords. A Prediction. His Courage.

Upon this ſpeech the Lords were fully content that he ſhould ſupply the place, which accordingly he did without interruption; and his Sermon ſo wrought upon the Magiſtrates and people, that preſently after Sermon they removed all the Monuments of ſuperſtition and Idolatry out of that Church. Idolatry Deſtroyed.

The Biſhop advertiſed hereof, preſently departed to the Queen, who with her French ſouldiers lay within twelve miles; and by his grievous complaints, did ſo far incenſe her, that it was reſolved without delay to aſſault Saint Andrews, and the two Lords, who were but ſlenderly accompanyed: and accordingly order was given immediately to provide quarters for the Queen and her Army at Cowper, ſix miles from Saint Andrews.

The Lords being informed hereof, reſolved to meet them before they came to Cowper, and withall gave ſpeedy advertiſement to all the Brethren to repair towards them with all poſſible expedition; which alſo they did with ſuch diligence that Gods wonderfull Work appeared therein: For when at night the Lords came to Cowper, there were not a hundred Horſe, and ſome few Foot; and before the next day at noon, their number was above three thouſand; and that number did ſo continually encreaſe, as if men had rained from the Clouds: But the enemies being not informed hereof, aſſured themſelves of the Victory, and therefore haſted away in the night; yet when by their Scouts they were informed of the number and order of the The Peoples Zeal.

the Proteſtants, who were ready to receive them, their hearts failed, and interceſſors were ſent to make an agreement, and a truce was taken for eight daies, till an agreement might be finiſhed.

The Queens Policy.

But all this was done but in policy by the Queen, that ſhe might gain time to draw off her Ordinance, and to make a handſome retreat over the water of Forth. The Proteſtants finding themſelves thus deluded, tooke counſell now they were together, to free St. Johnſtons from the French Garriſon, that their exiled Brethren might return home, and accordingly they ſent a Trumpet to ſummon the Town; But the Captaines anſwered that they would keep and defend it according to their promiſe made to the Queen; yet as ſoon as they were beſieged, they required a Truce for twelve houres, at the end whereof they delivered it up to the Lords; and the ſame day being Sabbath, thankes were publickly returned unto God, and preſently the Monuments of Idolatry were demoliſhed, and the rude multitude ſet fire to the Abbey, though Maſter Knox would have prevented it. A poor old woman ſeeing the fire rage ſo furiouſly, and run ſo ſwiftly, ſaid, I ſee that Gods Judgements are juſt, and no man is able to ſave where he will deſtroy; ever ſince my remembrance this place hath been nothing but a den of Whoremongers: It is not incredible to believe how many Wives have been adulterated, and Virgine is deflowred by thoſe filthy Beaſts, and eſpecially by that wicked man called the Biſhop. If all men knew as much as I, they would praiſe God for this deſtruction.

St. Johnſtons Reſcued.

Idols Deſtroyed.

Note.

Popiſh Uncleanneſſe.

The Queen hearing of their proceedings, fearing what might follow, reſolved to ſend ſome French bands to Striveling, to hinder their coming over the Forth, which the Lords having intelligence of, privately in the night with great expedition poſſeſſed themſelves of the Town before the French came, whereupon the Queen and her party preſently left Edenborough, and went to Dunbar. Then did the Proteſtants march to Edenborough, where alſo the Monuments of Idolatry were demoliſhed by the rude multitude. Coming thither they wrote ro the Queen deſiring that they might enjoy liberty of their Conſciences; That Jeſus Chriſt might be truly preached, and the Sacraments duly adminiſtred, and that ſcandalous, and unable Miniſters might be removed: But ſhe returning no anſwer, the Proteſtants returned home, the Lords onely ſtaying, who were now called, The Lords of the Congregation.

The Qu. Flies.

The French march to Edenborough.

In the mean time the French being informed hereof, and preſuming that they ſhould meet with no reſiſtance, haſtened to Edenborough; which the Lords hearing of, called upon God for aſſiſtance in that ſtrait. It is true, they might have retired themſelves, but then they had expoſed the Brethren of Edenborough to danger, and therefore they rather reſolved to hazard the uttermoſt extremity.

The French firſt marched to Leith, and as the Lords were advancing for their aſſiſtance, the Townſmen ſurrendered the Town to the French, without making any reſiſtance; whereupon the Lords retreated to Cragingate, there to oppoſe the enemy.

Divers Mediators paſſed to and fro in the mean time to have ſetled peace, and at laſt, ſundry Articles were agreed upon, and the Duke of Caſtleherald, and the Earl of Huntley promiſed the Lords, that if the Queen brake any one of her Articles, they would forſake her party, and joyn with them. The next day the Lords left Edenborough, & when it was judged dangerous for Maſter Knox ſtill to abide Miniſter at Edenborough, the Brethren requeſted Mr. Jo. Willock to remain with them, to which he gladly aſſented, deſiring to make it appear, that he preferred the comfort of the Brethren before his own life.

Civil Wars about Religion.

Shortly after open War brake forth between the Queen Regent, and the Proteſtants; and the Queen having more French Forces, with Money, and Ordinance ſent her, the Scottiſh Nobility were faine to ſend to Queen Elizabeth for aid, and till it came, to retire themſelves towarsd the Highlands for their ſafety.

In the mean time the Queen Regent with her French men went from place to place, plundering, ſpoyling, and making havock of all without reſiſtance; which ſo puffed her up with pride, that ſhe boaſtingly ſaid, Where is now John Knox *his God? of Arrane, and the Lord James, went to Desert, having not above five hundred Horse, and a hundred Foot; whereas the French were above four thousand, besides such Scots as adhered to them; and yet the Protestants skirmished daily with them, sometimes from morning till night, and ever went away with the better, killing four for one; which continued for one and twenty dayes together, during all which time they never put off either clothes or boots.

And at the end of that time came into Edenborough Frith a Fleet of the English to assist the Protestants, which filled their hearts with joy, and the French with rage and madnesse. Thither came also some Forces by land under the command of the Lord Grey: And after an agreement made with the Scottish Lords, some of the English and Scots attempted to take Leith by storm, and in a cruel conflict some of them gat upon the walls, but the scaling-ladders proving too short, they were not seconded by their fellows, and so after divers hours fight were inforced to retire; which the Queen Regent beholding from Edenborough Castle walls, burst out into a great laughter, saying, Now will I go to Masse, and praise God for that which mine eyes have seen. And when the French had stripped the slaine, and layd their naked bodyes along their walls, the Queen looking on them said, Yonder are the fairest Tapestries that ever mine eyes beheld, I would that the whole fields which are betwixt Leith and this place were all strewed with the same stuffe. But this joy lasted not long; for a fire kindling in Leith, many houses, and much of their provision was consumed thereby; and the Queen Regent falling sick, shortly after died; whereupon the King of France sent Ambassadors to Queen Elizabeth to conclude a peace, which was effected, and the English and French Armies were drawn out of Scotland, to the great joy of that Nation, insomuch that Thanksgivings for their great deliverance by the help of the English were inserted into their Liturgie. And presently after some Commissioners of the Scottish Nobility were appointed to settle Ministers in their places, by whom Master Knox was setled at Edenborough, where he preached many excellent Sermons.

Mr. Knox setled at Edenb.

Anno Christi 1566 the Earl of Murray being slaine on the Saturday, Knox preaching at Edenborough the next day, amongst the papers given in of those that desired the prayers of the Church, he found one with these words, Take up the man whom ye accounted another God. At the end of his Sermon he bemoaned the losse which the Church and State had by the death of that virtuous man, adding further, There is one in this company that makes this horrible murther the subject of his mirth, for which all good men should be sorry, but I tell him he shall dye where there shall be none to lament him: The man that had written those words was one Thomas Metellan, a young Gentleman of excellent parts, but bearing small affection to the Earle of Murray: He hearing this commination of John Knox, went home to his Sister and said, That John Knox was raving, to speak of he knew not whom. His Sister replyed with tears, If you had taken my advice, you had not written those words; saying further, That none of John Knox his threatnings fell to the ground without effect; and so indeed this came to passe; For shortly after this Gentleman going to travel, died in Italy, having none to assist, much lesse to lament him.

Earl of Murray Slain.

His losse Bewailed.

A Prophesie.

Gods judgment on a Scoffer.

Towards Master Knox his latter end, his body became very infirm, and his voice so weak that people could not hear him in the ordinary place, wherefore he chose another place wherein he preached upon the history of Christs passion, with which, he said, It was his desire to close his Ministery. Finding his end near, he importuned the Council of the City to provide themselves a worthy man to succeed in his place: Master James Lawson, Professor in Aberdene, was the man pitched upon, and Commissioners were sent from the Church of Edenborough, to request him to accept of the place. John Knox also subscribed that request, adding, Accelera, mi frater, alioqui sero venies: Hast my Brother, otherwise you will come too late: This made Master Lawson to hasten his journey, and when he was come, he preached twice to the good liking of the people, whereupon order was taken by the Rulers of the Church for his admission, at which time John Knox would needs preach, though very weak, which also he performed with such fervency of spirit, that he was never before heard to preach with such great power, or more content to the Hearers. In the end of his Sermon he called God to witnesse, That he had walked in a good conscience with them, not seeking to please men, nor serving either his own, or other mens affections, but in all sincerity & truth had preached the Gospel of Christ. He exhorted them in most grave and pithy words to stand fast in the faith they had received; and so having prayed zealously for Gods blessing upon them, and the multiplying of Gods spirit upon their new Pastor, he gave them his last farewell.

His last sickness.

Being conveyed to his lodging, that afternoone he was forced to betake himself to his Bed, and was visited by all sorts of persons in his sickness, to whom he spake most comfortably: Amongst others the Earl of Morton came to see him, to whom he said, My Lord, God hath given you many blessings, Wisdom, Honour, Nobility, Riches, many good and great Friends, and he is now about to prefer you to the government of the Realm (the Earl of Marr, the late Regent, being newly dead) In his name I charge you, use these blessings better then formerly you have done, seeking first the glory of God, the furtherance of his Gospel, the maintenance of his Church, and Ministry, and then be carefull of the King to procure his good, and the welfare of the Realm. If you doe thus, God will be with you, and honour you: If otherwise he will deprive you of all these benefits and your end shall be shame, and ignominy.

His speech to the Lord of Morton.

A Prophecy.

These speeches the Earl called to mind about nine years after, at the time of his execution, saying, That he had found John Knox to be a Prophet.

A day or two before Knox's death, he sent for Master David Lindsey, Mr. Lawson, and the Elders and Deacons of the Church, to whom he said, The time is approaching, which I have long thirsted for, wherein I shall be released from all my cares, and be with my Saviour Christ for ever. And now God is my witnesse whom I have served with my spirit in the Gospel of his Son, that I have taught nothing but the true, and sincere word of God; and that the end that I proposed in my Ministry was, To instruct the ignorant, to confirm the weak, to comfort their consciences who were humbled under the sense of their sins, and born down with the threatnings of Gods judgements. I am not ignorant that many have, and doe blame my too great rigour, and severity, but God knoweth that in my heart I never hated those against whom I thundered Gods judgements; I did onely hate their sins, and laboured according to my power to gain them to Christ. That I did forbear none of what condition soever, I did it out of the fear of my God, who hath placed me in the function of his Ministry, and I know will bring me to an account. Now Brethren, for your selves, I have no more to say, but to warn you that you take heed of the Flock over which God hath placed you Over-seers, which he hath redeemed by the Blood of his onely begotten Son. And you Mr. Lawson fight a good fight, do the work of the Lord with courage, & with a willing mind, and God from Heaven blesse you, and the Church whereof you have the Charge: Against it (so long as it continues in the Doctrine of the Truth) the gates of hell shall not prevail.

His speech to the Ministers and Elders. Death Desired.

Having thus spoken, and the Elders and Deacons being dismissed, he called the two Preachers to him, and said, There is one thing that grieveth me exceedingly, you have sometimes seen the courage, and constancy of the Laird of Grang in the cause of God; and now that unhappy man is casting himself away; I pray you go to him from me, and tell him, That unlesse he forsake that wicked course that he is in, the rock wherein he confideth shall not defend him, nor the carnall wisdom of that man whom he counteth halfe a god [which was young Leshington] shall yeeld him help; but he shall be shamefully led out of that nest, & his carcass hung before the Sun (meaning the Castle, which he kept against the Kings Authority) for his soul it is dear to me, and if it were possible, I would fain have him saved.

His Message to the Laird of Grang.

A Prophecy.

Accordingly they went to him, conferred with him, but could by no means divert him from his course: But as Knox had foretold, so the year after his Castle was taken, and his body was publickly there hanged before the Sun: Yet at his death he did expresse serious repentance.

His preparation for Death.

The next day M. Knox gave order for the making of his coffin; Continuing all the day (as he did also through all his sickneſſe) in fervent prayer, crying, Come Lord Jesus, Sweet Jesus, into thy hands I commend my spirit. Being asked whether his pains were great? He answered, That he did not esteem that a pain which would be to him the end of all troubles, and the beginning of eternall joys. Oft, after some deep meditation, ditation, he uſed to ſay, Obſerve the Lord in fear, and death ſhall not be troubleſome to you; bleſſed is the death of thoſe that have part in the death of Jeſus. His ſayings

The night before his death, he ſlept ſome hours with great unquietneſſe, often ſighing and groaning, whereupon when he awakened, the ſtanders by asked him how he did, and what it was that made him mourn ſo heavily? to whom he anſwered, In my life time I have been aſſaulted with Temptations from Sathan, and he hath oft caſt my ſins into my teeth to drive me to deſpair, yet God gave me ſtrength to overcome all his Temptations: But now the ſubtill ſerpent takes another courſe, and ſeeks to perſwade me, that all my labours in the Miniſtry, and the fidelity that I have ſhewed in that ſervice, hath merited heaven and immortality: But bleſſed be God, that brought to my minde theſe Scriptures, What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? And, Not I, but the grace of God in me, with which he is gone away aſhamed, and ſhall no more return: And now I am ſure that my battel is at an end, and that without pain of body, or trouble of ſpirit, I ſhall ſhortly change this mortall, and miſerable life, with that happy and immortall life that ſhall never have an end. After which, one praying by his Bed, having made an end, asked him, if he heard the prayer? Yea, ſaid he, and would to God that all preſent had heard it with ſuch an ear and heart as I have done: Adding, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit: With which words, without any motion of hands or feet, as one falling aſleep rather then dying, he ended his life. His tentations. His faith. His Death.

Never was man more obſervant of the true and juſt authority of Church-Rulers according to the word of God, and the practiſe of the pureſt Primitive times: He alwayes preſſed due Obedience from the People to the faithfull Paſtors, and Elders of the Church. He died Anno Chriſti 1572. and of his age 62. He was a man not leſſe learned then endued with vertue; A conſtant Preacher of the Truth, and a valiant defendor of the ſame through his whole life. His zeal, learning and courage did notably appear in this example. Anno Chriſti 1550 he was called before Tonſtal Biſhop of Durham, and his Doctors, to give an account of his opinion about the Maſſe, where, preaching before them, he did ſo ſharply taxe their Idolatries, and Blaſphemies, and by ſuch ſolid arguments confute the ſame, that his Adverſaries were ſilenced, and had not wherewithall to reply againſt him. P. RAMVS

The Live of Peter Ramus, who died Anno Christi 1572.

His Parentage.

His parts.

Peter Ramus was born in France Anno Christi 1515. His Grand-father was a Noble-man, who (having his estate plundered by Charls Duke of Burgundy, General under the Emperor Charls the fifth) was forced to leave his Country, and to betake himself to the poor and painfull life of an husbandman: And his father being left very poor by him, was fain to live by making of Charcoal.

His poverty

Ramus being from his childhood of an excellent wit, of an industrious nature, and much addicted to learning, was compelled for his subsistance to live as a servant with one of his Unkles; But finding (that by reason of his many imployments) he had no time to follow his Book there, he thought it better to betake himself to the service of some learned man.

He goes to Paris.

So going to Paris, and being admitted into the Colledge of Navar, he laboured hard all day for his Masters, and spent a great part of the night in study, so that in a short time he was made Master of Arts, and Laureat Poet.

His Industry.

And the Professors in that Colledge, every one taking much delight in his diligence, each strove to forward him in Learning, and lent him such books as he needed.

His Diligence.

Then he betook himself to instructing others, and to exercise himself in private Lectures, till thereby he had fitted himself for more publick imployments; Which when he had done, he was appointed publickly to read Logick, and when he was twenty one years old, he published his Logick, with some Animadversions upon Aristotle.

His imployments.

This procured him much love, every one admiring such ripe parts in so young a man; and envy being the usuall Concomitant of vertue, he had also many that envied, and aspersed him; especially the Sorbone Doctors, who accused him of Heresie in Philosophie; For that he, being but a Novice, durst take upon him to correct Aristotle, the Prince of Philosophers; and by their authority, they so far prevailed, that Ramus was forbidden to read, or write any more of Philosophy.

He is Envied.

He is forbidden Philosophy.

This being very grievous to him, it pleased God to stir up the heart of the Governour of another Colledge to send for him to assist him in restoring of that Colledge, which was now empty; The Students being all fled by reason of the infection of the Plague: And it came to pass that in a short time (Ramus being so famous a man) the Colledge was better stored with students then ever it had been before.

He is called to another Colledge.

The

The Sorboniſts much raged at this, and laboured to ſow diviſion between the Governour of the Colledge and him; Yet Ramus carryed himſelf with ſo much Candor and Ingenuity, that they lived together with much Concord. At laſt that Governour dying, Ramus ſucceeded him, and by the Cardinal of Lorrains means (who was a great favourer of Learning) he was made the Regius Profeſſor of Rethorick and Philoſophy, Anno Chriſti 1551, and of his Age 36. He is preferred in the Univerſity.

His fame ſpreading into all the Univerſities of Chriſtendome, there were many Princes that ſtrove to get him out of France, proferring him large ſtipends if he would come to them; But he, being now famous in France, preferred his own Country before all others; and therefore rejected all their offers. In Paris he had ſo great eſteem, that (though his enemies ſtrongly oppoſed it) yet he was made Dean of the whole Univerſity: And ſo having obtained a more quiet kind of Life, he betook himſelf to the ſtudy of the Mathematicks, wherein he grew very exquiſite. But when the Civil Wars brake forth in France for Religion, and that none could ſafely enjoy themſelves, or any thing that they had, whilſt under pretence of Religion, every one revenged his own private quarrels upon others, Ramus, to free himſelf from this Tempeſt, left Paris, and went to Fountanblew, where the Kings Library was, yet neither there could he be in ſafety; ſo that at laſt he was compelled to betake himſelf to the Camp of the Prince of Conde. He is ſought for by other Princes. Is made Dean of the Univerſity. Flight in perſecution. He goes to the Camp of Conde.

But when he ſaw that France was no fit place for him for the preſent to reſide in, he reſolved to travel into Germany, till God ſhould reſtore peace to his Country again: And accordingly he went to Strasborough, Baſil, Lauſanna, Zurick, Heidleberg, Norrenberg, and Augsburg, and was entertained in all theſe Univerſities with great applauſe, and with much joy by all Learned men. He travels into Germany.

When the Civil War was ended in France, he returned to Paris again. Where he remained in his former imployment, as the Kings Profeſſor in Logick, till that horrible Maſſacre happened on Saint Bartholomews day, wherein ſo many thouſands periſhed by the cruel hands of the bloody Papiſts. At which time he was in the Colledge of Prieſts, and the Colledge Gates being faſt ſhut, he locked himſelf up in his own houſe till thoſe furious Papiſts brake open his doores, and finding him in his ſtudy, ran him thorow, and being halfe dead, threw him out of his window; ſo that his Bowels iſſued out on the ſtones; and not being ſatisfied there-with, they cut off his head, dragged his body about the ſtreets in the Channels, and ſome young Scholars were ſet on by their Popiſh Tutors, to whip it in a moſt contemptuous manner, and at laſt it was thrown into the River of Sein, Anno Chriſti, 1572, and of his Age 57. After which alſo they ſeized upon his Goods, Library, and Writings, whereby many excellent Commentaries, and other Works (not fully compleat) periſhed, to the great loſs of Learned men. His return to Paris. Popiſh cruelty. He is murthered. And baſely abuſed.

He wrote a Grammer, Rhethorick, Logick, of the Mathematicks, and divers other excellent Works. His works.

The Life of Matthew Parker, who dyed Anno Christi, 1574.

His birth & education,

Matthew Parker, was born in the City of Norwich, Anno Chr. 1502, and having ſpent ſome years at School, went to Cambridge, where he was admitted into Corpus Chriſti, [Bennet] Colledge, in which place he profited ſo much, that he was choſen Fellow, and grew ſo Famous, that Queen Anne Bullen (Mother to Queen Elizabeth) made him her Chaplain, whereupon he Commenced Doctor in Divinity: And after her death King Henry the eighth, and after his death, King Edward the ſixth, made him their Chaplains, and preferred him to be Maſter of Bennet Colledge.

He is made Chaplain to the Queen. And to two Kings. And Maſter of Bennet Colledge.

Beſides other Eccleſiaſtical dignities which they advanced him to.

His ſufferings in Queen Maries time.

But in Queen Maries days he was diſpoyled of all, and was compelled to live a poor and private life. But ſo ſoon as Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown, ſhe made choice of this Docter Parker, for his admirable Learning and Piety, to be the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, Anno Chriſti 1559. For December 17, the Dean and Chapter of the Church of Canterbury, having received their Congedelier from the Queen, and proceeding in their Election according to the ancient and laudible cuſtom of the aforeſaid Church, choſe Doctor Parker for their Arch-biſhop, whereof they made a return to the Queens Majeſty for her confirmation; whereupon the Queen ſent her Letters Patents to ſeven Biſhops (ſix whereof were lately returned from their voluntary Exile) for his Conſecration. The Biſhops were Anthony Biſhop of Landaffe, William Barlow Biſhop of Bath and Wells, John Scory Biſhop of Hereford, Miles Coverdale late Biſhop of Exeter, John Suffragan of Bedford, John Suffragan of Thetford, and John Bale Biſhop of Oſſory in Ireland, and accordingly he was conſecrated by them, and lived in that place with great Commendation for above fifteen years.

He is made Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury.

The Biſhops that conſecrated him.

His Works of Charity were very eminent. He gave to the Corporation of Norwich, where he was born, a Baſon and Ewr double gilt weighing 173 Ounces; as alſo fifty Shillings a year for ever to be diſtributed amongſt the poor of that City: And ſix Anniverſary Sermons in ſeveral places of Norfolk: To Bennet Colledge he gave thirty Schollarſhips, built them a Library, and beſtowed many excellent Books, and ancient Manuſcripts upon it, beſides 300 Ounces of ſilver and Gilt-plate; And the perpetual Patronage of Saint Mary-Abchurch, London. He carefully collected, and cauſed to be printed divers Ancient Hiſtories of England, which probably had otherwiſe been loſt. He dyed in peace Anno Chriſti, 1574, and of his Age 72.

H. BVLLINGER

The Life of Henry Bullinger, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1575.

Henry Bullinger was born at Bremogart in Helvetia, Anno Chriſti 1504; of an Ancient and Honourable Family, which had flouriſhed in that Town for above two hundred years: Twice in his Childhood he eſcaped death very narrowly: Firſt being ſick of the Plague, his Funeral was prepared, yet it pleaſed God that, beyond expectation, he recovered. Secondly, playing on a Pipe, as he was running, he fell down and ſtruck the Pipe ſo far into his Throat that he was taken up for dead, and for five days could eat nothing; yet the Lord again reſtored him. His Birth and Parentage. Gods ſpecial providence over Him.

His Father being Learned himſelf, was a great lover of it, and therefore was very careful to breed up this his Son in Learning: So that at five years old he ſet him to School in that place where he was born, and this young boy quickly diſcovered an excellent Wit; but his Maſter being himſelf but a weak ſcholar, he made not ſuch a progreſs in Learning as otherwiſe he might have done. Hereupon Anno Chriſti 1516, when he was twelve years old, his Father ſent him to Embric, where under ſeveral School-Maſters, he was inſtructed in Grammer, and other Elements of Learning; was kept under a ſtrict Government for his life, and was trained up in the knowlegde and fear of God. His Education. He is ſent to Embric.

This ſtrict Diſcipline was not grievous to Bullinger; For having been formerly brought up by his Parents Religiouſly, and being endued with a virtuous diſpoſition, he did thoſe things willingly, which others were forced to by ſtripes: Yea, he was then of ſuch an Auſtere carriage, that of himſelf he began to entertain ſome thoughts of entering into a Monaſtery of the Carthuſians, which of all others was accounted the ſtricteſt Sect, yet would he do nothing raſhly therein till he had firſt conſulted with his parents, and procured their conſents. His Diſpoſition.

Having

He goes to Collen.

Having thus continued three years at Embric, he went to Collen, Anno Chriſti 1519, being but ſlenderly provided for by his Father, ſo that (according to the cuſtome of thoſe times) he procured Victuals by ſinging, and begging from door to door; not that his father wanted were-with to ſupply his neceſſities, or that he with-held it from him out of a Covetous mind, but he did it, that he might enure his Son to patience and hardſhip, and that he might make him more merciful to thoſe that were in want all his life after.

He commenceth Batchelor of Arts.

At Collen he ſtudyed Logick, & Commenced Batchelor of Arts at 16 years old. Afterwards betaking himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity; there being at this time many Theological Controverſies, he had recourſe to his Tutors for direction what to ſtudy; and P. Lombard being at this time moſt in requeſt, they adviſed him to the ſtudy thereof; But meeting with many quotations out of the Ancient Fathers, he thought fit to read the Authors themſelves: And the Monaſtery of the Fryer Predicants having a good Library belonging to it, he by ſome Friends, gat leave to make uſe of it, where lighting upon Chryſoſtomes Homilies upon Matthew, he read them over, together with divers parts of Auguſtine, Origen, and Ambroſe; and in the mean time read privately at home, Luther, De captivitate Babylonica, and De bonis operibus: Yet could he not for the preſent deliver himſelf from the Errors of the times, though he ſaw that Luther came nearer to the opinions of the Ancients then Lombard did: he obſerved alſo, that whereas the Schoolmen quoted the Fathers, the Fathers they quoted the Scriptures. Hereupon he betook himſelf to the reading of the Scriptures, eſpecially of the New-Teſtament, with Saint Hierom, and ſome other Commentaries upon it. By which, at the laſt (through Gods mercy) he began to abhor the Popiſh Errors, laying aſide his former thoughts of turning Carthuſian, and diligently applyed himſelf to read over Melanchons Common-places, where-with he was wonderfully delighted.

He ſtudies the Schoolmen. And Fathers. And Luther.

His Converſion.

He commenceth Mr. of Arts

Anno Chriſti 1522. he Commenced Maſter of Arts, and ſo returning home, lived a year in his fathers houſe, wholly imploying himſelf in his ſtudies and private exerciſes. The year after he was called by Wolfgang Foner, Abbat of Capella, near Zurick, to teach a School, where he was to inſtruct ſome Fryers, and other young men both in Divine, and Humane Learning. There he read to them in Dutch, by reaſon of many that reſorted to his Lectures, ſome peices of Eraſmus, Melanchons Common-places, and a great part of the New-Teſtament, and ſome other Authors; and ſo he ſpent ſix years, partly in his private ſtudies, and partly in inſtructing others.

His pains in reading Lectures.

He ſtudies the Tongues

Anno Chriſti, 1527. he was ſent by his Abbat to Zurick, where for five moneths ſpace he heard Zuinglius preaching, and reading his Lectures in the Schools; and by the help of Pellican, he began to ſtudy Hebrew, and to perfect his knowledg in the Greek: There alſo he gained acquaintance with ſundry Learned men, and wrote many things, ſome whereof were afterwards printed. He alſo by his Preaching at the Monaſtery of Capella, ſo far prevailed with the Abbat and Fryers, that the Maſs, and other Superſtitions were caſt out, and the Lords Supper truly Adminiſtred, and ſuch Fryers as were unfit for the Miniſtry, betook themſelves to other trades.

Reformation in the Monaſtery.

Anno Chriſti, 1528. He went with Zuinglius, to the Diſputation at Bern.

Anno Chriſti 1529, he was called to his Native place of Bremogart, where God ſo proſpered his Miniſtry, that preſently after his coming, the Magiſtrates baniſhed Popery, and ſet out a ſevere Decree againſt Adultery and Drunkenneſs; and being choſen Paſtor of that place, he preached every Sabbath in the afternoon, and the three days following in the morning: Beſides every day at the time of Evening Prayers, he expounded a part of the New-Teſtament.

Power of the Word.

Anabaptiſts.

But the Devil raiſed up ſome Anabaptiſts which diſturbed the peace of that Church: With theſe Bullinger diſputed publickly, and thereby in a great meaſure reſtrained them. He wrote alſo in the defence of Tythes, which as thoſe Anabaptiſts ſaid, ſhould be aboliſhed under the New-Teſtament. And when afterwards the number of Anabaptiſts did exceeding increaſe in Germany, he ſet forth 6 books againſt them, wherein he ſhewed the original, progreſs, the various Sects, and the chief opinions of the Anabaptiſts, which alſo he confuted.

Tithes Defended.

He confutes Anabaptiſts.

Anno

Anno Chriſti 1529. there aroſe great Commotions in Helvetia, and the Bernates ſent ſome ſouldiers to Bremogart; and for the Compoſing of the Differences, there was a Meeting of the chiefeſt Perſons at Bremogart, where Bullinger Preached, at whoſe Sermons, not only the Proteſtants, but many of the Papiſts were preſent to hear what, and how he Taught: And indeed both ſides commended his ſtudy of Peace: For he exhorted them to compoſe their Differences not by Arms, nor mutual ſlaughters, but by the Diſputations of their Divines. But God would not ſuffer his wholſome Counſel to take effect at that time: For they came to a Battel, wherein the Popiſh party prevailed, and thereupon Bullinger, together with his Father, Brother, and Colleague Gervaſe, were commanded to depart, except they would undergoe the preſent hazard of their lives. Whereupon, beginning their journey in the night, through Gods Providence, they eſcaped the ſnares which was laid for them by their Adverſaries, and came ſafely to Zurick, Anno Chriſti 1531, and three days after, at the requeſt of Leo Juda with his Colleagues, Bullinger preached in the chief Church, and was entertained by one Werner Steiner, his ancient freind, that was fled to Zurick for Religion.

His endeavours for Peace.

He is baniſhed.

He comes to Zurick.

Anno Chriſti 1532. The Church of Baſil wanting a Paſtor by the death of Oecolampadius, deſired Bullinger, and at the ſame time alſo the Bernates ſent for him thither: But the Senate of Zurick would by no means part with him, chooſing him Paſtor, in the Room of Zuinglius, who was Slaine in the late Battell, and who had deſired, before he went into the Field with the Army, that if any thing befell him otherwiſe then well, Bullinger might ſucceed him in his office.

He is choſen Paſtor.

Preachers Pattern.

He being thus called to this Work in ſo dangerous a time, did his endeavour to comfort, and raiſe up the hearts of Gods people under thoſe great Afflictions. And whereas the Popiſh Adverſaries boaſted that their Religion was falſe, becauſe they of Zurick was beaten, and Zuinglius ſlain: He wrote, That the Truth of Religion was not to be judged by the Proſperity or Adverſity of the Profeſſors of it. He took care alſo to have Synods twice a year, to maintain Concord and Unity in Doctrine and Diſcipline, as Zuinglius had begun before him: And finding a great defect of Godly Miniſters in the Juriſdiction of the Tigurins, he took care that ſo many ſhould be trained up in Religion and Learning as might ſupply that defect; and where there was a want of maintainance, he prevailed with the Senate of Zurick to make up a competency out of the Pulick Treaſury.

Synods preſerve Peace

He cauſed the publick Library of that City to be ſet in Order by Pellican, and by buying Zuinglius his Books, to be encreaſed. And having gotten Bibliander for his Colleague, he wholly applyed himſelf to his publick Miniſtry, and to writing Commentaries at home.

Anno Chriſti 1523. Bucer endeavoured a Union between Luther and his followers, and the Divines of Zurick; perſwading them that their differences conſiſted rather in words then in reality: At which time the Tigurians ſhewed themſelves to be deſirous of peace, ſo that it was joyned with Truth.

About this time Bullingers Father dyed, being 64 years old, who at his death exhorted his Son to Conſtancy in that Doctrine and Faith, which (ſaith he) is the only way to ſalvation.

Anno Chriſti 1534, Bullinger wrote a Confeſſion of Faith in the name of the Tigurian Churches, which was ſent to Bucer, and to the Synod of the Churches of Suevia, then met at Conſtance, and was approved by them.

He writes a Confeſſion of Faith.

About the ſame time he wrote a Tractate of the Covenant of God, againſt ſome that denyed all Teſtimonies out of the Old-Teſtament. As alſo another, wherein he aſſerted the twofold Nature in Chriſt againſt Claudius Allobrog, Servetus his Emiſſary, of whoſe poyſon the Helvetian Churches were at that time in ſome danger. And when there was a meeting at Baſil for to unite Luther and the Helvetian Churches in their difference about the manner of Chriſts Preſence in the Sacrament, Bullinger was there, and took much pains for the promoting of it. The Magiſtrates alſo of Zurick, by the perſwaſion of Bullinger, erected a new Colledge, Anno Chriſti 1538, which he had a great care of, all his life after.

He Confutes Hereticks.

A Colledge Erected.

A School Erected.

Alſo by his perſwaſion the Senate of Zurick erected another School in a place where formerly there had been a Nunnery, in which fifteen Youths were trained up under a good Maſter, having Food, Raiment, Books, and all other neceſſaries plentifully provided for them; and Bullinger took great care to ſee their proficiency all his life after.

Schwenfields Error. Confuted by Bullinger.

About this time Schwenfield, a Noble man of Sileſia, taught, That Chriſt's Humane Nature being Received into Heaven, was ſo farr Deified, that it remained a Creature no longer. And this Error beginning to ſpread into Swevia, Bullinger, joyning with ſome others, Confuted it with much modeſty.

A Plague.

Anno Chriſti 1541, the Plague brake forth in Zurick, of which Bullingers Son, and Mother dyed.

Anno Chriſti 1542 Leo Judæ's Verſion of the Bible being finiſhed, and printed; the Printer ſent one of them to Luther fair bound up, but Luther wrote back to him that he ſhould ſend him no more of the Tigurine Miniſters Bookes; for he would have nothing to do with them, nor read any of their Bookes: For (ſaid he) The Church of God can hold no communion with them; and whereas they have taken much pains, all is in vain; for themſelves are damned, and they lead many miſerable men to Hell with them. Adding, that he would have no communion with their Damnable and Blaſphemous Doctrine, and that ſo long as he lived, he would with his Prayers and Books oppoſe them.

Luthers violence.

Anno Chriſti 1544. Luther ſet forth his Annotations on Geneſis, in which he inveighed bitterly againſt the Sacramentarians (as he called them) ſaying, That Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and their Diſciples were Hereticks; and eternally Damned. Melanchthon would fain have hindred it, but could not, whereupon he wrote to Bullinger, telling him how much he was grieved at this violent proceeding of Luther, which he knew was ſo pleaſing to their Common Adverſaries the Papiſts. When this Book of Luther's came forth, there was much diſpute whether it ſhould be anſwered: Bucer was againſt it, becauſe Luther was grown old, and had deſerved well of the Church; but others thought that it would be a betraying of the Truth not to anſwer it: Wherefore Bullinger was appointed to that work, which he accordingly performed with much judgment.

Melanchthon grieved for it.

Bullinger anſwereth Luther.

Anno Chriſti 1546. Luther dyed, and the Germane Warr began betwixt the Emperour and the Proteſtants; at which time many accuſed the Tigurines by reaſon of Bullinger's Book, as if they had inſulted over Luther after his Death, and gloryed that he dyed of grief becauſe he could not anſwer that Book. Hereupon Philip Lantgrave of Heſſe, acquainted Bullinger with theſe reports; which when Bullinger had read, adviſing with his Colleagues, he returned this anſwer.

His defence of the Tigurines.

Firſt giving him thanks for his zeal in endeavouring the peace of the Church, and for acquainting him with theſe Rumors; Then he told him how much he was grieved for that ſome Turbulent ſpirits ſought by ſuch reports to bring an Odium upon the Helvetian's, and to alienate the Princes affections from them: Whereas (ſaith he) it is not the manner of the Helvetian Divines to reproach any, either in their Sermons or Lectures, much leſſe Luther, who had deſerved ſo well of the Church: And although Luther in the controverſie about the Sacrament had uſed much reprochfull Language againſt them, yet they never made mention of him but with Honour. Whereas they were certainly informed that many of the Saxon Miniſters uſed divers reproachfull ſpeeches againſt them, calling them Sacramentarians, Image-Haters, Blaſphemers, &c. Yea, that in his own Univerſity of Marpurg, Theobald Thammer in his publick Lectures had greatly aſperſed them; wherefore he earneſtly requeſted him to conſider their innocency, and to enjoyn ſilence to ſuch intemperate ſpirits, &c. For (ſaith he) we cannot, with Luther, confeſs the Bread to be the Natural Body of Chriſt, and that Judas, and other wicked men received his Body as well as Peter and the Saints, which are Luther's own words. Yet are we ready to preſerve Peace, ſo that it be not urged upon us to yeild to thoſe things, which neither our ſelves can underſtand, nor can we teach them to others. In all other other things you ſhall finde us peaceable men, ready to give an account of our Faith, whenſoever it ſhall be required of us.

The Lantgrave was well ſatisfied with this anſwer, bearing a great love to the Helvetians, and to Bullinger in particular, to whom (after the Warre was begun) he often wrote out of his Camp, deſiring alſo the Proteſtants Cantons to ſend ſome Auxiliaries to them. But upon ſerious deliberation they denied this requeſt: For (ſay they) If we ſhall ſend you aid, the Popiſh Cantons will alſo aide the Emperour; which hitherto (moved by our example) they have refuſed, though they have been earneſtly ſolicited both by the Pope and Emperour thereto. In the mean time our Miniſters ceaſe not daily to pray for the peace of Germany, and we have alſo had publick Faſts for that end.

Why the Helvetians refuſed to aſſiſt the Proteſtants.

The ſame year came John Hooper (afterwards Biſhop of Glouceſter) to Zurick, and lived familiarly with Bullinger, by whom he was informed of their opinion about the Sacrament, and fully concurred with them.

Mr. Hooper lives with him.

Anno Chriſti 1548 came forth that accurſed Interim, tending to the overthrow of of true Religion, which Calvin and Bucer anſwered, though the Printer, for fear of the Emperour, durſt not publiſh it: And the bitter fruit which followed it, was the expulſion of many Miniſters out of their places, divers of which reſorted to Zurick, and were kindly entertained by Bullinger, and his Colleagues, and commended to divers Proteſtant Cities in Helvetia, though they knew that formerly they had been very violent againſt them. And indeed after their return into their own Countries (forgetting their courteſies) they proved ſo again.

The Interim

Bullingers curteſie.

Ingratitude.

Anno Chriſti, 1549, Calvin being ſuſpected too much to favour Conſubſtantiation, aſſociating to him Maſter Farel of Neocom, came to Zurick, where he conferred with Bullinger, and the other Miniſters about that queſtion, and there was a ſweet agreement amongſt them: which alſo was publiſhed by Calvin and Bullinger, and ſubſcribed by all the Helvetian and Rhetian Miniſters: By which act the Churches of Chriſt were more ſtrictly united, many that were doubtfull were confirmed in the truth: and the adverſaries took occaſion from hence to write more bitterly againſt them.

Calvin concurswith the Helvetian Divines.

Francis King of France being dead, and Henry ſucceeding, he ſent to the Helvetians to renew his league with them: But Bullinger, who was in great authority amongſt them, did altogether diſſwade the Tigurines from it; teaching them, that it was neither juſt nor lawfull for a man to ſuffer himſelf to be hired to ſhed another mans blood, who uſually was innocent, and from whom himſelf had never received any injury, &c. And hereupon the Tigurines reſolved to abſtaine from ſuch Leagues.

He withdraws them from being mercenaries

Anno Chriſti 1550. Bullinger publiſhed his Decades Sermonum, ſome of which he dedicated to King Edward the ſixth, and a reformation being now begun in England, he wrote upon that occaſion to many of our Nobility, Biſhops and Miniſters of our Church.

He encourageth the Reformation in England.

Anno Chriſti 1551, the Helvetians were ſummoned by a Bull from the Pope to appear at the Councill of Trent, by ſending their Miniſters thither, &c. Hereupon Maſter Bullinger, conſulting with his Fellow-Miniſters, publiſhed a Book, wherein he declared, that the Council of Trent was gathered for the ſuppreſſing of the truth, and that the Helvetians owed no ſubjection to the Pope, from under whoſe yoak they had long ſince withdrawn their necks.

He writes againſt the Council of Trent.

About this time there ſprange up a contention in the Church of Geneva, by reaſon of one Hierom Bolſecus, a Phyſician, who publickly oppoſed the Doctrine of Maſter Calvin about Election, and boaſted that divers other Miniſters, and particularly Maſter Bullinger was of his opinion. Calvin anſwered him, confuting his error by teſtimonies of Scripture, and out of Saint Auguſtine; But when he would not be ſatisfied, the Senate and Brethren of Geneva ſent to Zurick to ask their judgements, whereupon Bullinger with his Brethren did ſo declare themſelves, that all might ſee that they which made Election depend upon faith foreſeen, and faith upon mans free-will, as much as upon the Divine inſpiration, did maliciouſly abuſe the Tigurine Miniſters, &c. And indeed there was a ſweet Harmony between Calvin, Bullinger and Peter Martyr about this point.

He diſclaimes Bolſecus.

His holy Zeal.

Anno Chriſti 1552, the war waxing hot in Germany, and Zurick being afflicted with a Famine, Bullinger wrote much for the comforting the afflicted, and to ſtir them up to unfained repentance for their ſins, whereby they had provoked God againſt them.

He favours the Engliſh exiles.

Anno Chriſti 1554. a perſecution being raiſed by Queen Mary in England, many Nobles, and famouſly learned men fled into Germany, and came to Zurick, where they erected a Colledge, and were by Maſter Bullinger much holpen therein.

In the following years, viz. 1556, 1557, and 1558, Bullinger had divers conflicts with Weſtphalus, Heshuſius and others. About which time the League amongſt the Helvetians being to be renued, the Popiſh Pages would have the oath to be, By God, and by all his Saints, which the Proteſtant Pages refuſed, and (though ſome Politick men pleaded for the lawfulneſſe of it, or at leaſt that there ſhould be no contention about ſo ſmall a matter) Bullinger with his Colleagues, ſhewed, that an oath being part of Gods worſhip, was onely to be made in the name of the true God, who alone was to be called upon, and that all appearance of falſe worſhip was to be avoided.

His Zeal.

Anno Chriſti 1569. there aroſe up one Francis Stancarus, who taught, That Chriſt was Mediator onely according to his humane nature: Him, with ſome other ſuch Hereticks, Calvin and Bullinger confuted; as alſo Blandrata, who taught, That Chriſt our Saviour was a meer man; and Bernard Ochin, who held Polygamie lawfull.

Blandrata's Hereſies.

Anno Chriſti 1561. Blandrata being gone into Polonia, began to diſcover himſelf more clearly, and to accuſe Bullinger, and Calvin; whereupon Nicholas Radzivil, Palatine of Vilna, ſent Martin Secovitius with his Letters to Bullinger about Blandrata's buſineſs; to which Bullinger anſwered, that when Blandrata came to Zurick, he onely ſpake once with him, yet at that time he eaſily diſcerned that he was corrupt in his judgement about the Son of God; as alſo that he threatned to write againſt Calvin: whereunto he anſwered, That there were contentions already too many in the Church, which if he increaſed, God would be avenged on him for it: Yet he departed curſing and threatning grievous things. That ſuch men ſhould be taken heed of, who laboured to revive Arianiſme and other Hereſies, and cunningly to ſow them abroad.

Calvin alſo wrote the Hiſtory of Blandrata, and ſent it to the Polonian Church, but his Hypocriſie had ſo far prevailed with them, that it did no good: but afterward both in Poland and Tranſilvania he taught openly, That Chriſt our Saviour was a meer man.

The infection of Hereſie.

About the ſame time came forth Brentius his Book about the perſonall union of two natures in Chriſt, &c. wherein he laboured to prove the ſubſtantiall preſence of Chriſts body in the Supper. And whereas Bullinger had publiſhed a Tractat upon thoſe words, In my Fathers houſe are many manſions, Brentius publiſhed another Book, wherein he manifeſted his diſlike of Bullingers Book, ſaying, That his conſcience urged him to declare it. This many marvelled at, that he ſhould quarrell with Bullinger, being not provoked by him. Bullinger leſt he ſhould betray the truth anſwered him, and Brentius again replyed, charging the Tigurines with debaſing the Majeſty of Chriſt, and denying the Omnipotency of God.

Brentius conteſt with Bullinger.

Anno Chriſti 1562. the Helvetians Miniſters were again ſummoned to the Councel of Trent, having the publick faith ſent them for their Security; but Bullinger again wrote the reaſons of their refuſall.

Helvetians again ſummoned to Trent.

Anno Chriſti 1563. Bullinger anſwered the Book of Brentius, de Chriſti Majeſtate. About which time Ber. Ochin was baniſhed by the Senate of Zurick, for writing in defence of Polygamy, contrary to his promiſe, and oath, and refuſing to retract it.

Before his departure he deſired Maſter Bullinger to give him Letters teſtimoniall, which he told him that he could not doe with a ſafe conſcience, yet was grieved for him, and his children. From thence Ochin went to Baſil, but finding no entertainment there, Ochines errors & Hereſies.

there, he went into Poland, where he publickly denyed the Deity of the Holy-Ghoſt; but not ſtaying long there, he went into Moravia, where he joyned himſelf to the Conventicles of the Anabaptiſts; and ſhortly after dyed. And Death Anno Chriſti 1564. A great Plague brake out in Zurick, of which Bullinger fell ſo ſick that all deſpaired of his Life, and himſelf alſo; Whereupon he ſent for the Miniſters of the Church, and took his leave of them: But it pleaſed God, at the earneſt Prayers of the Church, to reſtore him to health again; yet his Wife and one of his Daughters dyed of it. And the year after (the Plague continuing) two other of his Daughters dyed alſo, and himſelf began to be exceedingly tormented with the Stone, yet did not he intermit his labours, but preached conſtantly, and finiſhed his Homilies upon Daniel. A plague. Bullingers ſickneſſe. Power of Prayer. Manfold afflictions.

Anno Chriſti 1566. when ſome turbulent Spirits publiſhed, That the Helvetian Churches were divided amongſt themſelves, and held many unſound Doctrines, Bullinger publiſhed a Confeſſion of Faith, which was conſented to, and ſubſcribed by the Church of Geneva, Bern, Scaphuſen, Neocom, Saint Galli, Mulhuſen, and Bipennium, and atteſted by the Engliſh, Scottiſh, and French Churches; The Hungarian Brethren alſo deteſting and diſclaiming the blaſphemies of Blandrata and of Francis David, publiſhed their aſſent to it. A confeſſion of Faith.

Anno Chriſti 1567. Bullinger publiſhed his Homilies upon Iſay, and the year after he confuted Oſius, who denyed the Deity of Chriſt, and the Holy-Ghoſt.

Anno Chriſti, 1569. a great Perſecution ariſing in France, many Godly Perſons fled to Geneva, and Helvetia; who being in great want, Bullinger took much paines to raiſe money by Collections for them. He was much troubled with the Sciatica, and the Stone; Yet in the midſt of thoſe pains he wrote the Lives of the Popes, and a Confutation of the Popes Bull, whereby he had Excommunicated our Queen Elizabeth, and abſolved her Subjects from the Oath of Allegiance; which was afterwards tranſlated into Engliſh. Perſecution in France. His charity. His pains.

Anno Chriſti, 1570. there was a Synod of the French Churches held at Rochel, to which, becauſe the Helvetians could not ſend Delegates, they wrote Letters, ſignifying their agreement with them in Doctrine, and their good will to them.

Anno Chriſti 1571. by reaſon of the extreame hard winter, there was a very great dearth, in which Bullinger, and the other Miniſters obtained of the Senate that there ſhould be frequent Faſting, and Prayer in publick, and that proviſion ſhould be made for the Poor, which was done accordingly. A dearth. Faſting and Prayers.

Anno Chriſti, 1572. was that Bloody Maſſacre at Paris, and in other places of France; Whereupon Bullinger the Year after wrote his Book of Perſecution, and God's Judgements upon the Perſecutors, and to exhort the Perſecuted to Patience, and Conſtancy. That New Star alſo in Caſſiopeia appeared at that time. The Maſſacre in France 1573. A new Star.

Anno Chriſti, 1574. Bullinger fell into a grievous Diſeaſe, which much tormented him from October to December, at which time it pleaſed God to give him Eaſe; Whereupon he exerciſed his publick Miniſtry again. The year after he relapſed into his Diſeaſe, and though the pain was almoſt intolerable, yet he never brake forth, either in word or geſture into the leaſt impatience, but Prayed the more fervently; And when he had any eaſe, he uſed to diſcourſe pleaſantly with his Friends, ſaying, If the Lord will make any further uſe of me, and my Miniſtry in his Church, I will willingly obey him; but if he pleaſe (as I much deſire) to take me out of this miſerable Life, I ſhall exceedingly rejoyce, that he pleaſes to take me out of this wretched and corrupt Age to goe to my Saviour Chriſt. Socrates (ſaid he) was glad when his death approached, becauſe, as he thought, he ſhould goe to Homer, Heſiod, and other Learned Men, whom he thought he ſhould meet with in the other World: How much more doe I joy who am ſure that I ſhall ſee my Saviour Chriſt, the Saints, Patriarks, Prophets, Apoſtles, and all the Holy Men which have His ſickneſſe. 1575. His Patience. Death deſired. His Faith. Why he deſired Death.

lived

ed from the beginning of the World. These (I say) when I am sure to see them, and to partake of their joyes, why should I not willingly dye, to enjoy their perpetual society and glory.

He taketh his farewell of the Ministers.

When he found some ease, he sent for all the Ministers and Professors of the University to him in his study, to whom he gave thanks for their coming to him, took his farewell of them with tears, which he said, proceeded not from his fear of Death, but (as Paul's) from his great love to them. He made before them a Confession of his Faith, forgave his Enemies, exhorted them to concord; admonished them especially to take heed of Drunkenness, which was so common amongst the Germans; and lastly, that they should be very observant to the Senate, which had so excellently maintained Religion.

And of the Magistrates

He wrote also his farewell to the Magistrates, exhorting them to continue their care of the Church, and Schools; thanked them for their kindness to him, and entreated them to chuse Ralph Gualter to be his successor. The day of his Death he continued in prayer, repeating the one and fiftyeth, the sixteenth, and the forty second Psalmes, and the Lords-Prayer; and so gave up his Soul unto God, Anno Chri. 1575, and of his Age 71.

His death.

His Character.

He was one of the chiefest of the Helvetian Divines, and after Zuinglius, and Oecolampadius, a strong Assertor of their Confession of Faith. Of a mild Nature; clear in his Ministry, and one that hated Crabbed and unprofitable Questions, which many delighted in to shew their Wit; Affable in speech, courteous of behaviour both towards his own and strangers. An excellent Governour of the Church; frugall and Temperate in his Diet; Merry and pleasant with those that lived with him. He was so Industrious, that he would never be Idle. He had one Wife, by whom he had six Sons, and five Daughters, of whom he Marryed one to Zuinglius, another to Lavater, and a third to Simler, all Ministers in Zurick.

He wrote Commentaries upon all the New-Testament: His Works are contained in ten Tomes; besides which he wrote Contra Anabaptistas lib. 4. De annuis Reditibus De Hebdomadibus Danielis: De Sacramentis.

The Life of Edward Deering, who dyed Anno Christi, 1576.

His birth & education.

Edward Deering was born of a very Ancient Family in Kent, and carefully brought up both in Religion, and Learning. From School he went to Cambridge, and was admitted into Christ's Colledge, where he profited exceedingly, and became a very Famous Preacher, as may appear by his most Learned, and Holy Sermons, and Tractates full of Heavenly Consolation.

His Humility.

He never affected, nor sought after great Titles, or Preferments, and therefore rested content with his Fellowship in that Colledge; and onely Commenced Batchelor of Divinity; Yet afterwards he was made a Preacher in Saint Paul's Church in London; And having worn out himself with his Labours in the Work of the Lord, he fell sick, and discerning his approaching Death, he said, in the presence of his Friends that came to visit him. The Good Lord pardon my great negligence, that (whilst I had time) I used not his precious gifts to the advancement of his Glory as I might have done: Yet I bless God withall, that I have not abused these gifts to Ambition and vain Studies: When I am once dead, my Enemies shall be reconciled to me, except they be such as either knew me not, or have no Sence of Goodness in them; For I have faithfully, and with a good Conscience served the Lord my God.

His sickness.

His speech in his sickness.

A Miniſter ſtanding by, ſaid unto him, It's a great happyneſs to you that you dye in Peace, and thereby are freed from thoſe Troubles which many of your Brethren are like to meet with. To whom he anſwered, If God hath decreed that I ſhall Sup together with the Saints in Heaven, why doe I not goe to them? But if there be any doubt or Heſitation reſting upon my Spirit, the Lord will reveal the truth unto me. When he had layen ſtill a while, a Friend ſaid unto him, That he hoped that his mind was employed in Holy Meditation whilſt he lay ſo ſilent: To whom he anſwered, Poor Wretch, and miſerable man that I am, the leaſt of all Saints, and the greateſt of all Sinners, yet by the Eye of Faith I believe in, and look upon Chriſt my Saviour: Tet a little while, and we ſhall ſee our hope. The end of the World is come upon us, and we ſhall quickly receive the end of our hope which we have ſo much looked for. Afflictions, Diſeaſes, Sickneſs, Grief, are nothing but part of that Portion which God hath allotted to us in this World. It's not enough to begin for a little while, except we perſevere in the fear of the Lord all the days of our Lives, for in a moment we ſhall be taken away. Take heed therefore that you doe not make a Paſtime of, nor diſ-eſteem the Word of God: Bleſſed are they that whilſt they have Tongues, uſe them to God's Glory. An excellent ſpeech.

When he drew near to his end, being ſet up in his bed, ſome of his Friends requeſted him to ſpeak ſomething to them that might be for their Edification, and Comfort: Whereupon, the Sun ſhining in his Face, he took occaſion from thence to ſay thus unto them; There is but one Sunne in the World, nor but one Righteouſneſſe, one Communion of Saints. If I were the moſt excellent of all creatures in the World: If I were equal in Righteouſneſs to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, yet had I reaſon to confeſſe my ſelf to be a Sinner, and that I could expect no Salvation but in the Righteouſneſſe of Jeſus Chriſt: For we all ſtand in need of the Grace of God: And as for my Death, I Bleſſe God, I feel, and finde ſo much inward joy and comfort in my Soul, that if I were put to my choice whether to dye, or live, I would a thouſand times rather chooſe death than life, if it may ſtand with the holy will of God. And accordingly ſhortly after he ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti, 1576. Comfort at Death. His Death.

THE

The Life of Flacius Illiricus, who dyed Anno Christi 1575.

His birth & Parentage.

His education.

Matthias Flacius Illiricus was borne in Albona in Sclavonia, Anno Christi 1520, of an ancient and numerous Family. His Father being learned himself, and discerning a good ingeny in his Son, began in his tender years to instill into him the first Rudiments of Learning. But after his death, his Masters so neglected him, that he almost forgot all.

Yet when he began to have discretion, he desired much to attain to Learning, and returned to his studies, and to further him therein, went to Venice, and after some progress made, at seventeen years old he began to study Divinity; But wanting means to maintaine him in the University, he profered half his estate to be admitted into a Monastery, either at Bononia, or Padua; But a friend, called Baldus, a godly man who afterwards suffered Martyrdom for the Truth, disswaded him from that kinde of life, and advised him rather to goe into Germany, where were store of Learned men.

He goes to Venice.

He goes into Germany.

Hereupon, having read over some of the Protestants Bookes, and liking Baldus his advice, he went into Germany, which he had never before seen; and first staying at Basil. he studied under Simon Grynæus, who did not only entertain him, being very poor, but provided for him, and instructed him in the Truth, which was Anno 1539. And about the end of the year he went from thence to Tubing, where also he studied a while under Marthias Garbicius, and then went to Wittenberg, Anno Christi 1541, where he privately taught Greek and Hebrew for his maintenance, and heard Luther and Melanæthon. He was much troubled there with temptations about Sin, Gods wrath, and Predestination: But by the good counsel of Pomerane, and Luther, and the publick prayers of the Church, it pleased God that he overcame them.

His poverty.

His Tentation.

His Marriage.

Melanæthon loved him much for his Wit and Learning, and maintained him at his own charges: And when Flacius was reasonable well grounded in the Greek, he fell to the study of the Hebrew, and commenced Mr. of Arts He also married a wife, and had a stipend allowed him by the Prince Elector, Anno 1544. But when by reason of the Wars, that Universty was dissipated, he went to Brunswick, being invited thither by Medler, where he got much credit by his publick teaching. The Warres being ended, he returned to Wittenberg, Anno 1547. But when the Interim came forth, and Melanæthon thought that for peace sake somthing should be yeelded to in things indifferent, Flacius, with the Divines of Lubec, Lunenburg, Hamborough, and Madgeburg strongly opposed it, as opening a gap to the return of Popery.

The Interim opposed by him.

He goes to Madgeburg.

Hereupon shortly after he removed to Madgeburg, where he strongly opposed Popery, the Interim, and whatsoever was contrary to the Augustane Confession. There also he assisted Gallus, Wigand, and Judex, in writing the Madgeburgenses Centuries; Confuted the opinion of Ostander about the Justification of a man before God, and the fond conceits of Schwenfield. And when the Duke of Saxone had erected an Universsity at Jeans, he sent for him thither, Anno Christi 1557. But after five years a great contention arising between Strigelius and him about Free will, he left that place and went to Ratisbone; And Anno Christi 1567 the Citizens of Antwerp, having procured liberty for the free exercise of the Reformed Religion, sent for Flacius amongst others thither; But Religion being quickly expelled thence, he went to Strasborough, where he published his Glosse upon the New Testament. And from thence to Franckfurt upon the Main, where after a while falling out with the Ministers about the Essence of Originall Sin, he fell into great disgrace, and not long after died, Anno Christi 1575, and of his Age 55.

And from thence to Jeans.

And to Ratisbone.

And to Strasborough.

He

He was of an unquiet wit, alwayes contending with some or other, and brought much grief to Melanchon; yet wrote some excellent Workes for the benefit of the Church; and amongst others, his Catalogus Testium Veritatis: His Clavis sacræ Scripturæ: His Martyrologie, with many others set down by Verheiden in his Præstantium Theologorum effigies. The Life of Josias Simlerus, who dyed Anno Christi, 1576.

Josias Simlerus was born at Capella in Helvetia, Anno Chr. 1530. His Fathers Name was Peter, who was a godly, learned, and prudent man; by whom he was carefully brought up in learning in the School of Capella, and at fourteen years of age was sent to Zurick, Anno Christi 1544 where he lived in Bullingers family (who was his God-father) almost two years, and in which place he demeaned himself so piously, modestly, and diligently, and made so eminent a progresse in Learning, that he was exceedingly beloved of all. His Birth and Education.

From thence he went to the University of Basil, Anno Christi 1546. where he studied the Arts and Tongues one year, and from thence he went to Strasborough, in which place there flourished at that time Sturmius, Martyr, Bucer, Fagius, Herlinus, Sevenus, Dasypodius, Hedio, Niger, with some others: Some of these he heard, and spent two years in the further study of the Arts and Tongues. And so at the end of three years he returned home, to the great joy of his Father and Bullinger. He goes to Basil. And Strasborough.

Neither did he now spend his time in pleasures, and idlenesse, but partly in learning, partly in preaching in neighbouring villages, and partly in teaching a School; so that being not above twenty yeares old, he was very serviceable both in the Church and School. And whereas Gesner was exceeding full of imployments, he many times supplyed his publick Lectures, one while reading Astronomie, another while Geometrie, and other whiles Arithmetick Lectures for him.

Anno Christi 1552. he was appointed publickly to expound the New Testament in Zurick, being but two and twenty years old; and he began with Matthew, and shewed such diligence and abilities, that he was not only admired by his own Conntrymen, but by strangers, especially the English, who lived as exiles there at that time. He is made Professor in Zurick.

Four years after, Anno Chr. 1557. he was made Deacon, and went on in his former work with admiration, so that he was highly prized by all, and judged fit for better preferment. He is made Deacon.

Bibliander being grown very old, Simler supplied his place, and was Colleague to Peter Martyr, who highly prized him, and foretold that Simler would prove a great Ornament to the Church; and when he died, expressed much joy that he should have so able a man to succeed him. And accordingly after his death, Simler was chosen into his place by the unanimous Votes both of the Doctors and Senate of Zurick, which was in the year 1563. and had for his Colleague John Wolffius, a very learned, and godly man. He is dear to Peter Martyr.

Simler, besides his publick labours, instructed many in private, and amongst them some Noblemen, both in sacred, and humane learning. His Lectures publick, and private, ordinary, and extraordinary were sufficient witnesses of his diligence, industry, piety, learning, eloquence, judgement, and memory. He had such an acute wit, and strong memory, that he was able ex tempore to speak of any subject; and to answer his friends questions out of any Author, and to give an account of their writings, to the great admiration of the hearers. And though, in reading of Books he seemed to run over them very superficially, yet when he had done, he was able to give an exact His Industry. His excellent Memory. His manner of Reading.

exact account of any thing that was contained in them. Being ſo troubled with the Gout that many times he was confined to his bed, and had the uſe of none of his Members but his Tongue only; yet in the midſt of his pains, he uſed to dictate to his Amanuenſis ſuch things as were preſently printed to the great admiration of Learned men.

His excellent Parts.

His Diſeaſes.

Beſides the Gout, he was much troubled with the Stone, ſo that the pains of theſe diſeaſes, together with his exceſſive labours in his Miniſtry, haſtened his immature death; which he alſo foreſaw, yet without any conſternation, or fear, but by his frequent and fervent prayers to God, endeavoured to fit himſelf for it: and accordingly Anno Chriſti 1576, he reſigned up his ſpirit unto God, being five and forty years old, and was buryed in Peter Martyrs Tomb.

His Death.

His Character.

He was of a very loving, and gentle Nature, free from paſſion; very charitable, ſpending all his Patrimony upon the Poor, and Strangers. And ſuch as came thither to ſtudy, he entertained them in his houſe, and often feaſted his friends, with whom he would be very merry; otherwiſe he was very ſparing of ſpeech. He delighted much in Hiſtory. He had two wives, the firſt of which was Bullingers daughter, who died without iſſue; by the ſecond, who was Gualters Daughter, he had three ſons and one daughter.

He was tall of ſtature, fat, fair, and ſtrong, but that he was ſomewhat weakned by the Gout. He had ſuch an amiable face, that his ſweet Manners might be ſeen in his Countenance as in a Glaſs. In his Habit and Diet he was neither too ſumptuous, nor too ſordid; beſt liking cleanlineſs, and neatneſs.

The Life of Immanuel Tremelius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1580.

His Birth and Education.

His Converſion.

His frequents Removes.

IMmanuel Tremelius was born in Ferrara, having a Jew to his Father, who ſo educated him, that he was very skilfull in the Hebrew Tongue: He was converted by Peter Martyr, and went with him to Lucca, where he Taught Hebrew. From thence he went with him to Strasborough, and from thence into England, under King Edward the ſixth, after whoſe death he returned into Germany: and in the School of Hornback, under the Duke of Bipont, he taught Hebrew.

From thence he was called to Heidleberg under Frederick the third, Elector Palatine, where he was Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue, and tranſlated the Syriack Teſtament into Latine: There alſo he ſet upon the Tranſlation of the Bible out of Hebrew, and aſſociated unto himſelf in that work Francis Junius, who after the death of Tremelius, peruſed the whole work, and by adding many things, rather made it larger than better, in ſome mens judgment.

Bible Tranſlated.

His Death.

In his old Age he left Heidleberg, and by the Duke of Bulloin was called to be Hebrew Profeſſor in his new Univerſity of Sedon, where he dyed, Anno Chriſti 1580. and of his Age 70.

He wrote a Chalde and Syriack Grammer; He publiſhed the New-Teſtament in Latine and Syriack: An Expoſition upon the Prophet Hoſea. Together with Junius, he tranſlated the Hebrew Bible, adding ſhort Annotations. And laſtly Bucers Lectures upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians.

THE

The Life of Peter Boquine, who dyed Anno Christi 1582.

PEter Boquinus was born in Aquitane, and being in his youth brought up in learning, he entred into a Monastery at Biturg, where he was made the Prior, and was very much beloved of all the Convent. But it pleased God in the midst of all his riches and honours to discover the Truth to him, and thereupon, after the example of Luther, Bucer, Oecolampadius and Peter Martyr, he resolved to leave all, and to follow Christ; whose example divers of the Friers also followed. His Birth and Education. His Conversion. Christ best of All.

From thence he went toward Wittenberg, being very desirous to be acquainted with Luther & Melancthon, whose fame was very great, & some of whose works he had met with, and read; and so travelling through Germany, he came to Basil, where he wintered by reason of the Plague being very rife at that time in many Countries. There he diligently heard the Lectures of Myconius, Caralostadius, and Sebastian Munster. He goes to Basil.

Anno Christi 1542. from thence he went to Lipsich, where he stayed three weeks, and so went to Wittenberg; Coming hither he had some converse with Luther, but more with Melancthon: And whilst he was there, Bucer sent to Melancthon to request him, to send an able man to Strasborough to supply Calvins place, who was now gone back to Geneva; whereupon Melancthon requested Boquine to go thither, which he accordingly did, and began to read upon the Epistle to the Galatians. Shortly after Peter Martyr came thither also. He comes to Wittenberg. He goes to Strasborough.

But Bucer being sent for by the Arch-bishop of Collen, to assist him in the reformation of his Churches, Boquine finding that the Ecclesiastical and Scholastical affairs went but slowly forward in his absence, upon the request of his Brother, who was a Doctor of Divinity, and not altogether estranged from the Reformed Religion, he resolved to goe back into France, and so taking Basil in his way, he went to Geneva, where he heard Calvin preach, and had some speech with him, and from thence to Biturg, where he lived with his Brother, the Doctor mentioned before; and when some hope began to appear that the Churches of France would be reformed, at the instigation of his brother, he began publickly to read Hebrew, and to expound the Scriptures. His return into France.

About that time Francis King of France being dead, the Queen of Navar came into those parts about the marriage of her daughter, to whom Boquine went, and presented her with a Book written with his own hand, about the necessity and use of the holy Scriptures, and her daughter with another, concerning our spiritual husband Jesus Christ; whereupon she took him into her Patronage, and allowed him a yearly stipend out of her treasury, appointing him to preach a publick Lecture in the great Church in Biturg; Whereunto also the Arch-Bishop consented, He is made the Queen of Navars Chaplain.

Shortly after the Queen of Navar dying, there succeeded to her, King Henries sister, as in name and stock, so also in Doctrine and Piety not unlike her: Whereupon Boquine went and presented her with a Book which he had written, De homine perfecto, which she took so gratefully, that she confirmed his former stipend to him; and he made use of that favour so long as he thought his labours were not unprofitable to the Church; But when he saw that there was no hope of any further Reformation in France, and that his enemies lay in wait for his life, he gave it over of his own accord. At that time he underwent the bitter hatred of some Friers, and other enemies of the truth, by whom his life was in great danger; For he was summoned to appear before the Parliament of Paris, and then before the Arch-Bishop of Biturg, where his life was sought; But God raised up some men to stand for him, by them he was delivered from the present danger. Popish Malice. Gods Providence.

Then did he resolve to fly into England; But hearing of King Edwards death,

His return to Strasborough.

He altered his purpoſe, & by the perſwaſion of a friend he reſolved to return to his people in Germany, and ſo accordingly, accompanyed with two young men, he went to Strasborough; and when he had ſcarce been there a month, it ſo fell out that the French Church in that place wanted a Paſtor, and choſe him to that office; yet for ſundry reaſons he refuſed to accept of it, till by the perſwaſion of John Sturmius, and ſome other friends, he was content to preach to them till they could provide them another.

His troubles.

That place he diſcharged for about the ſpace of four months, conflicting with many difficulties, and meeting with much trouble, by reaſon of the improbity and perfidiouſneſſe of ſome: At the end of which time, the Senate with the conſent of the Church, appointed Peter Alexander to be their Paſtor, and ſo Boquine was freed.

He goes to Heidleberg.

Anno Chriſti 1557. he went from thence to Heidleberg, being ſent for by Otho Henry, Prince Elector Palatine, who was about to reform his Churches.

His patience.

There he was made the Publick Profeſſor of Theologie, and met with much oppoſition, and manifold contentions in that alteration, which yet he bore with much prudence.

Anno Chriſti 1564. there was a diſputation appointed at Malburn for compoſing the great controverſie about the ubiquity of Chriſts body: This was appointed by Frederick the third, Elector Palatine, and Chriſtopher Duke of Wirtemberg. To this meeting the Elector ſent Boquine, Diller, Olevian, Dathen and Urſin; but very little fruit appeared of their labours, as the event ſhewed.

He is driven from thence Boquine continued in Heidleberg about twenty years, under Otho and Frederick the third. But after that Princes death, Anno Chriſti 1576. by reaſon of the prevalency of the Heterodox party, he, with other Profeſſors, and Divines, was driven from thence,

He is called to Lauſanna and it pleaſed God that immediately he was called to Lauſanna, where he performed the part of a faithfull Paſtor ſo long as he lived.

Anno Chriſti 1582. on a Lords day he preached twice, and in the evening heard another Sermon, then ſupped chearfully, and after ſupper refreſhed himſelf by walking abroad, then went to viſit a ſick friend, and whilſt he was comforting of him, he found his ſpirits to begin to ſink in him, and running to his ſervant, he ſaid unto him Pray;

His ſudden death.

adding further, Lord receive my ſoul, and ſo he quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1582.

His Works.

The workes which he left behind him were theſe: Defenſio ad calumnias Doctoris cujuſdam Avii *in Evangelii profeſſores. THE

E GRINDALL

The Life of Edmund Grindal, who died Anno Christi 1583.

Edmund Grindal was born in Cumberland Anno Christi 1519. & carefully brought up in learning, first at school, and then in the University of Cambridge, where being admitted into Pembroke Hall, he profited so exceedingly, that he was chosen first Fellow, and afterward Master of that house. His birth & education. His preferment in Cambridge.

And Bishop Ridley taking notice of his piety and learning, made him his Chaplain, and commended him to that pious Prince, King Edward the sixth, who intended to prefer him, but that he was prevented by an immature death. In the bloody dayes of Queen Mary, Grindal, amongst many others, fled into Germany, where he continued all her Reigne: But coming back in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth, she preferred him to that dignity which her Brother King Edward intended him to, making him Bishop of London, wherein he carried himself worthily for about elven years. Flight in persecution. He is made Bishop of London.

Anno Christi 1570. he was removed by the Queen to the Archbishoprick of York, where he continued about six years; and then for his piety and learning she made him Archbishop of Canterbury, wherein he lived about seven years more, and then falling sick at Croidon, he resigned up his spirit unto God that gave it, Anno Christi 1583. and of his Age, sixty four. Arch-bishop of York. Arch-bishop of Canterbury. His death.

Both in his life, and at his death he did many excellent works of Charity: At St. Beighs in Cumberland, where he was born, he erected a Free-schoole, and endowed it with thirty pound per annum for ever. His Charity To Pembroke Hall in Cambridge, where he was educated, he gave twenty two pounds a yeare in lands for the maintaining of a Greek Lecture, one Fellow, and two Scholars, to be chosen out of the aforesaid School of St. Beighs. He gave also much money to the said Colledge. To Magdalen Colledge in Cambridge, he gave lands for the maintainance of one Fellow from the said School. To Christs Colledge in Cambridge he gave forty five pounds. To Queens Colledge in Oxford he gave twenty pounds per annum in lands to maintain tain one Fellow, and two Scholars out of the aforesaid School: and at his death he gave his Library, which was a very great, and good one, to that Colledge; besides a great sum of money. To eight Alms-houses in Croidon he gave fifty Pounds per annum; and to Canterbury he gave an hundred Pounds to set the Poor on work.

The Life of Bernard Gilpin, who dyed Anno Christi 1583.

His birth & Parentage.

Bernard Gilpin was born at Kentmire in the County of Westmoreland, Anno Christi 1517. of an Ancient and honourable Family. When he was but a Child, a Fryer pretending to be a zealous Preacher, came on a Saturday night to his Fathers house, and at Supper eat like a Glutton, and drank himself drunk, yet the next morning in his Sermon, sharply reproved the Sin of Drunkenness: Whereupon young Gilpin, sitting near his Mother, cryed out, Oh Mother! Doe you hear how this Fellow dares speak against Drunkenness, and yet himself was Drunken last night? But his Mother stopped his mouth with her hand, that he might speak no further, it being a mortall sin in those times to speak against these men.

His education.

His Parents perceiving his aptness, were carefull to make him a Scholar; And when he had with great Approbation passed his time in the Grammar-School, they sent him to Oxford Anno Christi 1533. where he was admitted into the Queen's-Colledge, and profited wonderfully in Humane Learning. He was very conversant also in the writings of Erasmus, which were in much esteem at that time: And to the study of Logick, and Philosophy, he added that of Greek and Hebrew; yea after some few years spent in these studies, he grew so Famous, that there was no place of preferment for a Scholar whereof the eminency of his Vertues had not rendered him worthy: Whereupon he was one of the first that was chosen a member of Christs-Church by Cardinal Wolsey.

He goes to Oxford.

His great Proficiency.

At that time he was not fully instructed in the true Religion, but held disputations against John Hooper, afterwards Bishop of Worcester; as also against Peter Martyr, who was then Divinity-Lecturer at Oxford; upon the occasion of which Dispute, that he might defend his cause the better, he examined the Scriptures and Ancient Fathers: But by how much the more he studyed to defend his Cause, the less confidence he began to have therein; And so whilst he was searching zealously for the Truth, he began to discern his own Errors. Peter Martyr used to say, That he cared not for his other Adversaries, but (saith he) I am troubled for Gilpin; for he doth, and speaketh all things with an upright Heart; and therefore he often Prayed, That God would be pleased at last to convert to the Truth the heart of Gilpin, being so inclinable to honesty: And the Lord answered his prayer; For presently after Gilpin resolved more earnestly to apply himself, both by study, and Prayer to search out the Truth: and it pleased God accordingly to reveal it unto him; as also the many Errors in Popery, and the necessity of separating from that Apostatical Church.

Power of Prayer.

His conversion.

In the mean while Cuthbert Tunstal, Bishop of Durham, being his Uncle, resolved to send him beyond-Sea to visit the Churches in forreign parts, and to allow him means for his travel: But before his going, he was called to preach before King Edward the sixth, which he performed with good approbation.

He preaches before the King.

Whilst he was resolving upon his Journey, he had a Parsonage given him, which Tunstal perswaded him to keep to maintain him in his travels; but he, sending for a Friend whom he knew to be Learned, and Religious, resign'd his Parsonage to him: For which, when it came to the knowledge of Tunstal, he chid him sharply, and told him,

His Piety.

him, That he would dye a Beggar; But he excuſed it, ſaying, That he could not keep it with the Peace of his Conſcience. But (ſaid the Biſhop) thou ſhalt have a Diſpenſation. To whom Gilpin anſwered, That he feared when he came to ſtand before Chriſts Tribunal, it would not ſerve his turn to plead a Diſpenſation, &c. When he came beyond Sea, he went to Lovan, Antwerp, and Paris. And after a while Tunſtal ſent again to perſwade him to accept of a Parſonage, which he would confer upon him: To whom he wrote back, that he had diſcuſſed the Queſtion with all the Learned, eſpecially with the Prophets & beſt Writers ſince Chriſt's time, ſo that he was fully reſolved, not to burthen his Conſcience by accepting of a Charge which he could not live upon, &c.

Tender Conſcience. He goes beyond Sea.

Whilſt he was in Paris, Tunſtal ſent him over a Book which himſelf had written, about the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament to be printed there, which Gilpin performed faithfully. He returned into England after three years, in Queen Marie's reign, and beheld (to his great grief) the Church oppreſſed with Blood and Fire; and being placed by Tunſtal in the Rectory of Eſſingdon, he began ſharply to tax the vices which then reigned in the Church, and propounded the Doctrine of Salvation plainly, and ſoundly; which procured him many Enemies, eſpecially of the Clergy, who accuſed him often to the Biſhop for an Heretick: But Tunſtal could not endure to ſhed blood, and therefore dealt mildly with him.

His return into England. His faithfulneſs. He is accuſed.

At a certain time the Biſhops Chaplains diſcourſed with him about Luther, and the Sacrament of the Altar; whom he anſwered ſo judiciouſly, that the Biſhop hearing their Diſcourſe, ſaid to his Chaplains, Let him alone, for he hath more Learning than you all. The Arch-Deaconry of Durham being annexed to the Parſonage of Eſſingdon, Maſter Gilpin for a time ſupplyed both places, but after a while he wrote to the Biſhop, deſiring that he might have his good will to reſigne one of them, which the Biſhop was very angry at, ſaying, I told thee thou wouldſt Dye a Beggar.

His great learning.

Not long after the Biſhop conferred upon him inſtead of them, the Rectory of Houghton, which was a great Pariſh, and a very fine Seat. He took great care to perform the Duties of the Miniſtry amongſt his people; and ſeeing the miſerable condition of many places in thoſe parts, where the Tythes being Impropriated, the Souls of the people were ſtarved. He preached often abroad alſo: And once a year he took a Journey into Northumberland, Kiddaſdale, and Tindale, uſually about Chriſtmaſs, becauſe of the opportunity of ſo many Holy-Days; where he gat himſelf much eſteem by his preaching to thoſe barbarous people, and diſtributing money to the poor.

Made Parſon of Houghton. His charity to Souls. His journies into the North.

Sometimes he was forced to lodge in the Snow all night in that Journey, at which times he made his man to Trot his Horſes up and down, whilſt he beſtirred himſelf that he might not periſh with the Cold. Once as he returned home, a Husbandman, as he was plowing, had a Horſe in his Team that fell down and dyed, for which he made great moan; whereupon Mr. Gilpin cauſed his man to alight and take off his Saddle and Bridle, and ſo to carry them to the next Town, and gave his Horſe to this Husbandman. And when by chance he met with any naked poor people, he would pull off ſome of his own Clothes and give them.

His Charity

In the Town of Houghton there was a ſtreet of poor people, for whoſe relief every Thurſday he cauſed a great Pot of Meat to be boyled, and diſtributed amongſt them; yea, his Charity was ſuch, that he was commonly called, The Father of the Poor. Yet had he many Enemies who often accuſed him to Biſhop Tunſtal, but he abhorring to ſhed blood, was ſtill a ſweet defence to him. At laſt they accuſed him to Bonner, who ſent a Meſſenger to apprehend him, whereof he had notice beforehand, and therefore prepared himſelf for Martyrdom, commanding his Steward to provide him a long Garment to go to the ſtake in, but it pleaſed God that by the ſudden death of Q. Mary, he was freed from this danger.

His Enemies. Flight in perſecution Refuſed. Gods Providence.

In the beginning of Queen Elizabeths Reign, Maſter Gilpin was exceeding ſtudious to do all the good that poſſibly he could, whereupon he Erected a Grammar-School, allowing maintenance for a Maſter and Uſher; divers of the Scholars he alſo inſtructed instructed himself, so that in that School were bred many that were exceedingly profitable to the Church afterwards: For there was great resort to it, some of which he tabled in his own house, others in the town; yea, upon many poor mens sons he bestowed both meat, drink, apparel, and teaching. Out of this School were sent daily many to the Universities, to divers of which he allowed maintenance; whereby his name was renowned, and the Earl of Bedford much esteemed him, and procured of the Queen the Bishoprick of Carlile for him, and sent him his Congedesslier; But Master Gilpin returned it back with many thanks, alledging his own insufficiency for the discharge of so great a place. Not long after also he was much importuned to take upon him the Provosts place of Queens Colledge in Oxford, but he refused it, being wholly unwilling to remove from the place where God had set him.

His Humility.

He refuseth preferment.

His Hospitality.

He was much given unto Hospitality, insomuch as William Cecil Lord Burghley, returning out of Scotland, drawn with the fame of Master Gilpin, came to Houghton, where he was entertained with all due respect: And when he had well observed Master Gilpin, and the diligence of his servants, and abundance of all things, with so compleat service in the entertainment of so great, and unlooked for a Guest, he said at his parting, That he had heard much of Master Gilpin, but what he had now seen, and tried, was much more than the report. And thereupon, when he took his leave of Master Gilpin, he requested him if he had any occasion or suit at the Court, that he would make use of him to intercede for him.

His esteem in the North

He still continued his yearly visit of Riddesdale, and Tindale, where he was esteemed a Prophet, and little lesse than adored by that barbarous people. Being once amongst them, one had stoln his horses; whereupon Hue and Cry was sent abroad for Master Gilpin's horses. The fellow that had stoln them, hearing that they were Master Gilpin's, fell a trembling, and presently carried them back again, humbly craving pardon, and the benediction of Father Gilpin, protesting that he feared that he should be thrust into Hell if he should doe him any wrong.

Note.

A Barbarous Custom.

Also being to preach at a town called Rothburie, there was a deadly feud between the Inhabitants, so that the men of both sides never met at Church without blood-shed, and therefore when one party came, the other used to stay away: But Master Gilpin being in the pulpit, both parties came to Church, one party going into the Chancel, and the other into the Body of the Church, armed with Swords and Javelins; Master Gilpin, though somewhat moved with this uncouth spectacle, yet went on in his Sermon; But when their weapons began to make a clashing sound, and the one side drew near to the other, Master Gilpin came down from the pulpit, and stepping to the Ringleaders of either faction, laboured to establish a peace; and when he could not prevail in that, yet he got a promise from them to continue the peace whilst he was in the Church, and afterwards, whilst he was in those quarters; and so going up again, he spent the rest of the time in disgracing that barbarous, and bloody custome.

At another time Master Gilpin coming to a Church in those parts, before the people assembled, and walking up, and down, he spied a glove hanging up in the Church; whereupon he enquired of the Sexton the meaning of it, who told him that it was a glove of one of the parish who had hung it up as a challenge to his enemy, with whom he would fight hand to hand, or with any that durst take it down. Master Gilpin requested the Sexton to take it down: who replyed, That he durst not. Then said Master Gilpin, Bring me a staffe, and I will take it down; which accordingly he did, and put it into his bosome, and in his Sermon he took occasion to reprove these inhumane challenges, & reproved him in particular that had hung up the glove, shewing them that he had taken it down, and that such practises were unbeseeming Christians, and therefore he perswaded them to love, and mutual charity amongst themselves: After Sermon he distributed money amongst the poor, and as his manner was, visited the prisoners, gave them money, and preached to them, and brought many of them to repentance, and for some that were condemned to die he procured pardon, and saved their lives.

He converts theeves.

A Rebellion in the North

Not long after, a Rebellion was raised in the North by the Earls of Northumberland and and Cumberland; which Maſter Gilpin having intelligence of, reſolved to retire himſelf from his houſe for a time; and making a ſpeech to the Maſter and Scholars to demean themſelves carefully and peaceably in his abſence, he went to Oxford, till the Queens Army, commanded by the Earl of Suſſex, had diſſipated the Rebels. But before that Armie came, the Rebels having ſeized upon Durham, ſome of them flew out as farre as Houghton, and finding Maſter Gilpins Barns full of Corn, young Cattel fatted, and many things, provided for hoſpitality, they made ſpoyl of all, the chiefeſt of which plunderers was a knave whom Mr. Gilpin had ſaved from the Gallows. But when thoſe Rebels were overthrowne, Maſter Gilpin returned home, and begged the lives of many of the ſimpler ſort, whom he knew to be drawn into that Rebellion through ignorance.

His houſe is Plundered.

Ingratitude.

After the death of Biſhop Pilkington, who was Maſter Gilpin's faithfull friend, there ſucceeded in the Biſhoprick of Durham, one Richard Barns, who was offended with him upon ſome falſe ſuggeſtions, which came thus about. Maſter Gilpins cuſtome was ſometimes to goe to Oxford, and once as he was upon his way, he eſpied a young youth before him ſometime vvalking, and ſometimes running. Maſter Gilpin demanded of him vvhat he vvas, and vvhence he came, and vvhither he vvas going: He anſvvered, That he came out of Wales, and vvas bound for Oxford to be a Scholar.

Hugh Broughton.

Maſter Gilpin thereupon examined him, and finding him a prompt Scholar for the Latine, and that he had a ſmattering in the Greek, asked him if he would goe with him, and he would provide for him; the youth was contented: whereupon he took him with him to Oxford, and afterwards to Houghton, where he profited exceedingly both in Greek and Hebrew, whom Maſter Gilpin at laſt ſent to Cambridge; and this was that famous Hugh Broughton, who afterwards requited evil for good, by ſtirring up the Biſhop of Durham againſt Maſter Gilpin.

Ingratitude.

Now the Biſhop ſent to Maſter Gilpin to preach at a Viſitation, appointing him time, and place: But it fell out to be juſt at that time when Maſter Gilpin was going his Northern journey into Riddeſdale, &c. whereupon he ſent his man to the Biſhop, deſiring him to appoint ſome other to preach the Viſitation-Sermon, for that he might have many to do that ſervice, but none would goe amongſt the Borderers if he did it not. When his man had delivered this meſſage to the Biſhop, the Biſhop held his peace; which being related to Maſter Gilpin, he ſaid, Silence argues conſent, and ſo went on in his journey.

But ſo ſoon as the Biſhop heard of it, he ſuſpended him, which Maſter Gilpin at his return much wondred at. Shortly after the Biſhop ſent to him to warn him to meet him, and the reſt of the Clergy at Cheſter; whither Maſter Gilpin went: and when the Biſhop and the Clergy were all met in the Church, he ſaid to Maſter Gilpin, Sir, I muſt have you preach to day: Maſter Gilpin deſired to be excuſed, becauſe he was unprovided, and for that he was ſuſpended. But (ſaith the Biſhop) I free you from that ſuſpenſion. Yet Maſter Gilpin replied, That he durſt not go up into the pulpit unprovided. You are never unprovided (ſaith the Biſhop) you have ſuch an habit of preaching. Maſter Gilpin ſtill ſtifly refuſed, ſaying, That God was not ſo to be tempted, &c. Whereupon the Biſhop commanded him to goe into the Pulpit forthwith. Well Sir (ſaid Maſter Gilpin) Since it muſt be ſo, your Lordſhips will be done; and ſo after a little pauſe, went up, and began his Sermon; and though he ſaw ſome extraordinarily prepared to write his Sermon, yet he proceeded in his Application to reprove the enormities in that Dioceſſe.

The Biſhop ſuſpends Him.

Requires him to preach on a ſudden.

His modeſt Anſwer.

He preaches boldly.

And now (ſaith he) Reverend Father, my ſpeech muſt be directed unto you; God hath exalted you, and will require an account of your government; a reformation of what's amiſſe in the Church is required at your hands, &c. neither can you henceforth plead ignorance, for behold I bring theſe things to your knowledge this day, and therefore what evils you ſhall either do your ſelf, or ſuffer by your connivance hereafter, you make it your own, &c. His friends hearing him thunder out theſe things, much feared what would become of him: And after Sermon, ſome of them told him with tears, That now the Biſhop had that advantage againſt him which he had long looked for, &c. To whom he anſwered, Be not affraid, the Lord God over-ruleth all, and if God may be glorified, and his Truth propagated, Gods will be done concerning me.

His Zeal.

His pious Reſolution.

After they had dined together (all men expecting the issue of this businesse) Master Gilpin went to take his leave of the Bishop. Nay (said the Bishop) I will bring you home, and so went along with him to his house, and walking there together in a Parlour, the Bishop took him by the hand, saying, Father Gilpin, I acknowledge you are fitter to be Bishop of Durham, than my self to be Parson of your Church; I ask forgiveness for Errors past: Forgive me, Father, I know you have hatched up some Chickens that now seek to pick out your eyes; but be sure so long as I am Bishop of Durham, no man shall injure you: Master Gilpin, and his friends, much rejoyced that God had so over-ruled things, that that which was purposed for his disgrace, should turn to his greater credit.

Gods mercy.

The Bishop asketh him forgiveness.

His Body being quite worn out with pains-taking, at last feeling before-hand the approach of Death, he commanded, the poor to be called together, unto whom he made a speech, and took his leave of them. He did the like also to others, made many Exhortations to the Scholars, to his Servants, and to divers others, and so at the last he fell asleep in the Lord, March the fourth, Anno Christi 1583. and of his Age, sixty six.

Preparation for death.

His death.

He was tall of stature, slender, and Hawk-nosed; His Clothes not costly, but frugall in things that belonged to his own Body; Bountifull in things that tended to the good of others, especially of the Poor, and Scholars. His doores were still open to the poor and strangers: He boorded and kept in his own house four and twenty Scholars, most of them poor mens Sons, upon whom he bestowed Meat, Drink, Apparel, and Learning. Having a great Parish, he entertained them at his Table by course, every Sabbath from Michaelmasse to Easter. He bestowed upon his School, and for stipends upon the School Masters, the full sum of Five hundred Pounds, out of which School he supplyed the Church of England with great store of Learned Men. He was carefull not onely to avoid evil, but the least appearance of it: Being full of Faith unfeigned, and of good Works; He was at last put into his Grave, as an Heap of Wheat in due time put into the Garner.

His Character.

Hallelujah.

The Life of Zachary Ursin, who dyed Anno Christi 1583.

His birth & parentage.

Zachary Ursin was born in Uratislavia, the Metropolis of Silesia, Anno Christi 1534. of honest Parents. His Fathers name was Gasper, a Minister in Uratislavia, who set him to School in the same City, where he quickly shewed an excellent Wit, by which he easily out went all his School-Fellows, and so having perfected School-Learning by that time he was sixteen years old, having an ample testimony from his Master [Andrew Winckle] he was sent to Wittenberg, Anno Christi 1552. where he heard Melanchthon with great diligence two years. At the end of which time the Plague breaking forth there; he retired with Melanchthon to Tergaw; and after a while, having an ample Testimony from him, he went thence into his own Country for all that Winter; But in the Spring he returned to Wittenberg, where he spent five years more in the study of the Arts, Tongues, and Divinity.

He goes to Wittenberg.

A plague.

His return to Wittenberg.

He was very familiar with Melanchthon, and much esteemed by many Learned men, who flocked to that University out of all Countries, with whom also afterwards he kept Correspondency.

Anno

Anno Christi 1557. he went with Melancthon to the Conference at Worms about Religion; and from thence he travelled to Marpurg, Strasburough, Basil, Lausanna, and Geneva, where he grew into familiar acquaintance with many Learned men, especially with Calvin, who gave him such Books as he had printed. From Geneva he went into France, to Lyons, Orleance, and Paris, where he perfected his skill in Hebrew under the Learned Mercerius. In his return he went to Zurick, where he acquainted himself with the Learned men, and so to Tubing, Ulme, Norrinberg, and from thence to his old Master Melancthon. His travels.

Anno Christi 1558. he was sent for by the Senate of Uratislave (which was his Native place) to govern the School in that City, where, besides his Lectures in the Arts and Tongues, he was employed in the Explication of Melancthons Book Of the Ordination of Ministers; Upon which occasion he declared his Judgement about the Sacrament, and thereupon he was cryed out against for a Sacramentarian. This caused him to give a Publick account of his Faith about the Doctrine of the Sacraments, in certain strong, and accurate propositions. Melancthon hearing of the Opposition which he met with, wrote to him to stand firmly to the Truth, and if he enjoyed not Peace in that place, to return to him again; and to reserve himself for better times. And accordingly Ursin, who Naturely abhorred brawls, and in his Judgment could not endure Ecclesiastical Contentions, chose rather to leave the place, and therefore requested of the Senate that he might be dismissed, and obtained his desire, upon condition, that whensoever his Country and the Church there had need of him, he should be willing to return home to them again. This fell out seven days after the death of Melancthon, Anno Christi 1560. He is sent for into his own Country. His Enemies. Melancthon encourages him. He is dismissed.

Ursin had a Reverend man to his Unckle, called Albert Roth, who asked him whither he would goe? To whom he answered thus, Truly I doe not goe unwillingly out of my own Country, seeing they will not admit of my Confession of the Truth, which with a good Conscience I could not omit. And if my worthy Master Melancthon were now living, I would goe to none but him: But since he is dead, I will goe to Zurick; which though it be not esteemed here, yet in other Churches it is very Famous; for there are such Godly, Learned, and Eminent men, that they cannot be obscured by our Preachers, and with them (through Gods Mercy) I hope to live with much comfort. His Resolution.

And thus he left his Country, to the great grief of the Godly, whom he had instructed and confirmed in the Orthodox Truth. From Uratislavia he went to Wittenberg, where he was received by the Professors with great joy, and who would have chosen him into their number; but he refused, and so went to Zurick, Anno Christi 1560, being invited thither by Martyr, Bullinger, Simler, Lavater, Gualter, Gesner, and Frisius, who much desired his company, and wrote for him. With these worthy men he lived pleasantly, and comfortably, addicting himself to the profit of the Church, and being a diligent attender upon Peter Martyrs Lectures whereby he much encreased his knowledge in Divinity. He goes to Zurick.

Anno Christi 1561. there came Letters to Zurick from Thomas Erastus, signifying that there wanted a Divinity Professor at Heidleberg, and that they desired supply from thence: Whereupon the afore-named Divines, knowing Ursines fitnesse, presently sent him with their Letters of Ample Commendation both to the Elector Palatine, and to the University: Where he was made Governour of the Colledge of Sapience, and by his Diligence, Faithfulness, and Ability, got such credit, that at twenty eight years of Age they graced him with the Title of a Doctor in Divinity, & so he supplyed the place of publick Professor to the year 1568, at which time Zanchy succeeded him. He goes to Heidleberg. He Commenced Doctor.

He had for his Colleagues Peter Boquin, and Immanuel Tremelius; The latter Professor of the Old Testament, and the former of the New. Five years Ursin continued reading upon his Common-Places, and certainly if he had finished it, it had been exceeding usefull to the Church. And besides his Ordinary Lectures both in the University and Colledge, the Godly Prince Otho Frederick, seeing several Ministers using several Catechisms to the prejudice of the Church, he employed Ursin in the Writing a Catechism for the Palatinate; which might be of general use, and accordingly he did to the great satisfaction of all. His imployment there.

A Plague.

Anno Chriſti 1563. there brake forth a grievous Peſtilence, that ſcattered both the Court and the Univerſity; yet Urſin remained at home, and wrote his Tractates of Mortality, and Chriſtian Conſolations, for the Benefit of God's people.

Hir Adverſaries.

The ſame year, preſently after Urſins Cathechiſm was printed, Flacius Illiricus, Heſhuſius, and ſome others, began to quarrel at ſome Paſſages in it about the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, his Preſence in the Sacrament, &c. As alſo to Traduce the Reformation carryed on in the Palatinate; But at the command of the Palatine, Urſin did excellently juſtifie his Catechiſm, and defended the Truth, to the great ſatisfaction of all that read it.

He defends the Truth.

Anno Chriſti 1564. he was ſent by the Elector to Malbrun to diſpute with Brentius and Smidlin about the Ubiquity of Chriſt's Body, which he confuted with ſuch clear and ſtrong Arguments, as that many both Papiſts and Lutherans were converted thereby.

The Palatines great love to him.

He was ſo dear to the Elector Palatine, that when the Bernates, Anno Chriſti 1578. ſent Aretius to Heidleberg, to crave leave that Urſine might goe to Lauſanna to be the Divinity Profeſſor there, he would by no means part with him, but for his eaſe and encouragement to ſtay, gave him leave to chooſe an Aſſiſtant, that ſo his Body might not be worne out with his daily ad exceſſive labours.

His Marriage.

Anno Chr. 1572. he married a Wife, by whom he had one ſon, that was afterwards a Miniſter, and inherited his Fathers virtues.

He writes a Confeſſion of Faith.

Anno Chriſti 1574. at the command of the Elector Frederick, he made a Confeſſion of Faith about God, the Perſon of Chriſt, and the Supper of the Lord, which was to ſtop the mouths of ſome mlicious wicked men, who had ſcattered abroad, that in Heidleberg they had ſowed the Seeds of Arianiſm, from which error both the Elector, and the Church under him were moſt free.

A change in the Palatinate.

In theſe employments was Urſin buſied, and both Religion and Learning proſpered exceedingly under him, ſo that he ſent forth many excellent Men, who proved admirable Inſtruments of God's Glory, and the Churches Good; And this continued till the year 1577. at which time it pleaſed God to take away that excellent Prince Frederick, whereupon enſued that unhappy change, when none were ſuffered to ſtay in the Palatinate except they held the Opinions of Luther in all things. So that Urſin, with his Colleague Kimedontius, where forced to leave the Univerſity. But he could not live a private life long, for he was ſent for by Prince John Caſſimire, ſon to Frederick, who knew how uſeful and profitable he would be, both to himſelf, and the Churches under him.

He is ſent for by Pr. Caſimire.

His Imployment.

About the ſame time alſo the Senate of Bern ſent importunately for him to ſucceed Aretius, or Baſil Barquard in their Univerſity. He was alſo earneſtly ſolicited by Muſculus, Gualter, Lavater, and Hortinus to accept of this call; But Prince Caſſimire would by no means part with him, having Erected a Univerſity at Newſtad, and choſen Urſin and Zanchy to be the Divinity Profeſſors thereof. Whilſt he was thus employed, by his exceſſive ſtudyes, and neglect of Exerciſe, he fell into a ſickneſs which held him above a year together. After which he returned to his Labours again, and beſides his Divinity Lectures, read Logick in the Schools: Deſiring his Auditors to give him what doubts and Objections they met with, which upon ſtudy at his next Lecture he returned anſwers to. But this continuall Watchings, Care, Meditations, and Writings, caſt him into a Conſumption, and other Diſeaſes, yet would he not be perſwaded to intermit his Imployments, till at laſt he was confined to his Bed: Yet therein alſo he was never Idle, but always dictating ſomething, that might conduce to the publick good of the Church.

His Sickneſſe.
His Induſtry.
Inceſſant Labours.
His Death.

The hour of death being come, his Friends ſtanding by, he quietly ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1583. and of his Age fifty one.

His Character.

He was very pious, and grave in his carriage, and one that ſought not after great things in this world, refuſing many gifts from Princes, and himſelf was liberal according to his ability. He was always like himſelf, very ſparing of time, as appeared by theſe verſes ſet over his ſtudy door.

His Works.

He wrote Commentarium de mortalitate, & conſolationibus Chriſtianis. Admonitionem Neuſtadianam: Epigrammata ad Jo. Friſium. After his death his Son, and Dr. Pareus, and Quirinus, his Scholars, publiſhed divers other of his Works, which are printed in three Tomes.

The Life of Abraham Bucholtzer, who died Anno Chriſti 1584.

His Birth and Education.

Abraham Bucholtzer was born at Schovavium, of a very Ancient and honourable Family, Anno Chriſti 1529. and from his Infancy was brought up by his Parents in Religion and Learning. When he was firſt ſet forth to School, he profited to Admiration, outſtripping all his School-Fellows by his Acute Wit and Induſtry.

He goes to Wittenberg.

And being well principled at School, he went to the Univerſities, firſt to Franckfurt, then of Wittenberg: Accounting it his great happineſs, that he was born after the Light of the Goſpel brake forth, and bred up under Melanchthon, upon whoſe Lectures he attended diligently, and ſucked in from him not only the Principles of Learning, but of Religion alſo.

He was exceeding induſtrious in ſeeking Learning, attent in hearing Lectures, diligent and ſwift in writing what was ſpoken by Melanchthon.

About that time there ſprang up many Errors, and much Contention was raiſed in the Church of God about things Indifferent, the Neceſſity of Good Works, Eſſentiall Righteouſneſſe, &c. But by the help of Melanchthon, he was able both to diſcover and confute them. There alſo he ſtudyed Greek and Hebrew.

His Travels.

When he was ſix and twenty years of Age (being now well grounded in the knowledge of the Arts and Tongues) he went from thence into Sileſia to viſit his Friends, and to ſee the chiefeſt Cities; and whilſt he was there, the Senate of Grunberg conſulted about the Erecting of a School in that City, and for the Advancement of the ſame, they choſe Bucholtzer to be the Maſter thereof, and ſent to him by Luke Cunon, who was their Paſtor, deſiring him to undertake that Office.

He goes to Grunberg.

Hereupon he asked Melanchthons advice, who much encouraged him to accept of the place, ſaying, Quantum ſolatium eſt pio pædagogo, aſſidentibus caſtis angelis, ſedere in cœtu inconſtaminato juniorum qui Deo placent, & docere tenera ingenia ut rectè agnoſcant, & invocent Deum, ut deinde organa fiant utilia Eccleſiæ, & ſuis animabus? Upon this advice therefore he went thither, Anno Chriſti 1556. and by his excellent Abilities & diligence quickly made that place (which before was obſcure) to become famous: Scholars reſorting to him from all parts, whom he bred up both in Religion, and Learning, and fitted them ſo excellently for the Univerſitie, that Melanchthon never queſtioned any that came from his School, ſaying, Hoc ſe perſuaſum ſibi habere, rudes & impolitos eſſe non poſſe, qui à politiſſimi judicii homine

He made excellent Scholars.

Abrahamo

Abrahamo Bucholtzero essent informati: That he was verily perswaded that they could not be Rude, or unfitted for the University that came from under the Tuition of Abraham Bucholtzer, who himself was a Man of so Polite a Judgement.

His marriage

Anno Christi 1557, he marryed a Wife, who proved a great comfort to him, and by whom he had many Children, whom he tendered exceedingly, and Educated them in the fear of G O D from their very Infancy: He grew so famous all over Silesia, that many desired to have him for their Pastor: And at last Sprottavia enjoyed him, where he continued, doing much good, till Anno Christi 1573; At which time Katherine, the Relict of Henry Duke of Brunswick, sent for him to her Court, to whom he went, partly by reason of his great engagements to that Family, but especially because he enjoyed not his health in Sprottavia.

He is chosen Pastor of Sprottavia.

The year after this pious Lady dyed; and then he was called to Eleutheropolis by Euphemia, the Wife of Sir Fabian Belloquert: He preached there in the great Church, to which the Citizens flocked exceedingly, insomuch as when that pious and illustrious Ernest, Prince of Anhalt, sent for him, and profered him an honourable stipend, he refused to leave his place.

Preachers pattern.

He had an excellent sweetness and dexterity in Preaching, was of a sound Judgement and Holy Life: His Sermons were so piercing, that he never preached, but he wrought wonderfully upon the Affections of his Hearers. If any were cast down under the sence of Sin, and Wrath, he exceedingly comforted them. If any were troubled with Temptations and Afflictions, he raised them up, &c. He had a lively Voice, lively Eye, lively Hand, and such were all his Gestures. His Ministry was so gratefull, that his Hearers were never weary, or thought his Sermons too long.

His Contentation.

He was full of Self-Denyall, insomuch as that excellent Lady, Katherine of Brandenburg used to say, That whereas all the rest of her Courtiers and Family were always craving something of her, Bucholtzer on the contrary never asked her for the worth of a Farthing; Yea, that he refused gifts when they were profered to him, preferring kindness before the Gift, and the Fruit of his Ministry before the reward of it.

His humility.

He was so Humble, that when his Friends blamed him for living in so obscure a place whilst he Taught School, he told them that he preferred it before a Kingdome. He could never endure to hear himself Commended; and if his Friends in their Letters had written any thing to his praise, he could not read it with Patience; Sed terreri se laudationibus illis tanquam fulminibus dicebat, qui nihil in se magni videret, &c. His Candor was such, that he never spake or wrote any thing but from his Heart. He never read, or heard any thing from others, but he made a candid Construction of it. His care in his publick Ministry was to avoid those Questions that doe but gender unto strife, and to instruct his Auditors how to live well, and die well. Some blamed him of Cowardise, for that being Endowed by God with such excellent abilities, yet would he never enter into the Lists with the Frantick Adversaries of those times: But the true reason was, because he always affected Peace, having no delight in wrangling, which caused him to say to a Friend Desii disputare, cœpi supputare: quoniam illud dissipationem, hoc collectionem significat. Besides, he saw that the greatest Antagonists to the Churches Peace, had not so much as one spark of Grace in them: & that there came no profit, but much hurt to the Church of Christ by those continual quarrels amongst Divines.

His excellent virtues.

He is an enemy to contentions.

He is a great Historian.

He spent his spare Hours in reading Ecclesiasticall, and Prophane Histories; and profited so much thereby, that one affirmed in writing, Universam antiquitatem in Bucholtzery pectusculo latuisse reconditam; that all Antiquity lay hid in his Breast. He finding some great Errors in Funccius his Chronology, set himself to write one, which with indefatigable Pains he brought to perfection. Whilst he thus publickly, and privately busied himself, he fell into a grievous Disease; and just about the same time he lost his faithfull, and beloved Yoak-fellow, that was the Mother of nine Children; But upon his recovery he marryed another, with whom he lived not long before the Lord put an end to all his labours, and sorrows, Anno Christi 1584. and of his Age fifty five. His death.

He used often to meditate upon Death, and writing to a Friend in his old Age, he had this Expression, It hath always formerly been my care in what corner soever I have been, to be ready when God called, to say with Abraham, Behold my Lord here I am: But now above all other things I should be most willing so to answer, if he would please to call me out of this Miserable Life into his Glorious Kingdome; For truly I desire nothing so much, as the happy and blessed hour of death, &c. His great care to prepare for death.

He made his own Epitaph to be set upon his Tomb, which was this:

Hic pie Christe, tuo recubat quæsita cruore,
Inq; tuo gremio parvula dormit ovis.
Reddidit hæc animam balanti voce fidelem:
Huic Pastor dicas, intret ovile meum.

In his sickness he caused himself to be carryed to Church, where he preached his last Sermon, about the blessed departure of a Faithfull man out of this Life; which he performed with such excellent words, and Soul-ravishing affections, that the Auditors said, Bucholtzer had wont to exceed our other Preachers, but now he hath exceeded himself. His last Sermon.

He wrote Chronologicam Isagogen. Indicem Chronologicum, quem Sultetus auxit. Catalogum Consulum Romanorum, & alia opuscula. Item de consolatione decumbentium. De idea boni Pastoris. De concionibus Funebribus His Works

M. CHEMNICIVS

The Life of Martin Chemnitius, who dyed Anno Christi 1586.

His Birth and Parentage.

Martin Chemnitius was born at Britza in Old March, Anno Christi 1522. of honeſt, but mean Parents, ſo that his Father being Poor, he met with many impediments to diſcourage, and hinder him in Learning, yet bearing a great Love to it, by his exceeding Induſtry he overcame all Difficulties, and after ſome progreſs at home, he went to Magdeburg, where he ſtudyed the Tongues, and Arts. And from thence to Frankfurt upon Oder, where he ſtudyed Philoſophy under his Kinſman George Sabine, and after he had ſpent ſome time there, he went to Wittenberg, where he proſecuted his former ſtudies, together with the Mathamaticks, under Melanchthon, and other Profeſſors.

His induſtry.

He goes to Wittenberg.

From thence he went to Sabinum in Boruſſia, where he Taught School, and Commenced Maſter of Arts, and Anno Chriſti 1552. he was made the Princes Library-Keeper, and had a Competent Subſiſtence in the Court. At that time he wholly applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity. By reaſon of his knowledge and skill in the Mathematicks and Aſtronomy, he was very dear to the Duke of Boruſſia, and for the ſame cauſe John Marqueſſe of Brandenburg favoured him very much: Yea, by his modeſt and ſincere Carriage he procured much favour from the Courtiers.

He is much beloved.

Anno Chriſti 1555. Chemniſius being deſirous, after three years ſtudy in the Court, to return to the Univerſities for the perfecting of his ſtudies, was rewarded by Prince Albert with Ample Letters of Commendation, and ſo diſmiſſed. After which he went again to Wittenberg, where he ſojourned with Melanchthon, and was imployed by him Publickly to read Common-Places. From thence after a while he was ſent to Brunople in Saxony by the Senate, and made Paſtor there; which place he diſcharged with ſingular fidelity and Approbation for the ſpace of thirty years, partly as Paſtor,

He is made Paſtor in Brunople.

ſtor, and partly as Superintendent, and Commenced Doctor in Divinity at Roſtock, ſerving the Church with great Faithfulneſs and Commendations both by Preaching and reading Lectures. Many Princes and Common-Wealths made uſe of his Advice and Aſſiſtance in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. He took great pains in aſſerting the Truth againſt the Adverſaries of it; as his excellent Examen of the Tridentine Councill ſhews. At laſt being worn out with Study, Writing, Preaching, &c. he reſigned up his Spirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1586. and of his Age ſixty three.

His zeal againſt Heticks.
His Death.

He is ſaid by one to be Philoſophus ſummus, Theologus profundiſſimus, neq; veritatis, bonarumq; artium ſtudio, neq; laude officii facile cuiquam ſecundus.

Rodolphus Gualter was born in Zurick Anno Chriſti 1519. When he firſt applyed his mind to the ſtudy of humane Arts, and Tongues, he had ſuch an happy wit, that he was inferiour to none of his fellows in Poetry and Oratory; and being afterwards admitted into the Univerſity, he became famous, firſt for his knowledge in the Arts, and afterwards of Divinity.

His Proficiency.

He was choſen Paſtor in that City where firſt he drew his vital breath; neither were they which choſe him deceived in their expectation; for he proved an admirable inſtrument of Gods glory, and their good, diſcharging his place with ſingular induſtry, diligence, and fidelity, not onely by his frequent publick preaching, but by his learned private writings, as his Homilies upon much of the Old; and New Teſtament do ſufficiently declare. And having governed, and fed that Church for above forty years together, he died in a good old age, Anno Chriſti 1586. and of his Life ſeventy four.

THE GAS. OLEVIAN.

The Life of Gaſpar Olevian, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1587.

Caſper Olevian was born in Trevir, Anno Chriſti 1536. His Fathers name was Gerhard, a Baker in that City, and Maſter of his Company; But this Gaſper was carefully brought up in learning by his Grand-father, who ſet him to ſeveral Schooles in that City, and at thirteen years old he was ſent to Paris to ſtudy the Civill Law; from thence alſo he went to the Univerſities of Orleance and Biturg, where he heard the moſt famous Lawyers of thoſe times. His Birth and Education. He ſtudies Law.

He joyned himſelf alſo to the Congregation of Proteſtants which met privately together in both thoſe Cities. In Biturg he was admitted into the Order of Lawyers, after the ſolemn manner of the Univerſity, being made Doctor Anno Chriſti 1557. About which time there ſtudyed in that Univerſity, under Nicholas Fudex, the young Prince Palatine, ſon to Frederick the third, afterwards Elector: And Olevian being very intimate with Fudex, went one day after dinner to the River Lieg hard by the City, together with him, and the young Prince; and when they came thither, they found ſome young Noble Germans that were ſtudents there, going into a boat, who deſired the Prince and his Tutor to goe over the River with them: But Olevian perceiving that they had drunk too freely, diſſwaded them from venturing themſelves amongſt them; which counſel the Prince and his Tutor neglecting, went into the boat, and putting from the bank, the drunken young men began ſo to thruſt and juſtle one another, that at laſt they overthrew the boat, where they were all drowned. But Fudex being skilfull in ſwimming, caught the young Prince, hoping to ſave him, but being unable to draw him with him, they both ſunk. He is made Doctor. A heavy judgement.

Olevian ſtanding on the bank, and ſeeing this ſad ſpectacle, leapt into the water to try if he could help them; but at firſt he ſtuck in the mud and water up to the chin, where he deſpaired of his own life. In that danger he prayed unto God, and vowed, that if God would deliver him, he would preach the Goſpel to his own Citizens, if A Vow he ſhould be called thereunto. At which time it pleaſed God, that a footman of one of the Noblemens, coming to the River ſide, and ſeeing Olevian, caught him by the head (thinking that it had been his own Maſter) and drew him out: whereupon Olevian being delivered by ſuch a ſpecial Providence, together with the Law, ſtudied Divinity, reading over the Sacred Scriptures, with Calvins Commentaries upon them.

Gods mercy.

He ſtudies Divinity.

After a while returning to Trevir, he was reteined to plead cauſes at Law; but ſeeing the great deceit in that calling; and the frequent perverting of Juſtice, he gave it over; and that he might performe his Vow, wholly ſet himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity; and went to Geneva, and after to Zurick, where he ſojourned with Bullinger, and was much holpen by Martyr and Bullinger in his ſtudies, before whom alſo he uſed privately to preach for his exerciſe.

He goes to Zurick.

But before this, as he was going to Geneva, taking ſhip at Lauſanna, Mr. Farrel hapned to be with him in the ſhip, who in diſcourſe asked him, Whether ever he had preached in his own Country? Olevian told him that he had not; then did Mr. Farrel perſwade him to doe it ſo ſoon as he could; and he accordingly promiſed that he would.

Whilſt he was buſying himſelf in his ſtudies at Geneva, the Church of Metis wanting a Miniſter, applied themſelves to the Presbytery of Geneva for a ſupply. The Presbytery nominated two, Olevian and Peter Colonius: But Olevian excuſed himſelf, partly becauſe he had engaged himſelf by vow to the ſervice of the Church in his own Country, and partly becauſe he had faithfully promiſed Farrel to do the ſame. Mr. Calvin was ſatisfied with this anſwer, exhorting him to perform what he had thus reſolved on. Therefore Anno Chriſti 1559. he returned to Trevir, where he was exceeding kindly entertained by the Senators, his kinſmen, friends, and by his brother Frederick a Doctor of Phyſick: and the Conſul and Senators preſently requeſted him to undertake the work of teaching a School in that City, and for his encouragement allowed him a ſtipend. Accordingly he applyed himſelf to explicating the precepts of Melanchons Logick, illuſtrated by many Theological examples, whereby he got opportunity of opening the ſound doctrine of the Goſpel to his Hearers: Which as ſoon as the Canons heard of, they firſt ſuſpended him from the Office of teaching, and afterwards ſhut up the School againſt him.

His return to Trevir.

He is called to teach a School.

His Faithfulneſs.

Satans malice.

Then the Senate appointed him to preach in an Hoſpital, where after he had preached a while, his Adverſaries ſuborned a Prieſt to ſtep up into the Pulpit before him; but as ſoon as the people ſaw the Prieſt, they called to him to come down, for that they would not hear him. Olevian deſired them to hear him, promiſing that ſo ſoon as he had done his Sermon, he would preach himſelf: yet they would not endure it; but made a great ſtir, ſo that the poor Prieſt thought that he ſhould have been pulled in pieces by them: But Olevian comforted him, and entreating the people to be quiet, took the Prieſt by the hand, and led him forth ſafely; and going into the Pulpit himſelf, he asked the Auditory, whether for fear of further danger they would have him to intermit that Sermon, or whether he ſhould go forward according to his former courſe? The people lifting up their hands, cryed to him, Yea, yea, We deſire thee for Gods ſake to preach unto us.

He preaches in an Hoſpitall.

The peoples Zeal.

For this cauſe the Arch-Biſhop of Trevir impriſoned the two Conſuls, and eight more of the Senators for ten weeks ſpace, who deſired Olevian to come to them to inſtruct and comfort them, which accordingly he did. Then were they commanded to appear in judgment, where their charge conſiſted of many heads; whereupon they requeſted fourteen days time to put in their anſwer, but that was denyed, and onely two days aſſigned. In which time they ſent privily to Frederick Elector Palatine, to Wolphgang Duke of Bipont, and to the Senate of Strasborough, acquainting them with their caſe, and entreating their ſeaſonable aſſiſtance.

The Arch-biſhops malice.

They therefore immeadiately ſent poſt to forbid the further proceedings at Law; and at laſt obtained that they were all ſet at liberty. And the Ambaſſadors for the Palatine invited Olevian to goe along with them, and accordingly took him to Heidleberg, Anno Chriſti 1560. As ſoon as he came thither, the Elector made him Maſter of the Colledge of Sapience, which he underwent for about a year and a half.

About this time he married a Wife, and commenced Doctor in Divinity, and was made Profeſſor of Divinity in that Univerſity. Alſo at the importunity of the Counſellors of State, he was choſen to the work of the Miniſtry, firſt in Peters Church, and afterwards in the Church of the Holy Ghoſt; which places he carefully and holily diſcharged, till the death of the Elector Frederick the third, which was Anno Chriſti 1576. A few days after whoſe death he was called to Berleburg by Lodowick Count Witgenſtein, where he preached, and inſtructed ſome Noblemens ſons in the principles of Divinity, and in the Arts and Tongues.

His Marriage.

He is choſen Paſtor.

He is called to Berleburg. And to Herborn.

Anno Chriſti 1584. he was called by John of Naſſaw to Herborn, where he preached and taught a School three years, which was erected by the perſwaſion and counſel of Olevian.

Anno Chriſti 1587. he fell into a mortal ſickneſs, which (notwithſtanding all meanes of cure) daily grew upon him, and ſo weakned him, that at laſt he quietly reſigned up his ſpirit unto God.

His Sickneſſe.

In his ſickneſs he made his Will, and by pious and holy meditations prepared himſelf for death. Being viſited by Lodowick Witgenſtein, and John of Naſſaw, he told them, That by that ſickneſs he had learned to know the greatneſs of ſin, and the greatneſſe of Gods Majeſty more than ever he did before. And a while after, when the Counts two ſons, John and George came to viſit him, he exhorted them carefully to preſerve brotherly love, to carry on and perfect the buſineſs about the School, to be liberal and merciful to the poor, and obedient to their Father.

Preparation for Death.

The next day John Piſcator coming to viſit him, he told him, That the day before, for four hours together he was filled with ineffable joy, ſo that he wondred why his wife ſhould ask him whether he were not ſomething better, whereas indeed he could never be better: For (ſaid he) I thought that I was in a moſt pleaſant meddow, in which as I walked up and down, me thought that I was beſprinkled with a heavenly dew, and that not ſparingly, but plentifully poured down, whereby both my body and ſoul were filled with ineffable joy: To whom Piſcator ſaid, That good Shepherd Jeſus Chriſt led thee into freſh paſtures. Yea, ſaid Olevian, to the ſprings of living waters. Afterwards having repeated ſome ſentences full of comfort out of Pſalm 42. Iſa. 9. and Matth. 11 and other places of Scripture; he often repeated, I would not have my journey to God long deferred; I deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with my Chriſt. He commended to the Senate the care of the poor by his Deacon James Alſtede; giving directions what he would have done with his writings after his death. And then he gave his hand and farewel to his Colleagues, and friends; and when he was in the Agony of death, Alſtedius asking him, whether he was ſure of his ſalvation in Chriſt, &c. He anſwered, Moſt ſure; and ſo he gave up the Ghoſt, Anno Chriſti 1587. and of his Age 51.

THE

The Life of John VVigandus, who died Anno Christi 1587.

His Birth and Education.

John Wigandus was born in Mansfield, Anno Christi 1523. of honest parents, of a middle rank, who carefully brought him up in Learning, which naturally he was much addicted unto; having an excellent Wit, and firm Memory; so that having profited much at School, he went to the University of Wittenberg, where he continued about three years; which time he spent in the study of the Arts and Tongues, which night and day he imployed himself in. In that place he had excellent and faithfull Masters, who were Professors of all the Arts. And for Divinity he attended the Lectures of Luther, heard his Disputations and Sermons, as also Melanthons, who was both an excellent Divine and Philosopher. He contracted friendship with Cruciger; Heard the Sermons of John Jonas; attended the Greek Lectures of Doctor Vitus. He had for his private Instructor John Marcellus, a godly, and learned man. He frequented also the Lectures of Law and Physick.

He goes to Wittenberg.

His diligence.

He goes to Norenberg.

Anno Christi 1541. by the advice of his Tutors and friends, he went to Norinberg, where he was made Master of Saint Laurences School, and for three yeares exercised himself with much diligence in instructing youth, in which time he heard the excellent Sermons of Andreas Osiander, Vitus, Theodorus, and Thomas Venatorius, very learned, and eloquent Divines. But having an earnest desire to perfect his own studies, he returned to Wittenberg again, Luther being yet living.

His return to Wittenberg.

He is called to Mansfield.

He is ordained Minister.

There he commenced Master of Arts before he was two-and twenty years old, and applyed himself wholly to the study of Divinity: But the Wars waxing hot, the Emperour placed a Garrison in the Castle and Town of Wittenberg, and the students were driven away from thence. At which time Wigand was called to Mansfield (his own country) to be an assistant to their ancient Pastor, Martin Seligman, where also he was ordained Minister with Prayer, and imposition of hands, by John Spangenberg the Superintendent; which was the first Ordination in that place after the banishing of Popery, and their embracing the truth of the Gospel. That Function he discharged with much fidelity and industry; and knowing the Schooles to be the Seminaries, both of the Church and State, he read Logick and Philosophy to the youth. During which time, at the request of the Superintendent Spangenberg, he wrote a Confutation of the Popish Catechism of Mentz, written by Michael Sidonius, which Answer was afterwards printed in Latine and Dutch.

He answers a Papist.

His great pains.

He delights in a Garden

He wrote also a Confutation of George Major, who held, that a man by Faith only is justified, but not saved, &c. He delighted exceedingly in a Garden, and in observing the wisdome of God in the nature, shape, and various colours of hearbs and flowers, for which end he gat the greatest variety of them that possibly he could into his Garden. He was one of those that stronglyopposed the Interim.

His remove to Madgeburg.

Conversion of Priests.

The authors of the Madgeburgenses.

Anno Christi 1553. he was chosen by them of Madgeburg to be their Superintendent, but the Earl of Mansfield and the people, strongly opposed his remove from them; yet at last, by the means of the Prince of Anhalt, they consented unto it. At Madgeburg he took excessive pains in reading, writing, meditating and preaching, whereby he converted many Popish Priests in those parts to the Truth. He also took great pains in writing the Madgeburgenses Centuries, which he, together with Matthew Judex, Flacius Illiricus, Basil Faber, Andrew Corvinus, and Thomas Holthuterus, finished, to the great benefit of the Church: Of which Book Sturmius gave this Testimony, that it was necessary, and profitable, and had these four virtues in it, viz. veritatem, diligentiam, ordinem, perspicuitatem: Truth, Diligence, Order, and Perspicuity.

His remove to Jenes.

Anno Christi 1560. the Elector of Saxonie having begun a University at Jenes, sent earnestly to Wigand to come thither to be the Divinity-Professor, which for weighty ty reaſons he aſſented unto, and performed that office with much acceptance of all that heard him; yet by the ſubtility and malice of one Stoſſelius he was diſmiſſed from that place, and ſo returned to Madgeburg again: But not ſtaying there, he was choſen to be the Superintendent at Wiſmare, Anno Chriſti 1562. where he imployed himſelf wholly in preaching, diſputing, expounding Scripture, and governing the Church. His return to Magdeburg.

Anno Chriſti 1563. he Commenced Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Roſtoch. He ſtayed at Wiſmare ſeven years, at the end whereof, John William, Duke of Saxony, ſent for him again to Jenes; But the Duke of Megapole would by no means part with him; yet at laſt, after ſeverall Embaſſies, the Duke of Saxony prevailed that he ſhould come for one year to Jenes: His people parted with him very unwillingly, with many ſighs and tears, and at the years end ſent for him back again, but could by no means obtain his return. He was not only made the Profeſſor of Divinity at Jenes, but the Superintendent alſo His remove to Wiſmare. He commenceth Doctor. Peoples love to their Paſtor.

Anno Chriſti 1570. he went with his Prince to the Diet at Spire, and at his return to Jenes was received with great joy: But after five years Duke John William dying, he was again driven from thence, and went to the Duke of Brunſwick, who entertained him kindly: But preſently after he was called into Boruſſia, to be the Divinity-Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Regiomontanum, and after two years was choſen to be Biſhop there. He is called into Boruſſia.

Anno Chriſti 1587. he fell ſick, eſpecially upon grief, conceived for the afflicted condition of the Church in Poland, and the death of his dear friend John Wedman, an excellent Divine. This diſeaſe encreaſing, and his ſtrength decaying, he prepared himſelf for death. He made his own Epitaph. His Sickneſſe. Preparation for Death.

Do ſordes morti: cætera, Chriſte, tibi.

In Chriſt I liv'd, and dy'd, through him I live again:

And ſo in the midſt of fervent prayers, and aſſured hope of eternal life, he reſigned up his ſpirit into the hands of God that gave it, Anno Chriſti 1587. and of his Age ſixty four. His Dsath.

He was a man of an excellent wit and learning; and exemplary in his life. Familiar; gently anſwering to every ones queſtion: He was very courteous, and grave; Liberal to the poor; inſomuch as when he was Biſhop, and the poor begged of him either money or corn, he would command his Steward to give them as much as they needed. I. FOX

The Life of John Fox, who dyed Anno Christi 1587.

His Birth.

John Fox was born at Boston in Lincolnshire, Anno Christi 1517. His Father died when he was young, and his Mother Married again: Yet his Father in Law & Mother seeing his towardlines and aptnes to Learning, brought him up at School, and afterwards sent him to Brasen-Nose Colledge in Oxford, where he was Chamber-fellow with Doctor Nowell; and being of a sharp wit, and very industrious withall, he profited so much, that in a short time he gat the admiration of all, and the love of many, whereupon he was chosen Fellow of Magdalen Colledge.

His Education.

He is chosen Fellow.

He much affected Poetry, and wrote some Latine Comedies of the Histories of the Bible in a copious and gracefull stile in his youth: But afterwards betook himself more seriously to the study of Divinity, and discovered himself to favour the Reformation then in hand, when King Henry the eighth abolished the Popes Supremacy.

The first thing that caused him to question the Popish Religion, was the contradictions in it, divers things, in their own natures most repugnant, being thrust upon men at one time, both of them to be believed: Hereupon he set himself to study the antient and moderne History of the Church, which he performed with such diligence, that before he was thirty years old, he had read over all that either the Greek or Latine Fathers had written of it: As also the Schoolmens Disputations, the Councils Acts, and the Consistories Decrees, and acquired no mean skill in the Hebrew tongue.

He studies the Church-History.

He is very Studious.

Besides his dayes study, he bestowed all, or a great part of the night in these labours, and many times in the dead of the night he chose a solitary Grove near the Colledge to walk in for his Meditations; and in them he suffered many combats and wrestlings, yea many heavy sighs, with teares, and prayers he poured out to Almighty God in them: But hereupon grew suspition of him that he began to dislike the Popish Religion, and snares were layd for him; and at last being examined, he was by the Colledge convicted, condemned for an Heretick, and expelled the house.

Snares laid for Him.

His

His Father-in-law alſo took this occaſion to manifeſt his diſlikes againſt him, that he might the better cheat him of his eſtate which of right belonged to him from his own Father. Being thus left deſtitute of all humane help and comfort, God took care for him, he being ſent for into Warwickſhire by Sir Thomas Lucie to live in his houſe, and teach his children: Where alſo he marryed a Wife, and continued till the fear of the Popiſh Inquiſitors drove him thence.

He is expelled the Colledge. Gods Providence.

His caſe was now more hard again, having a Wife to provide for, and whither to goe he knew not: At laſt he reſolved to goe to her Father, who was a Citizen of Coventry, and in the mean time by Letters, to try whether his Father-in-law, that married his mother, would receive him, or not: Whoſe anſwer was, That if he would alter his opinion (being condemned for a capital offence) he ſhould be welcome, otherwiſe it would be dangerous for him to entertain him long: But his Mother under-hand wrote to him to come; and ſo it pleaſed God that he found better entertainment and ſecurity in both places than he expected; for being ſometimes with his Wives father, and ſometimes with his Father-in-law, he deceived their diligence who enquired after him, and neither of his Fathers grew weary of his company.

His Marriage. An harſh Father in Law.

Afterwards he went to London towards the end of King Henry the eights reign; but having quickly ſpent there what his friends had beſtowed upon him, and what he had acquired by his own diligence, he began to be in want again. But behold Gods providence! As he one day ſate in Pauls Church, ſpent with long faſting, his countenance thin, and his eyes hollow, after the gaſtfull manner of dying men, every one ſhunning a ſpectacle of ſo much horrour, there came one to him whom he had never ſeen before, and thruſt an untold ſum of money into his hand, bidding him be of good chear, and to accept that ſmall gift in good part from his Country-man, which common courteſie had enforced him to offer, and that he ſhould goe and make much of himſelf; for that within a few daies new hopes were at hand, and a more certain condition of livelihood.

His Poverty. A ſpeciall Providence

Maſter Fox could never learn who this was, but three daies after the Dutcheſs of Richmond ſent for him to live in her houſe, and to be Tutor to the Earl of Surrey's children now under her care; and the two young Lords profited ſo much under him, that afterwards the elder [Thomas] ſeemed to deſerve more then the Kingdom could give him, and the younger [Henry] was able to meaſure his fortunes, not by the opinion of others, but by his own ſatiety: And the young Lady Jane profited ſo much both in Greek and Latine, that ſhe might well ſtand in competition with the moſt Learned men of that age.

He is ſent for by the Dutcheſs of Richmond.

In that family he continued the remainder of King Henries reign, and all King Edwards, till the beginning of Queen Maries: when a ſtorme of perſecution ariſing, Maſter Fox was ſheltered from it by the Duke, his Scholar. But when he ſaw all ſorts of men troubled for Religions ſake, ſo that there was nothing but flight, ſlaughter, and gibbets, and that Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter was his enemy, he began to think of ſome ſpeedy way for his departure thence; which ſo ſoon as the Duke knew, he diſſwaded him from it, affirming that it was neither agreeable to honour, nor modeſty for him to ſuffer his Tutor, ſo well deſerving at his hands, to be taken from him. He told him, that in flying, no kind of miſery would be wanting; Baniſhment, Poverty, Contempt, &c. and that though theſe were leſs evils then death, yet was it not come to ſuch extremity, neither would he ſuffer that it ſhould, ſaying, That he had yet wealth, and favour, and friends, and the fortune of his Houſe; and if the miſchance, prevailed further, that himſelf would partake of the danger, and make the deſtruction common: That he remembred with what inſtructions he had fortified his younger years; neither had he with more attention hearkened thereto, then he would with conſtancy put them in practiſe.

Perſecution in Queen Maries Daies. A notable Reſolution.

Yet when the Duke afterward perceived that he could no longer ſhelter him from the malice of Wincheſter, he provided all things neceſſary for his departure, ſending to Ipſwich to hire a Bark, and whilſt all things were making ready, he ſent him to a Farm-houſe of one of his ſervants, with his Wife, the companion of his travels, then great with child, who yet would not be perſwaded to ſtay behind him.

Stephen Gardiner. Flight in Perſecution

A great ſtorm. He had in this Bark ſcarce weighed Anchor, when ſuddenly a rough wind troubled the Sea with ſo great violence, that the ſtouteſt Mariners began to tremble; then followed a dark night, with ſuch hail, and raine, that hindred the Seamens work, and took away all poſſibility of ſteering any longer by the Compaſs: Yet the next day towards evening with much difficulty they arrived again in the ſame Haven from whence they ſet forth. Gods providence. In the mean time a Purſivant, with a warrant from the Biſhop of Wincheſter, had ſearched the Farm, and purſued him to Ipſwitch, but finding the Bark already gone, was returned towards London. This Maſter Fox being informed of as ſoon as he came to ſhoare, he preſently took horſe as if he would have left the towne, but the ſame night returning, he bargained with the Maſter of the Ship with the firſt winde to ſet ſayle againe, and the Pilot looſed in the nights ſilence, as ſoon as the tide turned, though the Sea was rough, and the winds bluſtring, and two dayes after (through the mercy of God) landed him ſafely at Newport Haven; and after ſome few dayes refreſhing himſelf at Newport, and thoſe that were with him, they went to Antwerp, and from thence to Baſil, which was a common refuge to many Engliſh in thoſe times, moſt of which maintained themſelves by over-ſeeing the Preſſe, and correcting faults therein.

He arrives at Newport

He goes to Baſil.

To theſe Maſter Fox joyned himſelf, and having in his youth been accuſtomed to hardſhip, he was able to ſuffer want, ſit up late, and to fare hardly: And during his abode there, notwithſtanding he was ſo full of imployment, yet he began his Hiſtory of the Acts and Monuments of the Church, which afterward he compleated in his own country: Firſt he wrote it in Latine, and ſent it to Baſil to be printed, where it was much eſteemed, and afterwards wrote it in Engliſh, to gratifie the unlearned.

A propheſie Not long after Queen Mary dyed, about which time Maſter Fox, preaching to comfort the Engliſh Exiles, did with confidence tell them, that now was the time come for their returne into England; and that he brought that news by command from God: For which words the graver Divines did ſharply reprove him for the preſent; but afterwards excuſed him by the event, when it appeared that Queen Mary died but the day before he ſo ſpake to them.

His return into England. Maſter Fox, underſtanding this happy news in England, that Queen Elizabeth reigned, Religion was altered, and ſo like to continue, in the end of that year he returned into England with his wife, and two children which were born there; and inſtead of ſeeking preferment by his great friends, and own deſerts, he lived retiredly in his ſtudy, proſecuting his work begun at Baſil of writing the Acts and Monuments. The Papiſts foreſeeing how much this work would tend to their diſparagement, and diſadvantage, charged the Author with falſhood, and feigned ſome cavils againſt him, to leſſen his credit and authority; which he, by heaping together teſtimonies for the confirmation of what he had writ, endeavoured to take away.

His humility.

His infatigable pains. His body weakned thereby. This elaborate work, with infinite pains, he finiſhed in Eleven years, never uſing the help of any other man, but wrote, and ſearched all the Records himſelf: But by theſe exceſſive pains, leaving no time free from ſtudy, nor affording to himſelf ſeaſonably, what nature required, he was brought to that paſſe, that his natural vigour being ſpent, neither his friends nor kindred could by ſight remember, or know him. Yea it cauſed in him withered leanneſſe of body, yet would he by no means be perſwaded to leſſen his accuſtomed labours.

His excellent endowments. From this time he was much ſpoken of for a good Hiſtorian; but ſhortly after his other excellent endowments began to appear. He was very charitable, and had an excellent ability in comforting afflicted conſciences, ſo that there reſorted to him Noblemen, Strangers, Citizens, and others alſo, ſeeking ſalves to their wounded conſciences. He preached often abroad, and went to viſit ſuch as could not come to him, and

His fervency in Prayer what ſpare time he had, he beſtowed in prayer, and ſtudy; and for his vehement prayers mingled with groanes, he made uſe of the nights ſilence for the greater ſecreſie.

There was in him a deliberate, and reſolved contempt of all earthly things, eſpecially of pleaſures, and for this end he declined the friendſhip of Illuſtrious and Noble persons: The money which rich men sometimes offered him, he accepted, but returned it back to the poor: Many things did he foretell by occasion of comforting the afflicted, or terrifying those that were stubborn. His charity His Prophesies.

The Lady Anne Henage lying sick of a violent Feaver, and the Physitians deeming it mortall, Master Fox was sent for to be present at her ending, and after by prayer, and instructions he had prepared her for death, he told her that she had done well in fitting her self for death, but that yet she should not dye of that sickness. A Knight, her son in law, being by, told him in private, that he had not done well to disquiet her minde with hopes of life, when the Physitians had given her up for dead, to whom he answered, That he said no more than was commanded him, for it seemed good to God that she should recover; which also came to passe.

Also Mistris Honywood, who had lain sick of a Consumption almost twenty years through Melancholy, to whom many excellent Physitians, and grave Divines had resorted to cure her body, and comfort her mind, but all in vain, at last Master Fox being sent for, when he came into her chamber, found a most sad house all about her sitting like Statues of mourning in humane likenesse: But after he had prayed with her, and therein endeavoured both to comfort her, and those about her, he told her that she should not onely recover of her disease, but also live to an exceeding great age: At which words, earnestly beholding him, she said, You might as well have said, that if I should throw this glass against the wall, I might believe it would not break to pieces: And having a Glasse in her hand, she threw it forth, the Glasse falling first upon a chest, and then upon the ground, yet neither brake, nor crackt: And the event fell out accordingly; For the Gentlewoman, being then sixty years of age, lived in much felicity till she was above ninety years old, and could reckon above three hundred and sixty of her children and childrens children. Mrs. Honywood. A Propheſie A Miracle.

Also, one day going to see the Earl of Arundel, son to the Duke of Norfolk, at his house in the Strand, when he was going away from him, the Earl walked with him to the end of his Garden, where he was to take Boat; But the River being very boysterous, the Earl counselled him not to trust himself in so great a tempest; to whom Master Fox answered, So (my Lord) let these waters deal with me, as I have in truth and sincerity delivered unto you all that I have spoken: And there withall entering into the boat, before they could put off from the Bridge, the wind ceased, and the river ran with a smooth stream. Another observable story.

He had many great friends to whom he was very dear, and of whose bounty he tasted liberally, whereby he was enabled to be so bountiful to the poor: He had much familiarity with many Learned, and Godly men. His many Friends.

At length having in such actions and such behaviours spent his time, being now full of years, he foresaw his own end, and would not suffer his sons to be present at his death, though he entirely loved them; but sending them from home, ere their return, he quietly resigned up his spirit to God, Anno Christi 1587. and of his age seventy. Death foreseen. His Death.

He never denyed to give to any one that asked for Jesus sake. And one asking him whither he knew a certain poor man whom he used to relieve, Yea (said he) I remember him well, and I tell you, I forget Lords and Ladies to remember such. His Charity

As he was going along London-streets, a woman of his acquaintance met him, and as they discoursed together, she pulled out a Bible, telling him, she was going to hear a Sermon; whereupon he said to her, if you will be advised by me, go home again: But (said she) when shall I then go to Church? To whom he answered, When you tell no body of it Vain glory Reproved.

One of his sons had a great mind to travel beyond Sea, which his Father could by no means dissuade him from: after some years travel he returned back in an out-landish habit; and coming to his Father, the old man asked him who he was? To whom he answered, Sir, I am your son Samuel: Whereupon he replyed, Oh my son, who hath taught thee to make thy self so ridiculous, by coming home in so strange and uncouth an habit? He reproves his Son.

The Life of George Sohnius, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1589.

His Birth & Education.

George Sohnius was born at Friburg in the Wetteraw, Anno Chriſti 1551. of honeſt Parents, and of good eſteem, who brought him up from his childhood in the knowledge of the principles of Divinity and Grammar, and afterwards ſet him to School in Fridberg, where he continued till he was well grounded in School-Learning, which he drank in with ſuch eagerneſs, that he ſoon outſtripped all his fellows; and ſo Anno Chriſti 1567. he was ſent to the Univerſity of Marpurg at fifteen years old: where he profited ſo exceedingly in Logick and Philoſophy, that he was made Batchelor of Arts at the years end.

He goes to Marpurg. His induſtry.

He goes to Wittenberg. He is Maſter of Arts.

And being exceeding deſirous to ſee other Countries, for the improving both of his learning and carriage, Anno Chriſti 1569. he went to Wittenberg, where he ſtudied Philoſophy, Law, and Divinity, with incredible pains night and day; ſo that at three years end, with the approbation of the whole Univerſity, he was made Maſter of Arts. He intended at firſt the ſtudy of Law; But it pleaſed God on a ſudden ſo to divert his heart from it, and to encline him to the ſtudy of Divinity, that he could have no reſt in himſelf till he had reſolved upon it; concerning which he thus writes to his Father.

Why he left the ſtudy of the Law. A ſpeciall providence.

What hath ſo ſoon altered my opinion, I ſhall briefly declare unto you, that you may know, and approve the reaſon thereof, and give thanks to God for his mercy to us. When upon the one and twentieth of July I was hearing Tuberus his Lecture of the Law, before half an hour was paſt, as I was writing what he ſpake, I fell into very ſerious cogitations: For on a ſudden the excellency, and Majeſty of Divinity came into my mind, which ſuddenly did ſo delight me, and began to ſtir up in my minde ſuch love to it, that I could not but reſolve to give over the Law, and wholly to apply my ſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity: And this thought did more and more ſink deeply into my mind, and was ſo urgent upon me, that I could no longer hearken to the Law-Lecture, neither could I write out what I had begun: So that I knew not what to doe: Yea theſe thoughts did ſo follow me, that I was not onely averſe to read any more Law, but I abhorred the thoughts of it. And thus, not knowing what to doe, I betook my ſelf with ſighs and teares unto God, intreating him to reſtore to me my former love to, and delight in the Law: But if not, that I was ready to follow his call in any thing. But ſo often as I returned to reading the Law, my heart did beat, my eyes abhorred the Letters, and neither was my minde or will any more delighted with that ſtudy: Whereupon, conſulting with two of my godly and loving Friends, they judged that I was called by God to the ſtudy of Divinity; and therefore giving thanks to God, I wholly applyed my ſelf thereto.

His return to Marpurg. He is made a Profeſſor.

Anno Chriſti 1571. he returned to Marpurg, and ſtudied Hebrew; and the year after he read the Arts to many Students privately, and became Tutor to three Noblemen. At twenty three years old he was ſo famous, that by the conſent of all the Divines of that Univerſity, he was choſen into the number, and order of Profeſſors of Divinity.

His marriage.

The year after he married a Wife, Chriſtian, daughter to Conrade Matthew, one of the Profeſſors, a choice Maid, by whom he had three ſons and two daughters. The ſame year alſo he was choſen the Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue in that Univerſity.

Anno

Anno Chriſti 1578. he was made Doctor in Divinity, and falling ſick not long after, he made an excellent Confeſſion of his Faith: But it pleaſed God that he recovered, and was not only a conſtant Preacher of the Truth, but a ſtrong Defender of it againſt errors, confuting the Ubiquitarians, and that ſo boldly, that he choſe rather to hazard baniſhment than to connive at errors. He is made Doctor. Preachers Pattern.

His fame ſpread abroad exceedingly, ſo that many ſought for him, eſpecially John of Naſſau, and John Caſſimire, the Elector Palatine. The firſt deſired him to come, and begin his Univerſity at Herborn, where he ſhould have had greater honour, & a larger ſtipend. The other deſired him to Heidleberg to be the Divinity-Profeſſor in that place: His anſwer was, that he was born rather for labours, than honours, and therefore choſe to go to Heidleberg, being thirty three years old, Anno Chriſti 1584. and was entertained lovingly by the Prince, who made him Governour of the Colledge of Sapience, and Profeſſor of Divinity. His humility. He goes to Heidleberg.

His coming was moſt grateful to the Univerſity, where he took exceeding great pains, and was eminent for piety, humility, gravity, prudence, patience, and induſtry; ſo that Anno Chriſti 1588. he was choſen into the number of the Eccleſiaſticall Senators for the government of the Church. He had great skill in the Tongues: Greater in the Liberall Arts and Philoſophy; But greateſt in the knowledge of Divinity, and Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory. He was famous for eloquence, faithfulneſs, and diligence in his place, and holineſs, and integrity in his life.

Anno Chriſti 1589. he fell ſick, for which, and his change, he had been carefully fitting himſelf before hand, and therefore bore it with much patience, and with fervent prayer often repeated, O Chriſt thou art my Redeemer, and I know that thou haſt redeemed me: I wholly depend upon thy providence and mercy; from the very bottom of my heart I commend my ſpirit into thy hands, and ſo he ſlept in the Lord Anno Chriſti 1589. and of his age 38. His ſickneſs. Preparation for death. His death.

He publiſhed not many Books, but thoſe which he did were very polite and choice ones; Ut ſunt de verbo Dei, & ejus tractatione lib. 2. After his death his works were publiſhed in three Tomes. Calvin preached his Funerall Sermon. His works.

The Life of Laurence Humfreid, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1589.

Laurence Humfreid was born in the County of Buckingham, and brought up, firſt at School, and then ſent to Oxford, where he was admitted into the Colledge of Mary Magdalen, and followed his ſtudies hard all the days of King Edward the ſixth. His birth & education.

But in the beginning of thoſe bloody Marian days, wherein ſo many were forced to forſake their native ſoyl, he (amongſt the reſt) went beyond Sea into Germany, where he continued till the beginning of Queen Elizabeths Reign, whom God raiſed up to be a Nurſing Mother to his Church At which time he came back, and returned to Oxford, where he was very famous both for his Learning and Preaching. Then alſo he commenced Doctor in Divinity, and by reaſon of his excellent parts was very inſtrumentall in the advancement of Gods glory. Flight in perſecution. His return to England.

And whereas that wicked Sect of the Jeſuits was lately riſen up, he, by his learned writings, did both from Scripture and Antiquity diſcover their impoſtures, and Popiſh deceits. Afterwards he was made the Maſter of Magdalen Colledge, and the Regius Profeſſor; which places he diſcharged with ſingular commendations for many years together, and at laſt quietly reſigned up his ſpirit into the hands of God, Anno Chriſti 1589. He confutes the Jeſuits. His death.

THE

The Life of James Andreas, who dyed Anno Christi 1590.

His birth & education. His parents poverty.

IAmes Andreas was born in Waibling in the Dukedome of Wirtemberg, Anno 1528. And when his Father had kept him three years at School (being unable to maintaine him any longer) he intended to have placed him with a Carpenter; But being disswaded by Sebastian Mader, the Consul, he sent him to Stutgard to Erhard Snepfius, who was Superintendent of the Wirtembergian Churches, intreating him to grant him an exhibition out of the Churches stock for the breeding of him at School.

Snepfius provides for him.

Snepfius examining the boy, who was now ten years old, found him of an excellent wit; but withall perceived that he had been neglected at School: whereupon he agreed to allow him part of his maintenance, and his Father to make up the rest, and so placed him in the School at Stutgard, under a choice Schoolmaster, with whom (in two years space) he learned the Latine and Greek Grammar and Rhetorick, and so Anno Christi 1541 he went to Tubing, where he so profited, that at the end of two years he was made Batchelor of Arts, and two years after that, Master of Arts. There also he studied Hebrew and Divinity.

He goes to Tubing.

He is made Deacon.

He preaches before the Duke.

His marriage.

And Anno Christi 1546. and of his age 18. he was made Deacon, and for trial, preached in the chief Church of Stutgard in a great Auditory, and did so well perform that work, that his fame spread abroad, and at last came to the ears of Ulrick Duke of Wirtemberg, who sent for him to Preach before him in his Castle, which he did with much applause; so that after Sermon, the Duke said, Whence soever this chicken came, I know that he was hatched and bred up under Snepfius. The same year at Tubing he married a Wife, by whom he had eighteen children, nine sons, and nine daughters.

Gods providence.

The accursed Interim.

About that time brake forth that fatall Warre betwixt Charles the fifth and the Protestant Princes, wherein the Emperour being Conquerour, he seised upon the Dukedom of Wirtemberg, by reason whereof the Church was in a sad condition, yet Andreas, with his Wife remained in Stutgard, and by Gods special providence was preserved in the midst of Spanish Souldiers, and yet preached constantly, and faithfully all the while. And so he continued till Anno Christi 1548. at which time that accursed Interim came forth, which brought so much mischief to the Church of God.

He is Deacon at Tubing.

Andreas, amongst other godly Ministers that opposed it, was driven from his place: Yet it pleased God that the year after he was chosen again to be Deacon at Tubing, where by Catechising he did very much good.

He commenceth Doctor.

He is made Superintendent.

Anno Christi 1550. Ulrick dying, his son Christopher suceeeded him in the government of Wirtemberg, and affected Andreas exceedingly, and would needs have him Commense Doctor; which degree (having performed all his exercises) he took the twenty fifth year of his age, and was chosen Pastor of the Church of Gompping, and was made Superintendant of those parts.

Note. Sacrilege abhorred.

About the same time he was sent for by Lodwick Count of Oeting to assist him in the reforming of the Churches within his jurisdiction, and when he took his leave of his own Prince Christopher, he charged him, and gave it him in writing, That if Count Lodwick set upon that Reformation, that under pretence of Religion he might robbe the Church, and seise upon the Revenues of the Monasteries, and turn them to his private use, that he should presently leave him, and come back again. He assisted also in the reformation of the Churches in Helfenstein, Anno Christi 1556.

A strange story of a Jew.

About that time, hearing of a Jew that for theft was hanged by the heels with his head downward in a village hard by, having not seen that kind of punishment, he went to the place, where he found him hanging between two Dogs, that were alwayes snatching at him, tearing and eating his flesh: The poor wretch repeated in Hebrew some verses of the Psalms, wherein he cried to God for mercy; whereupon

Andreas

Andreas went nearer to him, and inſtructed him in the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, about Chriſt the Meſſiah, &c. and exhorted him to believe in him; and it pleaſed God ſo to bleſſe his exhortation to him, that the Dogs gave over tearing of his fleſh, and the poor Jew deſired him to procure that he might be taken down and Baptiſed, and hung by the neck for the quicker diſpatch, which was done accordingly.

The ſame year Charles, Marqueſſe of Baden, began a Reformation of the Churches within his dominions, and to aſſiſt him therein he ſent for divers Divines, and amongſt the reſt, for Doctor Andreas, by whoſe help he caſt out the Popiſh Religion and Ceremonies, and eſtabliſhed the true Religion according to the Auguſtane Confeſſion: The like he did in Brugoia. He helps forward Reformation.

About the ſame time alſo Doctor Andreas was ſent for by the Senate of the Imperial City of Rottenburg, becauſe the Paſtors in their juriſdiction uſed divers Ceremonies, ſo that they feared leſt contentions ſhould ariſe about the Subſtantials in Divinity, whereupon by the adviſe of Andreas, they were united in one Confeſſion of Faith conſonant to the word of God, and certain Ceremonies were agreed on, which all the Miniſters ſhould unanimouſly uſe for the time to come. Yea he was of ſuch eſteem, that he was ſent for by divers Princes to reform the Churches in their juriſdictions.

He was preſent at divers Synods and Diſputations about Religion. He travelled many thouſands of miles, being uſually attended but with one ſervant, yet it pleaſed God that in all his journyes he never met with any affront. Gods Providence.

Anno Chriſti 1552, the Chancellors place in the Univerſity of Tubing was voyd by the death of Beurlin, whereupon Prince Chriſtopher, conſulting with the Heads of the Univerſity, made Doctor Andreas Chancellor in his ſtead. About which time he was ſent into Thuringia to compoſe the difference between the Divines of Jenes, Flacius Illiricus, and Strigelius, about the power of Free-will. He is made Chancellour of the Univerſity.

Anno Chriſti 1580, came forth the Book of Concord, which was approved and ſubſcribed by three Electors, twenty one Princes, twenty two Counts, four Barons, thirty five Imperial Cities, and eight thouſand Miniſters. This was ſet on foot by the Elector of Saxony, but carried on by the exceſſive labours of Doctor Andreas, who carried it from one to another, reſolving all doubts, and anſwering all objections till he had got all thoſe ſubſcriptions. His great pains about the Concord.

The year before his death he uſed often to ſay, that he ſhould not live long; that he was weary of this life and much deſired to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt which was beſt of all. Falling ſick, he ſent for James Herbrand, ſaying, I expect that after my death many Adverſaries will riſe up to aſperſe me, and therefore I ſent for thee to hear the confeſſion of my faith, that ſo thou mayſt teſtifie for me when I am dead and gone that I died in the true Faith. The ſame Confeſſion alſo he made afterwards before the Paſtors and Deacons of Tubing. Death foretold, and Deſired. His Sickneſſe. The Confeſſion of his Faith.

The night before his death, he ſlept partly upon his Bed, and partly in his Chair: When the clock ſtruck ſix in the morning, he ſaid, My hour draws near. He gave thanks to God for beſtowing Chriſt, for revealing his Will in his Word, for giving him Faith, and the like benefits; and when he was ready to depart, he ſaid, Lord into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: and ſo he fell aſleep in the Lord Anno Chriſti 1590, and of his age 61. What he gives thanks for. His Death.

In the diſcharge of his office he never ſpared any labour, he never ſhrunk under any trouble. He wrote many Epiſtles to ſeverall men upon ſeveral arguments. A learned, and rich man of Tubing after Doctor Andreas his death, ſaid, that he had in his Library fifteen hundred Bookes of his writing upon ſeveral Arguments. His Works.

THE

H. ZANCHY

The Life of Hierom Zanchius, who dyed Anno Christi 1590.

His Birth and Education.

Hierom Zanchius born at Atzanum in Italy, Anno Christi 1516. His Father was a Lawyer, who brought him up at School, and when Zanchy was but twelve years old his Father died of the Plague Anno Christi 1528; at which time Zanchy was at School, where he was instructed in the Liberal Sciences.

When he came to the age of fifteen years, being now deprived of both his parents, obſerving that divers of his kindred were of the order of Canons Regular, amongſt whom he judged that there were divers learned men, being exceeding deſirous of Learning, he entred into that Order, where he lived about twenty years, and ſtudied the Arts and School-Divinity, together with the Tongues.

He becomes a Fryar.

His Converſion.

He was very familiar with Celſus Martiningus, joyning ſtudies with him, he was a diligent hearer of Peter Martyrs publick Lectures at Luca upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, and of his private Lectures upon the Pſalmes, which he read to his Canons. This drew his mind to an earneſt ſtudy of the Scriptures. He read alſo the Fathers, eſpecially St. Auguſtine, with the moſt learned Interpreters of the Word of God: And thereupon he preached the Goſpel for ſome years in the pureſt manner that the time and place would ſuffer.

And when Peter Martyr left Italy, ſo that his godly Diſciples could no longer live in ſafety there, much leſſe have liberty of Preaching, about twenty of them in the ſpace of one year left their ſtation, and followed their Maſter into Germany, amongſt whom Zanchy was one.

He flies into Germany.

He ſtayes at Strasborough.

Being thus (as he uſed to ſay) delivered out of the Babyloniſh captivity, Anno Chriſti 1550. He went, firſt into Rhetia, where he ſtaied about eight moneths, and from thence to Geneva, and after nine moneths ſtay there, he was ſent for by Peter Martyr into England, but when he came to Strasborough, he ſtaid there to ſupply Hedio's room newly dead, who read Divinity in the Schooles, which was in the year 1553.

He

He lived, and taught Divinity in that City about eleven yeares; sometimes also reading Aristotle in the Schools; yet not without opposition, old James Sturmius, the Father of that University being dead: Yea, his Adversaries proceeded so far as to tell Zanchy, that if he would continue to read there, he must subscribe the Augustane Confession, to which he yeelded for peace-sake, with this proviso, modo Orthodoxo intelligatur; declaring his judgement also about Christs presence in the Sacrament, wherewith they were satisfied. He meets with Troubles.

And thus he continued to the year 1563, being very acceptable to the good, and a shunner of strife, and a lover of concord. At the end whereof the Divines and Professors there, accused him for differing from them in some points about the Lords Supper, the Ubiquity of Christs Body, the use of Images in the Churches, Predestination, and the Perseverance of the Saints: About these things they raised contentions, which were partly occasioned by the Book of Heshusius, printed at this time at Strasborough, About the Lords Supper; and it came to this pass, that they put Zanchy to his choice, either to depart of himself, or else they would remove him from his place. And though many wayes were tryed for the composing of this difference; yet could it not be effected. New Opposition.

But it pleased God that about this time there came a Messenger to signifie to him that the Pastor of the Church of Clavenna, in the borders of Italy, being dead, he was chosen Pastor in his room; wherefore, obtaining a dismission from the Senate of Strasborough, he went thither, and after he had preached about two moneths, the Pestilence brake forth in that Town so violently, that in seven moneths space there dyed twelve Hundred men; yet he continued there so long as he had any Auditors; but when most of the Citizens had removed their families into an high mountain not farre off, he went thither also, and spent above three moneths in Preaching, Meditation, and Prayer, and when the Plague was stayed, he returned into the City again. And thus he continued in that place almost four years to the great profit of many, but not without afflictions to himself. Gods Providence. He goes to Clavenna. A great Pestilence. 1564.

Anno Christi 1568 he was sent for by Frederick the third, Elector Palatine, to Heidleberg to be Professor, and was entertained with all love & respect, where he succeeded Ursin, and at his entrance made an excellent Oration about the preserving, and adhering to the meer Word of God alone. He goes to Heidleberg.

The same year he was made Doctor in Divinity. About which time that excellent Prince Frederick, who was a zealous promoter of the Doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, required him to explicate the Doctrine of one God, and three Persons, to confirme it, and to confute the Doctrine of those, which at that time denyed the Deity, of Christ and the Holy Ghost in Poland and Transilvania, and to answer their arguments; whereupon he wrote those learned Tractates, De Dei natura, De tribus Elohim, &c. In which Book the whole Orthodox Doctrine about that great Mystery is so unfolded and confirmed, that all Adversaries may for ever be a shamed which go about to contradict the same. He is made Doctor. Zeal against Heresies. Hereticks confuted & Rejected Lælius Sociuus, and other of his complices that defended the Heresies of Servetus, tried by divers wayes and reasons to have drawn him to their opinon: But when they found him wholly estranged from them, and a zealous Defendor of the Truth against their Blasphemies, they renounced all friendship with him, and left him; for which deliverence he gave hearty thanks unto God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. He taught in that University ten years till the death of Prince Frederick. Then by Prince John Cassimire he was removed to his new University at Neostade, where he spent above seven years in reading Divinity. Though in the year 1578 he had been earnestly solicited to come to the Universty of Leiden, then newly begun; as also the year after, the Citizens of Antwerp called him to be their Pastor, yet the Prince would by no means part with him, knowing that he could not be missed in his Universty. He goes to Neostade.

The Prince Elector Palatine, Lodwick, being dead, and Prince Cassimire being for the time, made Administrator of his estate, the Universty was returned from Neostad to Heidleberg, and Zanchy being now grown old, had a liberal stipend setled upon him by Prince Cassimire; whereupon, going to Heidleberg to visit his friend,

His Death. he fell ſick, and quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1590. and of his age ſeventy five.

He was excellently verſed in the writings of the ancient Fathers and Philoſophers, he was of ſingular modeſty, and very ſtudious to promote the peace of the Church.

His Works His Works are well known, being uſually bound up in three volums. His Commentaries are upon Hoſea, Epheſ. Phil. Col. Theſſ. and John: His other works are Miſcellanea Theologica. De tribus Elohim. De natura Dei. De operibus Dei. De Incarnatione Filii Dei. De ſacra Scriptura. Compendium præcipuorum capitum doctrinæ Chriſtianæ. De Religione Chriſtiana, &c.

The Life of Anthony Sadeel, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1591.

His Birth and Education. Anthony Sadeel was born at Cabot upon the confines of Savoy and France, not far from Geneva, Anno Chriſti 1534, and his Father dying whilſt he was young, his Mother brought him up in learning, and ſent him to Paris, where he was educated under Mathias Granniau, from whom alſo he firſt received the ſeeds of ttue Religion.

He goes to Paris. From thence after a while, he removed to Tholous, where falling into the ſociety of ſome godly Students of the Law, it pleaſed God that by degrees he attained to the knowledge of the Truth, & began to abſtain from the defilements of Popery; whereupon he went to Geneva, where he was further inſtructed in the Truth, aud was much holpen and encouraged by Calvin and Beza.

His converſion. He goes to Geneva. But after a while, his Uncle dying, and leaving a large inheritance, ſome contention aroſe about it, whereupon Sadeel was ſent for home, and went to Paris about that buſineſs.

And to Paris. At which time a private Congregation was gathered by John Riparius (who ſhortly after ſuffered Martyrdom) into which number, at his requeſt Sadeel was admitted, in whom there ſhone forth a great ingenuity, with an incredible love to the holy Scriptures. And when afterwards that Church was encreaſed, they ſent to Geneva for a Paſtor, who ſent them Gollongius, a man famous for piety and wiſdom; who when he was come, calling together the young men, he exhorted them to apply themſelves to the ſtudy of Divinity, which afterwards turned to the great good of the French Churches, and amongſt others, Sadeel faithfully promiſed to apply himſelf thereto.

And Collongius began to frame and faſhion the minds of thoſe young men by private exerciſes: Amongſt whom Sadeel moſt excelled, there appearing no light, or unbeſeeming carriage in him: Yea in thoſe his young years he gave ſigns of an excellent mind that was fit to undertake great things. Inſomuch as being ſcarce twenty years old, he was by approbation of the whole Church, choſen one of the Paſtors.

He is choſen a paſtor.

And though in regard of his great parentage, he was not without hope of attaining to great riches and dignity; whereas entring into this courſe of life, he expoſed himſelf to labours, dangers, baniſhment, and grievous death in thoſe bloody times, yet none of theſe hindred, but that he chearfully undertooke the office he was choſen to, which was to be Paſtor of the Church of Paris.

Chriſt preferred before All.

The year after fell out that horrid violence offered to this Church when they were met together to hear the Word, and receive the Sacrament, where above 150 of them were laid hold of, and caſt into priſon, but by a miracle of Gods mercy the Paſtors eſcaped.

Popiſh Cruelty. Gods Providence.

To make the priſoners more odious, the Fryars in all their Sermons gave out that the the Proteſtants met together for no other end but to feaſt and junket, after which (putting out the candles) they fell to all promiſcuous uncleanneſſes; and the Cardinal of Lorrain buzzed ſuch things into the Kings head; & though the Judges, upon enquiry, found all theſe things falſe; yet the Church thought fit by an Epiſtle to the King, and a Book to the People, to vindicate and clear themſelves; which work was committed to Sadeel, who performed it ſo excellently, that ſome good effects followed thereupon.

The proteſtants Slandered.

Vindicated by Sadeel.

The year after Sadeel was delivered from a great danger; For at midnight many apparitors brake into his houſe, ſearching every corner, and at laſt brake into his chamber, ſeized on his Books and his Papers, crying out, They were Heretical, and ſo laid hold on him, and carried him to priſon: But it pleaſed God that Anthony of Burbon, King of Navar (who knew him, and had often heard him) hearing of his impriſonment, ſent to the Officers to releaſe him as being one of his train; and when they refuſed to do it, he went himſelf to the priſon, complaining of the wrong that was done him by impriſoning one that belonged to him, being neither a murtherer nor thief; and withal bade Sadeel follow him, and ſo took him away with him.

He is Impriſoned.

Delivered by the King of Navar.

Whereupon the day after he publickly before the King gave thanks to God for his deliverance, expounding the 124 Pſalm. Then it being judged the ſafeſt for him to abſent himſelf for a while, he went to viſit the Churches in other parts of the Kingdome, and at Orleance he continued ſome monthes Preaching to many Citizens, and ſtudents in the night time, to their great advantage.

A while after he returned to Paris, and the number of Churches increaſing in France, there was a Synod held at Paris of Miniſters and Elders (the firſt that ever was there) who aſſembled to draw up a Confeſſion of their Faith, unto which Sadeel prefixed an Epiſtle, and which afterwards was preſented to the King by the Admiral Coligny: But the King ſhortly after dying, the Queen Mother, and the Guiſes drew all the Government of the Kingdome into their hands, and raiſed a great perſecution againſt the Church, drawing many of all ranks to priſons and puniſhments; yet Sadeel intermitted not his office, but was wholly imployed in preaching to his flock, comforting the dejected, confirming the weak, &c. till the danger encreaſing, it was thought fit that the care of the Church ſhould be committed to one Macardus, a man leſſe known, and that Sadeel ſhould retire himſelf.

His return to Paris.

A Synod.

A perſecution raiſed.

Sadeels Faithfulneſſe.

And ſo he went into ſeveral parts of the Kingdom, and thereby much propagated the true Faith. The year after, the perſecution not being ſo violent at Paris, Sadeel could not refrain from going to his Flock which he loved ſo dearly.

The Church thrives by Perſecution.

Anno Chriſti 1561. he fell ſick of a Quartan Ague, and by the advice of his Phyſitians and friends he was perſwaded to go into his own Country; yet neither there did he live idle, but preached up and down to the ſpiritual advantage of many.

His Sickneſſe.

His painfulneſs.

From thence he was called to be the moderator in a Synod at Orleance, where the opinion was diſcuſſed, and confuted, of ſome that held, That the Government of the Church ſhould not be in the Elderſhip, but in the Body of the Congregation; and Sadeel took ſo much pains in this point, that the firſt Author of that Schiſm was confuted, and converted, and publickly in writing confeſſed, and recanted his error.

A Synod.

Independents error Confuted.

Being returned to Paris, the perſecution began to grow ſo hot there again, that he was perſwaded to retire himſelf from the ſame, after which he never could return to his flock that ſo loved, and was beloved of him. After his departure he was preſent at, and moderated in many Synods of the French Churches: but withal he was ſo hated of the wicked, that at laſt he was driven from thence to Lauſanna, where he preached for a time, and from thence he went to Geneva, where for divers years he was a Paſtor.

He is againe driven from Paris.

He is driven out of France.

But the Church in France having ſome peace, he returned thither again, and at Lyons and Burgundy edified the Churches exceedingly.

His return into France.

Afterwards he was ſent for by Henry the fourth, King of Navar, to whom he went very unwillingly, not liking a Court life; yet by the advice of his friends, he went to him, and for three years ſpace in all his troubles was with him, comforting, and encouraging him very much; and at the Battle of Courtraſs, a little before it began,

He goes to the King of Navar.

he ſtood in the head of the Army, and prayed earneſtly for ſucceſſe, which much encouraged all the Souldiers; and when they had gotten the Victory, he alſo gave publick, and ſolemn thanks unto God for the ſame.

Gods Providence.

But by reaſon of ſickneſs and weakneſs, being unable to follow that kind of life any longer, he was with much unwillingneſs, diſmiſſed by the King, and went through his enemies countries in much danger till he came to his wife and children at Geneva.

He goes to Geneva.

He is ſent into Germany.

Shortly after he was ſent by order from the King of Navar into Germany, Upon an Ambaſſie to the Proteſtant Princes, where not onely the Univerſities, but the Princes alſo received him in a very honourable manner, eſpecially Prince Caſſimire, and the Lantgrave of Heſſe.

Anno Chriſti 1589. he returned to Geneva, where in the middeſt of many troubles he continued in the work of his Miniſtry to the end of his life: And when the City was beſieged by the Spaniards, and others, he oft went out with the Citizens to the fights, ſo encouraging them, that, through Gods mercy, a few of them put thouſands of the enemies to flight many times.

His Sickneſſe.

Death foretold.

Comfort in Death.

His Death.

At laſt he fell ſick of a Pluriſie, and though the Phyſitians apprehended no danger, yet he foretold that it would be mortal; and retiring himſelf from the world, he wholly converſed with God. Prayers were made daily for him in the Congregations, and Beza and the other Miniſters viſited him often, with prayers and tears begging his recovery. He enjoyed much inward peace and comfort in his ſickneſs, and at laſt ſlept in the Lord Anno Chriſti 1591, and of his age 57.

His loſſe was much bewailed by the whole City, his Preaching was not too curious, and yet not void of Art and Eloquence: So that his Miniſtry was alwayes moſt grateſull to the people. He was very holy and exemplary in his life, and had moſt of the learned men of thoſe times for his ſpecial Friends.

His Character.

He was tall, and ſlender of his body, had a pale face, red haire, ſharp ſight, a countenance compoſed of gravity, and courteſie. He was very ſickly, ſo that except he had been very careful of himſelf, he could not poſſibly have endured ſuch labours and ſtudies as he was exerciſed in. In his Sermons his profitable matter was adorned with eloquence; his brevity cauſed not obſcurity, nor his prolixity tedioufneſs: His pronounciation and geſtures were modeſt and comly. He uſed no bitterneſs of ſpeech, nor expreſſions that ſavoured of anger. He was very powerful in Prayer.

His Works.

His writings were mixed with much Learning; and though he was admired for his excellent parts, and put upon many, and great imployments, yet was he far from vain-glory. He diſeſteemed all earthly things, and breathed after nothing but Chriſt. His liberality was well known in the Churches of Paris, Orleance, Lions, and in many other places. Laſtly, he was of a very innocent, and exemplary Life. His Works are publiſhed in four Tomes.

THE

W. WHITAKER

The Life of VVilliam VVhitaker, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1595.

William Whitaker was born at Holme, in the Pariſh of Bournley in Lancaſhire, of an ancient Family. His Father was one who by his induſtry increaſed the ancient inheritance of the Whitakers. His mother came of the two worſhipful Families of the Townlies and Nowels. His Birth and Parentage.

In his childhood he was educated under his parents wings, and brought up in the School of Bournley: But when he was thirteen years old, he was ſent for up to London by his Uncle Alexander Nowel, Dean of Pauls, either becauſe he ſaw he was brought up in the Popiſh Religion, or becauſe he diſcerned the Boy to be of an excellent wit, or out of a deſire to exerciſe his charity, and to deſerve well of his kindred. His Education.

And when he came he kept him in his own houſe, and placed him in Pauls School, where he profited ſo much, that at eighteen years old he was ſent to Cambridge to Trinity Colledge, under the tuition of one Maſter Weſt, where, by his diligence and proficience in his ſtudies, he procured ſuch love and eſteem, that he was choſen firſt Scholar, and then Fellow of the Houſe; by which means being taken more notice of, the excellency of his wit and learning did more appear: For in all his Diſputations either in the Colledge or Schools, he ſtill carried away the bell: And ſo with the generall approbation, and applauſe of all, he took his Degrees of Batchelor, and Maſter of Arts, which when he had done, he did not (as many) neglect his ſtudies, as if he had need to make no further progreſs, but with greater alacrity and diligence he ſtill preſſed on towards perfection, and to ſhew his gratitude and proficiency to his Uncle, Doctor Nowel, he turned his elegant and learned Latine Catechiſm into Greek, very acurately, and ſo preſented it to him; and that he might be uſefull to the Church, he turned the Engliſh Liturgy into Latine, hereby declaring what an excellent Ornament he was likely to prove to the whole Commonwealth of England: He goes to Cambridge. His preferment in the Univerſity. His Gratitude.

Yea;

Yea, he adventured upon a more difficult work, which he performed to his great commendation, of turning Bishop Jewels Disputations against Harding into Latine, which redounded to the great benefit of all Christian Churches, and to the propagation of the Orthodox Faith.

He is made Father at the Commencement

By these Works he procured much respect in the University; so that the Heads of the Houses, when the Commencement drew on, chose him, being yet young, to be Father of many Sons, whom he was not only to instruct and encourage in their studies, and to quicken to further diligence and industry; but also to handle Philosophicall questions, and to defend them against learned and acute opponents; which task was by so much the more difficult, by how much he had but short warning, yet did he perform it with such strength and prudence, that he raised in the mindes of all his Auditors, an admiration of his singular Learning and Eloquence.

He studies Divinity.

A while after, leaving Plato and Aristotle, he became a diligent reader of the sacred Scriptures, to which, as every Christian ought, he always attributed the Chiefest Authority, not onely to build our Faith upon, but to determine all doubts, and controversies by.

He turned over also diligently all the principall Modern Commentators who were faithfull Interpreters of the Word of God. And being of an incredible industry, enduring heat and cold, in a few years space he read over most of the Fathers, both Greek and Latine; And if by any occasion of Friends visits, or otherwise, he was interrupted in his studies, he would gain so much time out of his sleep in the night, as to finish his task which he had imposed upon himself.

His Industry.

But as by these his labours and watchings he much encreased his learning, so he much impaired the health of his Body, which he never recovered all his life after.

His Temperance.

He was very temperate in his diet from his very childhood; he drank very little wine, and in summer mixed it with water: He never overloaded his stomack with meat, no not in the greatest Feasts, but always used a sparing and moderate diet. He sometimes recreated himself, for his healths sake, either by Shooting or Angling, and in the Winter time when he could do neither of them, he sometimes refreshed himself by playing at the ingenious game at Chesse: In which recreations he used to be merry, and pleasant, without heat or wrangling, so that it might be easily discerned, that he only sought the refreshing of his mind, and the health of his Body in them.

His Recreations.

His excellent Parts.

Doctor Whitgift, the then Regius Professor, took so great a liking of him, and love to him, that he esteemed him as his son all his life after: When he Commonplaced, or Catechised in the Chapel, his labours savoured both of learning and piety: When he took the Degree of Batchelor in Divinity, he performed his exercises so, that his Auditors knew not whether he shewed himself the better Christian or Divine. When he read in the Philosophy or Rhetorick Schools, he seemed another Basil, when he catechised another Origen. When he preached his Concio ad Clerum at his Commencement, An. Chr. 1578. it abounded both with sanctity, and all manner of Learning, and when the Commencement came, he handled two Theologicall questions very copiously, and strongly, and after defended them acutely, and appositly, as became a good Disputant; after which he obtained his Degree of Batchelor of Divinity with the approbation of all, to whom he had given abundance of satisfaction.

And when this work was over, he lived quietly for a while in the Colledge, being never less idle than when idle, nor lesse alone than when alone: For when he was free from Publick businesses, he prepared himself by studying Controversies for publick Work, as if it were, thereby presaging what afterwards came to passe.

For it fell out by Gods Providence that shortly after Doctor Chaderton, the Master of Queens Colledge and the Regius Professor was made a Bishop, and though Whitaker was but young for such a place, yet considering his great Learning, he was unanimously chosen to be his successor in the Professorship, though some were much vexed to see such a young man preferred before an old, whom they judged unable to undertake so great a task. He is chosen Professor.

But when he began to read his Lectures, he performed them to the abundant satisfaction of all his Hearers, nothing being found wanting which could be required in the best Divine, and most accomplished Professor: For he shewed much reading, a sharp judgement, a pure and easie stile, with sound and solid learning; so that his fame spreading abroad, abundance resorted to his Lectures, and reaped much profit thereby.

The first that he began with in his Lectures, was to expound the three first Chapters of Luke: After which he went over the Epistle to the Galathians, the first to Timothy, and the Canticles. Afterwards he betook himself to the Controversies between the Papists and us, Anno Christi 1585. His Lectures.

About that time there came into England a proud and vain-glorious Jesuit called Edmund Campian, an English-man, who set forth ten Arguments whereby he Boasted that he had utterly overthrown the Protestant Religion. To these Whitaker answered so fully and learnedly, that all the Jesuits brags vanished into smoak.. He confutes the Papists. As Campian.

Yet shortly after, there rose up Durie a Scottish Jesuit, who undertook to answer Whitaker, and to vindicate Campian. And whereas Campian had set forth his Arguments with a great deal of ostentation, and youthly confidence: Durie on the other side, prosecuted the cause with dog-like Barking, and railing, and scurrility. Whitaker gave him the preheminence in that, but did so solidly answer all his Arguments, and discover his fallacies, that the truth in those points was never more fully cleared by any man. Durie.

Then rose up Nicholas Sanders, an English Jesuit, who wrote about the person of Antichrist, boasting that by forty demonstrative Arguments he had proved that the Pope was not Antichrist. These Arguments Whitaker examined, and answered learnedly, and solidly, truly retorting many of them upon himself. Sanders.

Then Rainolds, a Divine of Remes, another English Apostate, pretended a reply, but subtilly and maliciously presented the English Divines differing amongst themselves; that by their differences he might expose their Religion to the greater hatred, and obloquy. But Whitaker perceived, and plainly discovered his crafty fetches, and lies; yet withal declared that he judged his Book so vain, and foolish, that he scarce thought him worthy of an answer. Rainolds.

About this, time he married a Wife, a prudent, pious chast, and charitable Woman. After whose death at the end of two years, he married another, a grave Matron, the Widdow of Dudley Fenner; by these he had eight children, whom he educated religiously. His Marriage.

Upon this occasion the crabbed old man, Stapleton, who had neither learned to teach the truth, nor to speak well, nor to thinke chastly of others, wrote a Book against him, objecting his marriage as a great reproach; But surely this man had not read the words of Christ, Mat. 9. 11. nor of Paul, 1 Cor. 9. 5. 1 Tim. 3. 2. Nor what the Council of Nice decreed concerning the Marriage of Presbyters upon the motion of Paphnutius; nor what Augustine, and others of the Fathers had written about that point: Or else he was of Hoffæus the Jesuits mind, one of the Popes Counsellors, who declared openly, that Priests sinned lesse by committing Adultery, than by marrying wives. Whitaker never had his Catamites, as many of the Popish Priests, Jesuits, Cardinals, yea, and some of the Popes themselves had. But to leave him, and return to our matter. Stapleton reproaches him for his Marriage.

Doctor Whitaker was shortly after chosen Master of Saint Johns Colledge in Cambridge, which, though at first some of the Fellows and Students out of self-ends disliked, and opposed, yet, within a little space, by his clemency, equity, and goodnesse, he so overcame their exulcerated mindes, that he turned them into love, and admiration of him: Yea he always governed the Colledge with much prudence and moderation, not seeking his own profit, but the publick good, as appeared, not onely He is chosen Master of Saint Johns.

by

by the teſtimony of thoſe which lived with him, but by his frugality, wherein yet his gaines exceeded not his expences. In chooſing Scholars and Fellows, he alwayes carryed himſelf unblameably and unpartially, ſo as he would never ſuffer any corruption to creep into the Election; and if he found any who by Bribes had ſought to buy Suffrages, he of all others (though otherwiſe never ſo deſerving) ſhould not be choſen.

He confutes Bellarmine.

Bellarmine about this time growing famous, and being looked upon by his own party as an invincible Champion, him Whitaker undertakes, and cuts off his head with his own weapons: Firſt in the controverſie about the Scriptures, publiſhed Anno Chriſti 1588. Then about the Church Councils, Biſhop of Rome, the Miniſters, Saints departed, the Church Triumphant, the Sacraments, Baptiſm, and the Lords Supper; though he had not leiſure to print them all. In all which controverſies, he dealt not with his Adverſarie with taunts, reproaches, and paſſion, but as one that indeed ſought out the truth. Hereupon that ſuperſtitious old man, Thomas Stapleton, Profeſſor of Lovane, perceiving that Bellarmine held his peace, undertook to anſwer Whitaker in that third queſtion of his firſt part about the Scriptures, which he performed in a Volume large enough, but as formerly, in a ſcurrilous, and railing Language. Therefore Whitaker, leſt the teſty old man ſhould ſeem wiſe in his own eyes, anſwered him in ſomewhat a tarter Language than he uſed to doe.

His fidelity therein.

Stapleton Rails.

Whitaker Anſwereth.

The week before he died he performed an excellent work, not only for the Univerſity of Cambridge, but for the whole Engliſh Church, for whoſe Peace and Unity he always ſtudied in Truth, by undertaking to compoſe ſome differences which ſprang up about ſome Heads of Religion; for which end he went toward London in the midſt of winter, in the company of Doctor Tyndal, Maſter of Queens Colledge: But what with his journey, and want of ſleep (being too intent upon his buſineſs) he fell ſick by the way, which made him return to Cambridge again; and finding his diſeaſe to encreaſe, he ſent for the Phyſitians, who, after debate, reſolved to let him blood, which yet was neglected for two days: The third day when they went about it, he was unfit, by reaſon of a continual ſweat that he was in, yet that night he ſeemed to ſleep quietly; and the next morning a Friend asking him, how he did? He anſwered, O happy Night! I have not taken ſo ſweet a ſleep ſince my diſeaſe ſeiſed upon me: But his friend finding him all in a cold ſweat, told him, that ſigns of death appeared on him. To whom he anſwered, Life or Death is welcome to me, which God pleaſeth; for death ſhall be an advantage to me: And after a while he ſaid, I deſire not to live, but onely ſo far as I may doe God and his Church ſervice: And ſo ſhortly after he quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1595, and of his Age forty ſeven; Having been Profeſſor ſixteen Years.

His Sickneſſe.

His Death.

Bellarmine admired Him.

Cardinal Bellarmine procured his picture out of England, and hung it up in his ſtudy, much admiring him for his ſingular Learning; and being asked by a Jeſuit, why he would ſuffer the picture of that Heretick to hang there, He anſwered, Quod quamvis Hæreticus, & Adverſarius eſſet eſſet tamen doctus Advarſarius, That though he was an Heretick, and his Adverſary, yet he was a learned Adverſary.

His carriage in his Sickneſſe.

In the whole courſe of his diſeaſe, which was a Fever, he demeaned himſelf quietly and mildly, acknowledging God to be the Author of his diſeaſe, to whoſe will he willingly ſubmitted himſelf, without the leaſt ſign of impatiency, ſaying with Job, Lord my God, though thou kill me, yet I am ſure that with theſe Eyes I ſhall ſee thee, for in thee do I hope. In his habit, countenance, and in the whole courſe of his life, he ſhewed forth Piety and Holineſs; and in his private family, where he moſt diſcovered himſelf, he was the ſame man. He was moſt patient in injuries, which he quickly forgat, and was eaſily reconſciled to thoſe which deſerved worſt of him.

His Character.

His great Charity.

He was very charitable and liberal to the Poor, according to his eſtate, which yet he always carried privately, that others might not take notice of it; but eſpecially he was moſt bountiful to ſuch poor as were modeſt, godly, and induſtrious, & yet more eſpecially to ſuch poor Students as were ingenious, and painful. Theſe he would often ſecretly furniſh with mony, and prefer them to places as far as by the Statutes of the Colledge he could.

In

In paſſing Judgement upon other mens lives and actions he was always very modeſt and moderate. Thoſe whom he ſaw do well, he would encourage and commend: For thoſe that brake out into inordinate practiſes, he wou'd grieve, and mourn. In his converſe with his Friends, he was very courteous, apert, and pleaſant: Faithfull in keeping ſecrets; prudent and grave in ſerious matters: Always moſt prompt, and ready to aſſiſt his Friends in every condition, either with counſel, comfort, or money.

His piety towards his Parents was ſingular, towards whom he was very dutifull, and whom he ſupported being faln into decay through ill-husbandry: And that which added a luſtre to his Learning, Virtue, and Graces, was, that they were accompanyed with Moſes-like meekneſſe, and almoſt incredible Humility. For although he was endued with a moſt ſharp Wit, happy Memory, variety of reading, excellent Eloquence as ever was in any Divine, and laſtly with a moſt Learned, and Polite Judgement, ſo that he was the Oracle of the Univerſity, and the miracle of the world, yet did he not hold any ſingular, or private opinion but what was agreeable to the ſound Doctrine of the Word of God, and the peace of the Church; yea he was ſo humble, that he deſpiſed not his inferiours, but carried himſelf as a child that is weaned from his Mothers breaſts.

His piety to his parents.

His humility.

Beſides, what Works are mentioned before in his Life, and are printed, he left divers others, as, Conciones ad Clerum. Breves determinationes queſtionum Theologicarum. Determinationes aliæ pleniores. Libellus contra Thomam Stapletonum de originali peccato.

Biſhop Hall ſaith of him, Never man ſaw him without Reverence, nor heard him without Wonder.

L. DANÆVS

The Life of Lambert Danæus, who died Anno Christi 1569.

His Birth and Education.

Lambert Danæus was born at Orleance in France Anno Christi 1530 He was of an acute wit, and wonderfully addicted to learning, so that by his diligence, and extraordinary pains he attained to a great measure of knowledge and skill in all the Liberal sciences: which he adorned by adding to the knowledge of them, the study of the sacred Scriptures.

In his younger years he studied the civill Law four years at Orleance, under that worthy, and godly man Annas Burgius, who being afterwards for his worth made one of the Parliament of Paris, in the year 1559; for his constant defence and confession of the Truth was first strangled, and then burnt.

He goes to Geneva.

Danæus being stirred up by this rare example of his Masters piety, changing his former purpose, betook himself to the study of Divinity, and (embracing the Reformed Religion) he thereupon went to Geneva, Anno Christi 1560, where he wholly applyed himself to attain the knowledge of the Truth, and by his extraordinary diligence, reading over almost infinite Authors, and by his wonderfull memory, he easily attained to be esteemed one of the greatest Divines that lived in that age.

His admirable learning.

He was so versed in the Fathers and School-Divines, that none excelled him, and few attained to the like exactnesse therein: whence one saith of him, Mirum est, hominis unius ingenium, tot, & tam diversas scientias haurire, & retinere potuisse. At Geneva he was admitted into the number of Doctors, and Pastors, & by his learned labours was exceeding usefull both to the Church and University; Eruditus inimanimus semper aliquid ex se promit, quod tum alios doceat delectetve; tum seipsum laudibus illustret. He always employed himself in writing something whereby he might approve himself a godly Divine, and excellent Scholar to all Learned men.

He is called to Leiden.

From Geneva he was called to the University of Leiden, where he was received with much joy, and was exceedingly admired for his learning, acutenesse of wit, promptnesse, neſs, and ſtrength of memory in alledging, and reciting the Sentences of the Fathers, Schoolmen, Canoniſts, and prophane writers.

From thence, after a years ſtay, he was called to Gaunt, Anno Chriſti 1582. where he taught not many yeares: For when he perceived the City to be ſo divided, and full of tumults, foreſeeing the ſtorm that was coming upon it, he left it, and, being ſent for, went into Navar, where, by his Teaching, and Writing, he made the Univerſity of Ortheſia, near to Spain, famous: And at laſt, having by his extraordinary paines, profited the Church and the Common-Wealth of Learning, and by his admirable fruitfull Wit publiſhed very many Books, he there laid down his earthly Tabernacle, Anno Chriſti 1596. and of his age 66.

From thence to Gaunt.

And thence to Navar.

His Death.

His Works are theſe: Elenchi Hæreticorum. *Ethices Chriſtianæ lib. tres. Tractat. de Amicitia Chriſtiana. De ludo Aleæ. Phyſices Chriſtianæ partes duæ. De venificis. The Life of Robert Rollock, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1598.

Robert Rollock was born in Scotland of the ancient Family of the Levingſtons, Anno Chriſti 1555. of Parents of good quality and credit. His Father, David Rollock, being reaſonable well Learned himſelf, and therefore knowing the worth of Learning, was very carefull to bring up his Son in the ſtudy of the Liberall Sciences, and for that end ſent him to Sterline, and placed him under Thomas Bucanan, under whom he manifeſted an excellent Wit, joyned with ſuch modeſty and ſweetneſſe of Nature, that he needed no ſevere Diſcipline; and by which he drew Bucanans affections to him exceedingly, who could not but love him for his Attractive qualities; which Love continued with encreaſe, to his lives end.

His Birth and Parentage.

His Education.

After at this School he was fully fitted, he went thence to the Univerſity of Saint Andrews, where he ſpent four years in the ſtudy of the Arts: And thoſe virtues which before did but ſparkle, now ſhon bright; and he did aſcend to ſuch an height in thoſe ſtudies, as ſcarce any of his Fellows attained to, but none excelled; ſo that at four years end, his excellent abilities being taken notice of, he was choſen a Profeſſor of Philoſophy; which Office he performed with great commendation for four years ſpace, adorning and illuſtrating it with his induſtry, and piety, none of his Colleagues equalizing him therein.

He goes to Saint Andrews.

Anno Chriſti 1583. the Magiſtrates of Edenborough began to think of erecting a Univerſity in that City, which they did at the inſtigation of that worthy Man, Maſter James Lauſon, their chief Paſtor; The reaſon was, becauſe it was the Metropolis of the Kingdome, and they could not ſend their Sons to Saint Andrews or other Univerſities, without great trouble and charge; and beſides they found that divers through Poverty were not able to maintain their Children abroad, whereby many excellent wits were imployed in Mechanick trades; upon which conſiderations, when they had reſolved to erect an Academy, they in the next place conſidered where they might find a fit man to begin, carry on, and perfect ſo great a work, and becauſe they could not otherwiſe do it, they reſolved to ſend one or two to Saint Andrews, who by diligent enquiry ſhould find out ſuch a perſon: who accordingly going thither found that by the generall vote of all, there was none thought ſo fit for this work as Robert Rollock, which the Magiſtrates of Edenborough being informed of, preſently ſent for him, intreating that he would undertake a work which was like to prove ſo exceeding advantageous both to Church and State; uſing alſo other arguments, which ſo far prevailed, that he promiſed to come to them.

A Univerſity erected at denborough.

He is ſent for to Edenborough.

He goes Thither.

And accordingly in the ſame year, he went to Edenborough, where by the Magiſtrates he was entertained courteouſly, and in the beginning of winter he ſet upon the work. And as ſoon as it was ſpread abroad that a Univerſity was begun at Edenborough, young Students flockt thither a pace from all parts of the Kingdom; whom he inſtructed in the Arts, and governed with ſeverity mixed with clemency, and ſo educated them in Religion, that God bleſſed his labours exceedingly amongſt them: For indeed he laboured in this above all things, that his Scholars ſhould have the marks of true holyneſs appearing in them. Neither did God fruſtrate his expectations; for by his exhortations, and Divinity Lectures, he ſo far prevailed even with the looſer ſort of youths, that he ſoon brought them into very good order.

He doth much Good

Four profeſſors Choſen.

After four years he examined them ſtrictly, and finding their proficiency, made them Maſters of Art. Then four Profeſſors of Philoſophy were by the Magiſtrates ſubſtituted under him to ſhare in the pains, which were choſen out of the ableſt of thoſe that had commenced Maſters of Art.

Theſe inſiſting in the footſteps of the Doctrine and Diſcipline of Rollock, performed that truſt which was committed to them with great faithfulneſſe and induſtry. In the mean time Rollock underwent the whole charge and care of the Univerſity: For it was his office to look over the ſeverall Claſſes, to obſerve every ones ſedulity and progreſſe in his ſtudies: If any diſcords aroſe, to compoſe them by his wiſdom, and to keep every one in the carefull diſcharge of his duty.

His piety and Diligence.

Every morning, calling the Students together, he prayed fervently with them, and one day in the week, expounded ſome portion of Scripture to them, from whence he raiſed Doctrines, Exhortations, and Comminations, not painted with humane eloquence, but grave, and weighty, ſuch as might moſt work upon the minds and hearts of young men.

And this he did, not that he wanted eloquence, but becauſe he deſpiſed ſuch a kind of affected ſpeech in holy things. By theſe kind of Lectures he did more reſtraine, and reforme the young men, then by his Diſcipline, and indeed it brought great profit both to Maſter and Scholars. Yet after every Lecture, he took notice which of them had committed any faults that week, whom he would ſo reprove, and lay the wrath of God before their eyes, and withall affect them with ſhame, that he much reformed them thereby. Yea ſuch as would neither have been reformed with words, or ſtripes from others, were ſo wrought upon by his applying the threatnings of Gods wrath, and opening the ſweet promiſes of mercy to them, that uſually they brake out into ſighs and tears.

A large increaſe of Miniſters.

He took alſo extraordinary paines to fit ſuch for the work of the Miniſtery as were grown up to it: ſo that the Church received very much benefit from thence, having ſo many able Paſtors ſent forth into it. How much trouble, care, and pains he beſtowed in theſe employments is not poſſibly to be conceived: For he ſpent the whole day, except dinner time, either in the contemplation of the chiefeſt points of Religion, or in ſearching out the ſence of hard places of Scripture, or in confuting the errors of the Romaniſts.

Converſion wrought by his Miniſtry

Beſides this, he preached every Lords day in the Church, and that with ſuch fervency, and evident demonſtration of the ſpirit, that he was the inſtrument of converting very many unto God. He wrote alſo many Commentaries upon the Scriptures, which being printed, and going abroad into other Countries, Beza meeting with with that upon the Romans and Epheſians, wrote to a friend concerning them, that he had gotten a treaſure of incomparable value, and that he had not met with the like before, for brevity, elegancy, and judiciouſneſſe: Whereupon he thus concludes, I pray God to preſerve the Author, and daily to encreaſe his gifts in him, eſpecially in theſe times wherein the vineyard of the Lord hath ſo few labourers. Beza's Teſtimony.

Thus we ſee how famous Rollock was with all ſorts of perſons, for his learning, virtue, and piety; yea by his curteſie and candor he drew the love of all men. He was ſo humble, that, though he excelled them, yet he preferred all others before himſelf, and laboured after privacy from publick buſineſſe, that he might the better apply himſelf to his ſtudies. Yet, contrary to his mind, he was often called forth to publick buſineſſes, which he alwayes diſpatched with admirable prudence. In the two laſt years of his life he was ſo involved in publick affairs, that it much weakned his health. He was greatly tormented with the ſtone, and troubled with weakneſſe of ſtomack, yet yet did he not intermit his labours and care of the Chruch. His humility. His Sickneſſe.

In the Synod of Taodun (where the King himſelf was preſent) Rollock, by the ſuffrages of all, was choſen Moderator, where the too ſevere Articles of Perth were qualified; and when the King moved that the Synod ſhould chooſe ſome Commiſſioners to take care of the Church in the intervall of National Aſſemblies, it was readily aſſented to, and Rollock was one of the firſt that was aſſigned to that office. He moderates in a Synod.

Anno Chriſti 1598, his diſeaſe ſo encreaſed upon him that he was confined to his houſe; but after a while, his intimate friend, William Scot, perſwaded him to go into the Country, where was a thinner, and more healthfull air: which accordingly he did, and ſeemed at firſt to be better, but preſently his diſeaſe returned with more violence, ſo that he was forced to keep his bed; whereupon he ſet his houſe in order, and his wife (after ten years barrenneſſe, being with child) he commended to the care of his friends. Pr paration for Death.

Two Noblemen, Patrick Galloway, and David Lindſey, coming to viſit him, he profeſſed to them the hearty love which he had alwayes born to the King, withall, requeſting them from him to go to him, and to entreat him in his name to take care of Religion, and to perſevere in it to the end, as hitherto he had done, not ſuffering himſelf to be diverted from it, either under the hope of enlarging his dominions, or by any other ſubtill devices of wicked men; and that he would reverence and eſteem the Paſtors of the Church as it was meet: For (ſaith he) that Miniſtry of Chriſt, though in the judgement of man it ſeem low and baſe, yet at length it ſhall ſhine with great glory. His meſſage to the King.

When the Paſtors of Edenborough came to him, he made an excellent exhortation to them, and profeſſion of his ſincerity, and integrity in his place that God had called him to. When the night grew on, his death alſo ſeemed to approach, which he perceiving, made ſuch a divine and heavenly ſpeech as aſtoniſhed the Hearers. And when the Phyſitians were preparing Phyſick for him, he ſaid; Tu Deus medeberis mihi, thou Lord wilt heal me: Then he prayed fervently that God would pardon his ſins for Chriſts ſake; profeſſing that all other things, how great ſoever they ſeemed to others, yet he accounted them all but dung and droſſe in compariſon of the excellency of Chriſts croſſe: Praying further, that he might have an happy departure, and enjoy Gods preſence, which he had often breathed after, ſaying, I have hitherto ſeen but darkly in the glaſſe of thy Word, O Lord, grant that I may enjoy the eternal fruition of thy countenance, which I have ſo much deſired, and longed for. His exhortation to the Miniſters. Chriſt preferred before all Things. Death deſired.

Then did he make ſuch an admirable ſpeech about the Reſurrection, and Life Eternal, as if ſo be he had already been tranſlated into heaven: Then giving his hand to al. that were preſent, like old Jacob, he bleſſed them all, adding to his benediction, exhortations according to every mans quality, or office: Yet that night after he ſlept better then was expected

The da after when the City Magiſtrates came to ſee him, he ſpake to them to be very carefull of the Univerſity, deſiring to chooſe into his room Henry Charter, a man every way fit for that emoloyment. He commended to their care alſo his wife, profeſſing that he had not laid up one penny of his ſtipend, and therefore he hoped they would His exhortation to the Miniſters.

provide for her. To these requests the Magistrates assented, promising faithfully to perform them.

His heavenly Speech.

Then did he intreat the Professors of Philosophy, that they would be carefull, and diligent in the performance of their duty, and that they would be obedient to his successor; after which he said, I blesse God, I have all my senses entire, but my heart is in Heaven: And, Lord Jesus, why shouldst not thou have it? It hath been my care all my life long to dedicate it to thee, I pray thee take it that it may live with thee for ever. When he had thus spoken, he fell into a slumber, out of which when he awaked, he breathed earnestly to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, saying, Come Lord Jesus, put an end to this miserable life; hast Lord, and tarry not; Christ hath redeemed me, not unto a frail and momentary, but unto eternall life. Come Lord Jesus, and give me that life for which thou hast redeemed me.

Then some of the standers by bewail their condition when he should be taken away: to whom he said, I have gone through all the degrees of this life, and now am come to my end, why should I goe back againe? O Lord help me that I may go through this last degree with thy assistance: Lead me to that glory which I have seen as through a glass: O that I were with thee: And when some told him that the next day was the Sabbath: he said, Thy Sabbath, O Lord, shall begin my eternall Sabbath: My eternal Sabbath shall take its beginning from thy Sabbath. The next morning feeling his approaching death, he sent for Master Belcanqual to pray with him, who in his prayer desired the Lord, if he pleased, to prolong his life for the good of his Church: whereupon he said, I am weary of this life, all my desire is that I may enjoy that celestiall life that is hid with Christ in God. And a while after he prayed again, saying, Hast Lord, and doe not tarry: I am a weary both of nights and daies: Come Lord Jesus, that I may come to thee: Break these eye-strings, and give me others: I desire to be dissolved, and to be with thee: Hast Lord Jesus, and defer no longer: Go forth my weak life, and let a better succeed: O Lord Jesus thrust thy hand into my body, and take my soul to thy self: O my sweet Lord, set this soul of mine free, that it may enjoy her husband. And when one of the standers by said Sir, Let nothing trouble you; for now your Lord makes hast; he said, O welcome message, would to God my funerals might be to morrow. And thus continued he in such heavenly prayers and speeches, till he quietly resigned up his spirit unto God, Anno Christi 1598, and of his age 43.

The Life of Nicolas Hemingius, who dyed Anno Christi 1600.

Nicolas Hemingius was born at Loland in Denmark, Anno Christi 1513, of obscure, but honest parents; but his Father dying when he was young, his Uncle, who was a Black smith, brought him up carefully in learning, placing him in the School at Nystadia, where he continued ten years: Then in the School of Naschovia, where he remained three years. His Birth and Parentage. His Education.

From thence he removed to Nykopin, where also he remained three years: And from thence to a School in Zealand, where likewise he continued three years. At last he came to Roschildia, where hearing there was one Benedict, a famous learned man, and a good Grecian, that read at Lunden, he went thither, and was under him three years. And Benedict, perceiving his excellent wit, his diligence, and modesty, was very helpfull to him. Then had Hemingius an ardent desire to goe to Wittenberg, which was made famous by Philips Melancthons Lectures, and having gotten some little money in his purse, he travelled thitherward; But by the way some theeves met him, and stripped him of all that he had; yet when he came to Wittenberg, he found the people very charitable to him, especially Melancthon. There he remained five years, and by his writing for, and attending upon richer students, and teaching some privately, he maintained himself, When he returned home, he had an ample testimony from Melancthon for his excellent wit and learning. He studies Greek. He is robbed. Charity. His Industry.

A while after his return, he was intertained by Olaus Nicolas to teach his daughters. And from thence he was chosen Pastor at Hafnia, and accordingly ordained to it; which place he discharged with much diligence, and faithfulnesse. And when many young students resorted to him, he read privately to them: And by his extraordinary paines gat so much credit, that shortly after he was chosen Hebrew Professor in that University. In which he read Hebrew and Logick, to the great benefit of many. And about the same time he printed that excellent Book De Methodo, which he dedicated to Christian the third, King of Denmark, who bountifully rewarded him for the same. His return Home. He is Pastor of Hafnia.

Anno Christi 1578 he was made Doctor in Divinity, and performed the office of a Divinity Professor with admirable diligence and pains for six and twenty years together; as appeares by those many excellent Books published by him in that time. He is Hebrew Professor. And Doctor Anno Christi 1579, when he was grown old, and exhausted with his daily labours, Frederick the second King of Denmark, gave him a liberall Pension, upon which he lived contentedly and comfortably all the remainder of his daies: Yet neither then was he idle, but imployed his time in writing, and publishing of Books.

Some years before is death he grew blind, and was troubled with several diseases, desiring nothing more then that he might be dissolved, and be with Christ. A little before his death he expounded the 103 Psalm, with so much fervor, efficacy, and power of the Holy Ghost, that all that heard him wondered at it, and shortly after resigned up his spirit unto God, Anno 1600. and of his age 87. The Life of James Heerbrand, who dyed Anno Christi 1600.

His Birth and Parentage.

His Education.

James Heerbrand was born at Noricum, Anno Christi 1521. of an ancient Family. His Father was one of Luther's Disciples, and seeing the towardlinesse and promptnesse of his son, was carefull to bring him up in Religion and Learning.

At seven years old he set him to School; and yet had a watchfull eye over him, to carry on the work of piety, requiring him to repeat every Sermon that he heard. At twelve years old his Father bought him a fair Bible, which he diligently read over, and used all his life after. His Father also perceiving that naturally he was much inclined to Musick, he would not suffer him to learn it, lest it should be an empediment to him in his other studies. And so when he had been sufficiently grounded in Grammar-learning, he was sent to Ulm, where the Colloquies of Erasmus were publickly read; But Pope Paul, suspecting that that Book might do much hurt amongst youth, because it discovered many errors and vices of the Papists, forbade the use of it; yet this caused it more to be read, especially by Heerbrand, who gat much good by it.

He goes to Ulm.

And to Wittenberg.

At Ulm also he studied the Arts and Tongues, and at seventeen years old his Father sent him to Wittenberg, to hear Luther, and Melancthon, in the year 1538. which year was famous for divers things: For then the Kingdome of Denmark embraced the Gospel; The Emperour and King of France met together to treat of peace: The Bible was printed in English at Paris: The University of Strasborough was erected: The Sect of the Antinomians was detected: The Marques of Brandenburg imbraced the Augustane Confession: And the Sea by the Kingdome of Naples was wholly dry for eight miles together, out of which place fire, and ashes, brake forth so abundantly, that many places were miserably destroyed thereby.

Mirabilis annus.

A Prodigy.

His Studiousnes.

In the University of Wittenberg, Heerbrand studied the Arts with great diligence, and was so sparing of his time, that he would not intermit one hour from his studies; insomuch that other students called him Suevicam Noctuam, the Swevian Night-crow. He heard Luther and Melancthons Lectures with much diligence, as also Bugenhag reading upon Deuteronomie, Cruciger sen. upon Saint John, George Major reading private Lectures upon Genesis: Besides which he attended the publick Sermons of these famous men, which he wrote, repeated, meditated on, and laboured to rivet in his memory.

He is Master of Arts.

His return Home.

Anno Christi 1540 he commenced Master of Arts. He preached also abroad in the villages on the Sabbath dayes. And thus having spent five years in his studies, he returned home with an ample testimony from Melancthon, and the University.

When he came home, the Pastors of the Church appointed him to Preach, which he performed with great approbation, and commendation of all. His Parents rejoycing much at his proficiency, would needs have him employ his Talent in his own country, and at Stutgard, Snepfius (being Superientendent) examined him and finding his abilities, said, Dominus te mihi obtulit, the Lord hath offered thee unto me. Being but twenty two years old he was made Deacon at Tubing. In which employment he continued six years, and followed his studies in that University. He also privately read Mathematick Lectures to many; and sometimes preached in the Castle of Tubing before Prince Ulrick, who loved him very well, and told his Courtiers that he would prove a great Divine.

He is made Deacon.

His Diligence.

The year 1546 was fatal by the death of Luther; and the war of the Emperour began against the Duke of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Hesse.

His Marriage.

Anno Christi 1547, Heerbrand married a wife, Margaret the daughter of Conrade Stamler, Consul of Tubing, by whom he had eight sons, and three daughters.

Anno

Anno Christ 1548 came forth that accurſed Interim, at which time Heerbrand, amongſt other Miniſters that rejected it, was baniſhed from Tubing: And being out of employment, he ſtudied Hebrew, till Prince Ulrick being dead, his Son Chriſtopher, who ſucceeded him, called back the Miniſters, and Heerbrand amongſt them, to their former places. He alſo made him Paſtor of Herrenberg. He is baniſhed. His return.

Anno Chriſti 1550. he Commenced Doctor in Divinity, and the Councill of Trent beginning about this time, Heerbrand perceiving with what Weapons he was to fight with the Popiſh Doctors, applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of the Fathers, and ſpent four years and a half therein, gathering their opinions about all the points of Divinity which he digeſted into Common-places, that they might be the readier for his uſe. He is Doctor.

Anno Chriſti 1559. he was ſent for by Charles, Marqueſſe of Baden, to reform Religion in his Dominions, where alſo he preſcribed a Form for Ordination of Miniſters. He had ſcarce continued there two moneths, when he was choſen to be the Divinity Profeſſor at Tubing, and expounded the Pentateuch in his Lectures, and Preached conſtantly: Beſides which Publick imployments, he wrote a large anſwer to Peter a Soto De Eccleſia, Patribus, & Conciliis, which was afterwards Printed. Reformation.

Anno Chriſti 1557. which was two years after he came to Tubing, he was choſen Rector of the Univerſity, a place, as of great honour, ſo of great pains: After which he was choſen Chancellor of the Univerſity, and the Paſtor and Superintendent of the Church. His Preferments.

Anno Chriſti 1569. his fame ſpreading abroad, he was ſent for by the Duke of Saxony to be the Profeſſor at Jenes, who profered to allow him the Stipend of a thouſand Florens, Per annum, but he refuſed it, continuing at Tubing, where he had much honour and reſpect. And having been thus invited by three ſeveral Princes, all which he refuſed, and reſolving to ſpend his days at Tubing, his Prince Chriſtopher, to encourage him, gave him ſome Land, on which he built a neat houſe, and having other Family buſineſſes, he committed all to the care and diligence of his Wife, who was a conſtant help to him. His ſelf-denial.

Anno Chriſti 1590. Heerbrand being now ſeventy years old, had as much honour heaped upon him as the Dukedome of Wirtemberg could afford: For he was made Counſellor to the Duke, Superintendent of the Church, Chancellor of the Univerſity, and Overſeer of the new Colledge; all which places he diſcharged with admirable prudence, diligence, and fidelity.

His Wife having lived with him fifty years and a half, dyed, who was the ſtaffe of his old Age, and therefore he was much afflicted with her loſſe, and began to grow weaker and weaker; which cauſed him Anno Chriſti 1598. to reſign his Office, and thereupon had a ſtipend allowed him by his Prince. His next care was to prepare himſelf for Death. He was much troubled with the Gout, which he bore with much Patience, often uſing that ſaying of the Apoſtle, Godlineſs is profitable to all things, having the promiſe of this Life, and that which is to come. At laſt he fell into a Lethargy, and ſo dyed, Anno Chriſti 1600. and of his Age ſeventy nine. His wives Death. His Sickneſſe. His Patience. His Death.

He was exceeding ſtudious all his life long, having his Books, Ink, and Paper at his Beds head, ſo that as ſoon as his firſt ſleep was over, he applyed himſelf to them for ſome hours. And though he had great honours, yet they never puft up his heart with Pride, but he ſtill carryed himſelf very humbly: He lived in the fear of God, was very Charitable, and open handed to the Poor, and to Exiles, eſpecially to poor Students. He was very carefull to aſſiſt other Churches, ſo that Princes, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles out of Auſtria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Hungary were continually ſending to him for advice in their difficult Affairs. His humility and Charity. His Prudence.

His Father-in-Law having beſtowed a Farm upon him, he was a neat Husband upon it, Planting Orchards, Vineyards, and ſuch other things as might make it moſt pleaſant and profitable. He was very carefull in the Education of his A good Father.

Children, bringing them up in Religion and Learning, and keeping them under ſevere Diſcipline. He was of a very healthful conſtitution, never being troubled with any ſickneſs till towards his latter end.

The Life of David Chytræus, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1600.

His Birth and Education

David Chytræus was born in Ingelſing in Sweveland, Anno Chriſti 1530. of Godly and Religious Parents, who ſeeing his towardlineſs, and ingenuous Nature, were careſull to Educate him both in Religion and Learning; The Principles whereof he drunk in with ſuch Celerity, that his Father took much pleaſure in him, and became an earneſt and frequent Suiter unto God, That his Son might be fitted for, and imployed in the Work of the Miniſtry; And for this end, when he was ſcarce ſeven years old, he ſent him to School to Gemminga, and after two years ſtay there, he removed him to Tubing, where he was Educated under excellent Schoolmaſters, and afterwards admitted into that Univerſity, and whilſt he was very young he commenced Batchelor of Arts, ſtudied the Languages, Arts, and Divinity under Snepfius.

He is ſent to Tubing. His great proficiency.

In all which he profited ſo exceedingly, that at fifteenth years old he Commenced Maſter of Arts, with the generall Approbation of the Univerſity: And preſently after (having a large Allowance from a worthy Knight, Sir Peter Mezingen) he travelled to Wittenberg, where he was entertained by Philip Melanchthon into his Family; ſo that he did not only gain much profit by his publick Lectures, but by private Converſe with him; which happyneſs he ſo eſteemed, that all his life after, he acknowledged that next under God, he was bound to Philip Melanchthon for his proficiency in Learning.

He goes to Wittenberg.

When he came firſt to Melanchthon, and delivered ſome Letters of Commendation to him in his behalf, Melanchthon finding in them that he was Maſter of Arts, looking upon him, wondered at it, ſaying, Are you a Maſter of Arts? Yea, ſaid Chytræus, it pleaſed the Univerſity of Tubing to grace me with that Degree: Can you, ſaid Melanchthon, underſtand Greek? which he affirming, he gave him Thucydides to read, and bade him Conſtrue a peice of it; which when Chytræus had done, Melanchthon enquiring his Age, and admiring his forwardneſs, ſaid unto him, Thou doſt worthily deſerve thy Degree, and hereafter thou ſhalt be as a Son unto me. Whilſt he was there, he heard Luthers Lectures upon the ten laſt Chapters of Geneſis: And as Plato, when he was ready to dye praiſed God for three things, firſt, that God had made him a Man; ſecondly, that he was born in Greece; thirdly, that he lived in the time of Socrates: So did Chytræus alſo acknowledge it as a ſingular Mercy; firſt, that God had made him a Man; ſecondly, a Chriſtian; thirdly, that he had his Education under thoſe excellent lights of the Church, Luther and Melanchthon.

Plato praiſes God for three things

He was very diligent in attending upon Melanchthon, ſtudyed in his ſtudy, heard all his Diſcourſes Publick, and Private, about matters of the weightieſt Concernment; followed him when he walked abroad, and endeavoured wholly to faſhion his Life by his example: And Melanchthon looked upon him as his own Son, and uſed to call him ſuum Davidem, his David.

Preſently after Luthers death, the Wars in Germany breaking forth under Charles the fifth, the Univerſity of Wittenberg was diſſipated by reaſon of the ſame; whereupon upon Chytræus went to Heidleberg, where he ſtudied Hebrew, and from thence went to Tubing, where he applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of the Mathematicks: But when Prince Maurice of Saxony had reſtored the Univerſity, and called back Melanchthon, he preſently returned to Wittenberg, where he buckled cloſe to his former ſtudies, fearing the like interruption again. He goes to Heidleberg.

And Anno Chriſti 1548 he began privately to read to young Students, by which means having gotten ſome money in his purſe, he reſolved to travel into Italie, and other parts, that ſo he might ſee thoſe famous places, which he had often read of, and grow into acquaintance with the eminent men of thoſe times: For which end (having gotten him a faithful companion [Andrew Martin of Roſtoch] he travelled through moſt parts of Italy: And being returned to Wittenberg, Melanchthon was requeſted to ſend two learned men to Roſtoch for the advancement of that Univerſity, whereupon he commended John Aurifaber, and Chytræus to them, who accordingly went thither, and began their Lectures to the great ſatisfaction of the Auditors, and in a ſhort time Chytræus grew ſo famous for his learning, virtue, diligence, and excellent dexterity in teaching, that firſt Chriſtian King of Denmark; and afterward the Senate of Auſpurg ſent for him to come to them. His travels. He goes to Roſtoch. He is deſired in divers Places.

He was deſired alſo by the Univerſity of Strasborough to ſucceed Hedio lately dead: Alſo Frederick the ſecond, Prince Elector Palatine, ſent earneſtly for him to come to Heidleberg; But his Prince, John Albert, would by no means part with him.

Two years after he travelled into Friſland, Brabant, Flanders, and other of the Belgick Provinces. Upon his returne the Elector Palatine, Otho Henry, ſent again for him to come to Heidleberg; and the King of Denmark profered to double his ſtipend if he would come to him; But his anſwer to them both was, that his Prince had dealt ſo friendly with him that he could by no means leave him. Some years after the Nobility of Madgeburg ſent to requeſt his preſence and aſſiſtance in Reforming Religion, and rejecting Popery from amongſt them; but when he could not go himſelf, he wrote his mind fully to them about the ſame. His travels.

About that time he commenced Doctor in Divinity at the charges of his Prince. He is Doctor.

Anno Chriſti 1565 the Senate of Stralſund ſent for him to be their Superintendent, and the King of Sweden alſo deſired him to come thither, but nothing would prevail to get him from Roſtoch.

The year after his Prince took him with him to the Diet at Auſpurg, where matters of Religion were to be debated. At which time, Ambaſſadors came to him again from Strasborough to requeſt his remove thither, and he gave them ſome hope of aſſenting, if his Princes good will could be procured; but he would by no means part with him, and to expreſs his love, he profered to enlarge his ſtipend, but Chytræus refuſed the ſame. He goes to Augspurg. His Contentation.

Two years after, he was ſent for into Auſtria to aſſiſt them in the Reformation which they intended; whither he went, and gave them ſuch full ſatisfaction, that they ſent him back with an ample teſtimony of his abilities, and integrity. 1569. He goes into Auſtria.

When he had finiſhed his buſineſs in Auſtria, he took a journey into Hungarie, where he viſited many of the chief Cities in that Kingdom. His travels.

Anno Chriſti 1571 his Prince made him the chief Viſitor of all the Churches in his Dominions. He aſſiſted alſo in the work of Reformation at Berline. Then the Marqueſſe of Brandenburg ſent for him to be the Divinity Profeſſor at Franckfurt upon Order, but could not obtain him. Two years after, the States of Stiriar ſent for him to help them in Reforming their Churches, whither he went for half a year, and was exceeding uſeful to them in that work. At his return he was ſent for by the Elector of Saxonie, and the Univerſity of Wittenberg to be a Profeſſor there; but they could not prevaile with him. He goes into Stiria.

The year after the Duke of Brunſwick, being to erect an Univerſity at Juliers, ſent to him to aſſiſt in making Laws for the Univerſity, in chooſing of Profeſſors, &c. Which he diſpatched to his great content.

Shortly after he went to divers Meetings of Divines in ſeveral places, about procuring and ſetling the peace of the Churches of Chriſt.

Whilſt he was at Roſtoch he went over in his Lectures the greateſt part of the Old, and New Teſtament; and wrote divers other Learned Books. When he grew into years he began to be Diſeaſed, and ſometimes was confined to his Bed; yet neither there would he be idle, but upon the leaſt intermiſſion of his Pain, went on with his Expoſition of the two and thirtieth Pſalm, which he had begun before: And after that, in Commenting upon the Epiſtle to the Romans. But his Diſeaſe increaſing (whereby he diſcerned the Approaching of his end) he made a Confeſſion of his Faith, Received the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and not long after quietly ſlept in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1600. and of his Age ſeventy.

His Death.

Whilſt he lay ſick in his Bed, if any preſent had diſcourſed about a Controverſall Point, raiſing himſelf up, he would call to them to ſpeak out, ſaying, that he ſhould dye with the more comfort, if he could learn any new thing before his departure.

His Character.

He was a truly good Man, who directed all his employment not to his private gain and glory, but to the Glory of God, and to the furtherance of the Salvation of others Souls.

He obtained of his Princes of Megapoll to beſtow Thirty five hundred Crowns of yearly revenues upon the Univerſity of Roſtoch. He was always ready to aſſiſt with his Counſel any that repaired to him.

Injuries to be Born.

His wiſhes.

He was very courteous and affable, exceeding patient under great Afflictions, and perſwaded others for peace-ſake, to put up many wrongs. He often turned a deaf Ear to calumnies and lies, uſing to ſay, Qui neſcit ferre calumnias, obtrectationes, convitia, injurias, ille vivere neſcit. He knows not how to live that knows not how to bear wrongs, &c. He had theſe Wiſhes often in his mouth, Utinam ambitio, & avaritia exanimis hominum radicitùs tolleretur! utinam publicæ tranquilitatis cauſa magni viri remitterent invicem ſimultates! utinam reges ac potentes rerum Domini majorem Eccleſiæ, ac Scholarum curam ſuſciperent, &c. In difficult matters he was never raſh to declare his Judgement.

His Private Life was very exemplary by reaſon of his Indefatigable Studies, his Diligence in his Office, his Piety, Modeſty, Sobriety, Chaſtity, Liberality, and other Virtues. He was of a Melancholly temper, and moſt deſirous of Learning.

The Life of Alexander Nowel, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1601.

Alexander Nowel was born in the County of Lancaſter, Anno Chriſti 1511, of an ancient and worſhipfull Family, and at thirteen years old was ſent to Oxford, and admitted a member of Braſennoſe Colledge, where he ſtudied thirteen years, and grew very famous both for Religion and Learning. His Birth and Parentage. His Education.

In Queen Maries dayes, he, amongſt many others, left the Kingdom, that he might enjoy his conſcience, and returning when Queen Elizabeth, of bleſſed memory, came to the Crown, ſhe made him Dean of Pauls, where he was a frequent and faithfull Preacher, His flight in Perſecution. He is made Dean of Pauls.

By his writings he defended the truth againſt ſome Engliſh Popiſh Renegadoes. For thirty years together he preached the firſt and laſt Sermons in Lent before the Queen, wherein he dealt plainly, and faithfully with her. He was a great Benefactor to Braſenoſe Colledge, where he had his firſt education. He was the enlarger of Pauls School, made the threefold Catechiſm which was much uſed long after. He was very charitable to the poor, eſpecially to poor Scholars: A great comforter of afflicted conſciences. He lived till he was ninety years old, and yet neither the eyes of his mind, nor body, waxed dim: And dyed peaceably in the Lord Anno Chriſti 1601. His Charity. His Works His Death.

D. TOSSANVS

The Life of Daniel Tossanus, who dyed Anno Christi 1602.

His Birth and Education.

Daniel Tossanus was born at Mombelgart in Wirtemberg, Anno Christi 1541. His Father was Minister in that twon about six and thirty years, who carefully brought up this his son in learning, and at fourteen years old sent him to the University of Basil, where he continued two years, and then he commenced Batchelor of Arts.

He goes to Basil. Thence to Tubing.

From thence Anno Christi 1557 he went to Tubing, and was there maintained to his studyes for two years more by the bounty of Prince Christopher, who did it for his Fathers sake, who for many years had deserved so well of the Church of Mombelgart.

He is Master of Arts.

Our Daniel whilst he was at Tubing applyed himself to the study of Humane Arts and Philosophy, in which he profited so eminently in a short space, that at the end of two years he was made Master of Arts, and then was sent for back by his father to Mombelgart, where he preached for a while, and then went to Paris to learn the French Tongue, and to proceed in his other studies.

He goes to Paris. Thence to Orleance.

Anno Christi 1560 he went from Paris to Orleance, where he read Hebrew publickly, and after a while was made Deacon in that Church, and two years after Minister, Anno Christi 1562 and of his age twenty one, which place he undertook there rather than in his own countrey, partly becaus of the great want of Pastors in the French Churches, as also becaus he agreed with them in his judgement about the manner of Christs presence in the Sacrament.

A famous Church at Orleance.

At this time there was the most flourishing Church in all France in Orleance, consisting of above seven thousand persons, that had excellent Pastors over them: Into the number of which our Daniel being admitted, not long after he resolved to marry, and accordingly, viz. 1565 he married Mary Covet of Paris, whose Father had been Advocate to the Queen-Mother in the Parliament of Paris, and whose Mother being a Widdow, and having embraced the Reformed Religion, transplanted her self with her two daughters to Orleance, for the freer exercise of her Religion.

His Marriage.

Whilst

Whilſt he was there, the Civil Wars brake out between the Papiſts & Proteſtants; and Francis Duke of Guiſe beſieged the City of Orleance, where Monſieur de Andelot, Brother to the Admiral of France, commanded in chief: Toſſan continued there all the time of the Siege, and took extraordinary pains in inſtructing, exhorting, and encouraging both Citizens and Souldiers; and when the City was in great danger to be loſt, one Poltrot, who had devoted his life for his Countries ſafety, went out, and ſlew the Duke of Guiſe under the walls, whereupon the ſiege was raiſed, and the Church there preſerved almoſt miraculouſly from ruin.

Wars in France.

Duke of Guiſe ſlain.

Gods mercy.

Anno Chriſti 1567, there brake out a ſecond Civill War; at which time the Papiſts in Orleance conſpired together to deſtroy all the Proteſtants, ſo that they were every hour in danger of being Butchered; But it pleaſed God ſeaſonably to ſend Monſieur Novie with a ſmall party of Souldiers, who entring the City, and joyning with the Proteſtants, drave out ſome of the Papiſts, and diſarmed the reſt. But after that famous battel at St. Denis, wherein ſo many of both ſides were ſlain and wounded, Peace was again concluded.

Popiſh malice.

Yet did the Papiſts quickly brake it, and a great Company of Souldiers entering into Orleance, began to breath forth Threatnings againſt the Church of Chriſt, eſpecially againſt the Miniſters of it. Hereupon Toſſan was in great danger, inſomuch that when he went into the Church to Preach, he knew not whether he ſhould return alive; and that which moſt troubled him was, the fear that he had of his Wife and two ſmall Children. Beſides, he never went to the Congregation, but ſome threw ſtones, others ſhot Bullets at him; and their rage grew ſo great, that they burned down the Barn wherein the Church uſed to meet together; and every day he heard of one or other of their Members that were ſlain, ſo that he was compelled ſeveral times to change his Lodging: yet one day the Souldiers caught him, and pretended that they would carry him out of the City but indeed intended to have Murthered him, whereupon his Wife, great with Child, ran to the Governour, and with much importunity prevailed with him that her Husband might ſtay in the City.

Popiſh malice.

He is in great danger.

And not long after brake out the third Civill War, at which time the Popiſh Souldiers that beſieged Orleance were ſo enraged that they burned all the places where the Church uſed to meet, and barbarouſly ſlew above eighty of the Faithfull Servants of Chriſt in them; yet it pleaſed God miraculouſly to preſerve the Miniſters in that great danger; and Toſſan with his Colleagues, by the help of ſome of the faithfull, was conveighed privately out of the City in the Night; but whilſt he ſought to hide him in a wood, he fell into an ambuſh, and was taken and carried priſoner into a Caſtle not far off from Orleance.

A miracle of Mercy.

He is taken Priſoner.

His Wife which ſtayed behind in the City, hearing this ſad news, left no means untryed for his delivery; and at laſt, for a great Sum of Money, ſhe procured his releaſe, whereupon he went to Agrimont; and his wife putting her ſelf into the habit of a Maid-ſervant, went towards Agrimont after him, where Renata, the daughter of Lewis the twelfth of France, and Dowager of Ferrara, lived in a very ſtrong Caſtle, and was a great friend to the Proteſtants, entertaining many that fled to her for ſuccour.

His releaſe.

But as his Wife was going thitherward after him, ſhe was taken by ſome Souldiers, and carryed back to the Governour of Orleance; But it pleaſed God to ſtir up the Governours Wife and Daughters to intercede for her, by whoſe importunity ſhe was ſet free, and had leave to goe to Agrimont, whither it pleaſed God to carry her in ſafety through a thouſand Dangers, and where ſhe found her Huſband.

Gods mercy.

And whilſt ſhe was there, ſhe was brought to Bed of a Daughter, to which the Dutcheſſe was God-Mother: But the King of France hearing that his Aunt the Dutcheſſe had ſheltered many of the Proteſtants, ſent to her to turn them all out of her Caſtle, or elſe he would preſently beſiege it, and ſlay them all. Upon which Meſſage, Toſſan, with his wife and three Children, went preſently to Sancerra, which was the neareſt place of ſafety. There went alſo along with him two or three hundred Waggons loaden with Children, and in their paſſage there lay many Troops of the

The Kings Malice.

He goes to Sancerra.

Gods mercy. the enemies, especially at a River over which they were to pass, purposing to destroy them all; But it pleased God to stir up some Protestants thereabouts to horse, and arm themselves, and to proffer themselves as a guard to these Waggons, who fought often with their enemies, and by Gods special providence conducted them all in safety to Sancerra.

He goes to Mombelgart. There Tossan continued a year, and then, with his wife, and one or two of his children, he went to Mombelgart to visit his Father and friends, and because (the wars being but lately ended in France) the Church of Orleance could not suddenly gather themselves together, he continued, and preached in his Fathers place, who was now grown old, for a year. But some Ministers of Stutgard accused him for preaching

His new Troubles. Calvinism and Zuinglinism, and would have him to revoke, and recant the same, or else he must preach no more in publick. They also summoned him to appear at Stutgard to give an account of his opinions, and by conference with them to reforme the same, framing himself wholly to their mindes, upon which onely condition they would let him live in his own country, and preach therein.

Hereupon he wrote an Apology to the Senate at Stutgard, shewing the reasons why at that time he could not goe thither; and Anno Christi 1571 when it had pleased God after those terrible storms to restore peace to the Church at Orleance, he was called back thither: Yet the times were not so peaceable that he could preach there, but he preached to his people in a Castle not far from it, which belonged to Hierom Grostotius, a most godly Noble man, and there repaired to hear him out of the City, a very great multitude of people, whom the Popish party, at their return home, received with many scornes and reproaches, threatning ere long to fire the Castle and all that were in it; yet did the faithfull overcome all dangers with their constancy, and Tossan living with that Nobleman, performed his Pastoral office with all diligence, and fidelity, though at that time he was very sickly.

He preaches in a Castle. Popish rage.

The Massacre at Paris. Anno Christi 1572 brake forth that abominable Massacre at Paris, wherein Charls the ninth, falsifying his faith, caused the Admiral of France, with many Noblemen, and Gentlemen, Doctors, Pastors, Advocates, and Professors to be so inhumanely butchered, that a more horrid villany was never heard of in the world before it: At which time amongst others, this Hieronimus Grostotius was also murthered.

The newes of this Massacre comming to Orleance, the Papists rejoyced and sung, seeking to murther and destroy all the Protestants that were in, and about that City: Tossan at this time was in the Castle with the wife of Grostotius, who heard of the Massacre, and the Murther of her husband at Paris; and it pleased God so to order it, that a certain Popish Nobleman, as he was travelling towards Paris, was turned aside into this Castle to enquire after news, just at the same time when this sad news was brought thither: But he, supposing that it was impossible that the Protestants which were so numerous there, could be so easily suppressed, and thinking rather that they stood upon their defence, resolved to return home again, and took with him this Lady,

A special providence. with Tossan, and his wife, and children. Thus it pleased God that he was delivered from certain destruction by the humanity, and industry of a Papist: For the very next Popish cruelty. Morning the inhabitants of Orleance came to that Castle, brake open the Gates, slew some maids that were left to keep it, plundered all, and amongst the rest, Tossans goods, and Library, raging extreamely that they had missed their prey which they most sought after.

This Noblemans House, that carried them with him, was near to Argimont: But Tossan apprehending himself not safe there, with his wife, and children removed to another place where he was acquainted, and presently after the Dutches of Ferrara sent for him, and his Family, his wife being again great with childe, and hid them in a Turret in her Castle, and sustained, and fed them there. And when the rage of the Papists was somewhat abated, he, with his wife, and children travelled through many dangers into Germany, and shortly after was sent for by that pious Prince Fredrick the third, Elector Palatine, to come to him to Heidleberg, whither he went with his Family, and where he found so much love and bounty from the Prince and his Courtiers, and the Academicks, that he almost forgot his former miseries.

Gods mercy.

He goes to the Dutches of Ferrara.

He goes into the Palatinate.

All

All the while that he lived in Heidleberg, he was Preacher to the Elector, shewing such Faithfullneſſe, Diligence, Candour, and other Virtues as became a Faithfull Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, whereby he was very dear to the Elector, who often conſulted with him about the waitieſt matters of Religion: And An. Ch. 1575. he ſent him with ſome other of his Faithful Counſellors to Amberg to viſit the Churches, and to compoſe ſome Controverſies which were ſprung up amongſt them about matters of Religion, which truſt he performed with ſingular Zeal, and Diligence. His Faithfulneſſe.

But the World being unworthy of ſuch a Prince, it pleaſed God to take him away, Anno Chriſti 1576. four years after Toſſan came thither. And his Son Lodwick a Lutherane ſucceeding him, Toſſan amongſt ſome others, was diſmiſſed: But Prince Caſſimire [Lodwicks Brother] who knew the Impoſtures of the Ubiquitarians better than his Brother, and who had undertaken to defend that Faith whereof his Father had made a Confeſſion in his Will, called him to Neoſtade, and placed him over the Churches there: And after Urſins Death, made him Profeſſor in that Univerſity. In which place he Interpreted the Holy Scripture. He is diſmiſed. He is called to Neoſtade.

He alſo undertook the care of the Church, which was Collected of the Exiles, who wanted a Paſtor; and Preached to them in the French Tongue. Anno Chriſti 1578. He was Moderator in a Synod at Neoſtade: And Prince Caſſimire did always eſteem ſo highly of his Adviſe, and Counſell, that he ſent for him often, neither would determine any thing in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs without his aſſent: And when Princes and Ambaſſadors came to Neoſtade, being moved with his fame, they would always viſit him, and received ſuch abundant ſatisfaction by converſe with him, that ever after they held correſpondence with him. His painfulneſs. He is much eſteemed.

Shortly after Lodwick the Elector Palatine dying, Caſſimire was made Guardian to his Son, during his Minority, whereupon he ſent for Toſſan to Heidleberg, that by his Adviſe, and Counſell he might Reform the Churches: But when he came thither, his Adverſaries loured exceedingly upon him, and raiſed many falſe reports, but he remembered that of Seneca, Vir bonus, quod honeſte ſe facturum Putaver, faciet, etiam ſi periculoſum ſit: ab honeſto nulla re deterrebitur: ad turpia nulla ſpe invitabitur. An honeſt Man will do that which he judges right, though it be dangerous: He will not be deterred from that which is honeſt, by any means; he will be allured to that which is diſhoneſt, by no means. He is ſent for to Heidleberg. His oppoſition.

His Adverſaries in their Pulpits daily cryed out of ſtrange Hereſies, that he and his party held. But Prince Caſſimire firſt ſent for them to argue the caſe before him, and then appointed a Publick diſputation, wherein they could prove none of thoſe things which they charged him with; whereupon the Prince required them to abſtain from ſuch Accuſations for the time to come, and to ſtudy Peace. But nothing would prevail to allay their Spleen, till they were removed into other Countries.

The care of chooſing Paſtors to the Churches, Tutors to the young Prince, Schoolmaſters, and Profeſſors to the Univerſity, was divolved upon Toſſan; all which he diſcharged with much fidelity.

Anno Chriſti 1586. James Grynæus, the chief Profeſſor in Heidleberg was called home to Baſil, in whoſe room Toſſanus (though very unwilling) was ſubſtituted; and therefore to ſatisfie the Statutes of the Univerſity, he Commenced Doctor in Divinity. But as his cares, and paines increaſed, ſo his ſorrow alſo, partly by reaſon of an unhappy Quarrel that fell out between the Students, and Citizens of Heidleberg, partly by the death of his dear Wife with whom he had lived twenty two years in Wedlock, which fell out in the year 1587. and therefore Anno Chriſti 1588. he married again, and diſpoſed of his daughters alſo in marriage to Godly, and Learned men. He is made Profeſſor. Commenceth Doctor. His manifold afflictions.

Not long after Prince Caſſimire dyed, which much renewed his grief: But Frederick the fourth, being now come to his Age, was admitted into the number Prince Caſſimire dyeth.

of the Electors, and was very carefull of the good, both of the Church, and Universsity.

A great Plague. His constancy.

Anno Christi 1594. Tossan was chosen Rector of the Universsity of Heidleberg, and the year after there brake out a grievous Pestilence in that City, which drove away the Students. But Tossan remained Preaching comfortably to his people, and expounding the Penitentiall Psalmes to those few Students that yet remained.

His weaknesse.

Anno Christi 1601. he being grown very old, and infirme, laid down his Professors place, though the Universsity much opposed, and earnestly solicited him to retain it still; But God purposed to give him a better rest after all his Labours, and sorrows: For having in his Lectures Expounded the Book of Job to the end of the Thirty one Chapter, he concluded with those words; The words of Job are ended. Presently after falling sick, he comforted himself with these Texts of Scripture, I have fought the good Fight of Faith, &c. Be thou Faithfull unto the Death, and I will give thee a Crown of Life: We have a City not made with hands, Eternall in the Heavens, and many other such like. He also made his Will, and set down therein a good Confession of his Faith, and so departed quietly in the Lord, Anno Christi 1602. and of his Age sixty one.

His faith.

His Death.

His Character.

He was a very Holy Man, exemplary in his Life: Had an excellent Wit; strong Memory: Eloquent in speech, was very Charitable, and chearfull in his Conversation, and kept Correspondence with all the Choisest Divines in those times.

His Works

He wrote many things which were afterwards digested into Tomes: and some of his works were published after his death by his Son.

THE

W. PERKINS

The Life of William Perkins, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1602.

William Perkins was born at Marſton in Warwickſhire, Anno 1558. and brought up at School; from which he went to Chriſt's Colledge in Cambridge, where he profited ſo much in his Studies, that having got the grounds of all the liberal Arts, he was choſen Fellow of that Colledge in the twenty fourth year of Queen Elizabeth. His Birth and Education.

He was very wild in his youth, but the Lord in mercy was pleaſed to reclaim him, that he might be an eminent inſtrument of good in his Church. When he firſt entred into the Miniſtry, being moved with pity towards their ſouls, he prevailed with the Jaylor to bring the Priſoners (fettered as they were) to the Shire-houſe hard by the Priſon, where he Preached every Lord's day to them; & it pleaſed God ſo to proſper and ſucceed his labors amongſt them, that he was the happy inſtrument of converting many of them unto God: Freeing them thereby from the Captivity of ſin, which was their worſt bondage. His converſion. He preaches to the Priſoners. He converts many of them.

This his practice being once known, many reſorted to that place out of the neighbor-Pariſhes to hear him: So that from thence he was choſen to Saint Andrews Pariſh in Cambridge, where he Preached all his life after. He is choſen Paſtor.

His Sermons were not ſo plain, but the piouſly learned did admire them; nor ſo learned, but the plain did underſtand them. He brought the Schools into the Pulpit, and unſhelling their controverſies out of their hard School-tearms, made thereof plain and wholſom meat for his people. He was an excellent Chirurgion at the jointing of a broken Soul, and at ſtating of a doubtfull conſcience, ſo that the afflicted in ſpirit came far and near to him, and received much ſatisfaction, and comfort by him. Preachers pattern. His Character.

In his Sermons he uſed to pronounce the word Damn with ſuch an Emphaſis, as leſt a dolefull Echo in his auditors ears a good while after: And when he was Catechiſt in Chriſts Colledge, in expounding the Commandements, he applied them ſo home to Note. The powerfulneſſe of his miniſtry.

the conſcience, as was able to make his hearers hearts fall down, and their haires almoſt to ſtand upright. But in his old age he was more milde, often profeſſing that to Preach mercy was the proper Office of the Miniſters of the Goſpel.

His dexterity in Reading.

In his life he was ſo pious, and ſpotleſſe, that Malice was afraid to bite at his credit, into which ſhe knew that her teeth could not enter. He had a rare felicity in reading of Books, and as it were, but turning them over, would give an exact account of all that was conſiderable therein: He peruſed Books ſo ſpeedily that one would think he read nothing, and yet ſo acurately that one would think he read all. He was of a cheerfull nature, and pleaſant diſpoſition: Somewhat reſerved to ſtrangers, but when once acquainted, very familiar.

His painfulneſs.

Beſides his frequent Preaching, he wrote many excellent Books, both Treatiſes and Commentaries, which for their worth were many of them tranſlated into Latine, and ſent beyond ſea, where to this day they are highly prized, and much ſet by, yea ſome of them are tranſlated into French, High-Dutch, and Low-Dutch; and his Reformed Catholick was tranſlated into Spaniſh alſo, yet no Spaniard ever ſince durſt take up the Gantlet of Defiance caſt down by this Champion: He died in the forty fourth year of his age of a violent fit of the Stone, Anno Chriſti 1602, being born the firſt, and dying the laſt year of Queen Elizabeth.

His death. He was lame of his right hand.

He was of a ruddy complexion, fat, and corpulent: Lame of his right hand, yet this Ehud with a left-handed pen did ſtab the Romiſh cauſe, as one ſaith,

Dextera quantumvis fuerat tibi manca, docendi
Pollebas mira dexteritate tamen.

Though nature thee of thy right hand bereft,
Right-well thou writeſt with thy hand that's left.

Joſh. 1. 2.

He was buried with great ſolemnity at the ſole charges of Chriſts Colledge, the Univerſity and Town ſtriving which ſhould expreſſe more ſorrow at his Funeral; Doctor Montague Preached his Funeral Sermon upon that Text, Moſes my ſervant is dead.

Maſter Perkins his manner was to go with the Priſoners to the place of execution when they were condemned, and what ſucceſſe his labours were crowned with, may appear, by this example.

A thief converted at his death.

A young luſty fellow going up the Ladder diſcovered an extraordinary lumpiſhneſſe and dejection of ſpirit, and when he turned himſelf at the upper round to ſpeak to the people, he looked with a rueful and heavy countenance, as if he had been half dead already: whereupon Maſter Perkins laboured to chear up his ſpirits, and finding him ſtill in an Agony, and diſtreſſe of mind, he ſaid unto him, What man? what is the matter with thee? art thou afraid of death? Ah no (ſaid the Priſoner, ſhaking his head) but of a worſer thing: Saiſt thou ſo? (ſaid Maſter Perkins) come down again man, and thou ſhalt ſee what Gods grace will do to ſtrengthen thee: Whereupon the priſoner coming down, Maſter Perkins took him by the hand, and made him kneel down with himſelf at the ladder foot, hand in hand, when that bleſſed man of God made ſuch an effectual prayer in confeſſion of ſins, and aggravating thereof in all circumſtances, with the horrible and eternal puniſhment due to the ſame by Gods juſtice, as made the poor priſoner burſt out into abundance of tears; and Maſter Perkins finding that he had brought him low enough, even to Hell gates, he proceeded to the ſecond part of his prayer, and therein to ſhew him the Lord Jeſus (the Saviour of all penitent, and believing ſinners) ſtretching forth his bleſſed hand of mercy, and power to ſave him in that diſtreſſed eſtate, and to deliver him from all the powers of darkneſs; which he did ſo ſweetly preſs with ſuch Heavenly art, and powerfull words of Grace upon the ſoul of the poor priſoner, as cheared him up again to look beyond death, with the eyes of Faith, to ſee how the black lines of all his ſins were croſſed, and cancelled with the red lines of his crucified Saviours precious blood; ſo graciouſly applying it to his wounded conſcience, as made him break out into new ſhowres of tears for joy of the inward conſolation which he found, and gave ſuch expreſſion of it to the beholders, as made them

Power of Prayer.

them lift up their hands, and praiſe God to ſee ſuch a bleſſed change in him; who (the prayer being ended) roſe from his knees chearfully, and went up the Ladder again, ſo comforted, and took his death with ſuch patience, and alacrity, as if he actually ſaw himſelf delivered from the Hell which he feared before, and heaven opened for the receiving of his ſoul, to the great rejoycing of the beholders.

F. JVNIVS

The Life of Francis Junius who dyed Anno Chriſti 1602.

Francis Junius was born in France of a Noble Family Anno Chriſti 1545. His Grandfather was William Lord of Boſſardineria, who for his valiant ſervice in the wars of Navar was rewarded by King Lewis the twelfth with that honour. His father was Denis, who in his youth ſtudied Law in the moſt famous Univerſities of France. His Mother was Jacoba Hugalda which bore nine children, four ſons, and five daughters; amongſt which this our Francis was born in Biturg. His Birth and Parentage.

His Mother being ſickly, the child was very weak, not likely to live one hour, and therefore was haſtily baptiſed. And during his childhood, this weakneſs continued, which falling into his left legge, cauſed a ſoare which was difficultly healed. His weakneſs in his childhood.

When he was five years old his Father began to teach him to read as his leiſure would permit. At ſix years old he began to write, and to diſcover his ingenuity; being of a pleaſant diſpoſition, very deſirous of honour, quickly angry, and for his age, of a grave judgment. He did eat his meat eagerly, was very ſhame-faced, which continued with him all his life after. His Education.

He had the publick Schoolmaſters for his inſtructers, beſides others that privately taught him at home. At twelve years old he attended the publick Lectures, and began to ſtudy the Civill Law, and his Father much encouraged and aſſiſted him therein.

Yet

His Masters harshnesse.

Yet one thing much impeded him in his first studies: For being put forth to School he met with harsh and severe Masters which used to beat him in a most cruel and barbarous manner, yet his love to learning made him conceal it from his friends.

He goes to Lions.

When he had studied Law about two years, he was sent to Lyons, to have gone with the French Ambassador to Constantinople, but coming too late, after the Ambassadors departure, he staid, and studied there, turning over many Books, whereof, in that place there were great plenty. But there he met with great temptations to evil; A woman, and a young maid labouring upon every opportunity to draw him to lewdnesse. This much troubled him, having been brought up Religiously by his Parents, whereupon he thought of returning home, but his Fathers Authority (who commanded his stay there) altred those thoughts, and so, through Gods assistance, he resisted that temptation! But presently fell into another.

His Tentations.

Gods mercy.

He is drawn to Atheism

For as he was reading over Tully de Legibus, there came a certain man to him using the words of the Epicure, Nihil curare Deum, nec sui, nec alieni; That God cares for nothing: And he so pressed it with such subtile Arguments, that he prevailed with him to suck in that damnable Principle, and so he gave up himself to vile pleasures for a year, and some-what more. But the Lord suffered him not to continue longer therein: For first in a Tumult in Lyons the Lord wonderfully delivered him from imminent death, so that he was compelled to acknowledge a Divine Providence therein: And his Father hearing the dangerous ways that his Son was misled into, sent for him home, where he carefully, and holily instructed him, and caused him to read over the New-Testament, of which himself writes thus, novum Testamentum aperio, exhibet se mihi adspectu primo augustissimum illud caput. In principio erat verbum, &c. When I opened the New-Testament, I first light upon Johns first Chapter: In the beginning was the Word, &c. I read part of the Chapter, and was suddenly convinced that the Divinity of the Argument, and the Majesty, and Authority of the Writing, did exceedingly excell all the Eloquence of humane Writings. My Body trembled, my Mind was astonished, and I was so affected all that day, that I knew not where, and what I was. Thou wast mindfull of me, O my God, according to the multitude of thy Mercies; and calledst home thy lost Sheep into thy Fold. And from that day forward he fervently bent himself to the study and practise of Piety, to the great joy, and comfort of his Father; VVho presently after sent him to Geneva, giving him only so much money as would bear his charges, intending to send more after him.

Gods mercy.

Iohn 1.

He is reclaimed.

He goes to Geneva.

But the Civill VVars presently beginning in France, he was hindred of his purpose: So that Junius when he came to Geneva, had onely so much money left as would buy him four Books, a Bible, Calvins Institutions, Beza's Confessions, and an Hebrew Grammer, which for a year together he studied with much diligence. At the end whereof he was solicited by some of his chamberfellows to travel with them into Helvetia, which he assented to, and went with them, having but little money remaining.

His travels.

In this journy he spent three weeks, and at Bern saluted Musculus, and Hallerus. At Zurick, Martyr, Bullinger, and Gualter: And at Neocom, Farel, and so returned to Geneva again.

Not long after he began to be pinched with want, and thereupon resolved each other day to dig in the Town-ditch to supply his Necessities withall. But it so fell out by Gods Providence, that a young man, a Tailor, whose Mother had formerly lived over against Junius his Mothers house in France, and had often been relieved by her, proferred him both money, and lodging in his house. VVith him therefore he lived almost seven Moneths (yet with much inconvenience to his studies) till a peace being made in France, his Father sent Mony to him.

His poverty.

A speciall Providence.

VVhilst he lived with his Host, to prevent his being burthensome to him, for four Moneths together he fasted from his Dinners, spending that time in walking, Meditation, and Prayer: And at Supper he never eat but two Eggs. But by this Abstinence, he so weakned, and dryed up his Body, that his strength was much decaied, till by the advice of his friends, changing his custome, and mending his Commons, he by degrees recovered it again.

He weakens his body by abstinence.

His

His Father, not willing that he ſhould ſtudy Divinity, ſent for him home; but he wrote to him, deſiring that for the improvement of his ſtudies, he would be-pleaſed to allow him alonger ſtay. But before his Letter came, his Father was cruelly Murthered: which ſad newes coming to him, he wrote to his Mother not to be ſollicitous for him, for that he would maintain himſelf by his own labors: And thereupon he Taught Latine, Greek, and Hebrew, to ſome Youths, and ſo followed his ſtudies beſides, that he brought his Body into a dangerous diſtemper.

His Father murthered.

His Induſtry.

It fell out alſo that about that time the Head-Schoolmaſter of Geneva dying, the Miniſter of Noſocom was ſent for to ſupply his room, and Junius was profered to Preach in his place, which he refuſed, excuſing himſelf, for that as yet he had not ſo fitted himſelf by his ſtudies for the work of the Miniſtry as he deſired.

Shortly after there came a Meſſenger from Antwerp, deſiring that a Miniſter might be ſent to the French Church that was gathered there, and Junius being judged fit for that ſervice, he was ſent thither, which fell out to be juſt at that time when the Navie went from thence to fetch a Bride for Alexander Farneſius Prince of Parma, by which means there was a great expectation of good both in Flanders, and Brabant; But it proved far otherwiſe, for the Navy ſhortly after returning, brought together with the Bride, the King of Spaines Letters Patents for the ſetling of the Spaniſh inquiſition in the Belgick Provinces.

He is choſen to Antwerp.

The inquiſition brought into the Netherlands.

For the preventing of which yoke, ſome of the Nobility met together at Bruxels, ſending for Junius to come to them; who coming, found but about twenty men together, to whom he Preached, and prayed that they might be delivered from that cruell yoke; After which they entred into conſultation how they might free themſelves from it, which was Anno Chriſti 1565. This firſt meeting was in the houſe of two Noblemen [Brothers] for which two years after they loſt their heads, and their houſe was pulled down to the ground.

Popiſh malice.

Junius was afterwards ſought for at his lodging in Antwerp, but it pleaſed God that juſt at that time he was gone to Breda to viſit the Church there, by which meanes God delivered him from that danger. Yet the enemies laid another ſnare for him, pretending a diſputation at a certain City in Flanders, at which Junius was requeſted to be preſent; but he was no ſooner come thither, and gone into his Inne, but a Townſman came running to him tell to him, that the Officers were coming to ſeize upon him: Whereupon he was conducted out at a back door, and led from one place to another, by which meanes he eſcaped the unjuſt violence of his adverſaries. Afterwards at Gaunt he was in like danger, yet the Lord wonderfully delivered him, ſo that he got to Antwerp in ſafety.

Miracles of mercy to him.

Another danger.

When he came back to Antwerp, he was not ſuffered to continue in his Paſtoral Office: Whereupon, by the advice of the Brethren, he went to Limburg, leaving his Clothes, and Library behind him, all which he there loſt: Yet neither was he there in ſafety, but ſo many ſnares were laid for him, that he eſcaped death very narrowly ſeveral times, the Almighty Lord ſtill protecting him.

He goes to Limburg.

There was near that place an old woman, having many children, that for thirteen years together had conflicted with grievous deſpair, crying out that ſhe, and all her children were damned; The Prieſts had often by their exorciſms ſought her cure: The neighbours had bound her in chaines, and beaten her, yet all in vain: for ſhe brake the chaines, and run into the Woods hiding her ſelf from the ſociety of all men, inſomuch that ſhe was thought to be poſſeſſed with the Devil. She being brought to Junius, he examined her in private of the cauſe of her diſtemper: She told him that all her Neighbours ſaid that ſhe was damned, becauſe ſhe had come ſo ſeldome to Maſs, whereas indeed ſhe was hindered from it by the care of her many ſmall children; Junius hereupon informed her out of Gods word that ſhe had not ſinned at all therein; for that it was according to Gods will, that ſhe ſhould take care of her children, who prefer's mercy before ſacrifice: And alſo that the Maſs was not the ſervice of God, &c. By which meanes ſhe was quieted in her conſcience, and went away ſatisfied, to the great aſtoniſhment of all her neighbors.

Strange tentations. A ſtrange example.

Gods mercy.

About this time the peace of the Church at Limburg was much diſturbed by the Anabaptiſts, and Papiſts: Junius went often to the Anabaptiſts and reaſoned with them them peaceably, and calmly, whereupon they quickly decreaſed, both in their number, and credit. But the Papiſts caſt aſperſions upon him to make him odious, and amongſt the reſt, that he was a Monſter, and had cloven feet; They came alſo to Church to diſturb him in his Sermons, but notwithſtanding all their endeavours his Auditory ſtill encreaſed. And when they had challenged him to Diſputations, they always pretended one excuſe or other when the time came, to evade the ſame. But from ſecret plots, they brake out into open violence; whereupon the Magiſtrates perſwaded him to retire himſelf from the danger, and in a dark rainy night they conveyed him out of the City, and ſo he went to Heidleberg, where he was courteouſly entertained by Prince Frederick the third, and afterward choſen Paſtor of the Church of Schænavia, which was near unto that City.

Popiſh Malice.

Flight in perſecution.

He goes to Heidleberg.

A great Plague.

But the year after, the peſtilence greatly afflicting that Church, he was ſent (though againſt his will) to the Camp of the Prince of Orange, who was going into the Low-countries, and (when meeting with many inconveniences in that employment) he would have returned into Germany, the Prince of Orange would not conſent, but detained, him to preach ſtill to him; yet at laſt he returned to Heidleberg, and endeavoured to compoſeſome differences that in his abſence were ſprung up in the Church of Schænavia.

He returnes to Heidleberg.

The Prince Elector Palatine often perſwaded him to goe back to the Prince of Orange, and he as often excuſed it; but at laſt he commanded him peremptorily to go; but it ſo fell out that as he was going over the bridge of Heidleberg, he was grievouſly bitten in his right leg by a dog, and ſo he obtained leave to ſtay.

Bible tranſlated.

He continued there to the year 1592, and aſſiſted Tremelius in Tranſlating the Bible out of Hebrew.

The Elector being dead, he was ſent for by Prince Caſſimire to Neoſtade; and afterwards was ſent for by the ſame Caſſimire (being Guardian to the young Prince) to Heidleberg again. Yet not long after, with the conſent of the Prince, he left Heidleberg to go into his own country: But when with his family he came to Leiden, he was much importuned both by the Magiſtrates and the Univerſity to ſtay there; and though he would fain have excuſed it, yet at laſt they prevailed, and made him the Profeſſor of Divinity in that Univerſity, which place he diſcharged with much diligence, and commendation for ten years ſpace. At the end of which, a great plague ſpreading all over Holland, he fell ſick of it, and quietly reſigned up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1602. and of his age 57.

He is made Profeſſor in Leiden.

His Death.

When Gomarus, his Colleague, came to viſit him in his ſickneſs, and had ſpoken comfortably to him, Junius told him, that he quieted himſelf in God, who would do for him that which was moſt for his Glory, and his own good.

The Life of Luke Trelcatius, who died Anno Chriſti 1062.

Luke Trelcatius was born at Erinum, Anno Chriſti 1542, and brought up by his Aunt, who was Abbeſſe of a Nunnery. His firſt Education was in the School at Doway, where (being of an acute wit) he profited exceedingly in the knowledge of the humane Arts: From thence he went to Paris, and whilſt he ſtudied there, it pleaſed God that he fell into acquaintance with John Mercer the Hebrew Profeſſor, and with Peter Ramus, by converſe with whom he was exceedingly affected with the love of their reformed Religion, ſo that he forſook his Aunt, and was maintained by the bounty of ſome Merchants of Flanders. His Birth and Education. He goes to Paris.

From thence he went to Orleance, and from thence to Sancerra in the 28th year of his age; and being driven from thence by the tempeſt of Civill Wars, he came into England; and at London he taught a School, by which he maintained himſelf eight years. Then was he called by ſome Merchants into Flanders to be their Paſtor; but enjoying little peace there, he went to Bruxels, where he continued in the exerciſe of the Miniſtry ſix years, and then, meting with oppoſition, he went to Antwerp, and that City being preſently after beſiged, he was forced to ſtay there for eight moneths. After which, being ſent for to divers places, at length he was, by the conſent of his Brethren in the Miniſtry, fixt at Leiden, where he was made Paſtor of the French Church, which place he ſupplied faithfully for the ſpace of ſeventeen years. He goes to Orleance. He comes into England. His ſeveral imployments.

He had ſcarce been there two years, when for his excellent parts and learning he was choſen Divinity-Profeſſor in that Univerſity alſo; and at laſt, having acquired much honour in both his offices, he dyed of the Plague, Anno Chriſti 1602, and of his age 60. His Death.

I. WHITGIFT

The Life of John Whitgift, who dyed Anno Christi 1603.

His Parentage. His Birth

John Whitgift came of the ancient Family of the Whitgifts of Whitgift in Yorkshire; His Father was a Merchant of great Grimsby in Lincolnshire. He was born Anno Christi 1530. His Uncle Robert Whitgift was Abbat of the Monastery of Wellow in the County of Lincoln, who would often tell him when he was a Boy, that neither he, nor his Religion, could stand long, for that he had often searched the Scriptures, but could never find there that his Religion was of Divine institution; and therefore, according to Christs speech, Every plant which his heavenly father had not planted must be rooted up; which also came to pass shortly after, when King Henry the eighth demolished the Abbeyes.

His Education.

By this Uncle he was trained up in Learning in his childhood, who finding him of a prompt, & acute wit, sent him to London to Saint Anthonyes School in Bennet Fink parish, and when he had made a good progresse in Learning there, he went to Cambridge,

He goes to Cambridge.

and studied a while in Queens Colledge; but not liking that house, he removed to Pembroke-hall, where Nicolas Ridley was the Master, and Master Bradford was his Tutor; who informing Doctor Ridley of the ingenuity, diligence, and piety of this young Whitgift, he procured for him a Scholarship.

He is Fellow of Peter-House.

Anno Christi 1555. he was chosen Fellow of Peter-House, where Doctor Andrew Pearn was Master, who favoured him exceedingly, and sheltered him from danger all Queen Maries dayes. He took all his degrees, of Batchelor of Arts, Master of Arts, Batchelor of Divinity, and Doctor of Divinity, with great approbation.

The Pope is Antichrist.

When he commenced Doctor, he disputed upon this question, Papa est ille Antichristus; the Pope is that Antichrist. He was also a famous Preacher, and when Doctor

Hutton was preferred to the Arch bishoprick of York, he was chosen Master of Pembrook Hall in his room, and Doctor Cox Bishop of Elie made him his Chaplain: Afterwards he was chosen the Margaret-Professor, which place he discharged with such high high commendations, that not long after he was made the Queens Professor; and Preaching before Queen Elizabeth, she liked him so well, that she made him her Chaplain, and Master of Trinity-Colledge in Cambridge. Anno Christi 1567. In which place he remained for ten years with the good approbation of all men, The Queen also made him Dean of Lincoln. He had many Noble men which were his pupils, and bred up also many learned men, which afterwards proved famous lights in the Church. His preferments.

Anno Christi 1577 the Queen made him Bishop of Worcester, and after the death of Grindal Anno Christi 1583, she removed him to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury. She had always a very high esteem of him, and used him so familiarly, that she called him her black husband. He was present with, and a great comfort to her at her death. And when King James came to the Crown, he also much reverenced Arch-Bishop, Whitgift. But he had laid the death of Queen Elizabeth so deeply to heart, that within some few moneths he fell sick, which when King James heard of, he went to him, and laboured to chear him up, but within a few days after he quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Christi 1603, and of his age seventy three; having been Archbishop about twenty years. His esteem with the Q. His sickness His Death.

He did many, and great works of Charity whersoever he lived, viz. at Lincoln, Worcester, Wales, Kent, and Surrey. One act of Justice done by him is scarce to be parallel'd; and may be read at large in the life of Mr. Hugh Clark at the end of my Generall Martyrology. His charity Much Controversie there was between Mr. Tho. Cartwright and him about Ceremonies, as appears by the Books extant betwixt them.

T. BEZA

The Life of Theodore Beza,, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1605.

His Birth and Parentage.

His Education.

Theodore Beza was born at Veſelia, Anno Chriſti 1519. His Father was Peter Beza, Præfect of that Town; his Mother was Mary Burdolet, both of them Nobly born. As ſoon as he was weaned, he was ſent for by his Uncle Nicolas Beza to Paris; who was a Counſellor in the Parliament, and by him was tenderly and carefully Educated, and at five years old he placed him with Wolmarus, a famous Schoolmaſter at Orleance, with whom he lived ſeven years, and in that time Learned Latine, Greek, and all the Liberall Arts, ſo that there was no worthy Author either in Greek or Latine, which he had not turned over: Yea Wolmarus had alſo read Law to him. But that which was principal, he inſtructed him in the true Religion, drawn out of the Fountain of Gods VVord.

He ſtudies the Law.

His Poems.

Popiſh Malice.

Afterwards, when Wolmarus was returned into his Native Country in Germany, by the advice of his Friends, Beza was placed in Orleance to ſtudy the Civill Law, but diſliking their barbarous Language, he left thoſe, and betook himſelf to more Polite Studies. He alſo affected Poetry very much, and made all his Poems before he was twenty years old; and imitating Catullus and Ovid therein, he writ more wantonly than afterwards he approved of; and indeed endeavoured to have ſuppreſſed his Poems, but the Papiſts, hating him for his Religion, often printed them, ſeeking thereby his diſgrace all that poſſibly they could.

Anno Chriſti 1539. he went to Paris, where he was entertain'd by his kindred and friends, with all the expreſſions of Love and Reſpect that might be, but above all, he was moſt welcome to another of his Uncles (for the former was now dead) who was Abbat of Frigidmont, and who deſigned him for his Succeſſor, the profits of which place were worth above Five thouſand Crowns Per annum, beſides

Beſides two Benefices belonging to the ſame, worth Seven hundred Crowns more.

Beza, by his Uncles means, abounding with eaſe, money, and all things, but good Counſel, began to find himſelf compaſſed about with infinite ſnares of Sathan: For though he hated thoſe vices which diſcovered open Impiety, and were diſgracefull, yet he ſquandred away Precious Houres in Paſtimes, and began to be puffed up with that Applauſe which he gat by his forementioned Poems, and by his hopes of the great Preferments which his Uncle reſerved for him. His tentations.

Yet it pleaſed God that thoſe Seeds of Piety that were ſown in him in his Childhood, began to appear afreſh, ſo that diſcerning his danger, and the Snares of Sathan, he made a Vow to renounce the Errors of Popery, and leſt he ſhould be over come by fleſhly Luſts, he privately marryed a VVife, having only two of his faſt Friends, preſent at his Marriage; yet at the ſame time he faithfully promiſed that within a certain ſpace of time, breaking through all impediments, he would have her to the true Church of God, and there publickly confirm the Marriage, and that in the mean time he would take none of the Popiſh Orders: Both which he Religiouſly performed afterwards. His converſion. His marriage.

And yet the VVorld heaping more honours and profits upon him by the death of his Elder Brother, and the Abbat his Uncle giving him all his goods, he was long in reſolving what to do, and ſlower in performing his Vow than he ſhould have been: But whilſt he thus delayed, the Lord ſtruck him with a ſore Diſeaſe that he almoſt deſpaired of life; and it continued long upon him, he was at laſt humbled by it, and abhorred himſelf for his delayes, and with many tears begged pardon of God for the ſame, ſaying, Lord bring my Soul out of Priſon that I may praiſe thy Name. And the Lord heard, and reſtored him. New Tentations. Gods mercy to him by Sicknes. Affliction ſanctified.

And as ſoon as ever he had recovered his Health, according to his former engagements, he took his Wife, and leaving Friends, Honours, Riches, and Country, he went to Geneva Anno Chriſti 1548, where according to his former Vow, he publickly ſolemnized his Marriage. About the ſame time alſo there came to Geneva one John Criſpin, an Antient and intimate Friend of Beza's, and ſo both of them conſulted together what courſe of Life to betake themſelves to, purpoſing to ſet upon the Art of Printing, which their excellent Learning and Induſtry did much fit them for. But God had appointed Beza to another imployment; For before they could bring their purpoſe to maturity, Beza would needs take a journey to Tubing, where his old Maſter Wolmarus lived, being now a Counſellor to the Prince of Wirtemberg; and as ſoon as he was returned to Geneva, dreaming of no ſuch matter, he was called to be the Greek-Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Lauſanna, and by the Senate of Bern, admitting that Election, was brought into that ſociety. He leaves all for Chriſt. A ſpeciall Providence.

Beza therefore looking upon it as a call from God, embraced it, and went to Lauſanna. In which place he found many excellent men, as Peter Viret the Paſtor, John Ribbit the Divinity Profeſſor, John Raimund Merlin the Hebrew Profeſſor, &c. by all whom he was kindly entertained, and ſo dearly beloved, that each ſeemed to live in the other. His remove to Lauſanna.

At his firſt coming to that Univerſity, that he might the better arme himſelf againſt thoſe manifold perturbations which all men, eſpecially the Godly are moleſted withall, he often, and ſeriouſly meditated upon the Hiſtory of Abraham. And as often as he had any leiſure, he went to Geneva to converſe with Calvin, by whom he was much quickned to improve his parts for Gods Glory and the Churches good. And upon this he undertook that truly golden Work, begun by Marot, but finiſhed by him, of turning the Pſalms into French Metre, which he finiſhed Anno Chriſt 1561, and which were often printed in ſundry parts of France. His prudence. He turnes the Pſalms into French metre.

About this time many Godly men and women flocked out of France to Lauſanna, which occaſion Beza taking as ſent from God, expounded to them the Epiſtle to the Romans, and afterwards the two Epiſtles to Peter, which were the Foundation of that excellent work which afterwards he compleated, of turning the New-Teſtament into Latine, with Annotations upon the ſame. His expoſitions.

About

He falls sick of the Plague. Gods goodness.

About that time the Plague waxing hot in Lausanna, Beza fell sick of it, but Christ (who intended him as an Instrument of his Glory in his Churches good) restored him to Health again. Shortly after which, he wrote a Book de Hæreticis à Magistratu puniendis, occasioned by the Aspersions raised by Lælius Socinus against Calvin, and the Magistrates of Geneva for burning Servetus for his Heresie and Blasphemy.

His Works

He also wrote an Explication of Christianity out of the Doctrine of Eternall Predestination. He also answered Joachim Westphalus, about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; and afterwards published two Learned Dialogues upon the same Argument. He answered Sebastian Castalio, who sought to overthrow Eternall Election.

Persecution in France.

Anno Christi 1557. when the Sorbonists in Paris had raised that Persecution against the Church of Christ, wherein four hundred of them being met together in the night to hear the Word, and receive the Lords Supper, seven of them were afterwards burnt in the fire, and the rest cast into chains and prisons. The best means thought on to procure their release was, by obtaining the Protestant Germane Princes to become Intercessors for them to Henry the second of France. And thereupon Beza, with some others, were sent to the Germane Princes to engage them herein, which also he obtained from them, though it proved to little purpose, in regard of the Implacable malice of the French Courtiers against the Servants of Christ. In that journey he grew acquainted with Melancthon, and they took much delight in the Society of each other.

Popish malice. Friendship.

His remove to Geneva.

Having spent ten years at Lausanna, as the Greek Professor, with the good leave of the Senate of Bern, he went to Geneva Anno Christi 1559, and lived with Calvin, from whose side he seldom parted, and was his great assistant, both in matters of Doctrine and Discipline: and that in the mean time he might not be wanting to the Schools, he publickly interpreted Demosthenes Orations, and part of Aristotle to the young Students.

He is chosen Pastor.

And not long after, upon the death of Claudius Pontanus, he was chosen Pastor into his room. He was also chosen the first Rector of the School in Geneva, at which time he made an excellent and eloquent Oration in commendation of Learning, in the presence of many grave and Learned men, both to encourage youths to the love of it, and the Senators of Geneva to make a further progresse in the Advancement of it. For whereas the City of Geneva did at this time conflict with innumerable difficulties both at home and abroad, which did almost swallow it up, yet by the perswasion of that great Calvin, it took so much courage, that in that very juncture of time, the Senate founded, and endowed that publick School which was a great Ornament to the City, and out of which issued, abundance of Godly and Learned men to the great benefit of the Churches of God.

Learning advanced in troublesome times.

He deals with the King of Navar.

Shortly after, at the request of certain Noblemen of France, Beza was invited to visit Anthony, King of Navar, who at this time was at Nerac in Aqvitane to confer with him about some weighty matters, but especially, if it were possible, through Gods Mercy, to confirm his mind in the true Religion: For it was hoped that if that King, who was the principal man of the Royall Blood, and like to govern the Affairs of State in the Minority of King Francis the Second, could be confirmed in the Truth, it would much conduce to the peace of the Churches, and to the preservation of the lives of many who were cruelly burned by the Papists in sundry parts of the Kingdom. Neither did this design want effect: For Anno Christi 1561. the King of France dying at Orleance, the King of Navar, joyning with the Prince of Conde, the Admirall Coligni, d'Andelot, and other Noble men caused the Popish party to give over the butcheries, and executions which they had formerly done upon many of Christs faithful Servants.

Persecution stopped.

A Conference about Religion.

Charles the Ninth coming to the Crown, there were various Actings about Religion, whilst the Pontificians would advance their own, and root out the Reformed; And on the contrary, they of the Reformed Religion contended with all their might to promote their own; and therefore lest these severall Parties should cause Commotions

tions, there were Edicts publiſhed in the Kings name, requiring all, upon ſevere penality, to abſtain from Arms, and to keep the peace, till certain ſelect perſons of each party, at a certain time and place nominated, ſhould meet together, to conſider of the litteſt way and means to preſerve the publick peace; many not onely of the common people, but of the Nobility, inclining to the Reformed Religion.

Who repair to it.

Hereupon the King of Navar ſent Letters and Meſſengers to the Senate of Geneva, requeſting that Beza might be ſent to that great meeting, where ſuch weighty matters ſhould be tranſacted. The Prince of Conde alſo requeſted the ſame. Beza upon this, ſet forward, and came to Paris, Auguſt the twentyeth. And the Queen-Mother wrote alſo to the ſame purpoſe to the Senate of Zurick to ſend Peter Martyr to her, which accordingly they did, and Martyr came to Paris.

The French Miniſters.

The chief of the Pontificians alſo repaired to this meeting, though they had declared that ſuch as had been long agoe condemned for Hereſie, ought not to be conferred withall. There came alſo many Miniſters of the Reformed Churches in France, as Nich. Gallaſius, Auguſt. Marlorat, John Raimund Merlin; Francis Sampaulius, Francis Morellus, Jo. Malotius, Jo. Spinæus, Claudius Boſſierus, Nich. Folius, Mat. Virellus, John Tornæus, and N. Barbaſtus: For they had the publick Faith given them for their ſafe coming, ſtay, and return, at their pleaſures.

Auguſt the three and twentyeth, they met together at Saint Germans, where the Proteſtants debating who ſhould ſpeak for them, they unanimouſly choſe Beza, as a man every way fitted for that employment, and in the evening he was had into the King of Navars chamber, where were preſent the Queen-Mother, the Prince of Conde, the Cardinals of Bourbon and Lorrain, with many of the Nobility.

Beza's ſpeech.

Beza briefly declared the cauſe of his coming (though it was not unknown unto them) and the Queen chearfully anſwered, that ſhe much deſired that the publick peace might be principally promoted: And the Cardinal of Lorrain exhorted him to ſtudy the wayes of peace, and concord: For (ſaith he) in your abſence you have been the author of many ſtirs, and tumults, therefore it beſeems you by your preſence to endeavour to compoſe them, which is that which we all deſire.

His conference.

To this Beza replyed, that he was too mean and obſcure a perſon to raiſe commotions in ſo large and potent a Kingdom: That he was alwaies an enemy to tumults, and that his ſtudies and endeavours ſhould alwaies be bent to promote the Glory of God, and the happineſſe of his King and Country.

Then did the Queen ask him if he had ever publiſhed any thing in French? Nothing (ſaid he) beſides the Pſalmes, and a ſhort writing oppoſed to the Confeſſion of the Duke of Summerſet. Upon this occaſion Lorrain ſaid, that he had read in a Book publiſhed in Beza's name, That Chriſt was in the ſame manner to be ſought in his Supper, as he was before he was born of the bleſſed Virgin: And that Chriſt was ſo in his Supper as he is in the dung. To this Beza anſwered, That this latter ſpeech was Blaſphemy, and that he thought that no Chriſtian had ever ſpoken or written any ſuch thing. As for the former ſpeech (ſaith he) if it be taken in a good ſence, its true; for the Church hath alwaies been congregated by one Mediator, Chriſt, God-man, therefore the Communion of the faithfull with Chriſt, is not to be confined to the time of his incarnation, for the force and efficacy thereof was alwaies preſent to the eye of Faith: For Abraham ſaw his day, and rejoyced: The Fathers did eat of the ſame ſpiritual meat, and drank of the ſame ſpiritual Rock, viz. Chriſt; and that he was the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world. To which the Cardinal aſſented.

Then was there another queſtion ſtarted about the ſence of thoſe words, This is my body. Whereunto Beza anſwered learnedly and briefly, laying down the Reformed opinion, and againſt Tranſubſtantiation. Whereunto the Cardinal anſwered, that for his part he would not contend about Tranſubſtantiation, being of Beza's mind; and withall told the Queen, that Beza had given him great ſatisfaction in that point, and that he hoped their conference would come to a good iſſue if things were handled peaceably, and with right reaſon.

When the company was departed, the Cardinal ſpake very lovingly to Beza, ſaying, Now that I have heard you ſpeak, I rejoyce, and invite you to the conference by the immortall immortall God, hoping that weighing the reaſons on both ſides, ſome way may be found out for the ſetling of a firm peace. Beza returned him hearty thanks, intreating him to perſevere in the ſtudy, and endeavour of procuring publick concord: Profeſſing for his own part, that according to the abilities God had given him, he would promote it.

Cardinal of Lorrains ſpeech to Beza.

The firſt meeting.

September the fourth they met together in the large Hall of the Monaſtery at Poſſy, where were preſent, the King, the Queen Mother, the Duke of Orleance, the Kings brother, Margaret the Kings Siſter, the King and Queen of Navar, the Prince of Conde, and the reſt of the Nobility, and States of France. On the Popiſh party were the Cardinals, Arch-Biſhops, and Biſhops, to the number of fifty, accompanyed with many Doctors of Sorbon, and Canoniſts. For the Reformed Churches were the Miniſters before named.

Baza's Oration.

After the King had in a few words, opened the cauſes why he had called them together, and Michael Hoſpitalius, the great Chancellor of France, had opened them more largly, Beza in the name of all the Proteſtants made an excellent Oration, which he pronounced with ſuch a grace, as drew the attention, and cauſed admiration in all that were preſent. In it he compriſed the ſum of the pure Religion, which was profeſſed in the Reformed Churches of France; Only this is to be noted by the way, that when Beza in his ſpeech ſayd, That Chriſt was as far from the Sacrament as the higheſt Heavens are from the earth, the Popiſh Doctors made a great murmur, which at laſt being over, he went on to the end of his ſpeech. Then Turnevius, Dean of the Colledge, being in a great paſſion againſt the Miniſters, whom he called new Profeſſors, made ſome objections, and exhorted the King that he would not ſuffer himſelf by any perſwaſions to be withdrawn from his old Religion, and that he would ſuſpend his aſſent till he had heard the anſwers which the Prelates would give to that which had been ſpoken; for then he ſhould be able to diſcern a difference between the truth and lies. Then did Beza humbly preſent to the King a Confeſſion of Faith in the name, and with the conſent of all the Reformed Churches, which had been drawn up in the year 1555.

A Confeſſion of faith preſented to the King

But when the Miniſters perceived that the minds of the Pontificians were exaſperated, they reſolved that Beza ſhould write his private Letters to the Queen, wherein he ſhould explaine things more fully than he was ſuffered to doe the day before, which accordingly he did.

The ſecond meeting.

September the ſixteenth, the conference began again in the preſence of the ſaid great perſonages. And the Cardinall of Lorrain made a tedious ſpeech, wherein he defended the Popiſh Religion, perſwading that nothing ſhould be altered in the ſame. And when he had done, Beza humbly entreated the King, that he might have liberty to anſwer ex tempore: For the Proteſtants feared that after this day they ſhould be ſuffered to meet no more: For there was a conſtant report that the Pontificians after that day, would have no more to doe with the Proteſtants, but would preſently excommunicate them. Beſides, there was ſome fear that the crafty Prelates would evade any further diſputation, by ſetting the French and Dutch Churches together by the ears, about the matter of the Sacrament: But he could obtain nothing that day, the conference being adjourned to another, and procraſtinated by many delaies.

The Third meeting.

Yet at laſt, upon an humble ſupplication to the King from the Proteſtants, they obtained that the conference Should goe on. And accordingly, September the twenty fourth, it was again begun in the ſame Audience, and Lorrain proteſted that this meeting was appointed, that ſo the Proteſtants, if they had a minde to it, might freely anſwer to what had formerly been ſpoken by him. Then did Beza diſcourſe excellently, and clearly about the Church, and the Supper of the Lord, which two heads were principally inſiſted on by Lorrain.

The ſeveral conferences

Then Eſpenſæus, a Sorboniſt, being appointed by the Cardinall, took up Beza, begining about the Vocation of Miniſters both ordinary, and extraordinary, and ſo proceeding to Traditions, and the Lords Supper. Beza was about to anſwer him, but another Sorboniſt [Sanctæſius] riſing up, and repeating ſowerly, what Eſpenſæus had ſaid, interrupted him.

He

He insisted principally upon Traditions, which he affirmed to be certainer than the holy Scriptures, quoting something out of Tertullian: But Beza shewed that this froward speech of the Sorbonist made little towards setling the peace of the Church, and therefore intreated the Queen that such unreasonable clamours might hereafter be restrained. After which he answered Espensæus about the calling of Ministers, and Traditions: Whereupon Sanctesius beginning again his clamours, would have thrust in divers other questions; but Lorrain fearing that the Queen would be offended at it, put an end to that question, and propounded a new one about the Supper of the Lord, which unlesse it were determined, he protested for himself, and his associates, that he would not change another word with the Ministers; and thereupon he asked them if they were all ready to subscribe the Augustane Confession? Beza replyed, And are you all ready to joyn with us therein? But the Cardinal, instead of an answer, produced a Writing of the Opinions of some German Divines, which he said was lately sent to him, importunately urging the Ministers that they also would set down their opinions.

This was craftily done of him, that if the Ministers should refuse to doe it, he might set them, and the Germans at variance; and if they Should doe it, he might insult over them as a conquerour. Beza therefore to shun this Rock, said, that he, and his Colleagues were come thither to defend the Confession of Faith published by their Churches, and that they had nothing else in command; and that the Disputation was to be continued about the points contained therein, as the likeliest way to come to an happy issue: And that the best Method was, to begin with such things as were most easie; and that since the Sacraments depended upon the Doctrine, that it was fittest to begin with the Doctrine. Popish subtilty. Beza's answer.

But when the Cardinal would by no means alter his former resolution, the Ministers suspecting, that if they wholly resisted him, he would thence take occasion to dissolve the conference, and to transfer the fault upon them, they desired that the writing might be produced, and that they might have time to consider of it, which being granted, the meeting was dissolved for that day.

September the six and twentyeth the conference began again, and Beza again discoursed of the Calling of the Pastors of the Church, and then of the Lords Supper: But Lorrain being netled about some expressions which Beza used about the vitious calling of their Ecclesiasticks, cried out, That the Majesty of the King was violated. Then Beza replyed, That he had said nothing which might be justly blamed, for that Kings had therefore drawn the choice of Ecclesiasticks into their own power, because it had been so long abused: Lorrain, passing by that subject, asked the Ministers why they refused to subscribe the Augustane Confession? To which it was answered, That if the Pontificians also would admit it, there were hopes that ere long they might agree: But (saith Beza) if you refuse to assent to this Confession, its unequall that we should be pressed every way to approve of it. Then the speech of the Lords Supper being again renewed, Espensæus quoted a speech of Calvin, That we receive the substance of Christs Body. To which was answered, That by substance we are not to understand the fleshly eating of Christ, but it signifies the spiritual, and true feeding upon him, as opposed to the Imaginary, and phantasticall: upon which occasion Peter Martyr, because he could not speak French, produced many things in Italian. Though Lorrain often interrupted him, saying that he would not dispute with men of a strang Language. Yet had Peter Martyr for his speech, the testimony of Espensæus, That of all the Divines of that age, none had handled that question about the Lords-Supper so fully, and clearly as he. The fourth meeting.

Whilst the Ministers were preparing to answer Espensæus, a certain Spaniard, that was General of the Jesuits, standing up, for an hour together declamed in Italian, calling the Ministers Dissemblers, Apes, Foxes, &c. saying, that they were not to be heard there, but to be commanded to the Council of Trent: And so proceeding to the question about the Lords-Supper: He said that Christ was present as a Prince, who having gotten a victory, will have the memory of it to be continued by some Anniversary Prayes, which himself would be over: And so by an unusuall impudence he laboured to ſtir up the Queen againſt the Miniſters, till he provoked ſome to laughter, others to indignation.

But Beza adviſed him to keep his reproaches to himſelf. Told him that the Queen had no need of the Counſell of a Fryar, who would wiſely govern Affairs according to the cuſtom of the Kingdom; And that he ſpake of the Lords Supper as if it were a Stage-Play, wherein Chriſt ſhould Act the firſt part: And ſo leaving him, he turned to Eſpenſæus, ſaying; As it's ſaid, This is my Body, ſo it's ſayd, This is the Cup of the New-Teſtament, which cannot be underſtood without a Figure: For Sacraments ſhould not be Sacraments, if they ſhould not reſemble thoſe things whereof they are Sacraments, and Signs, as Saint Auguſtine teacheth.

But (ſaid Eſpenſæus) if our Sacraments ſhould be Signs, they would not much differ from the Jewiſh Sacraments, and they would be Signs of Signs, which is abſurd. But Beza ſhewed that there was no abſurdity when the Apoſtle compared Circumciſion with Baptiſm, &c.

Then ſaid a Sorboniſt; In this Propoſition, This is my Body, What doth This ſignifie? Beza anſwered, It ſignifies both the Bread, and Chriſts Body. The Sorboniſt replyed, That it was againſt the Rules of Grammer, that Hoc, This, ſhould be applyed to the Bread; but that it was Individuum vagum. Beza took away this anſwer, and told him that his Individuum vagum was unknown to all Learned Antiquity. Then one of the Sorbon Doctors, holding up his finger to Beza, in a threatning manner, ſaid, Oh! if we could once catch thee within the Walls of Sorbon, thou ſhouldſt not get out again. Thus the day being ſpent, the Conference was diſſolved. And ſeeing nothing could be effected this way, ſome thought of another, which was, that John Monluc, Biſhop of Valentia, and Eſpenſæus, who were counted middle, and moderate men, ſhould tranſact theſe buſineſſes privately with Beza, and Galaſius; which being aſſented to, they met September the ſeventeenth at Saint Germans in a private houſe, being commanded by the Queen, that if it were poſſible they ſhould agree upon ſome Form about the Lords Supper; which might give content to both parts, which after much debate they did, and the Form was this.

A way of reconciliation propounded.

The Form of the Agreement.

Confitemur Jeſum Chriſtum in Cœnâ nobis offerre, dare, & vere exhibere ſubſtantiam ſui corporis, & ſanguinis operante ſpiritu ſancto: Noſq; recipere, & edere ſpiritualiter, & per fidem verum illud corpus quod pro nobis mortuum eſt, ut ſimus oſſa ae oſſibus ejus, & caro de carne ejus; ut eo vivificemur, & ea quæ ad ſalutem noſtram ne ceſſaria ſunt, percipiamus. Et quoniam fides innixa verbo Dei, res percepias facit præſentes; per illam verum, & naturale corpus, & ſanguinem Jeſu Chriſti per virtutem Spiritus Sancti comedi, & bibi fatemur, eoq; reſpectu præſentiam corporis, & ſanguinis Chriſti in S. Cœnâ agnoſcimus.

Both parties had agreed, that not a word of this Writing ſhould be divulged till it was Communicated to the great Perſonages at Poſſie; but contrary thereto, divers Coppies were immediately diſperſed through the Court, and were received with much Applauſe, as if now both parties were agreed in the chiefeſt point of the Controverſie. And the Queen ſending for Beza, thanked him, and told him that what they had agreed on was very gratefull to her. She alſo with joy ſhewed it to the Cardinall of Lorrain, who when he had read it, ſaid, That he never believed otherwiſe; and that he hoped all the reſt of the Great ones at Poſſie would readily embrace the ſame.

The Form rejected by the Pontificians.

But it fell out far otherwiſe; For when on the fourth of October it was exhibited to them, they rejected, and damned it, reproaching Eſpenſæus for conſenting to it, and Lorrain for not oppoſing it. And thereupon preſently drew up another Form, which if Beza and his Aſſociates ſhould defer to Subſcribe, they declared that it was a great wickedneſs to treat with them any further, and that as incorrigible, they were to be excommunicated, and puniſhed by the King.

The conference ends.

This was the Iſſue of that great Conference at Poſſie, ſo famous all over Europe, which yet anſwered not mens expectations: And ſo every one returned to his own place:

place: Onely the Queen ſtayed Beza, ſaying, Since you are a Frenchman, France deſires your help to ſtop future troubles as much as may be. But Beza, though he foreſaw the ſeeds of thoſe factions which ſhortly after brake out, and his ſingular love to Geneva continually put him upon a deſire of return, where alſo he was earneſtly deſired, and much longed for, yet was he neceſſitated to ſtay there whether he would or no. The Church increaſeth.

From that day forward there was a wonderfull encreaſe of the Goſpellers in France, and Sermons began to be preached publickly every where, yea, in ſome places they took away Churches from the Papiſts, till by the Kings command, and their Miniſters intreaty, they reſtored them again.

Beza in the mean time preached often, ſometimes in the Queen of Navars houſe, ſometimes in the Prince of Condies, and other ſometime in the ſuburbs of Paris. And in January following there was an Edict procured, that the Proteſtants might freely meet together for the ſervice of God in the ſuburbs of all Cities. This provoked the Guiſian Faction, who by all means ſought the hinderance of it: But the firſt thing they attempted, was to draw the King of Navar to their party; which Beza ſuſpecting, and finding him wavering, endeavoured by all means to confirm and keep him in the true Religion; to whom the King anſwered, Quod Pelago ſe non ita commiſſurus eſſet quin quando liberet, pedem referre poſſit, That he would not launch ſo far into the ſea, but that when he pleaſed he might return ſafe to the ſhore again. And accordingly he fell off from the Proteſtants, and Beza went to him no more. Carnal policy. The King of Navar falls to the Papiſts.

Another Diſputation was appointed by the Queen-Mother about Images, the reſult of which was, that the Popiſh Doctors condemned the making of the Images of the Trinity, or of the Father, or Holy Ghoſt; and agreed that all Images ſhould be removed out of the Churches but that of the Croſs; and that no Images ſhould be worſhiped. But preſently after the Civil War began to break forth, which was occaſioned by this means. Papiſts againſt Images.

Whereas many Proteſtants were met together at Voſſi to hear the Word preached, the Duke of Guiſe with a party of ſouldiers, ſet upon them, ſlew forty five of them, and wounded many more. Hereof Beza made complaint, but without any redreſs; whereupon both parties betake themſelves to Arms, and the Prince of Conde by his importunity prevailed with Beza to ſtay with him in thoſe dangerous times. Beza's earneſt longings to be with his people at Geneva, diſſwaded him; but the importunate deſires of ſo godly a Prince prevailed, ſo that he ſtayed with him all thoſe firſt Civil Wars: At which time Orleance was the chiefeſt place of the Proteſtants refuge; and for the better regulating of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline in thoſe troubleſome times, a Synod was called in that City, at which Beza vvas preſent. Shortly after the peſtilence waxed hot in Orleance, whereof many dyed, and amongſt the reſt, Conrade Badius, a Paſtor in Orleance, who from his very childhood had been moſt dear to Beza; yet did not Beza intermit his publick preaching, nor private viſiting of the ſick. The Proteſtants murdered. Beza ſtayes in France. A Synod. A Plague.

A few moneths after fell out that memorable Battel, in Druiden fields where Beza was preſent, and by his prayers and exhortations did much encourage the ſouldiers, yet they loſt the day, and the Prince of Conde was taken priſoner, whom Beza by his Letters much comforted, and exhorted the reſt not to give way to deſpondency, but to perſevere in the defence of the Cauſe, and to commit the ſucceſs of it unto God. The proteſtants beaten. Beza comforts the Prince.

Not long after peace enſuing, Beza got leave to goe back to Geneva, from which he had been abſent 22 moneths, in which time he had gone through many troubles and dangers both of Body and mind.

At his return to Geneva he fell upon his former employment in the Schools and Church: Calvin undergoing the burthen one week, and he the other, and they continued in thoſe mutual labours, till Calvins death, and then he had Nicolas Collodonius for his Colleague, and after him Lambertus Danaus, and after him Anthony Fagius. His return to Geneva. His imployments.

He relates the miseries of the French Churches.

Presently after his return, in the first sermon that he preached to the people, he filled the mindes of the hearers with incredible sorrow and grief, by relating to them the miserable condition of the Churches of France, whereof himself had been an eye-witness, and which therefore he painted out to the life, which he did for this end, to stir up all to commiserate, and heartily to pray for their Brethren that suffered such great afflictions.

He confutes *Heretick*s & Lutherans.

Shortly after he wrote an answer to Sebastian Castellio, who had inveighed against his Translation of the New Testament into Latine. He also published an answer to the railings of Francis Balduinus, who followed the steps of Ecebolius, both of them teaching, That men might change their Religion as the state changed. Then did he confute the errors of Brentius, and James Andreas, who held the Omnipresence of the Body of Christ: After this he published an excellent Catechism.

Civil wars in France.

Anno Christi 1567. the Civil Wars breaking out again in France, he was much affected with it, and by writing, admonishing, and exhorting, both at home and abroad, endeavoured to assist with his counsell those whom he could not by his presence.

Geneva a refuge to the godly.

Also Anno Christi 1568, that war waxing hot, many out of sundry parts of France fled to Geneva as to a safe harbour, amongst whom was Nicolas Beza, Præfect of Vezelia, Brother to Beza by the Fathers side, who living a while in Beza's house, shortly after dyed of the Plague. And not long after Beza's wife fell sick of it, yet it pleased God to restore her to health again. The same year, in the midst of many troubles, he wrote his Books of Polygamie, and Divorces, against Bernard Ochin, who a little before had published his Dialogues upon these subjects, stuffed with errors. He wrote also against Flacius Illricus.

He is sent for into France. Moderates in a Synod.

Anno Christi 1571, peace being setled, he was sent for by the Queen of Navar, the Admiral, and the general vote of the Churches of France to Rochel to a Synod, where he was made the Moderator, and at which, the Confession of Faith of the French Churches was confirmed, and subscribed by the Queen of Navar, her son (afterwards King Henry the fourth) and the Prince of Conde. And the year after he was sent for to Namures to another Synod, where the Book of the French Church-Discipline was established.

The Massacre at Paris.

Anno Christi 1572, after that bloody Massacre at Paris, many of the godly that escaped fled to Geneva, amongst whom were the Pastors of fifty Churches that were wholly dispersed. These being stript of all, and in great want Beza by his Letters into Germany and England, procured such relief for them, that for three years space in which they lived there, they were plentifully and comfortably provided for.

He provides for the afflicted. Charity.

In that Massacre God was pleased wonderfully to preserve Henry of Burbon, son to the great Lodwick Prince of Conde, who thereupon retired into Germany for shelter, and staying a while at Strasborough, he sent for Beza, and employed him to Prince Cassimire, the Administrator of the Palatinate. And afterwards as this Prince returned into France, he went by Geneva, where he conferred with Beza about many weighty matters.

His great imployments.

Beza went on indefatigably in his publick employments, revised his Translation and Annotations upon the New Testament, and enlarged them; wrote against Pappus about the Hypostaticall Union; against the railings of Holderus; against the calumnies of Andreas: Made his Harmony of the Law out of the Books of Moses. He wrote also of the Notes, and Authority of the Catholick Church, &c.

A Plague. Friendship amongst the Pastors.

Shortly after the Plague breaking forth in Geneva, Beza was much afflicted for the sad condition of the Common-wealth, yet he cheared up himself much with the hearty and sincere love, and society which he had with all the Pastors thereof, whose unity, and unanimity was a great means, under God, to preserve the happiness of Geneva.

Anabaptists converted.

About the same time five Anabaptists (Mechanicks) began privately to sow the seed of their errors in Geneva, whereupon Beza, John Pinaldus, Charles Perrot, and Anthony Fains, were chosen to confer with them, and after confutation of their errors, they recanted, and reformed; onely one of them left the City, and was heard of no more.

A Disputation.

Anno Christi 1586 there was a Disputation appointed at Mombelgard between the German

German and Helvetian Divines about the difference betwixt them in ſome points, unto which Beza was ſent for, and the whole Diſpute was betwixt Doctor Andreas and him; But in concluſion nothing was effected by it; yet they parted lovingly without bitterneſs. This was after publiſhed by Beza. No good comes of it.

The year after his wife dyed, with whom he had lived with much comfort forty year, which was a great grief to him; yet afterwards by the advice of his friends he married another, one Katharine Plania, a godly Matron, who was a great comfort to him all his life after. About the ſame time he was called to a Synod held at Bern, wherein divers controverſies were debated, and the errors of Alberius, who ſaid, That we are juſtified at Gods Tribunal by inherent righteouſneſs; alſo of Huberus, about Predeſtination, and eternall Election, were condemned. Shortly after he wrote about the Sacraments againſt Hoffman; Publiſhed in French his Sermons about the Paſſion of Chriſt; alſo on the Canticles, which he turned into Lyrick verſe; Anſwered Genebrands calumnies, and reviſed his tranſlation of the New Teſtament. His wife dyes. His ſecond marriage. His great labours.

Anno Chriſti 1589, France being full of broils, Geneva alſo was moleſted by the ſame; whereupon publick prayers were appointed twice a week extraordinary, which burthen Beza willingly took upon himſelf; whereupon the other Paſtors freed him his daily Sermons which he uſed to preach before; only he preached once on Sabbath mornings betwixt eight and nine a clock. Prayer in Danger.

Not long after he began to be troubled with a diſſineſs in his head, inſomuch as being to preach on Whitſonday Anno Chriſti 1597 before the Sacrament, as ſoon as he had made Confeſſion of Sins after their uſuall manner, he was fain to give over, and come out of the pulpit, whoſe place Fagius preſently Supplied. His weakneſſe.

The like happened to him the week following alſo, whereupon he gave over publick preaching, only now, and then praying publickly, yet would he not be idle, but went on teaching daily in the Schooles; yet at laſt becauſe of his dulneſs of hearing, he abſtained from the publick Diſputations, and Conſiſtoral meeting. His diligence.

And to ſatisfie ſome Noblemen, Germans, Bohemians, and Polonians, who would needs hear him read ſome Lectures, he began a brief Analyſis upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, but after he had done it twice, he was fain to leave off. Yet did he not wholly deſiſt from preaching till the year 1600, when he preached his laſt Sermon in January, being eighty one years old, upon the third Petition of the Lords Prayer; Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven. He had often in his mouth that ſaying of Veſpaſian, Imperatorem decet ſtantem mori. His laſt Sermon.

Not long after being preſent at a Conſiſtory, he invited all his Brethren to ſupper, but they at firſt refuſed, becauſe there was to be a publick Faſt that week, and the Magiſtrates had forbidden all Feaſting; but he told them, that he would get leave of the Magiſtrates, and that he intended not a Feaſt, but a frugal ſupper, rather to feaſt their minds with their mutual love and ſociety, then their Bodies with dainties: Then they all aſſented, and were entertained by him with all the expreſſions of Brotherly love that could be. He invites his Colleagues. Frindſhip amongſt brethren.

Many Noblemen and others that came from other countries to ſtudy at Geneva, would alwaies deſire to ſojourne with him, that they might enjoy his ſociety.

That year there was a rumor ſpread abroad all over Europe by the Jeſuits, that Beza was dead, and turned Papiſt before his death; which lye the Paſtors of Geneva, and himſelf alſo by publick writings confuted: And diſcourſing with his friends of it, he ſaid, That the Jeſuits, and he, had both one deſire, but not for the ſame end: The Jeſuits (ſaid he) wiſh my end, but for an evill end: I wiſh for it alſo, but that by death I may paſſe to eternall life, purchaſed for me by the merits of Chriſt. Popiſh lyes. Confuted. Death deſired.

Anno 1599 the King of France and the King of Navar lying in ſiege before the Caſtle of Saint Katharines in Savoy near to Geneva, Beza went to viſit them, and was entertained with abundance of courteſie by them, and being asked by the King of France if he had any requeſt to make to him, he anſwered, That he had nothing, but to commend his ſacred Majeſty to the bleſſing of the great God, and to pray that his He viſits the Kings.

Majeſty

His requeſt for the Church at Lions.

Majeſty to the Bleſſing of the Great God, and to pray that his Majeſty might Govern his people in Peace. Onely he requeſted, that ſeeing the Church at Lyons had not yet enjoyed the Benefit of his Majeſties Edict, that he would be pleaſed to think of them, which the King promiſed, and upon their Petition, granted their deſire.

His meditations.

About the time of his return, he began to be much troubled with want of ſleep; but lying awake in the nights, he deceived the time in Holy Meditations. And ſpeaking to his Friends of it, he uſed that ſpeech, Pſalms 16. verſe 7, 8. My Reins alſo inſtruct me in the night ſeaſon. I have ſet the Lord always before me, in whoſe Favour is Life. And that of Pſalm. 63. My Soul is filled as with marrow and fatneſſe, when I remember thee upon my Bed, and meditate on thee in the night Watches. Many came out of the Kings Camp to Geneva to ſee the City which was now ſo famous, but eſpecially to ſee Beza; all whom he corteouſly entertained with holy and ſavoury diſcourſes, and ſo diſmiſſed them well pleaſed.

He is viſited by many.

Anno Chriſti 1602. Maurice the Lantgrave of Heſſe came to Geneva to ſee him, but diſguiſed, for whch Beza was very ſorry after, that he had not known him. Finding himſelf to draw near to his end, he reviſed his Will, and ſo eaſing his mind of all wordly thoughts, he wholly betook himſelf to expect the time of his departure, which he much longed for.

Preparation for Death.

He often uſed that ſaying of the Apoſtle, We are his Work-manſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good Works. And that of St. Auguſtine, Diu vixi, diu peccavi, ſit nomen Domini benedictum: I have lived long, I have ſinned long, Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. And that alſo, Domine, quod cæpiſti, perfice, ne in portu naufragium accidat, Lord perfect that which thou haſt begun, that I ſuffer not ſhipwrack in the Haven; And that of Bernard, Domine, ſequemur te, per te, ad te: te, quia veritas; per te, quia via; ad te, quia via: Lord, we follow thee, by thee, to thee: Thee, becauſe thou art the Truth: By thee, becauſe thou art the Way: To thee, becauſe thou art the Life.

Epheſ. 2 10.

His. Sickneſſe.

Anno 1605. there came ſome Noble and Learned men from Boruſſia to ſee him, with whoſe ſociety he was much pleaſed. But diſeaſes encreaſing upon him, the Paſtors of Geneva agreed amongſt themſelves, that every day two of them ſhould viſit him by turns, and ſometimes all of them came together, and prayed moſt fervently with him.

His Death.

October 13. being the Sabbath-day, he roſe in the morning, and prayed with his Family, and then deſiring to goe to Bed again, he ſate him down on the ſide of his Bed, and asked if all things were quiet in the City: They anſwered him, yea; but perceiving that he was near to his end, they ran for a Miniſter, who immediately coming, whilſt he was praying with him, without the leaſt pain or groaning, he quietly yeelded up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti 1605. and of his Age 86. and of his Miniſtry 46.

James Lectius made this Epigram of him.

Vezelii genuere, pia tenuere Gebennæ;
Aſtra tenent: vixi non mihi, ſed populis.

Aliud

Si qua fides famæ, proles mihi defuit omnis:
At varia, & vera prole beatus ego.
Me Populi, & Miſtæ, & Reges dixere parentem:
Multa virum genui millia, Chriſte, tibi.
Quin Populi, & Myſtæ, Reges naſcentur & ex me:
Chriſte tibi, & toto dum legar orbe frequens.

His Character.

He was a thick ſet man, and of a ſtrong Conſtitution, inſomuch that he uſed to ſay, that he never knew what it was to have his Head ake: He was of an excellent wit, an accurate judgement, a firm memory, very eloquent, affable, and courteous; ſo that he wascalled the Phœnix of his time.

In his Teſtament he gave Thanks, 1. That

1. That God at ſixteen years old had called him to the knowledge of the Truth, though for a while he walked not anſwerable to it, till the Lord in mercy brought him home, and carryed him to Geneva, where under that great Calvin, he learned Chriſt more fully. Thankſg iving for five things.
2. That being infected with the Plague at Lauſanna, and aſperſed with grievous calumnies, the Lord had delivered him from them both.
3. That coming back to Geneva, he was there choſen Paſtor, when as he deſerved not to have been one of the Sheep.
4. That not long after he was made Colleague to that excellent man John Calvin in reading Divinity.
5. That being called into France in the firſt Civill War, and toſſed there up and down for twenty two Moneths, God had preſerved him from ſix hundred dangers, &c.

A Papiſt objecting to him his youthly Poems; This man (ſaith he) vexeth himſelf, becauſe Chriſt hath vouchſafed to me his Grace.

Though there was ſo great worth in this man, and his Labours were extraordinary; yet he had but Fifteen-hundred Florens Per annum for his ſtipend, which amount but to ſeven or eight and fifty pounds ſterling by the year, beſides 20 Coups of Corn, and his houſe. His ſmall means.

His Works are theſe. N. Teſtamenti nova verſio, cum Annotationibus. Confeſſio Chriſtianæ fidei. De Hæreticis a civili Magiſtratu puniendis. Summa totius Chriſtianiſmi. De Cœna Domini. De Hypoſtatica duarum in Chriſto naturarum unione. De unitate eſſentiæ Divinæ, & tribus ſubſiſtentibus perſonis. Tractatio de Polygamia, & Divortio. Epiſtolæ Theologicæ. With many others ſet down particularly by Verheiden; and mentioned in this narrative of his Life. His Works

At the Conference in the Monaſtery of Poſſie (before-mentioned) when a Spaniſh Jeſuit called the Proteſtant Divines, Alinos, Vulpes, Simias, &c. Beza anſwered, Nos non magis credimus quam Tranſubſtantiationem: We believe it no more than we do your Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation.

D. RAINOLDS

The Life of John Rainolds, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1607.

His Birth & Education.

His brothers are Papiſts.

His excellent parts.

His humility.

His preferments.

Gods Providence.

His Death.

John Rainolds was born in Devonſhire, Anno Chriſti 1549, and brought up in Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Oxford, and for his excellent learning was choſen a Fellow of that Houſe, and afterwards Commenced Doctor in Divinity. (He had divers Brothers that were all Papiſts, which procured him much ſorrow, eſpecially his elder Brother [William Rainolds] who wrote ſeditious and peſtilent Books againſt that renowned Queen Elizabeth, and her flouriſhing Kingdome: He was ſo eminent for piety, and for his knowledge in the more myſterious parts of Divinity, that one ſaith of him, that he was, Academiæ lumen: Europæ decus: Divinæ gloriæ buccinator: ſanctitatis eximium exemplar, & diligentiſſimus in Pontificios ſcriptor: The Light of the Univerſity: The Glory of Europe: the Trumpeter of Gods glory: An admirable example of holineſs; and a diligent writer againſt the Papiſts.

Indeed what he wrote againſt them is altogether unanſwerable. He was withall ſo humble, that he would never accept of any great preferment in the Church, only (being much importuned) he took the Deanry of Lincoln, which he quickly grew weary of, and therefore paſſed it away to another. He was choſen Preſident of Corpus Chriſti Colledge, and made the Profeſſor of Divinity, which places he diſcharged with admirable learning, and ſedulity to the end of his life. Gods great providence in watching over him doth excellently appear by this example.

Being at London Anno Chriſti 1602, he deſired to refreſh himſelf by walking abroad into the open air, and for that end, went into Finsbury fields, where many Archers were ſhooting with their long bows, and it ſo fell out that one of their arrows met him, and ſtroke him upon the very breaſt, which in all probability would have pierced through his body; But behold the admirable providence of God! the arrow piercing the outſide, ſtopped againſt the quilted lining, and ſo leaped back without doing him the leaſt hurt. But the ingrateſull world being unworthy of ſuch a ſtar, it pleaſed God that he fell ſick, and was taken away by an immature death Anno Chriſti 1607, and of his Age 58.

When the Heads of the Houſes in Oxford came to viſit him in his laſt ſickneſs, which he he had contracted meerly by his exceeding great pains in his ſtudy (whereby he brought his body to be a very Sceleton) they earneſtly perſwaded him that he would not perdere ſubſtantiam propter accidentia, loſe his life for learning: He with a ſmile anſwered them with this verſe of the Poet.

Nec propter vitan vivendi perdere cauſas.

Biſhop Hall ſaith thus of him, He was a welfurniſhed Library: full of all Faculties, of all Studies, of all Learning: whoſe Reading, whoſe Memory was neer to a Miracle. He was a living Library A third Univerſity.

JOS: SCALIGER

The Life of Joſeph Scaliger, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1609.

Joſeph Scaliger the ſon of Julius Cæſar Scaliger, wos born at Aginum Anno Chriſti 1540, and at nine years old was ſent by his father to School at Burdeaux; But after three years ſtay there, the Plague breaking forth, he returned to his Father again, who ſet him every day to make an Oration, whereby he attained to ſuch an exactneſs in the Latine tongue, that not long after, he compoſed that excellent Tragedy of Oedipus, which cauſed his friends to admire ſuch ripeneſs of wit in ſuch tender years. His Birth and Education.

At nineteen years old (his Father being dead) he went to Paris to learn the Greek tongue, where for two moneths ſpace, he applyed himſelf to the Lectures of that learned man Adrian Turneby, but wanting other helps, he loſt moſt of that time; which cauſed him to ſhut himſelf up in his ſtudy, and there by extraordinary diligence, joyned, with his naturall aptneſs, he began to ſuck in the firſt rudiments of the Greek tongue; and before he had well learned all the conjugations, he gat him an Homer, and in one and twenty days he learned it all over; ſrame dfor himſelfa Greek Grammar, and never uſed the help of any other. He learned the other Greek Poets in four moneths more. He goes to Paris. His Induſtry.

He ſtudies Hebrew.

Having thus beſtowed two years in the ſtudy of the Greek, he grew very deſirous to add the knowledge of the Hebrew to it; though he knew not one letter of it, yet he attained to the knowledge of it without any other help. He wrote much in verſe in both thoſe languages, but to avoid the repute of ambition, would not ſuffer them to be printed. He read over many Hebrew and Greek Authors, and ſpent much time in interpreting them, and clearing of them from Errors.

His humility.

His travels.

Anno Chriſti 1563, he began to travel into divers Countries, and made little ſtay any where, till he was called to the Univerſity of Leiden, Anno Chriſti 1593, to be Profeſſor there, in which place he ſpent ſixteen years, making the place famous both by his Lectures and Writings, and at laſt dyed of a Dropſie, Anno Chriſti 1609, and of his Age ſixty nine. The aforementioned Turneby, who was an excellently Learned man himſelf, called this Scaliger, Portenoſi ingenii juvenem; A young man of a ſtupendious wit.

He is made Profeſſor at Leiden.

His Death.

The Life of Amandus Polanus who dyed Anno Chriſti 1610.

His Birth and Education.

Amandus Polanus, was born at Oppavia in Sileſia, of honeſt Parents, Anno Chriſti 1561. In his Childhood he was brought up by the care of his Parents in the Free-ſchool belonging to that place, where he learned the Grounds of the Liberall Arts: And from thence, Anno Chriſti, 1577, he was ſent to Uratiſlavia, where he ſpent ſix years, and where his ingenuity, quickly diſcovered themſelves, to the great ſatisfaction of his Maſters: And then for his farther inſtruction he went to Tubing and reaped much benefit by the Lectures of Theod. Snepfius.

He goes to Tubing.

But afterwards, in a publick Diſputation, wherein Doctor Andreas was Moderator; being invited to confer about Election, he conſtantly adhered to that of the Apoſtle, Rom. 9. 11. The children being not yet born, neither having done any good, or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to Election might ſtand, not of Works, but of him that calleth, &c. And afterwards being conferred with in private about it, adhering to his former Opinion, many began to be angry, and to withdraw themſelves from him: Whereupon by the advice of a Doctor of Phyſick, his ſpecial Friend, he left Tubing, and went to Baſil, carrying Letters of commendation from that Doctor, to James Grynaus, Anno Chriſti 1583, where, being admitted into the Univerſity, he wholly applyed himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity. And after a while he viſited Geneva, and Heidleberg; and in Moravia, and ſome other places he was Tutor to divers young Noblemen, eſpecially to one Zerotinius.

He goes to Baſil.

He commenceth Doctor in Divinty.

Anno Chriſti 1590, at the importunity of ſome Noblemen, he commenced Dr. in Divinity at Baſil, and ſix years after he was made Profeſſor, for interpreting the Old Teſtament in that Univerſity, which place he faithfully diſcharged for fourteen years ſpace, expounding Daniel, Ezekiel, and a good part of the Pſalms, beſides his extraordinary Lectures, which he read every Thurſday and Saturday, and his publick Diſputations, and other excerciſes.

Is made Profeſſor.

Thus Polanus, was an excellent Ornament to the Univerſity of Baſil, adding a great luſtre to it by his wit and writings. Afterwards falling ſick of a Feaver, he wholly reſigned up himſelf to the Will of God, comforted himſelf with divers pregnant Texts of Scriptures, and ſo departed quietly in the Lord, Anno 1610. and of his age 49.

His Death.

His Character.

There met in this man, true piety and ſolid Learning. He had both a good wit and ſound judgment: Was well skilled both in the Tongues and Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities. In his office he was very diligent. He twice bore the chiefeſt office in the Univerſity of Baſil, and that to his own credit, and the profit of the Schools. He kept correſpondence with the chiefeſt Divines of thoſe times, who were his ſpecial Friends, as Beza, Dan. Toſſanus, George Sohnius, Will. Stuckius, Pareus, Pitiſcus, &c. He had two Wives, the firſt was Mary, the daughter of James Grynæus, who dyed in childb[illegible]; The other was Salome Waſſerhunia, who dyed the ſame year with himſelf.

The Life of Thomas Holland, who dyed. Anno Christi 1612.

THomas Holland was born in Shropshire, Anno Christi 1539. and brought up in Exceter Colledge in Oxford, where he took his Degrees with much applause. Afterwards he Commenced Doctor in Divinity, was chosen Master of the Colledge, and for his excellent learning was preferred to be the Regius Professor, or Doctor of the Chair, wherein he succeeded Dr. Humfreid, and so deported himself in the same, that he gat the approbation, and admiration both of that of Oxford, and of Forreign Universities also. His Birth and Education. His Preferments.

He was like Apollos, a man mighty in the Scriptures, and as one saith of him, Adeo cum Patribus familiaris, ac si ipse Pater, et cum Scholasticis, ac si Seraphicus Doctor: i. e. He was so familiarly acquainted with the Fathers, as if himself had been one of them; and so vers'd in the School-men, as if he were the Seraphick Doctor. He was also a faithful Preacher of the Truth, and one that adorned it by his holy life and conversasion; A zealous defender of the true Religion, and a great hater of superstition and Idolatry: Insomuch that when he went any journey, calling the Fellows of the Colledge together, he used to say to them, Commendo vos dilectioni Dei, & odio Papatus, & superstitionis: I commend you to the Love of God, and to the hatred of Popery, and superstition. He continued Doctor of the Chair twenty years, and was every way as famous for his Religion, and holyness of life, as he was for his Learning. His great Learning. His zeal.

When in his old age he grew weak, and sickly, he spent all his time in fervent prayers, and Heavenly meditations, and when his end approached, he often sighed out, Come, O Come Lord Jesus, thou morning Star: Come Lord Jesus, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with thee: and so he quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Christi 1612. and of his age 73. I. DRVSIVS

The Life of John Drusius, who dyed Anno Christi 1616.

His Birth and Education.

John Drusius was born at Aldenard Anno Christi 1550, and first brought up to School in the City of Gaunt, and from thence went to the University of Lovain: But whilst he was following his study hard there, his Father was proscribed for Religion, & thereby deprived of all his estate, which caused him to fly into England, taking this his son along with him.

He goes into England.

When he came to London he met with Celaverius, lately come thither, that was exceeding skilfull in the Hebrew: His Lectures therefore he attended upon both in publick and private; and when Cevalerius was sent to Cambridge to be the Professor there, Drusius went along with him, applying himself especially to the study of Greek. Afterwards when Cevalerius was called back into France, Drusius still accompanyed him, and fell hard to the study of the Hebrew: He also privately read the same to two young English Gentlemen.

He studies Hebrew & Greek.

He goes into France.

After a while he returned to London again, and when he was purposed to goe back into France, he heard of that bloody Massacre at Paris, which made him alter his minde: and having preferment profered to him, either in Oxford, or Cambridge, he chose Oxford, where, for the space of four yeares, he read Hebrew, Chalde, and Syriack with great commendation. After which time he went back to Lovain; but not long enjoying peace there, he returned to London again; where he continued till the peace was concluded at Gaunt, and then went over into Flanders, and from thence into Zeland, where the States of Holland chose him to be the Professor in Hebrew, Chalde, and Syriack in the University of Leiden, Anno Christi 1577.

His return into England.

He is Professor in Oxford.

He is Professor in Leiden.

During his abode there he married a Wife, and the States of Frisland having newly erected a University at Franequer, they called him thither: In which place he continued taking great paines for the space of thirty one yeares; and at length resigned up his spirit unto God, Anno Christi 1916, and of his age sixty and six.

The

The Life of John James Grynæus, who dyed Anno Christi 1617.

John James Grynæus was born at Berne in Helvetia, Anno Christi 1540. His Father was first a Professor in Basil, and afterwards removed to a Pastoral charge at Ratela, who died of the Plague Anno Christi 1564. His birth, Parentage and Education.

His Mother was Adelheida Stuberina, both of them godly persons. His father took the care of his first learning, educating him under his own wings, and afterwards Anno Christi 1547, he was sent to School to Basil under Thomas Plater, an excellent School-master, with whom he profited so much, that Anno Christi 1551, upon examination he was admitted into the University under Boniface Amerbachius, and the very next year the Plague being hot in Basil, he fell sick of the plague, but it pleased God to restore him again, and he followed his study hard. Gods Providence.

He heard his own Father reading Greek and Latine, Huld. Coccius reading Logick, and John Nisæus reading Poetry and Rhetorick.

Anno Christi 1556, his Father was called to a Pastoral charge at Ratela, but our James stayd still at Basil, joyning the study of Divinity with that of Philosophy.

One of the Professors of Divinity at that time, was Simon Sulceras, who being an Ubiquitarian, misled our Grynæus into the same error, as himself confesseth; adding that he continued in it for ten years, and misled others likewise, till at length, through Gods mercy, he was brought into the way of truth.

Anno Christi 1559 he began to preach, and was ordained Deacon by Sulcerus, who was the Superintendent of those Churches, which office he supplyed till the year 1563, at which time by the advice of his father and friends, he went to Tubing for the further improvement of his learning, though himself had rather have gone to Wittemberg, where Charles Marques of Baden having heard him preach, and being taken with him, had profered him an exhibition, of an hundred Florens per annum. He is ordained Deacon.

When he came to Tubing, he delivered his Letters of commendation to Doctor Andreas, and so was admitted into that University, where he heard Andreas, Heerbrand, Snepsius, and Brentius for Divinity, Samuel Hailand for Philosophy, and others for the other Arts; and it pleased God that he met with William Stuckius of Zurich, whom he had formerly known, and who now became a partner in his studies, and remained his intimate friend ever after. His remove to Tubing.

Anno Christi 1564, when by the advice of their friends these two persons were minded to leave Tubing, Doctor Andreas stayed them, and put them upon a Disputation, upon certain Theses about the Ubiquity, and Eucharist, endeavouring to draw Grynæus to his own opinion; But in the disputation, Grynæus was so baffled by Stuckius, that he was almost non-pluſt, and was driven to doubt of that opinion. Having in this disputation, given reasonable satisfaction, to the Divines of Tubing, he was put upon reading Lectures upon Daniel, and so a while after, was made Doctor in Divinity. He doubts of the Ubiquity.

Anno Christi 1565 his Father dyed of the Plague, and he was chosen by Charles, Marques of Baden, to succeed in the Pastoral charge at Ratela, where besides his ordinary labours he read privately to the Deacons twice a week, and God blessed his labours exceedingly. He is chosen Pastor of Ratela.

Anno Christi 1569 he married a wife, with whom he lived contentedly 40 years, and had by her seven children. His marriage.

About that time the form of Concord being much pressed, he fell hard to the study of the Scriptures, and of Antient and Modern Divines, whereby it pleased God that light light began to appear to him, for hitherto he had been a Lutheran: And modeſtly declaring his judgement about the Ubiquity of Chriſts body, he began to be hated of many. Yet during his abode there, at the requeſt of the Printers, he corrected for the Preſs, Euſebius, Origen, Irenæus, Eraſmus his Adagies, and other Books.

He denies the Ubiquity

He is ſent for to Baſil.

Anno Chriſti 1575 he was ſent for to Baſil, to be a Profeſſor interpreting the Old Teſtament, and with the conſent of the Marqueſs, he removed thither with his family after he had been ten years Paſtor at Ratela; yet before his going, the Marqueſs conditioned with him, that he ſhould be overſeer of his Churches, and that his Brother ſhould ſucceed him in his charge at Ratela, and withall, he aſſigned him a ſtipend of twenty Florences per annum.

His remove to Baſil.

When he was come to Baſil he made an Oration of the difficulty of the work whereunto he was called. He began with the explication of Geneſis, but before he had gone through it, at the requeſt of his Auditors, he left it, and fell upon the Pſalms, and ſome of the minor Prophets. He alſo voluntarily read ſome Hiſtory Lectures.

He met with ſome reproaches from the Lutherans, becauſe he taught otherwiſe than they would have had him about the Lords Supper; But the Lord ſaw it good thus to exerciſe him, whoſe labours yet both in publick, and private he bleſſed exceedingly, and made him an happy inſtrument of cloſing up, and healing ſome breaches that had been between the Churches of Zurick and Baſil.

His friends.

He maintained friendſhip with Eraſtus, Amerbach, Plater, Zuinger, Urſtiſius, and others. He had many Noblemen, Gentlemen, Citizens, Doctors, and other learned young men, that came out of other countries to ſojourn with him.

Anno Chriſti 1583, Lodwick Prince Elector Palatine dying, Prince Caſſimire ſucceeded as Adminiſtrator in the minority of the young Prince, whoſe care was to reform the Churches of the Palatinate, and the Univerſity of Heidleberg, and adviſing with Daniel Toſſanus, and other godly Divines about the ſame, he was directed by them to chuſe Grynæus for one of the Profeſſors.

He removes to Heidleberg.

And accordingly Anno Chriſti 1584 he ſent, to Baſil for him, whereupon (with the conſent of the Senate) he removed to Heidleberg, where for two years ſpace he read Divinity and Hiſtory, taking care both of the Church, School, and Univerſity. He met with many oppoſitions from the Lutheran Faction, had many diſputations with them, whereof that was the moſt famous, which was held in the preſence of the Prince Anno Chriſti 1584, and wherein Grynæus was Moderator, the iſſue whereof was this, That thoſe Divines and Scholars which would not be convinced and reformed, but continued to make factions and diviſions in the Univerſity, were gently diſmiſſed: After which the Orthodox Doctrine of the perſon of Chriſt, and the Sacraments was quietly preached in the Palatinate.

The Lutherans removed.

Anno Chriſti 1585, Sulcer being dead, by the earneſt deſire of the godly, he was called back to Baſil, to undertake the Government of that Church, and thereupon Anno Chriſti 1586 he removed to Baſil, and was entertained with the great applauſe of the whole Church, and having preached twice, he went back to Heidleberg, to take his leave of the Prince, Church, and Academy: After which he was courteouſly diſmiſſed by the Prince, who provided for the carriage of his houſhold, and gave him his Effigies in Gold, as a remembrance of his love.

His return to Baſil.

His great Pains.

He continued in the faithfull diſcharge of his office at Baſil, all the remainder of his life, promoting the honour and profit of the Church, School, and Univerſity, by his care, diligence, and induſtry. In the Church he was a faithfull Paſtor, feeding his people with the Bread of life, comforting the afflicted, viſiting the ſick, & diligently removing whatſoever might hinder the progreſs of the Goſpel: For which end, Anno Chriſti 1594, he viſited all the Churches in his Dioceſs, endeavouring to preſerve, and nouriſh love amongſt Brethren, and reforming what was amiſs.

In the Grammar School, he with ſome others, was careful to provide fit Schoolmaſters, examined the proficiency of the Scholars, and helpt to maintain ſuch as were poor.

His imployments abroad.

In the Univerſity he went through the greateſt honors and labours.

Anno

Anno Christi 1588, he was twice sent to Mulhusen, first to settle an able Ministry, and then to be present in a Synod. The same year he went to Bern, to a conference for composing the Controversies in Religion. He grows weak.

At length he began to grow weak and sickly, and his eye-sight waxed very dim, and in the 72 year of his age he was almost quite blind, yet his intellectuals and memory continued very good. He lost also most of his friends, with his brothers, sisters, wife, and chidren, (all but one daughter, and his son-in-law Polanus) whom he much desired to follow. He was oft tormented with the Collick, yet bore all with admirable patience; and in the midst of his pains, he said, His patience.

Ut nunc triste mori est, sic dulce resurgere quondam,
Christus ut in vita, sic quoque morte lucrum est:
In terris labor est, requies sed suavis in urna,
In summo venient gaudia summa die.

As death's sweet, so to rise is sweet much more,
Christ as in life, so be in death is more:
On earth are troubles, sweet rest in the grave,
At last day we the lasting'st joyes shall have.

After that he was eased of the Collick and Stone, he fell sick of a Feaver, which almost took away his Senses, but he betook himself wholly to Prayer, and tasted the joyes of Heaven in his Soul, continually wishing that he might be dissolved, and be with Christ; which desire God shortly after satisfied; when he had lived seventy seven years, Anno Christi 1617. The Ministers of Basil carried his corps to the grave. His Sickness. Prayer. Death desired. His Death.

A little before his death, he professed to Doctor Meier, that he dyed in the same Faith that he had taught others; That he had earnestly besought God, to provide his people of an able and faithful Pastor, &c. concluding, O præclarum illum diem, cum ad illud animarum concilium, cælumq; proficiscar, & cum ex hac turba, & colluvione discedam: O happy day, when I may depart out of this troublesome and sinful world, and go to Heaven to those blessed Souls before departed. His speech to Meier.

He used to say, Pontifici Romano Erasmum plus nocuisse jocando, quam Lutherum stomachando: Writing to Chytræus, he said, Si non amplius in his terris te visurus sum, ibi tamen conveniemus, ubi Luthero cum Zuinglio optime jam convenit: If we never see one another again in this world, yet we shall meet in that place where Luther, and Zuinglius agree very well together. His sayings.

He used to be up at his study, Winter and Summer, before sun-rising, and spent all the day in Prayer, writing, reading and visiting of the sick. He was so famous that many Princes, Noblemen, and young Gentlemen came from forreign Countries to see and hear him. His diligence and Industry.

He was very dutiful to his parents, libral to a poor Brother which he had: Temperate in food and apparel all his life long: Courteous and affable to every man; respectful to all degrees; studious of love and concord amongst the good, especially Schollars, as his many Epistles shew. Many desired to sojourn with him, whose bodies he fed with food, and minds with pleasant and profitable discourses, and sage Apothemes. In bearing wrongs, he was very patient, never seeking reveng. His Character.

R. ABBAT

The Life of Robert Abbat, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1603.

His Birth and Education.

His degrees

Robert Abbat was born at Guilford in the County of Surrey, Anno Chriſti 1560, of honeſt Parents, who carefully educated him in learning, and when he was fit, they ſent him to Oxford, where he was admitted into Baliol Colledge, in which place he followed his ſtudies very hard, took all his degrees till he commenced Doctor in Divinity, and for his excellent Learning, and exemplary life, he was choſen, firſt Maſter of the Colledge; and afterwards the Regius Profeſſor, in which place he ſucceeded Doctor Thomas Holland; and for five years ſpace performed his office ſo excellently, that Anno Chriſti 1615, he was by King James preferred to the Biſhoprick of Salisbury.

His Works

Whilſt he was there, he made that learned and ſolid work De gratia, & perſeverantia Sanctorum: He was alſo very diligent, and faithfull in the execution of his office: But partly by reaſon of the burthen and care of his place, partly by his ſedentary life, being ſo hard a ſtudent, he had a ſtone bred in his kindneys, which put him to intollerable pain, yet he bore the ſame with invincible patience.

His patience.

His Sickneſſe.

Till finding his end to approach, he called his Family together, and began to make before them a Confeſſion of his Faith, yet with ſome pauſes by reaſon of his pains and faintneſs, whereupon ſome of his friends told him, that he need not put himſelf to that trouble, having ſo fully declared the ſame in his learned and Orthodox writings. This counſel he approved, and therefore ſaid to them, That Faith which I have publiſhed, and defended in my writings is the truth of God, and therein I die, and ſo preſently after he yeelded up his ſoul to God Anno Chriſti 1618, and of his age 58.

His Death.

The

The Life of William Cowper, who died An. Christi 1619.

William Cowper was born in Edenborough, and at eight years old was sent by his Father to Dunbar-School, where in four years he learn'd the whole course of Grammar, and profited above his equals, and at that time did God began to reveal himself to him. Many times when he was in the School he used to lift up his heart unto God, begging of him knowledge and understanding; and always as he went to Church, he sent up this Ejaculation to Heaven, Lord, bow mine ear that I may hear thy word. His birth & education. His conversion.

At his entry into his tirteenth year, his father sent for him home to Edenborough, and presently after, he went to Saint Andrews, where he continued to his sixteenth year in the study of Philosophy, but made no great progress therein; yet the seed of Grace was still working in him, inclining him to a careful hearing and penning of Sermons, and other Theological Lectures. He goes to S. Andrews.

During his abode at Saint Andrews, Sathan, working upon corrupt nature, sought oft to entrap him in his snares, but as himself testifies, the Lord in mercy forgave all the vanities, and ignorances of his youth, and preserved him from such falls, as might have made him a shame to the Saints, and a reproach to his enemies. His te tations. Gods mercy.

At the Age of sixteen years, he returned to his parent at Edenborough, who propos'd to him sundry courses of life; But his heart was still enclined to the study of the Holy Scriptures, whereupon he resolved to goe into England, and the Lord provided him a place at Hoddesdon, eighteen miles from London (just as he had spent all his money which he brought with him out of Scotland) where he was entertained by one Master Guthrie, a Scotchman, to assist him in teaching of a School. There he remained three quarters of a year, and then having occasion to goe to London, he was unexspectedly called to the service of Master Hugh Broughton, with whom he continued a year and a half, and daily exercised himself in the study of Divinity. He goes into England. Gods providence. He serves Mr. Hugh Broughton.

At nineteen years old he returned again to Edenborough, where he lived with his Elder Brother [then one of the Ministers in that City] who much furthered him in his former studies; and at last he was required to give a proof of his gifts privately, which he did in the New Church before Master Robert Pont, and Master Robert Rollock, and some others, by whom he was commanded to preach in publick also. His return to Edenborough. He preaches privately.

Being twenty years old he was sent, by the Authority of the General Assembly, which then was met at Edenborough, to be the Pastor at Bothkenner in Sterlingshire; but when he came thither, he found in the Church, besides ruinous wals, neither roof, nor doors, nor pulpit, nor seats, nor windows, yet it pleased God to give such a Blessing to his Ministry, that within half a year, the Parishioners of their own accord, built, and adorned the Church in as good a quality as any round about it. His calling to the Ministry. Power of the Word.

There he continued seven or eight years, yet subject to great bodily infirmities, by reason of the wetnesse of the Soil, and moistnes of the Air; and in that time did God begin to acquaint him with his terrors, and with inward tentations, so that his life was almost wasted with heavines, yet thereby he learned more, and more to know Christ Jesus. He is sickly. Assaul ed. with tentations.

About that time there was a General Assembly of the Church at Perth, unto which some that lived in the North of Scotland, sent to desire that a Minister might be sent unto them; whereupon the Assembly appointed Master Cowper for that place, and accordingly wrote to him by Master Patrick Simpson, who coming to Sterling, delivered to him the Letters from the Assembly, and those from the Town, containing his calling to the work of the Ministry in that place: And so shortly after, the Town sent their Commissioners to transport him and his Family thither. His remove.

In that place he continued, doing the work of the Lord, for ninteen years together, where he was a comfort to the best, and a wound to the worser sort. Besides the Sabbath days, he chose thrice a week to convene to people together in the Evenings, viz. Wednesdays, Frydays, and Saturdays, for a preparation to the Sabbath; upon which His painfulnes in the Ministry.

daies thay had no Preaching in the Morning; concerning which meetings himself writes, That it would have done a Christians heart good, to have seen those glorious, and joyful assemblies, to have heard the zealous cryings to God amongst that people, with sighings and tears, and melting hearts, and mourning eyes: And concerning himself he saith, My witnesse is in heaven, that the love of Jesus and his people made continual preaching my pleasure, and I had no such joy as in doing his work. And besides that, he preached five times a week, he penned also whatsoever he preached; many of which holy and godly Sermons are extant in print.

The success of his Ministry.

His zeal.

His works.

All the time of his abode there (except some little intermissions, and breathing times) the Lord still exercised him with inward tentation, and great variety of spiritual combats, the end of all which (through Gods mercy) was joy unspeakable, as himself testifies. Yea once (saith he) in greatest extreamity of horror, and anguish of spirit, when I had utterly given over, and looked for nothing but confusion, suddenly there did shine, in the very twinkling of an eye, the bright, and lightsome countenance of God, proclaming peace, and confirming it with invincible reasons: O what a change was there in a moment; The silly soul that was even now at the brink of the pit, looking for nothing but to be swallowed up, was instantly raised up to heaven to have fellowship with God in Christ Jesus, and from this day forward my soul was never troubled with such extremity of terrors: This confirmation was given unto me on a Saturday in the morning; there found I the power of Religion, the certainty of the word, there was I touched with such a lively sense of a Divinity, and power of a Godhead, in mercy reconciled with man, and with me in Christ, as I trust my soul shall never forget: Glory, glory, glory be to the joyfull deliverer of my soul out of all adversities for ever.

His tentations.

Joy unspeakable.

In the middest of these wrestlings with God he wanted not combats with wicked men also, but the greatnesse of his inward conflicts, made him lightly regard all their outward contradictions, and to esteem them but as the bitings of a Flea. It was no marvel to see Satan stir up his wicked instruments to molest him, since he professed himself a disquieter of him, and his Kingdom. Yet this much supported him, that he never had a controversie with any of them but for their sins: And the Lord assisting him, the power of the Word did so hammer down their pride, that they were all of them at last brought to an acknowledgement of their evil wayes.

His outward troubles.

Power of the word.

But at length (as God turned the heart of Pharoah, and his people from the Israelities, when the time drew on for their remove) so by little and little did the zeal and love of most of that people fall away, so that his last conflict was, not with the prophane, but with Justitiaries, and such as were unrebukeable in their lives. These men were stuffed with such pride, self-conceit, disdain, and intolerable contempt, that thereby they were carried further from their duty than any of the former; and they which should have been his greatest comfort, were his greatest cross.

The apostasie of his people.

Presently hereupon God called him to the Government of the Churches in Galloway, in the South-West parts of the Kingdom, being chosen by the Assembly, and presented by the King thereunto. This was done without his privity, or ambitious seeking after it; yea, he was so far from it, that eighteen weeks passed betwixt the Kings Presentation, and his Acceptation of it.

He is made Bishop of Galloway.

His humility.

In that place he was very carefull to advance the Gospel, and to adorn his Ministery: Concerning the frame of his spirit thus he writes, My soul is alway in my hand, ready to be offered to my God: Where, or what kind of death God hath prepared for me, I know not: But sure I am, there can no evil death befall him that lives in Christ, nor sudden death to a Christian Pilgrim, who (with Job) waits every hour for his change. Yea (saith he) many a day have I sought it with teares, not out of impatience, distrust, or perturbation, but because I am weary of sin, and fearfull to fall into it.

His desire of death.

Death why desired.

This faithful servant of God who had alwaies been faithfull and painful in his Ministery, when sickness grew daily upon him, was no way deficient in the duty of his ordinary preaching: Taking great pains also to perfect his work upon the Revelation which he desired greatly to finish before his death.

He grows sickly.

He had also much grief by reason of some that disturb'd the peace of the Church which he alwayes sought to procure; so that his infirmity encreasing he was compelled, pelled to keep home; yet as his weakneſs permitted, he applyed himſelf to reviſe his writings, and to diſpoſe of his worldly eſtate, that he might be ready for his paſſage, which every day he exſpected; and ſome ten days before his deceaſe, he maniſeſted to his Friends, what great contentment he had in his approaching death. Preparation for Death.

Many repaired to him in his ſickneſſe, whom he entertained with moſt holy, and Divine Conferences, expreſſing a great willingneſſe to exchange this life for a better; and at laſt, feeling his ſtrength and ſpirits to decay (after he had conceived a moſt Heavenly Prayer in the company of thoſe that were by) he deſired to goe to bed, in which alſo, after he had moſt devoutly commended himſelf unto Almighty God, he took ſome quiet reſt. After which time he ſpake not many words, his ſpeech failing, though his memory and underſtanding were perfect; and ſo about ſeven a clock at night he rendred his Soul unto God in a moſt quiet and peaceable manner Anno Chriſti 1619. Some of his private meditations were theſe. His Sickneſſe. His Death.

Now my Soul beglad; for at all parts of this priſon the Lord hath ſet to his Pioneers to looſe thee: Head, Feet, Milt, and Liver are faſt failing; yea, the middle ſtrength of the whole Body, the Stomach is weakned long ago. Ariſe, make ready, ſhake off thy fetters, mount up from the Body, and goe thy way.

I ſaw not my Children when they were in the Womb, yet there the Lord fed them without my knowledge; I ſhall not ſee them when I goe out of the Body, yet ſhall they not want a Father. A ſweet ſpeech.

Death is ſomewhat drierie, and the ſtreams of that Jordan between us and our Canaan run furiouſly, but they ſtand ſtill when the Ark comes. Let your Anchor be caſt within the vail, and faſtned on the Rock Jeſus. Let the end of the threefold cord be buckled to the heart, ſo ſhall ye go thorough.

A. WILLET

The Life of Andrew Willet, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1621.

His Birth and Education.

Andrew Willet, was born in Ely in Cambridgeſhire Anno Chriſti 1562. His Father was a Miniſter, who carefully brought him up in the School of that City, where by his extraordinary pains and diligence he profited ſo much, ſthat at fourteen years old he went to Cambridge, and was admitted into Peter-houſe; yet not long after was tranſplanted to Chriſt's Colledge, where Doctor Down-ham, and Maſter William Perkins were of his own ſtanding.

He goes to Cambridge

His proficiency.

There he applyed himſelf ſo ſeriouſly to his ſtudies, that in ſhort time he gained a good meaſure of knowledge in the learned tongues, and Arts; yea he attained to ſuch a meaſure of perfection therein, that at twenty two years old he publiſhed his Book, De animæ natura, viribus, wherein he did Philoſophically Theologize in five ſubtil, and abtruſe queſtions. About that time alſo he was made Miniſter, and began ſometimes to Preach, being furniſhed with Piety, Learning, and gravity beyond his years: Inſomuch as an accident befalling a Proctor of that Colledge, he ſuddenly undertook his place at the Commencement, and ſo well, and dexterouſly performed it, that thereby he gained the applauſe, yea, the admiration of all his Auditors.

He is ordained Miniſter.

He is Prebend of Ely.

His marriage.

Having thus ſpent thirteen years in the Univerſity, by the favour of Queen Elizabeth, he was made a Prebend in Ely, where alſo he married a Wife, by whom he had eleven ſons, and ſeven daughters. But his Wife being a carefull yoak-fellow, his houſhold affairs troubled him not, ſo that he purſued his old courſe of ſtudy, which was his delight, and of which never he was weary.

His ſtudiouſneſs.

His piety.

His Manner was to riſe early in a morning, and to get half way on his journey ere others could ſet out. At the hour of Prayer he came down, and took his Wife and Family with him to Church, where he had publick Prayers, to the great comfort of his Pariſhioners: Prayers being ended, he returned to his ſtudy till near dinner time, vvhen his manner was to recreate himſelf either upon a little Organ, which he had in

in his houſe, ſinging to it; or ſporting with his young Children: Sometimes alſo he would cleave Wood for his Health-ſake. His recreations.

At his Meals he uſed pleaſant diſcourſe, ſeaſoned with ſome profitable application: After dinner he uſed to ſit and diſcourſe a while, or walk abroad, and then to his ſtudy again, ſo that (without extraordinary avocations) he ſpent eight hours a day in his ſtudy: By which means he read over the Fathers, Councels, Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtories, a great part of the Civil and Canon Law: Polemick Controverſies between Rome and us; and moſt Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures; In his Papers he had couched the whole ſubſtance of his reading: So that he might ſay. His great Reading.

Exiguis Patres arctantur pellibus omnes,
Quos mea non totos Bibliotheca capit.

Lo here few leaves th'old Fathers all infold,
Whom whole at once, my ſtudy ne'r could hold.

He improved his Talent for the publick good, ſo that every year he either publiſhed a new Book, or reprinted ſome old, with a new Edition. He is one of thoſe, concerning whom Doctor Hall ſaith, Stupor mundi clerus Britannicus: The Engliſh Clergie is the Worlds wonder. In his younger time he preached the Lecture for three years together in the Cathedral Church of Ely: And for one year in Saint Paul's at London, in both, with a moſt ſingular Approbation of a frequent Auditory. Sometimes he preached in Cambridge, and therein diſcovered himſelf the Man, quem rus non inſuſcavit, whom the Country had not ſtained. His Works. His Miniſtry.

When he was once called to a Paſtoral charge at Burley in Herfordſhire, he was always conſtant in Preaching, inſtructing his people in a plain familiar way, applying himſelf to their capacity. He would alſo ſometimes ſharpen his ſtile, & cut them up roundly for their ſin: But when he ſpake words of conſolation, he was wholly compoſed of Sweetneſs: In denunciations of Judgments, he would put on the Bowels of Compaſſion, and the ſpirit of meekneſs, ſugaring every bitter Pill, that it might go down more pleaſantly. His very preſence was powerful and perſwaſive (mildneſs mixed with gravity ſitting in his countenance) inſomuch as one word from him was able to effect more than thouſands from ſome others. But eſpecially his Godly converſation, exemplifying what he gave in charge out of Gods Word, did moſt of all convince his peoples judgments, and ſubdue their Affections to Obedience, ſo that the Lord bleſſed his Labours much to them. He is made Paſtor. Preachers pattern. His holy Life.

His houſe was a little Model of a Church, and Houſe of God: Here, morning and evening Sacrifices were offered to God daily: His Children after ſupper read ſome part of the Holy Scripture, and he required of every one preſent, that they ſhould remember ſome ſentence or other, and afterwards he would repeat the ſame, adding ſome Expoſition, and ſometimes ſomething of Application to them: Yea he made himſelf an exact pattern and example to all his family. His Family well governed.

His Charity will eminently appear, if we conſider quantum ex quanto, how much out of how little means he freely gave to the poor and needy. He maintained two of his near Alies (being faln into want) many years at his own table; and maintained, for the moſt part, a Son of either of them at the Univerſity; and though his many Children might have reſtrained his bounty; yet he was of Cyprian's mind, The more children, the more Charity. He gave a Dole of Bread to the Poor, on the Corronation and Powder-Treaſon days: At Chriſtmaſs he gave Corn to ſome, Money to others, and to the reſt of his Neighbours liberal and loving entertainment. In the Harveſt he would ſay to the Poor, as Boaz did to Ruth, Go not to clean in another Field, &c. And when at any time himſelf came into the Field, he would ſcatter of his heaps with a full hand; ſo that the Poor would be ready to leap for joy at his coming. His charity.

When he ſet any on Work, he payd freely, and ſpeedily: When the poor bought Corn of him, they were ſure to gain, both in price and meaſure; and yet as Wels drawn, ſpring more freely, ſo his Subſtance encreaſed with his Bounty. He took much pains in compoſing the Differences amongſt his Neighbours. He was eſpecially careful to His juſtice. He was a Peace maker.

to do good to poor Miniſters, his Fellow-labourers. Some that lived near him taſted of his bounty oft, to whom he ſent Wheat, or Malt, in no ſcant proportion.

s hoſpi-ty. He was much given to Hoſpitality, and Strangers out of other Nations, hearing his fame, reſorted to him for his acquaintance.

e breaks s Leg. About December, Anno Chriſti 1621. having been at London, as he was returning home, his Horſe by the way ſtumbling, threw him down, and in the fall brake his Leg, but being holpen up, he rode to a Town called Hodſon, where in an Inn, he ſent for a Bone-ſetter, by whom, after his Leg was ſet, he was directed to keep his Bed ten days, which he willingly ſubmitted to.

As he lay he imployed one of his Sons who waited on him, to write from his mouth ſome Heavenly meditations upon the Song of Hezekiah, when he had been ſick, and recovered of his ſickneſſe, Iſaiah 38. eſpecially upon the 9, 10, 13, and 15 verſes. Thus he continued to the tenth of December, when early in the morning, being awakened by the toleing of a paſſing Bell (which probably occaſioned in him a ſtrong Apprehenſion of his own approaching death) he fell into a diſcourſe with his Wife (who lay in the chamber by him ſince that accident firſt befel him) concerning death, and our bleſſed hopes expected after death: And amongſt other things, touching the mutual knowledge that the Saints have one of another in glory: Which comfortable diſcourſe being ended, they began to ſing an Hymn (of his own compoſing) giving thanks to God for their reſt that night, and praying for a Bleſſing upon them and theirs in the day enſuing: And then having repeated one verſe of the 146 Pſalm, he preſently brake out into theſe words, Oh! This is a moſt ſweet Pſalm; and ſo went on, but pauſing at the end of every ſtaff, he delivered a ſhort Paraphraſe upon it; and coming to theſe words, ver. 7, 8. And looſe the fetters ſtrong; and the lame to Limbs reſtore; he applyed both to himſelf, calling the ſplints upon his Leg his fetters, and comforting himſelf with this, that God would reſtore him from his lameneſſe; But having occaſion for ſome eaſe to ſtir himſelf, he ſuddenly fetched a deep groan, and ſo fell into a Trance.

His prepa-ration for Death.

He faints.

His wife crying out, and ſome coming in, they uſed means, and he began to rouſe himſelf a little, and to look about: And uttered theſe his laſt words; Let me alone, I ſhall do well: Lord Jeſus —— and ſo gave up his Soul to God, Anno Chriſti 1621, and of his age 59.

His Death.

His Works are, Synopſis Papiſmi. A ſixfold Commentary upon Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Samuel 1, & 2. Daniel, Romans. Eccleſia triumphans; Theſaurus Eccleſiæ. A Comment upon the Epiſtle of Jude. The Proteſtants Diet.

D. PAREVS

The Life of David Pareus, who died Anno Chriſti 1622.

David Pareus was born in Sileſia, Anno Chriſti 1548. His Parents were Citizens of good rank; when he was about three years old, he fell ſick of the ſmall pox, whereof he was like to die, and though it pleaſed God that he recovered, yet he had thereby a blemiſh in one of his eyes, which continued ſo long as he lived. About that time his Mother died. His Birth, Parentage and Education.

When he grew up to riper yeares, his Father, perceiving a natural promptneſſe in him to learning, ſet him to School in his own City, where one of his Maſters was very rigid, and ſevere in his carriage unto him, and there he learned Grammar, Muſick, and Arithmatick.

But when he was fourteen years old (by the inſtigation of his ſtep-mother) his father placed him with an Apothecary at Uratiſlavia; which courſe of life he could not well reliſh, and therefore after a moneths ſtay, he returned home again, which his ſtep-mother was much offended with, yet his tender father reſolved to keep him at School, and when he diſliked the ſeverity of his former Maſter, he ſent him to Hirſchberg, to one Chriſtoper Schillingus, who was much affected with his ingenuity and towardlineſſe. The chief Magiſtrate alſo of that City took a great liking to him, for ſome verſes which he made at his ſons Funeral, ſo that he gave him his diet in his family. He is made a Prentice. He returnes to ſchool.

When he had been there about two years, the Paſtor of that place, who was a Lutherane, fell out with his Schoolmaſter, for that, in Catechiſing of his ſcholars, he had taught them, that Chriſts body being aſcended into heaven was there to remain till his coming to judgement, and that in the Sacrament we fed upon it onely ſpiritually by faith, &c And his ſpleene was ſo great, that he would not be ſatisfied till he had driven him away from the City. His Maſter is driven away.

Pareus, having to his great grief loſt his Maſter, returned home; yet neither there was Malice. was he in quiet, ſome talebearers ſuggeſting to his Father, that his School-maſter had infected him with his errors, and ſo far they prevailed, that his Father intended to diſinherit him. Hereupon Pareus reſolved to go into the Palatinate, which his Father much diſliked, and ſought by all means to hinder; yet at laſt, through Gods mercy, by importunity, he got his fathers conſent, who ſent him away with little money in his purſe.

His poverty. Thus forſaking his friends and fathers houſe, he went to Hirſchberg, where he met with his Maſter, and ſome of his School-fellows, and ſo they travelled together towards the Palatinate, through Bohemia. By the way, his money failing, he went to a Monaſtery to beg an Alms, and the Abbat pitying him, relieved him. Going from thence to another Monaſtery, he met with an ignorant Fryar, and asking an Alms of him in Latine, he returned this anſwer; Nos pauperi fratres, nos nihil habemus; an piſcimus, an caro, an panis, an miſericordia habemus. Yet at length it pleaſed God to bring them ſafely to Amberg in the upper Palatinate.

He goes into the Palatinate. There his Schoolmaſter ſtayed, and ſent Pareus, with ten more of his Scholars, to Heidleberg, where they were admitted into the Colledge of Sapience: There he was a diligent hearer of Urſin, Boquin, Tremelius, Zanchy, and the other Profeſſors, under whom he profited both in the Arts and Tongues to admiration. Then he betook himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, having fitted himſelf for the work of the Miniſtry, he was choſen by the Elector to preach in a village within his juriſdiction, which he was then about to reform.

He enters into the Miniſtry.

Not long after, he was called back to Heidleberg, and made a Publick Lecturer, where he continued till the death of Frederick the third, and then by the Heterodox party, he with the other Profeſſors was driven from thence; But moſt of them were entertained by Prince Caſſimire, who erected a Univerſity at Neoſtade, appointing Urſin, Zanchy, Toſſan, Junius. Piſcator, and others to be the Profeſſors in it. He appointed alſo a Synod therein, to conſider how to provide for the other exiles. Toſſan was choſen Moderator, and Pareus the Scribe of it.

He is driven from Heidleberg.

He returns home. In that Synod Pareus gat leave to goe viſit his country and Friends, and in three weeks ſpace came ſafely to them, where he was received with much joy, and at the requeſt of the Senate, he preached the Sabbath following upon John 3. 16. And that with great applauſe, and general approbation. His Father alſo was ſo well pleaſed with him, that preſently after the Sermon, he cancelled the writing whereby he had diſinherited him. The Senate alſo deſired him to undertake a Paſtoral charge in that place, but he choſe rather to return into the Palatinate again; and coming to Neoſtade, he was appointed to preach in a village hard by, where he continued till Prince Caſimire (as Guardian to the young Prince Elector Palatine) ſent for him to be a Preacher in the great Church in Heidleberg, and not long after he was made Maſter of the Colledge of Sapience in that Univerſity.

His return into the Palatinate.

His preferment there.

Anno Chriſti 1587, according to the Statutes of the Colledge he commenced Maſter of Arts, and afterwards, by the perſwaſion of his friends, Doctor of Divinity alſo.

He commenceth Doctor in divinity. Lutherans malice. Anno Chriſti 1594, at a Convention of States at Ratisbone, the Divines of the Palatinate were accuſed by the Lutherans, as holding opinions neither conſonant to the Scriptures, Auguſtane Confeſſion, nor to their own Catechiſm. But Pareus, at the appointment of the Palatine, eaſily wiped off thoſe aſperſions, and vindicated the innocency of them.

A great plague. Anno Chriſti 1596, there brake forth a great Plague in the Univerſity of Heidleberg, whereof the learned James Kimedontius (Pareus his intimate friend) died, and ſome other Profeſſors alſo; and the Students by reaſon of it, were driven away, yet Pareus ſtayd, and it pleaſed God to preſerve his Colledge free from the infection.

He is made Profeſſor. Not long after he was choſen Profeſſor of the Old Teſtament in the room of Kimedontius, and preſently after Rector of the whole Univerſity.

Gods mercy Anno Chriſti 1596, he was extremely troubled with a Catarrh, inſomuch as he deſpaired of life, yet it pleaſed God after a while to reſtore him.

Anno

Anno Chriſti 1602, upon the death of Daniel Toſſan, he was made Profeſſor of the New Teſtament; and grew ſo famous, that many reſorted out of Hungarie, Boruſſia, France, England, Scotland, Ireland, and Germany to ſee, and hear him. His fame.

Anno Chriſti 1615, his Wife ſickned, and died, which was a great grief to him. His wife dies.

Anno Chriſti 1618, the Low Countries being exceedingly indangered by the growth of Arminianiſm, the States appointed a Synod at Dort, for the curing of that diſeaſe, and amongſt other famous Divines, Pareus was choſen by the Elector Palatine to goe to it, but he being grown very old, and infirm, deſired to be excuſed, and ſo Paul Toſſan was ſent in his room. He is choſen to Synod at Dort.

February the ſecond, Anno Chriſti 1620, as Pareus was comming out of his ſtudy, the ſteps being ſlippery with the froſt, his foot ſlipt, and fell down ſixteen ſteps, and yet it pleaſed God by a wonderful providence, that he light upon his feet, and received no hurt by the fall; which made him think of that promiſe, Pſal. 91, He will give his Angels charge over thee, &c. Gods providence.

By his Doctrine, and Counſel he was admirably advantageous to the Church of God in many places. He ſtrongly aſſerted the truth of God againſt its adverſaries. He was a great ſtudier, and promoter of the Churches peace; labouring that they which agree in the Fundamentals, ſhould not jar about matters of an inferiour nature. He wrote many excellent Works, whereof ſome were printed by himſelf, others remained with his ſon Philip Pareus, who hath ſince publiſhed them to the great benefit of the Church. Peace maker. His works.

About that time the Spaniards came into the Palatinate with their Army, which brought great miſeries upon that poor Country, which Pareus foreſaw, both by Prodigies and Dreams. Then did his Friends, both in Heidleberg and other places, perſwade him to retire himſelf to ſome other place of ſafety; to whom he yeelded, that ſo he might not fall into the hands of thoſe bloody Papiſts, whom he had irritated by his writings againſt them. At his departure, he cried out, O Heidleberg! O Heidleberg! but it's better to fall into the hands of God, than of men, whoſe tender mercies are cruelty. The Spaniards come into the Palatinate. He goes to Anvilla.

He went to Anvilla where he ſpent his time in Prayer, Study, and Meditation, waiting, and longing for the time of his change. There alſo he wrote his Corpus Doctrinæ; which when he had finiſhed, he ſaid, Lord, now let thy ſervant depart in peace, becauſe he hath finiſhed that which he deſired. Preſently after he felt his ſtrength much to decay, and he fell into a Feaver; and finding that the air in that place agreed not with him, he went thence to Neapolis; earneſtly begging of God, that if it were his holy will he might yet returne to Heidleberg, and lay his bones there. Death deſired. His ſickneſſe.

He made his will alſo, finding his former catarrh to return upon him again; yet, through Gods mercy, and by the help of Phyſitians, he recovered, whereupon he reſolved to goe to Heidleberg, and taking his Grand-ſon, young Daniel Pareus with him, whom he loved dearly, he came ſafely to Heidleberg, where he was received with wonderfull acclamations of joy; About which time Prince Frederick came thither alſo from his Exile; and the Sabbath following they received the Sacrament of the Lords Supper together, with much comfort. But three dayes after, his former diſeaſe returning, he was ſenſible of his approaching death. The Profeſſors, and Miniſters reſorted to him, much bewailing their own loſs; amongſt whom was Henry Alting, to whom he freely opened his mind both concerning Gods houſe, and his own, and preſently after quietly departed in the Lord, Anno Chriſti 1622, and of his age 73. His return to Heidleberg. His death.

His Works are bound up together in three volumes. His works.

The Life of Thomas Erpenius, who dyed. Anno Christi 1624.

His Birth and Education. He goes to Leiden.

THomas Erpenius was born at Gorcome in the Low Countries, Anno Christi 1584, of honest Parents. In his childhood he was bred in the School of Leiden, and admitted into that University at eighteen years old, and in the twenty fifth years of his age, he commenced Master of Arts. (Then he fell to the studies of Divinity, and of the Oriental Languages under Joseph Scaliger, who, observing his ingenuity, and promptnesse, often foretold what an eminent man he would prove in time to come.

His travels.

From thence he travelled into England, France, Italy, and Germany, in which peregrinations he profited exceedingly both in learning, and prudence.

At Paris he became intimately acquainted with Isaac Causabon, and went with him to Samure, where he fell hard to the study of Arabick, and profited so exceedingly therein, that Causabone had him in great admiration, and estimation for the same.

His great Learning.

From thence he went to Venice, where by the help of some learned Jews and Turks, he learned the Turkish, Persian, and Ethiopick languages, whereby he gat so great esteem in Italy, that he was profered a Pension of five hundred Duckats by the year to imploy himself in the version of some Arabick Books into Latine. He spent four years in travel, and was famous every where for his learning.

His returne to Leiden. He is made Professor at Leiden.

At Paris, and some other places he bought many Arabick Books, and so returned to Leiden Anno Christi 1612. About which time there was a purpose to have called him into England, and to have allowed him an honourable stipend, but the year after he was chosen Professor of the Oriental languages in Leiden; and presently after he set up (though with extraordinary charges) a Press for those Languages, whereby he published many antient Monuments both of his own, and other mens.

His marriage

Anno Christi 1616 he married a Wife, by whom he left three children surviving him.

Anno Christi 1619 he was made Professor of the Hebrew also, and though he had so many, and great employments, yet he went through each of them with so great exactnesse. as if he had nothing else to attend upon.

Dr. Rivet brought to Leiden.

Anno Christi 1620, he was sent by the Prince of Orange, and the States of Holland into France, to procure Peter Moulin, or Andrew Rivet to come to Leiden to be the Divinity Professor, and though he prevailed not at that journey, yet they sent him again the year after to Andrew Rivet, and the French-Church to obtain of them their consents for his comming, which businesse he transacted with so great prudence, that he brought Andrew Rivet along with him, to Leiden: Erpenius his fame was so great, that the King of Spain wrote to him making him exceeding great promises if he would come into Spain, to interpret some antient writings, which never man yet could doe.

His great esteem.

The King of Morocco also did so exceedingly admire the purity of his Arabick stile in some of his Epistles, that he shewed them to his Nobles, and other learned men, as some great Miracle. He was also highly esteemed of by the Prince of Orange, and the States of Holland, who often made use of his labours in translating the letters which they received from Princes in Asia, and Africa out of Arabick, or other Languages: But whilst he was thus busily imployed in publick, and private, it pleased God that he fell sick of the Plague, whereof he dyed, Anno Christi 1624, and of his age forty.

His death.

The

A. SCVLTETVS

The Life of Abraham Scultetus, who died Anno Christi 1624.

Abraham Scultetus was born at Grunberg in Silesia, Anno Christi 1566. His Parents were of good rank, who carefully brought him up at School, where he profited exceedingly; and Anno Christi 1582 he went to Uratislavia, where he had for his fellow-Students Pitiscus, Polanus, and Pelargus, men who after proved eminent in the Church of God. His Birth and Education.

Having studied there some time, he went thence to Freistade to hear Melancthon, Bucolzer, and some others: But his active spirit could not long be contained within the bounds of his own country, and therefore being assisted by the bounty of a Noble Knight, he went to Wittenberg, and from thence to Dessavia, to acquaint himself with Peter Martyr, and Casper Bucer. His goes to Freistade. His travels.

Anno Christi 1590 he went to Heidleberg, where he heard Daniel Tossan, and Francis Junius: There also he read Lectures of Logick Oratory, and Astronomy to divers young Noblemen, and the year after, Commenced Master of Arts: Then he betook himself to the study of Divinity, thereby to fit himself for the Ministry, which from his childhood he had devoted himself to: And preaching before the Elector Palatine, he so flowed with eloquence and sweetnesse of speech, that the Prince, and all his Courtiers were much delighted in him: which caused the Elector to make him visitor, both of the Schools and Churches: Yea many other Princes made use of his help in reforming their Churches in Juliers: Brandenburg, and Hannovia: He was also sent to the Synod of Dort. He studies Divinity. His eloquence. His employments. He goes into England.

Anno Chr. 1612 the Prince Elector Palatine tooke him into England with him where he was much esteemed, and respected by King James, and other learned men. At his return to Heidleberg he was made Professor in the University, and Doctor in Divinity, Anno Christi 1681: But about that time, grievous Wars breaking forth (the miseries He is made Doctor and Professor.

He is called to Embden.

His Works

whereof were dispersed afterwards over all Germany) he was forced to leave Heidleberg, and travelled into Bohemia; yet there also he met with many Afflictions, and dangers, so that having been long tossed up and down in several Countries, the Lord at last provided him a quiet Station at Embden, where he was chosen a Preacher of the Gospel: But being thus worn out with travels, sorrows, and pains in the Work of the Ministry, he quietly there slept in the Lord, Anno Christi 1624, and of his Age 58.

What admirable Endowments he had, his Works do sufficiently declare, especially his Medulla Patrum, which is so much esteemed by Learned men.

The Life of John Piscator, who dyed Anno Christi 1625.

His Birth and Education.

John Piscator, was born at Strasborough, Anno Christi 1546, at which time Germany was on fire with Civill Wars: Yet that hindred not, but he followed his studies very hard, and profited exceedingly in Learning.

When he came to the study of Logick, with great felicity he joyned Ramus and Aristotle together: And afterwards having made a good progresse in the study of Divinity, he was called to Herborn to be the Professor there, and his Labours were so grateful to young Students, that many flocked thither out of Germany, France, Hungary, Poland, and other Nothern Countries.

He is Professor at Herborn.

His works.

Bible translated.

His Death.

He wrote many things with great diligence, and labour, scarce affording any rest to himself. He translated the whole Bible with great pains, and faithfulness into the Germane Tongue; Besides his Logical, and Theological Analysis of the greatest part of it. He died at Herborn, Anno Christi 1625, and of his Age 80.

THE

R BOLTON

The Life of Robert Bolton, who dyed Anno Christi 1631.

Robert Bolton was born at Blackborn in Lancaſhire, Anno Chriſti 1572, His Parents finding in him a great promptneſſe to learning, though they had no great means, yet they intended him for a Scholar, the rather, having an opportunity of a good Schoolmaſter in the Town, where he profited exceedingly, and at twenty years old he went to Lincoln Colledge in Oxford, and was Maſter Randal's Pupil (afterwards a famous Preacher) there in a ſhort time (being well grounded before, and induſtrious) he became an excellent Logician, and Philoſopher. His Birth and Education. He goes to Oxford.

But about that time his father dying, and his means failing, he took exceſſive pains, and wanting Books, he borrowed of his Tutor, and others, read them over, and abridged them; and to perfect his knowledge in the Greek, he wrote out all Homer with intollerable pains, ſo that he could with as much facility diſpute in the Schools in Greek, as in Latine, or Engliſh. His poverty His Induſtry.

From thence he removed to Braſen-noſe Colledge, becauſe the Fellowſhips in that houſe belonged to Lancaſhire, and Cheſhire men; yet for want of acquaintance, he ſtayed long without a Fellowſhip, which made him to languiſh through want; But his deſerts being known, Doctor Bret, and ſome others, together with ſome ſmall ſtipends he had for his Lectures in that houſe, ſupported him, till he gat a Fellowſhip, about the thirtieth year of his age; then alſo he Commenced Maſter of Arts, and being choſen Lecturer, he performed it with ſuch exactneſs, that he grew very famous. He is made a Fellow.

His Diſputations in the Univerſity were performed with ſuch acuteneſs of wit, and profound learning, that he was choſen by the Vice-chancellor (at King James his firſt coming to the Univerſity) to be one of the Diſputants before him; & to read Natural Philoſophy in the publick Schools: He was alſo well ſtudied in Metaphyſicks, Mathematicks, and School Divinity; yet all this while, he had nothing in him for Religion, he loved Stage-playes, Cards, Dice, was a horrible ſwearer, Sabbath-breaker, and boon-companion; he neither loved goodneſs, nor good men. His Prophaneſſe.

Yet

His judgement of Mr. Perkins.

Yet hearing the fame of Maſter Perkins, he went to Cambridge at a Commencement, that he might hear him Preach, and having heard him, ſaid, That he was a Barren empty fellow, and a paſſing mean Scholar; But when God changed his heart, he changed his tune, and ſaid, That Maſter Perkins was as Learned and Godly a Divine, as our Church hath in many years enjoyed in ſo young a man.

His tentations.

He had familiar acquaintance with one Maſter Anderton, a good Scholar, his Countryman, and formerly his School-fellow, but a ſtrong Papiſt, yea a Prieſt; This man knowing Mr. Bolton's good parts, and outward wants, took that advantage to perſwade him to go over with him to the Engliſh Seminarie at Rome, where he ſhould be furniſhed with all neceſſaries, and have Gold enough. This Motion he accepted of, and a day, and place was appointed in Lancaſhire, to take ſhipping from thence, and be gone.

A ſpecial providence. His converſion.

Thither Mr. Bolton repaired at the time prefixed, but Anderton came not, whereby eſcaping that ſnare, he returned to Oxford, where he fell into acquaintance with Mr. Peacock, a Learned and Godly man, whereby it pleaſed God to bring him to Repentance, but by ſuch a way as the Lord ſeldom uſeth, but upon ſuch ſtrong Veſſels, as he intended for ſtrong Encounters, and rare employments; For the Lord ran upon him as a Giant, taking him by the neck, and ſhaking him to pieces, as he did Job; beating him to the Ground as he did Paul, by laying before him the ugly Viſage of his ſins, which lay ſo heavy upon him, that he roared for anguiſh of heart; Yea, it ſo affrighted him, that he roſe ſometimes out of his Bed in the night, for very anguiſh of Spirit; and to augment his Spiritual Miſery, he was aſſaulted with ſoul Temptations, Horribilia de Deo, terribilia de fide, which Luther called, colaphum Satanæ.

His terrors.

His comfort.

He is ordained Miniſter.

This continued for many Moneths, but God at laſt gave a bleſſed iſſue, and theſe grievous pangs in his New-Birth produced two admirable Effects in him: An invincible Courage in the cauſe of God; and a ſingular dexterity in comforting Afflicted Spirits. Hereupon he reſolved to enter into the Miniſtry, and was accordingly Ordained the thirty fifth year of his Age; and about two years after, the Parſonage of Broughton in Northamptonſhire falling voyd, Serjant Nicols, the Patron, prefered him to it.

Gods providence. His marriage.

About the fortieth year of his Age he married Miſtriſs Anne Bois, of an ancient Family in Kent, and to her care committed the ordering of his owtward Eſtate, & applyed himſelf wholly to his ſtudies, and the Work of the Miniſtry, and for twenty years together, Preached twice every Lords-day, and Catechiſed; and on every Holy-day, and Fryday before the Sacrament, he Expounded a Chapter, whereby he went over moſt of the Hiſtorical Books of the Old, and New-Teſtament; and therein prepared nothing for his people, but what might have ſerved a very Learned Auditory.

His great Labors.

In all his preaching next after Gods Glory, he aimed at the Converſion of Souls, and God crowned his Labours by making him an Inſtrument to beget many Sons, and Daughters unto Righteouſneſſe.

The ſucceſs of his Miniſtry.

He had an excellent Art in relieving Afflicted Conſciences, ſo that he was ſought too far, and near; yea divers that lived beyond Sea deſired his Reſolution in divers Caſes of Conſcience. Though in his Preaching he was a Son of Thunder, yet to thoſe that mourned in Spirit, he was a ſweet Son of Conſolation, with a tender Heart, pouring the Oyl of Mercy into their bleeding Wounds. He had a ſingular skill in diſcovering Sathans ſleights, and in battering down his Kingdom.

Preachers pattern.

In all his Sermons he uſed to diſcover the filthineſs of ſin, and to preſſe hard upon the Conſcience the Duties of Sanctification; Yea, he would ſpare none, great or ſmall in their ſins; yet in reproving ſin, he never perſonated any man to put him to ſhame.

His holy life. His frequent prayers. Chriſt preferred before health.

His life was ſo blameleſſe that he could not juſtly be taxed by any, of any ſcandalous ſin. He prayed conſtantly ſix times a day; twice with his Family, twice with his Wife, and twice in ſecret. He kept many days of private Humiliation; always before the Sacrament, and upon the occaſions of the Miſeries of the Church at home, and abroad, which he performed with much Ardency of Spirit; and being adviſed by Phyſitians, for his Healths-ſake, to break off the ſtrong Intentions of his ſtudies, he rejected their Counſel, accounting it greater riches to enjoy Chriſt, by thoſe fervent Intentions of his mind, than to remit them for his healths ſake. He

He was of a comely presence, his Countenance was so mixed with Gravity, and Austerity, that it commanded respect from others. He oft refused preferment, that he might not be divorced from that Country where his Ministry found such entertainment, and effect. He was Universally bountiful; but especially he exceeded in those publick Distresses of Germany, France, Bohemia, &c. He alwaies spent all the Revenues of his Living (which was of good value) in the maintainance of his Family, Hospitality, and Charity.

His humility.

His Charity.

He fell sick of a Quartane Ague in September, Anno Christi 1631, whereupon finding his Disease to get strength, and his vigor to grow weaker, he revised his Will, and then wholly retired himself from the World, and solaced his Soul with the Meditation of the joyes of Heaven, and having compiled a Discourse De quatuor Novissimis; of Death, Judgment, Hell, and Heaven; having Preached over the three former, he told his people, that the next day he would Preach of Heaven, but the Saturday before, he fell so sick that he never Preached after.

His sickness

Preparation for death.

Though his sickness was long and sharp, yet he bore it with admirable Patience; often breathing forth these speeches, Oh! when will this good hour come! When shall I be dissolved! when shall I be with Christ? Being told that it was better for the Church (if God would) for him to stay here, He answered, If I shall find favour in the Eyes of God, he will bring me again, and shew me both it, and his habitation, and if otherwise, lo here I am, let him do what seemeth good in his Eyes, 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26. And being asked of another, if he could be content to live if God would grant it him; he said, I grant that Life is a great Blessing of God; neither will I neglect any means that may preserve it, and do heartily desire to submit to Gods Will; but of the two, I infinitely more desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ.

His patience

Death desired.

His submission to God.

To those that came to visit him in his sickness, he gave very Godly, and wise Exhortations. He thanked God for his wonderful Mercy in pulling him out of Hell, in sealing his Ministry by the Conversion of Souls, which he wholly ascribed to his Glory.

His Thanksgiving.

A week before his death he called for his Wife, and desired her to bear his Dissolution with a Christian Fortitude; and turning to his Children, he told them, that they should not now expect that, in regard of his weakness, he should say any thing to them; He had formerly told them enough, and hoped they would remember it, and he verily believed that none of them durst think to meet him at the great Tribunal of Christ, in an unregenerate State.

His admonition to his children.

Some of his Neighbours mowed, that as he had in his Ministry discovered to them the exceeding Comforts that were in Christ, so he would now tell them what he felt in his Soul: Alass! said he, do you look for these now from me, that want breath and power to speak? I have told you enough in my Ministry; yet to satisfie you, I am, by the wonderfull Mercies of God, as full of Comfort as my heart can hold, and feel nothing in my Soul but Christ, with whom I heartily desire to be. Then seeing some weeping, he said, Oh! what a deal to do there is before one can die.

His joy unspeakable.

When the very pangs of Death were upon him, some of his dear Friends coming to take their leave of him, he caused himself to be raised up, and after a few gapings for Breath, he said to them, I am now drawing on a pace to my Dissolution; hold out Faith, and Patience, your Work will quickly be at an end. Then shaking them by the hand, he desired them to make sure of Heaven, and to remember what he had formerly taught them, protesting that it was the Truth of God, as he should answer it at the Tribunal of Christ, before whom he should shortly appear: And a dear Friend taking him by the hand, askt him if he felt not much pain: Truly no (said he) the greatest I feel, is your cold hands. And then being laid down again, not long after he yeelded up his Spirit unto God, Anno Christi 1631. and of his Age sixty.

His speech to his friends.

His Death

He was one of a thousand for Piety and Courage, which were so excellently mixed with Wisdome that they who immagined mischief against his Ministry, were never able by all their Plottings to doe him any more hurt, than only to shew their Teeth.

He wrote a Discourse of true Happiness, Directions for a Comforable walking with

W. WHATELIE

The Life of William Whately, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1639.

His Birth, parentage, and Education.

Illiam Whately was born at Banbury in Oxfordſhire, Anno Chriſti 1583, of godly and religious Parents: His Father, Maſter Thomas Whately, was oft Mayor of that Town. His Mother Miſtris Joyce Whately carefully bred him up in the knowledge of the Scriptures from a child.

He goes to Cambridge.

He was alſo trained up in learning in the beſt Schools in thoſe parts, and being of a quick apprehenſion, a clear judgement, and a moſt happy memory; He profited ſo much both in Latine, Greek, and Hebrew, that at fourteen years old he went to Chriſt Colledge in Cambridge. There he was an hard Student, and quickly became a good Logician, and Philoſopher, a ſtrong Diſputant, and an excellent Orator. He ſtudied alſo Poetrie, and Mathematicks. He was a conſtant hearer of Doctor Chaderton, and Maſter Perkins: And his Tutor calling his Pupils to an account what they had learned, when any was at a ſtand, he would ſay, Whately, what ſay you? And he would repeat as readily as if he had preached the Sermon himſelf.

His excellent memory.

His marriage.

Being Batechelor of Arts, his Father took him home, yet there alſo he followed his ſtudy. Afterwards he married a Wife, the Daughter of Maſter George Hunt, an eminent Preacher, who perſwaded him to enter into the Miniſtry; and therefore going to Oxford, he Commenced Maſter of Arts, and preſently after he was called to be a Lecturer at Banbury, which he performed with good approbation for four years, and then was called to the Paſtoral charge there, in which place he continued untill his death.

He is called to Banbury.

He

He was of a quick understanding, of a clear, and deep judgement, of a most firme memory; and of a lively spirit. He was naturally Eloquent, and had words at will: He was of an able body, and sound lungs, and of a strong and audible voice. And according to his matter in hand, he was a Boanerges, a Son of Thunder; and yet upon occasion, a Barnabas, a Son of sweet Consolation; and which was the Crown of all, God gave him an heart, sincerely to seek his Glory, and to aime at the saving of all their Souls that heard him. His speech and preaching, was not in the inticing words of mans Wisdom, but in the Demonstration of the Spirit and Power: He was an Apollos, Eloquent, and mighty in the Scriptures. He Catechized, and Preached twice every Lords-day, and a weekly Lecture besides, yet what he Preached, was before well studyed and premeditated.

His character. His Eloquence. Preachers pattern. His great labours.

He usually penned his Sermons at large; and if he had but so much time as to read over what he had written, and to gather it up into short Heads, he was able to deliver it well near in the same words.

His Sermons were plain, yet very Scriptural, and according to the Rules of Art and right reason. He made use of his Grammer, learning in Greek and Hebrew to examine his Text by: Then of Rethorick to discover what formes of speech in his Text were genuine, and used in their proper signification, and what was elegantly cloathed in Tropes and Figures, that he might unfold them. Then by a Logicall examining of the context, he searched out the true scope of the Holy Ghost in the words.

The method in Sermons.

His Doctrines, which he insisted on, were naturall, not forced. These he first proved by Scriptures, then by other arguments, and reasons; and in his Applications, he either confirmed some profitable truth which might be questioned, or convinced men of some Error, or reproved some vice, or exhorted to some duty, or resolved some doubt, or case of Conscience, or comforted such as needed Consolation: And if his reproof, or exhortation needed pressing home upon the Conscience, he would enlarge himself, by shewing motives to urge the duty; or dissuasives from the vice, taking his Argument from duty to God, decency, or shamefulnesse, pleasure or pain, gain or loss.

Sometimes also he would shew the effectual means of attaining the Grace, or power to perform the duty exhorted to. As also the Remedies against Vices: And when he fell upon any Common place, or Head of Divinity, he used to prosecute it very judiciously, and profitably. So that by all this it appears that he made good use of his Learning, yet without affectation. He used to read Books most swiftly, and yet not cursorily; being able, when he had done, to give an account of the substance, and most remarkable passages of what he had read.

His manner of Reading.

Though he preached often, yet what he preached was beforehand well studied, and premeditated. And it pleased God to put a Seal to his Ministry, in the converting, confirming, and building up many thousands in the course of his Ministry. He was a diligent visitor of the sick under his charge, without respect of persons. He was a great Peace-maker amongst any of his flock that were at variance. He had an Heavenly gift in Prayer, both for aptnesse, and fulnesse of Confessions, Petitions, Supplications, Intercessions, and Praises, together with fervency of spirit, to pour them out to God in the name of Christ.

Conversion wrought by him. Peace-maker. His excellency in Prayer.

When he had read a Psalm, or Chapter in his Family, in his Prayer he would discover the scope, meaning, and chief Notes of observation, and their use, so that his Prayer was an excellent Commentary thereupon; and this, not only in the plainer, but in the harder Texts of Scripture also. In his Prayers also after Sermon he could collect into a short sum all that he had delivered to his hearers, and make it the matter of his prayer unto God, that they might be inwardly taught of God, and become believers and doers of what was taught them.

His Family Duties. His prudence.

His constant practice was, besides Family-Prayer twice a day, and sometimes Catechizing, to Pray also with his Wife, and alone, both morning and evening.

He set a part private days of Humiliation for his Family upon special occasions, and oft for their preparation to the Lords Supper; at which time he would exceed himself in pouring out his soul to God with many tears. He was much in days of private fasting, and humbling himself alone before God, which impaired his health, but made much for the health of his Soul. He was very able, and very ready to confer with, and to resolve the doubts of such as came to him.

His fasting.

His humility.

He bare such a tender love to that great people over which God had set him, that, though his means was small, and he had many offers of great preferment in the Church, yet he would not leave them. He was daily inquisitive after the affairs of Gods Church, and sympathized with Gods people, both in their weal and woe. He was much grieved when he saw that difference in opinions bred strangeness amongst Christians, that agreed in the same Fundamentall Truths. He was judiciously charitable to such as shewed the power of Godlinesse in their lives, though they were not of his judgement in all things. He was glad when any of the righteous smote him, and would take it well, not from his Superiours onely, but from his Equals, and far Inferiours; and would really shew more testimonies of his love to such afterwards then ever he did before.

His charity.

He abounded in workes of Mercy, he was a truly liberal man, one that studyed liberal things, seeking out to find objects of his mercy, rather then staying till they were offered: He did set apart, and exspend for many years together for good uses, the tenth part of his yearly commings in, both out of his Temporal, and Ecclesiastical means of maintenance. He entertained some poor Widdows, or necessitous persons, weekly at the least, at his Table; and his estate prospered the better after he took this course; and in his sickness he comforted himself with that promise, Psal. 41 1, 2. Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble, the Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing, &c.

He gained by falls.

The truth of grace in his heart was discovered by nothing more then by his slips and and strong tentations: For hereby he was made more watchfull over himself, more humble, and more to loath his originall corruption, and sinfull nature; and so to cry out with the Apostle, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Yea, this made him more earnest in his prayers unto God, and more pitifull unto others: And he was alwayes the first espier of his own faults when the world could not, or did not take notice of them. enjoying no rest in himself till he had sought, and regained pardon, and peace with God.

His last days were his best days, for then he grew exceedingly in humility, and in heavenly-mindedness. And a good while before his latter end, God gave him victory over his greatest corruptions, which for a long time kept him in continual exercise.

His sickness.

His exhortation to his friends.

About eight weeks before his death, he was much troubled with a cough, and shortness of breath, which much weakned him, yet he preached divers times, till his increasing weakness disabled him. In his sickness he gave heavenly and wholsom Counsel to his people, neighbors, and friends that came to visit him, exhorting them to labour to redeem the time, to be much in reading, hearing, and meditating upon the word of God, much in prayer, brotherly love, and communion of Saints, and that they would be careful to hold that fast that he had taught them out of the Word of Truth, and that whilest the means of Salvation was to be had, they would neither spare paines nor cost to enjoy it.

His patience.

His pains towards his end were very great, yet he bore them patiently. He was much in ejaculations, and lifting up his heart to God in behalf of the Church and State, and for himself also, wherein he was most frequent and earnest.

His death.

A little before his death, a godly friend and Minister praying with him, that if his time were not expired, God would be pleased to restore him for the good of his Church; or, if otherwise, that he would put an end to his pains, if he saw good; he, lifting up his eyes stedfastly towards heaven, and one of his hands, in the close of that prayer gave up the Ghost, shutting his eyes himself, as if he were fallen into a sweet sleep, Anno Christi 1639, and of his Age 56.

Note.

God took him away a little before the Civil Warres began, and before the sad desolations that fell upon the Town of Banbury in particular.

His works.

He wrote Prototypes, Gods Husbandry. A Treatise of the New-Birth. The Redemption of time. A Care-Cloth. The Bride-Bush, &c.

THE

The Life of Anthony Wallæus, who dyed Anno Christi 1639.

Anthony Wallæus, was descended of the ancient family de Wale in the City of Gaunt, where his Predecessors had born sundry Offices from the year 1345, to that present time; His Father was James Wallæus, who was brought up in the Family of Count Egmond, who lost his Head by the Spanish Tyranny. His Mother was Margaret Wagenaer, a Beautifull and Pious Matron, of an Illustrious Family, and powerfull Kindred. Our Anthony was born October 3. Anno Christi 1573, in the City of Gaunt, just at the same time when the Duke de Alva (after all his Cruelties exercised in the Low-Countries) returned into Spain. His Parentage. His Birth

His Mother in his Childhood was very carefull to traine him up in the Rudiments of Piety, and good Manners, and his Father was as carefull to give him Liberall Education: For which end, when he could read, and write reasonable well, at eight years old he committed him to the care of Titus ab Edingen, a Minister, to be taught the Latine Tongue. The Boy was very beautifull, of a ruddy Colour, of a sweet, and and pleasing Conversation, and therefore his Master loved him above all his other Scholars. His Education.

Not long after, this Titus of Edingen was called into Holland to be Minister at Saint Hildegond near to Harlem, whereupon our Anthony was necessitated to return to his Parents at Gaunt, and was by his Father committed to the care of Samuel Lansberg, a Minister in that City, to be by him further instructed in the Latine Tongue.

About this time the City of Gaunt was full of Factions, and Divisions, so that his Father (for favouring the Prince of Orange) was clapt up in Prison; whereupon our Anthony returned home to his Mother, and by his Prompt Obedience, sweet Manners, and Childish Blandishments, was a great Comfort to her, during the time of her Husbands close Imprisonment: But at last his Father was set free, who considering the Troublesome State of the City, and not knowing what might be the Issue, sent away all his most precious moveables to Delph in Holland.

Shortly after, Gaunt was besieged by the Prince of Parma, which being foreseen by Ja. Walleus, he had made such provision before hand, that he lived quietly, & comfortably during all the siege: But at last the City was to be surrendred upon Articles, amongst which this was one, that six such Cirizens should be delivered up to the Prince, as he should nominate, James Walleus, upon good grounds, suspecting that he should be one of the six, few dayes before the surrender, privately stole out of the City, and went to Walochria: His Wife Margaret staying at Gaunt to dispose of goods, was so vexed, and abused by the Citizens, that she resolved rather to leave part of them, and goe her wayes, then to stay there any longer; and because all were forbidden to depart from the City, taking her son Anthony, who was now ten years old, and her two daughters, they stole away in the night, and went on foot to Philippine. And shortly after, not onely the Citizens of Gaunt, but of all the neighbouring places, did so molest, and abuse the Protestants, that they forced them to leave their habitations, & to seek for refuge in other Countries, most of which went into Zeland, which of all other places shewed the most humanity, bounty, and hospitality to these poor exiles. Yet lest under pretence of flight the enemies should mingle themselves amongst the Protestants, & so make some attempt upon the Isles of Zeland, the Zelanders sent some ships of War to Philippine under the conduct of James Wallæus, with a special charge, Gaunt besieged. A Persecution in Flanders.

that none ſhould be brought out of Flanders into Zeland, but ſuch as he ſhould approve of.

In the mean time Margaret, and our Anthony went to Delph in Holland, to fetch away their goods which formerly were ſent thither; but their friend to whom they had ſent them, denyed that great part of them ever came to his hands, and they wanting ſufficient proof, were faign to take ſuch as he acknowledged, and ſo they returned to Middleborough.

James Wallæus had ſo well demeaned himſelf in the aforementioned imployment, that the Preſident of Zeland, who had formerly known him at Gaunt, committed to his care the cuſtody of the Magazine for Proviſion and Ammunition; and becauſe he would not wholly truſt his ſervants in ſo weighty a buſineſſe, he imployed his ſon Anthony to have an overſight of them, who, though he was but Eleven years old, yet was ſerious and prudent above his Age.

His place was to ſee ſuch things as his Father bought, laid up in the Publick Granary and Armory; as alſo to ſee them delivered out and divided to the ſeveral Cities as he was appointed, and to acquaint his Father where there was any want: And thus he was imployed for two years, at the end whereof his Father reſolved to ſettle him with his Mother at Middleborough, that he might be fitted for ſome honeſt courſe of life: But having loſt much of his Eſtate by his Exile, and his Family being encreaſed by the birth of two ſons, he durſt not think of training him up in Learning, as formerly he had determined: wherefore that he might be fitter for any future imployment, he placed him with Jodocus Larenus, a Publick Notary, a man of much experience, of a great judgement, and of unſpotted honeſty, with whom by his daily practiſe he attained to much ſwiftneſs in writing: and as things were related to him, he could readily apprehend, fitly word them, and draw them into a publick inſtrument in good order: which ſome Merchants taking notice of, each of them ſtrove to get him into his Family, profering him good pay, for his pains.

But our Anthony being not yet reſolved what courſe of life to follow, continued three yeats with Larenus. At the end whereof, lying one night with his Father on the ſtraw, he had a ſudden inſtinct that God had deſigned him for the Work of the Miniſtry, and theſe thoughts did ſo follow him night and day whereſoever, and about whatſoever he was, that he could not blot them out of his memory. Hereupon at laſt he reſolved to dedicate himſelf to his ſtudies: and having gotten leave of his Father, he went to the Grammar School in Middleborough, the chief Maſter whereof, was James Gruter, a painful man, and well verſed both in Greek and Latine: He had alſo for his aſſiſtant John Murdiſon, who was an acute and ſolid Philoſopher. This Murdiſon lived with Gruter, who being deſirous to find out the ingenie of our Anthony, he placed him at Gruters Table, yet leaſt he ſhould be drawn aſide by rude lads, his Parents would have him daily to come home to ſupper.

He goes to ſchool.

With theſe Maſters he lived ſix years, and profited ſo much under them that he could make elegant Verſes, and pronounce Orations publickly, which Gruter thought fit both for his own and his Scholars credit to publiſh in Print: Neither did he profit leſs in the Greek Tongue, ſo that he made excellent Greek Verſes which alſo were printed: He laid ſolid foundations alſo of Philoſophy, ſo that his Maſters cauſed him to keep publick Diſputations about ſundry controverſies in Philoſophy: He was ſo ſtudious, that in that time which other boys ſpent in play, he refreſhed himſelf by variety of ſtudies.

His proficiency.

His Maſters now finding him fit, reſolved to ſend him to the Univerſity, where he might better be inſtructed in the Arts than he could be in that School. For which end he went to Leiden in April, Anno Chriſti 1596. and ſojourned in the houſe of Thomas Spranckhuſius, Miniſter of Leiden: and preſently began to conſider how he might beſt imploy himſelf for the advancement of his ſtudies, whereas other boys uſed to ſpend the firſt year in looking about them: And he reſolved to go on in this method: Firſt, to perfect his knowledge in the Tongues, then of Philoſophy, and at laſt to proceed to the ſtudy of Divinity: And that he might perfect his skill in the Greek, he reſolved to read over the Poets, who beſt expreſs the genius of the Language, and amongſt them, he made made choice of Homer becauſe he uſeth every Dialect, his ſpeech flows pleaſingly, and he makes his Reader more wiſe: and that he might better pierce into the profundity of that Language, upon every occaſion he conſults with Joſeph Scaliger, a man of ſtupendious Learning, to whom Wallæus was always very dear, and he was much delighted with his wit.

Afterwards from Greek he proceeded to the ſtudy of Hebrew, wherein he was aſſiſted by Francis Raphelingius, a very courteous man: But he, ſhortly after dying, and Francis Junius being choſen into his room, our Wallæus profited ſo much under him, that he could underſtand the Books of the Old Teſtament without an Interpreter: He proceeded not to the ſtudy of the Rabbins, becauſe he judged that they that beſtow much time in the ſtudy of the Tongues, are very ſeldom good Artiſts. For mans mind cannot contain all things: The knowledge of the Tongues will take up the whole man: and therefore our Wallæus whilſt he ſtudyed the Languages laid aſide all other ſtudies, only ſometimes for recreation-ſake, he would read over ſome old Latine, Authors, Hiſtorians, Poets, and Orators.

When he was well furniſhed with the Tongues, he went to the ſtudy of Philoſophy, But finding that Leiden at that time was not well furniſhed with Philoſophers, he attended the Lectures of Raph Snel. the Mathematick Profeſſor, under whom he learned Geometry, Aſtronomy, and the Opticks, which proved very uſeful to his future ſtudies. In his ſtudy of Logick he made uſe of Keckerman, to whom he added Zabarel, Monlor, and ſome others: In Phyſicks he uſed Tolet, Zabarel, Picholhomini: In Ethicks he was moſt taken with Accicalas: yet he read Picholomini, Magirus, Muret, Quarſius Metaphyſicks: He read over alſo Thomas and Scotus, after which he proceeded to Plato and Ariſtotle, whom he read in their own Language wherein they are moſt perfect. To theſe he added Plotinus, Ficinus, Simplicius, Aprodiſæus, and Averrhoes. The Authors which he read.

And in theſe ſtudies he could the better proceed without help, becauſe he had been well grounded in all the parts of Philoſophy by his Maſter Mardiſon; and indeed he made ſuch a progreſs therein that he exceeded all his contemporaries, ſo that in his Diſputations he often gravelled the Moderators themſelves: For he was prompt and ſubtile in Invention, clear in Explication, and ſharp in preſſing home his Arguments.

The chiefeſt ſcope which he propoſed to himſelf in the ſtudy of Philoſophy was to further him in Divinity, and therefore judging it neceſſary to have the advice and aſſiſtance of ſome able Divine, with the good leave of Spranckbuſius, he removed to the table of Francis Gomarus, hiring a chamber in the next houſe, till he could get a lodging in Gomarus his houſe, which fell out within ſome few moneth after.

At this time Francis Junius was made Profeſſor of Divinity, a Divine of profound Learning, Grave, and of a deep Judgement: as alſo Luke Trelcatius, the Father, a ſolid Divine: and Francis Gomarus a man of much Learning and fervent Piety: But Wallæus preferred Junius above all, and therefore endeavoured to follow his example. He ſtudies Divinity. Yet taking Gomarus his counſel, he did not begin his ſtudy of Divinity by reading Common places, leaſt being led with other mens opinions, and thereby prepoſſeſſed with prejudice, he ſhould be led aſide from the Truth: But he firſt read the ſeveral forms of Concord of the reformed Churches, the Catechiſm of Heidleberg, and the Belgick Confeſſion of Faith, and ſo wholly betook himſelf to the reading of the ſacred Scriptures which he read with great attention and aſſiduity, getting the chiefeſt head of Doctrine by heart: So that when he was old he could repeat without Book the Epiſtle to the Romans, the ſecond to the Corinthians, to the Galathians, Epheſians, and Philipians: But he read them all in the Originals, ſo that in his Sermons he was very ready in the words of Scripture. He learns the Scriptures by heart.

Yet finding that by reading the Scripture alone, he could hardly comprehend in his mind the whole Body of Doctrine, being now well verſed in the Scriptures, he betook himſelf to the Theological Inſtitutions of Bucanus, that ſo he might at once ſee into the whole compendium of Divinity: yet did he not ſtay long upon a Compendium, but proceeded to the ſtudy of Calvins Inſtitutions, and Peter Martyrs Common-places: yet He ſtudies the body of Divinity.

was he beſt pleaſed with Martyr, becauſe he handled the whole Doctrine plainly, diſcourſed largely of Controverſies, and anſwered them ſolidly.

Whilſt he was thus buſied, Luke Tralcatius firſt, and after him Francis Gomerus began privately to read Common places, whom he reſolved to hear, becauſe in private, they handled all things more familiarly and largely then in publick: yet eſpecially he attended the publick Lectures, becauſe they were more accurate and learned; and if after the Lectures he doubted of any thing, he repaired to them in private for further ſatisfaction.

He ſtudies Commentaries

When he had profited well in the ſtudy of Common places, he proceeded to the reading of Commentaries upon the ſacred Scriptures: and firſt he read over Piſcators Analyſis, whereby he might get the whole context of each part of Scripture into his mind: Then for the ſenſe of the Scripture he read Calvin, whom he uſed to call A Divine Interpreter. To whom in his reading of the New-Teſtament he adjoyned Beza: and in reading of the Old Teſtament, Mercer, and Arias Montanus, whereby he might attain to the knowledge of the Governments and Rites amongſt the Jews, without the knowledge whereof it is impoſſible to attain to the ſenſe of many texts of Scripture.

His publick Diſputations.

Wallæus having now read much, and heard long, began to prepare himſelf for action, and diſputed publickly three times: De vera Theologia, De Myſterio Trinitatis, Et de Chriſti mediatoris Officio: By which Diſputations he procured to himſelf much admiration: For being excellently verſed in Philoſophy, he anſwered to the terms appoſitly: and being very ready in the ſacred Scriptures, he always cloſed up his anſwer with ſome ſutable Text, which was very grateful to the hearers.

His firſt ſermon.

He alſo ſometimes preached in private, being directed therein by Luke Tralcatius, an Eloquent Preacher: and the firſt publick Sermon which he preached was at Voorſchoten, in a great concourſe of people, who expected no ordinary thing from him. And ſo Wallæus was now judged fit by his Maſters to enter into the Miniſtry: But though he abundantly ſatisfied others, yet could he not ſatisfie himſelf: whereupon he reſolved before he undertook that great and difficult work, that he would conſult with other learned men, and viſit Forreign Univerſities, and ſee into the Government of other Churches, eſpecially of Geneva and Helvetia, whence Reformation at firſt proceeded; and therefore getting one Apollonius Schot for his companion, who was the Conſuls ſon of Middleborough, Anno Chriſti 1590. he ſailed from Fluſhing into France, where he viſited Roan, and ſome other Cities, and ſo came to Paris: In which City he made ſome ſtay, inquiring into the Government of France, and wondered that the King could exerciſe ſuch an abſolute Juriſdiction, and yet have ſo much love from his People. But eſpecially he attended to their Philoſophical and Theological Lectures, which yet he diſliked, becauſe they followed the Schoolmen ſo much, though contrary to the ſacred Scriptures, to ſound Reaſon and Senſe.

His travels into France.

After ſome little ſtay here, he went to Orleance, Biturg, Lyons, and Vienna: at which place he viſited the Paſtors, and found that through the commendations of Junius, he was better known there then he expected: For ſome of the Neighbour-Churches much importuned his ſtay amongſt them, profering him a good ſtipend, and a Coadjutor if he would read Philoſophy and Divinity amongſt them: But Wallæus conſidering their propinquity to Geneva and Lauſanna, thought that there was no great need of his imployment there: beſides he thought that amongſt ſtrangers he ſhould be expoſed to envy, where he could not have the aſſiſtance of his friends; and his deſire was to have ſome ſuch imployment in his own Country, and therefore leaving them (his mony beginning to fail him) he went to Gratianople, and ſo to Geneva.

He goes to Geneva.

At Geneva he ſought out ſuch a place to ſojourn in, where he might beſt advance his ſtudies, and therefore made choice of Charles Parrots houſe, who was a Miniſter of the Word, and alſo Profeſſor of Divinity. Whilſt he abode there, his firſt care was to perfect himſelf in the French Tongue, which he attained to by converſe with the Citizens, and reading French Writers, ſo that he many times preached in French.

At

At this time the Divinity Profeſſors in Geneva were Theodore Beza, Anthony Faius, and Charles Perrot: Beza was now above 80 years old, and had given over reading: Faius had good Learning, but was neither a good Expoſitor, nor quick Diſputant. Perrot was very learned, and had more in him then he promiſed: yet each of theſe ſcarce read one Lecture in a week: therefore he ſpent moſt of his time in hearing Sermons, which were more frequent in Geneva then in other places: But above all, he moſt admired Beza's Sermons, who though he was ſo old, yet excelled in vigor of Mind, profound Learning, ſharp Judgment, and man-like Eloquence, for which the World much wondred at him.

He profited alſo very much by their Friday-meetings, wherein one of the Miniſters explained ſome texts of Scripture; and when he had done, the other Miniſters (if it needed) either gave further explanations, reſtrictions, or emendations: only when it came to Beza's turn to begin, the other Miniſters reverenced what he had ſaid by their ſilence: He alſo profited exceedingly by his frequent conferences with Beza.

His converſe with Perrot, by how much it was more frequent and familiar, by ſo much the more grateful was it to him; for he did not endeavour ſo much to ſeem as to be truly godly and learned. He never held much correſpondence by Letters with learned men, judging that courſe to tend more to oſtentation then to edification.

He liked the Government of the Church of Geneva very well, where neither Wives nor Widows were ſhut up in their houſes, but dayly attended the publick Prayers and Sermons, and where vices were not only puniſhed, but the occaſions of them taken away, by removing luxury and rigor.

At this time there lived a Divine in Geneva that excelled all the reſt in the knowledge of the Hebrew; who perſwaded Wallæus that he attained to his skill in a very ſhort time by the Art of Memory; whereupon he applyed himſelf to him, and in ſix weeks ſpace learned by heart the whole Epitome of Pagnine, with ſuch excellent ſucceſs, that thereby he was enabled well to interpret any place of the Holy Scriptures, and to give a fit reaſon of it: But for ſome reaſons, diſliking this way of Learning, he laid it aſide, and made little further uſe of it.

He ſtudies of Art of Memory.

About this time Henry Steven dyed, and being in debt, his Books were publickly ſold for a little to ſatisfie his Creditors, upon which occaſion Wallæus bought a whole Library of Greek Authors, in reading whereof he much refreſhed his mind after his more ſerious ſtudies.

Not far from Geneva is the mountain of Jura, whoſe top is much above the clouds, whereupon Wallæus had a great deſire to go to the top of it to ſee what was done in the other Region of the Ayr: Therefore, joyning to himſelf the company of Charles Perrot, the City Secretary, and a third friend, in the longeſt days in May, they went to the foot of this hill where they lodged all night: and very early next morning, two Shepheards leading them by the hands, they began to climbe up the Mountain, and about noon began to enter into the middle Region of the Ayr, where they found it extream cold, and the Mountain was covered with great hils of Ice, only on the South ſide ſome paths appeared, by which they aſcended, and towards the Evening came to the top; which contained about ten Acres of land: The Precipice was ſo great, that they were afraid to look down, but when they lay along upon the ground, from whence the Villages ſeemed no bigger then Walls, and other Mountains ſeemed like Molehils: In this top there was neither Ice nor Snow: The Ayr was very cold, yet thin and pure: And being all Muſical, they began to ſing, which ſounded far more ſweetly then in any part of the lower World.

The mountain of Jura above the clouds.

He goes up the mountain.

At laſt as on one ſide they beheld France, and on the other ſide Italy, they obſerved vapors to aſcend out of the Lake of Leman which ſtayed about the Mountain, then gathered together; and at laſt became a thick cloud, ſo that it wholly took away their ſight of the Earth: and when night was come, they began to deſcend, and after a while entred into the cloud, where they could waſh their hands; and when they had paſſed this cloud, it was diſſolved into rain, which wet them through; and ſo at laſt they

Their deſcent. they came to the Shephards coats, where they reſted, and the night following came to the bottom of the Mountain; for they could not go ſo faſt down as they went up.

Not long after Wallæus taking along with him Adrian Mammaker, who was afterwards Preſident of Zeland, went to ſwim in the Lake of Leman; and as he was ſwiming, he obſerved a ſtranger that was ſwiming a good way off, ſuddenly to ſink, and ready to be drowned: whereupon (being very tender hearted) he haſted to him, drew him out of the water, and carried him to the ſhore: by whom (after he was recovered) he underſtood that he was a Cobler of Holland; who as he was ſwiming fell into this diſaſter.

A ſpecial providence.

After a while, having attained his end for which he went to Geneva, he removed to Lauſanna Anno Chriſti 1600. and finding nothing there that might occaſion his ſtay, he went to Bern, from whence he went to Zurick, and Schaphuſen, where he ſaw the Cataracts of the River Rheine, like to the Cataracts of Nilus.

His further travels.

At Zurick, the Magiſtrates, being informed by their Miniſters of the excellent Learning of Wallæus, to ſhew their reſpects to him, invited him to a great Feaſt.

Whilſt he was at Bern, he grew into familiar acquaintance with Zendererus, the chief Præfect of the Colledge, who gave him great hopes of preferment if he would ſtay there: but Wallæus having diſpatched his buſineſs there, haſted to Baſil, where James Grynæus and Amandus Polanus were Profeſſors of Divinity: Grynæus was a very wary and prudent man, and of excellent Learning, but one that much addicted himſelf to Civil affairs, ſo that Baſil ſeemed wholly to be governed at his diſcretion. He read Hiſtory Lectures which he had brought down to his own time.

He goes to Baſil.

Polanus was a very learned man, and at that time was reading upon the Doctrine of Predeſtination. But Wallæus moſtly applyed himſelf to the Lectures of John Buxtorf, who was Hebrew Profeſſor, and was moſt skilful of the Genius of that Language, and in the Antiquities of the Jews: At this time he was expounding the Commentaries of the Rabbins upon the twelve minor Prophets.

Wallæus obſerving that he was often fruſtrated in his expectation, finding every thing leſs then he hoped for, he reſolved to adventure to do ſomthing publickly himſelf, which he rather choſe to do abroad then at home, becauſe in caſe there ſhould be any miſcarriage, it might not blemiſh his credit, nor hinder his future promotion. And he choſe Baſil to perform it in, becauſe ſcarce in any other Univerſity were Students ſuffered to ſupply the place of Profeſſors.

Therefore to give them ſome taſte of his Learning, he made ſome Verſes and publiſhed them: He made alſo ſome Theſes about the Providence of God, framed of Scripture phraſes, concerning which he diſputed publickly with Polanus: In which he did ſo orderly repeat, appoſitely anſwer, and ſolidly prove, that by the paw they might eaſily know the Lyon; whereupon he had the Profeſſors chair allotted to him, out of it publickly to diſpute himſelf, and to moderate at the Diſputations of others: which alſo he frequently performed, in ſo much as when Polanus or Grynæus had any other buſineſs, they preſently had recourſe to Wallæus to diſpute in their rooms: whereby he procured ſo much love and eſteem, both from the Profeſſors and Students, that when he went away, they would needs ſignifie the ſame to the Belgick Churches under the Seal of their Univerſity.

His exerciſes at Baſil.

Wallæus his courſe in his travels was this; In the Summer time he uſed to go through Countries, view Cities, Fields, Rivers, Mountains, and to enquire what in Nature or by Art was obſervable in them. In Winter time he fixed himſelf in ſome City, where he might promote his ſtudy of Divinity, & learn the Government of the Province: And accordingly having ſatisfied himſelf at Baſil, when the Spring came, he went to Strasborough, Spire, and Heidleberg, at which place he conſidered whether it was better to make his abode that Summer, or to travel through Germany. The fame of that Univerſity perſwaded him to the former, which was accounted equal with that of Leiden.

His travels in German.

But

But above all, the Library of Manuſcripts perſwaded his ſtay there, into which he had free acceſs by the curteſie of Janus Gruter his Countryman: There were alſo Profeſſors of Divinity deſervedly famous, viz. Daniel Toſſanus, and David Pareus: The former interpreted the New-Teſtament, who being grown old lived but a few months after: and Pareus Interpreted the Prophet Hoſea, of which Scripture he had a little before heard Buxtorf.

He obſerved alſo that the Government of the Palatinate was unfit for the Low-Countries: The power of Eccleſiaſticall Affairs under the Prince was in the hand of eight Civill and eight Eccleſiaſticall Senators: Theſe choſe Miniſters, placed them both in Cities and Villages, removed from one place to another, and ſet bounds to all Theologicall Controverſies: whereby they provided well to uphold the Authority of the Prince, and to preſerve the Peace of the Church; but little to the comfort of Souls, when many times they had Miniſters impoſed upon them againſt their liking, and always ſuch as they had no knowledge of.

Leaving Heidleberg he went to Franckfurt upon Main, where he ſtayed a while, and then went to Heſſen, remaining a while in the Lantgraves Court, who often conferred courteouſly with him, and ſo to Marpurg, and from thence to Brunſwick and Bremen: And having thus travelled through forreign Countries, he reſolved to be no ſtranger in his own; wherefore from thence he went into Friſland, Gelderland, Utrich, Overiſle, and ſo at laſt came to Leiden to the houſe of Gomarus his old Hoſt. His travels in the Low-Countries.

But before he ſetled himſelf to his ſtudy there, he went to Middleborough to viſit his aged Parents, having been now three years from them, who received him with all the joy that might be: yet after a ſhort ſtay, he returned to Leiden, where he found the Face of the Univerſity ſome what changed. For Joſeph Scaliger would needs have the Precedency of all the Profeſſors: But all the Profeſſors oppoſed him, becauſe the place did indeed belong to Junius; and the States of Holland interpoſed their Authority; For though they eſteemed well of Scaliger, yet they would not have Junius offended, nor others who were of more ſolid Learning, and more uſefull than himſelf; wherefore the place was conferred upon Junius, and inſtead of reading Hebrew Lectures, he was appointed to Write againſt Bellarmine. His return to Leiden.

Wallæus now was not ſo diligent in attending Lectures as formerly: But weighed every part of Divinity, and obſerved how far he had pierced into the more abſtruſe parts of it, and where he was defective, he ſearches Authors, Meditates, and by Conference with Junius and Gomarus ſatisfies himſelf, and being weary of reading Modern Authors, wherein he found ſome things meanly handled, and otherſome fooliſhly, and withal conſidering that they carryed no Authority with them, he betook himſelf to the reading of the Ancient Fathers, eſpecially Auguſtine, whom he found more nervous and quick in Diſputing than the reſt: And in the mean time he exerciſed himſelf in Preaching, ſometimes in Leiden, and ſometimes in the Neighbour Villages, which he performed with ſuch a Grace, that he was called to a Paſtorall charge in Leiden. He ſtudies the Fathers.

This call being ſo unexpected, troubled him ſo much the more: He thought it a great honour to be at firſt called to a place in ſo eminent a City, where alſo he had the benefit of the Univerſity for the promoting of his Learning: But yet he judged it a very hard burden to govern a great Church, who had not learned to govern a little one. He is called to the Miniſtry.

Hereupon he betook himſelf by his ardent Prayers unto God for direction, and at laſt reſolved to refer the buſineſs wholly to the judgment of his Parents: They, by Gomarus, returned thanks to the Presbytery, and make many excuſes why he could not accept of the call: But the Truth is, their principal reaſon was, becauſe they would have their Son (the ſtaffe of their old Age) nearer to them. And indeed they were not ſatisfied till, leaving the Univerſity, he came home to them, which was in the Spring, Anno Chriſti 1602. Refuſeth it. He returns home.

The whole courſe of his life from his Childhood, both in the Univerſity, in his travels, His deportment.

vels, and hitherto, had been very blamleſs, pious, modeſt, free from luxury & wantonneſs; and his care was, that as he grew in years he might grow in goodneſs: He never minded trifles: yet was not his Converſation Auſtere and froward, but mild and pleaſing.

His induſtry. He was unwearyed in his ſtudies, ſpending not only the days, but half the nights therein, that going cold to bed, ſometimes he roſe out of it before he was well warm; ſo that once whilſt he was at Leiden, he fell into a Quartain Ague which held him fourteen moneths, which was accompanyed with a Cough, notwithſtanding which he would not deſiſt from the courſe of his ſtudies; whereby he contracted a weakneſs of ſtomach, accompanyed with crudities and a ſtopping in his head, from which he was never free all his life after.

His Ordination. Being thus come to Middleborough, he ſubmitted himſelf to Examination in order to his Ordination, and his Examiner was James Cornelii, one of the Miniſters; but being inferior in Learning to Wallæus, not Wallæus but Cornelii was examined. After his Examination he was to Preach monethly before the Miniſters, to make him more prompt and ready in it: He was alſo admitted to be weekly preſent at their Presbyteries, that he might be acquainted with their way of Government before he undertook it himſelf.

In all which Exerciſes and Conferences in the Presbyteries, they obſerved that young Wallæus was of an accute Wit, compoſed judgement, and profound Learning.

He is called to another charge. About this time a Paſtoral charge was void at Caletus, and the Miniſters of Middleborough would fain have ſent Wallæus thither: But his Parents took it very ill that when they had refuſed a place in Leyden which was in the heart of the Low-Countries, he ſhould now be ſent into a corner, which is expoſed to the injuries both of the French and Spaniards, whereupon they ſharply oppoſed themſelves againſt it, and Wallæus himſelf diſliked it: But when ſome Miniſters ſhewed themſelves very violent, the Magiſtrates (to gratifie his Parents) put an end to the Controverſie.

Refuſeth it.

He is choſen to Koukerk. This alſo happened at the ſame time: There was neer to Middleborough a Village called Koukerk, which wanting a Paſtor, choſe Wallæus for their Miniſter, which he accepted of, and ſo undertook the charge in November, Anno Chriſti 1602, accounting it a great honour that God was pleaſed thus to admit him into his ſervice; and withall, conſidering the greatneſſe of the Burthen in procuring the welfare of Souls, wherein the leaſt miſcarriage is a great Sin againſt God, he not only now, but all his Life after never undertook any thing, till he had firſt craved the Aſſiſtance of God, begging of him Wiſdom and Ability to manage it aright.

At Koukerk he attained to a promptneſs and habit of Preaching, he learned to Govern a Church, to comfort the afflicted, to reſiſt the Obſtinate and Sectaries, with whom he ſo far prevailed that they adjoined themſelves to the Church, and ever after reverenced Wallæus as their Father. His Sermons were ſo famous, that when Grave Moris beſieged Sluce, Anno Chriſti 1604. the Wallachrian Claſſis made choice of Wallæus to be joined to John Utenbogard the Court Preacher, to be Chaplain to the Army.

He is employed in the Army.

This Utenbogard was an Eloquent Preacher, one that ſought to ingratiate himſelf with the great ones: Whereas Wallæus ſought to pleaſe God rather than men; & indeed at his firſt coming, what by Prayers, and what by Admonition, he prevailed with the Colonels and Captains to baniſh ſwearing from amongſt them. Utenbogard made too much account of Socinus, & ſtill carryed about him a New-Teſtament, having Annotations every where written in it by Socinus his own hand. But Wallæus abhorred his opinions.

His return. Sluce being taken, Wallæus returned to Koukerk, ſetling all his Affairs, as if he meant to live there all his life; and having a competent Eſtate, he deſired not an encreaſe of his ſtipend: He had a full Congregation, yet not burdenſome: ſo that beſides his Miniſterial employments, he had ſufficient time for his private ſtudies: He was well beloved of his people, and had good Societie with his Elders and Deacons.

His Town was not above an Hours walk from Middleborough and Flushing: Fruitfull of Pastors, had good store of Corn-Ground, and Pleasant Orchards. It was neer to that Sea, by which greater Ships goe into the Havens of Zealand: He had a large House, a spacious Garden, which he kept very neat and orderly.

At this time Middleborough had but three Churches, and the Auditors grew too big for them, whereupon they Petition the Magistrate for a fourth Church, and a Eighth Minister to have a Stipend allowed him. The Church was appointed neer to the Fish-Market, and by the Presbytery, Wallæus was appointed for the Minister.

He is chosen to Middleborough.

Truly Wallæus desired to stay at Koukerk, and not mingling himself with the troubles of the world, to serve God and his people in that place: yet durst he not resist this call, having thereby an opportunity of more service.

His marriage.

His two years stay at Koukerk had much changed the course of his Life: For having the first year dispatched the work of his Sermons and Catechising, he began to bethink himself of entring into a marryed Condition: And having found out Paschasia of Isenhout, a Pious, Prudent, and well-bred Maid, he consulted with his Parents for their consent: And so all things concurring to his, and their mindes, he marryed her August the seventh, Anno Christi 1603. But presently after he lost his Parents, First his Mother, and then his Father, who survived her but a little time.

His parents dye.

A good child.

In the whole time of their sickness, our Wallæus attended upon them, and comforted them with Divine Consolations out of Gods Word: wherefore at the hour of Death they both of them blessed him, and gave him this Testimony, that he had never offended them in all his life.

His first son.

Wallæus laid their death exceedingly to Heart, so that for a years space no day passed, wherein he did not with grief think on them, nor night, wherein he did not dream of them: But it pleased God that in December the twenty seventh he had a Son born whom he called John; This somewhat mitigated his sorrows.

Before this, the Citizens of Middleborough had much importuned him to remove his Habitation to their City: But he would not consent to it till his Wife was brought to Bed, least he should seem to contemn his people at Koukerk, who had shewed themselves so honest and loving to him: But when she was up again, he then removed, and was entertained both by the People and Magistrates with great Applause, being received with more favour than ordinary, which stirred up envy in some of the Ministers of Middleborough; who thereupon would had him confined to a little Church that was in the outmost part of the City; but the Presbytery would not suffer it: yea, it returned to the glory of Wallæus, that these ancient Ministers feared least he should get their Auditories from them: But after a while he moderated their passions by his modesty, courtesie, and readiness to do any Offices of love to them, so that he lived very friendly with them.

He is envyed.

He wins his adversaries.

His Faithfulness in his Ministry.

In his Ministry he thought that he did not sufficiently discharge his duty by Preaching and Governing; and therefore every Sabbath day, at five a Clock, he Catechized, wherein he explained all the Common places in Divinity, and whereby he made his people very ready in the knowledge of the Scriptures, so that some of them were fitted for the work of the Ministry in the Indies.

His charity.

He was diligent in visiting his Parishoners, whereby he reformed many which were given to viciousness, giving them Counsel how they might shun those sins which naturally they were addicted to. He satisfied doubting Consciences, and extricated them out of the snares of Satan: He raised up and comforted those that were cast down at the Apprehension of Gods Wrath for their sins. In these his visitations he Ministred Relief to Widdows, Orphans, and such as were destitute of all Humane help: He encouraged such as were weak and sick to prefevere in Faith, and prepared them for death: and such as were neer death, he comforted them against the terrors thereof, and wrought in them a desire to be with Christ; yea, he did not only visit such as owned him for their Minister, but Sectaries also, Papists, and Anabaptists; which he did with such sweetness, that his company was never grievous to them; and he carryed himself so justly, that many times even they repaired to him for advice in cases of Conscience about Matrimony, and always went well satisfied from him.

A Popish lie

This much troubled a Popish Priest called Curio, who knowing how powerful Wallæus was in reproving sin, to deter his Disciples from conference with Wallæus, or hearing his Sermons, told them that the Devil always sate upon his shoulders, and as he was Preaching suggested to him what he should say. But God turned his malice and lyes to good: For many Papists, either drawn by curiosity, or by the fame of the man, or upon the occasion of Baptisms into his Church, when they heard nothing that was Diabolical to proceed out of his mouth, they began to esteem their Curio a slanderer, to doubt of the truth of his other sayings, to perceive that they learned more, and received more comfort by Wallæus his Sermons then by his, and so by degrees fell off to the Reformed Religion.

Wallæus his Colleagues left to him, yea appointed him, as the most learned man amongst them, to take care that their Religion received no detriment, and to defend the same against all Adversaries, wherein like another Hercules, he subdued many Monsters.

He confutes his adversaries.

There was one Abraham Beckman that of a long time had disturbed the Peace of the Church of Middleborough: A man of a sharp wit and blameless life; he reproved the Ministers for Baptizing such children whose Parents were not members of the Church; and he had drawn some hundreds of the Church-members to his party: To these Wallæus opened the Doctrine of Truth more plainly; By Conference and Disputations he overthrew the pertinacious, convinced most of them by writing, and so brought them to an acknowledgement of their Errors.

But Wallæus thought it not sufficient to conquer them, but he would also gain them to the Church, which he effected by procuring that Beckman should be chosen one of the Presbytery, whereby he was quieted, and afterwards did good service to the Church. Sectaries are never better quieted, then whilst they pretend for God, they may have riches, or honours conferred upon them.

Note.

Shortly after there was one Gedeon Vanden Bogard, a Noble man of Flanders, who being inticed with great promises, was resolved to turn over to the King of Spains party, and therefore also must change his Religion: For which end he gives out, that the Popish Religion was truer then the Reformed, and that in the point of Transubstantiation, which he undertook to prove by the assistance of Father Gauda, a Jesuite of Antwerp, who was grown to that height of impudency and impiety, that he published in Print that he would pawn his soul to God to expiate all the Errors that were in the Romane Church: To whom therefore Wallæus presently answers, and shews that the Pontificians themselves could not otherwise understand the words of Institution in the Lords Supper but Figuratively: and that the Body of Christ could not be in infinite places at the same time, for that then it should cease to be a Body, which is always circumscribed within its own limits, so that Gauda held his peace.

He confutes a Jesuite.

He confutes a Blasphemer.

Presently after, a certain stranger coming to Middleborough, (for Zeland brings forth no such Monsters) Preached, That Christ had excellently taught reverence to God, and love to our Neighbors: But, that his Doctrine might have the more weight, had affirmed himself to be the Son of God by a certain pious fraud, saying that he was God, when indeed he was not. And not content to divulg these Blasphemies in private, he preached them in publick.

Wallæus judged this man the more dangerous, by how much he seemed to be very religious, and that he would not speak without commending Christ, when as indeed he sought to destroy him: wherefore setting upon him in a Publick Assembly, he proved that in the Nativity, Life, and Death of Christ, all things did concur, which were foretold of the Messias in the Old Testament, and therefore that he could not but be God, which was required in the Messias: That Christ, whom he confessed to teach

Piety,

Piety, muſt expreſs it in his Life, and therefore could not begin his Doctrine with a lye, who muſt not do evil that good might come of it. Neither was it worth the while for him to ſuffer Perſecutions, Stripes, and the Croſs to maintain a lye. That the Apoſtles who continually accompanyed him, would not have conſpired in the ſame lye, and for it have ſuffered baniſhment, torments, and death. That God would not have ſuffered ſuch things as he foretold to have come to paſs about his Death, Reſurrection, and the deſtruction of Hieruſalem, if he had endeavoured to obtrude a falſe God upon the people. That he would not have granted him the power of working Miracles, of healing the Sick, reſtoring the Lame, curing the Blinde, and raiſing the Dead. That his Religion in a few years, by Fiſher men, without any humane ſtrength, ſhould have been diſperſed through the whole World, which God would not have ſuffered, if he had brought a ſtrange God and Idolatry with him. This Villain being overcome by theſe Arguments, his followers left him, and he hid his head in a corner.

His conteſts with the Remonſtrants.

But theſe were but ſmall velitations in compariſon of thoſe continual bickerings which he had with the Remonſtrants all his life long: which that we may the better underſtand, take it thus.

When Reformation began in the Low-Countries, all that oppoſed Popery were not of one minde: and nothing ſo united them together as their hatred of Popery: But leſt the unſound Proteſtants ſhould mingle themſelves with the ſound, the Orthodox party Anno Chriſti 1566, publiſhed a Confeſſion of their Faith, which afterwards was called, the Belgick Confeſſion; and to prevent infection from thoſe which were Heterodox, in a full Synod at Embden, Anno Chriſti 1571, it was ordained that none ſhould be admitted for a Miniſter, till he had been examined, and had ſubſcribed this Confeſſion, and the Catechiſm of Heidleberg: Which Decree was confirmed in all the enſuing Synods, Anno Chriſti 1576, and 1586, and approved of by the States of Holland, and accordingly practiſed.

Their riſe in the Low-countries.

Yet in the beginning, conſidering the great want of Paſtors, this Examination could not be very ſtrict, by which means many crept into the Miniſtry who privately taught contrary things; as Gaſper Carlhaſius at Leiden, Herman Herbert at Gauda, Gerard Blackhoven at Utrich, and Cornelius Wiggerus at Horn, who differed in many things amongſt themſelves, and all of them in the point of Predeſtination from the reſt.

But whilſt theſe opinions were confined within the bounds of their own Churches, all things were reaſonable quiet. Only Theodor Cornhertius oppoſed himſelf againſt all the Reformed Churches, who having been formerly of Councel to the States of Holland, for fear of danger had deſerted his place. But it eaſily appeared that he was no great Divine, and that choler which he durſt not vent againſt the States, he now diſchaiged againſt the Churches, whereupon he was reſtrained by the Publick Authority of the States.

Yet could not the contentions be ſo compoſed, but they left doubts in ſome mens mindes, whether all points held by the Reformed were equally certain: and ſome were inclined to embrace Novelties, eſpecially about the Doctrine of Predeſtination.

Arminius his educatition.

And thus James Arminius found them, when he was called to be Divinity Profeſſor at Leiden Anno Chriſti 1603. This Arminius had formerly been a ſervant in a Publick Inn, where many gueſts admired his prompt wit, ſo that ſome took him from thence, and ſet him to School, where he was maintained out of the Publick Treaſury of Amſterdam.

He is choſen profeſſor in Leiden.

Hereupon in proceſs of time the Magiſtrates of that City favouring their own nurcling, called him to the work of the Miniſtry amongſt them, and he ſo ſhined by the excellency of his gifts, that every one judged him worthy a Profeſſors place: For he was of a ſubtil Wit, ſolid Learning, and compoſed Carriage.

To this Election of his, Gomarus oppoſed himſelf, becauſe he had written ſomething that was unſound to Francis Junius, yea and had publickly preached it at Amſterdam: But when he denyed ſomethings wherewith he was charged, and extenuated others, ſome thought that Gomarus oppoſed him out of envy, leſt he ſhould excel him, which promoted the Election of Arminius, and laid the foundation to future diſſentions.

Arminius

Arminius his policy.

Arminius being thus ſetled, thought to advance his credit by drawing a great Auditory to himſelf, and this he thought to do by venting ſome new things in his Lectures, which accordingly he did, eſpecially about Predeſtination; yet in publick he did it ſparingly and ſlenderly, leaſt he ſhould offend the Churches, remembring that by their Authority Coolhaſe and Wigger had been removed out of their places: But in private he labored tooth and nail, to inſtill them into his Auditors, whereby he might the better ſecure himſelf againſt the Miniſters, by the means of Utenbogard, the Preacher at Hague, he procured John of Oldenbarnevelt to be his Patron, who was a man of great Authority, being Sindic of all Holland, to curry favour, with whom, he extolled the Authority of Magiſtrates in Eccleſiaſtical affairs.

Barnevelt his patron.

Barnevelds deſign was to bring the Reformation in the Low-Countries nearer to the Lutherans, whereby they might hope to draw Auxiliaries out of Germany, the better to reſiſt the King of Spain, or at leaſt to make the better terms of agreement with him And whereas the States in the beginning of the wars had need of the multitude, and theſe could be better gained than by the help of the Miniſters, they therefore at firſt granted great Authority to the Paſtors of the Church.

Did not our late Parliament do ſo?

Now Barnevelt, ſeeking to undermine this Authority, nouriſhed ſuch diſſentions as roſe up in the Church; and by the power of the Magiſtrates hindred their cenſures againſt the refractory. He alſo rendred ſuſpected the authority of the Prince of Orange: and whereas it was only grievous to himſelf, he would perſwade the States, that it was dangerous to them. Wherefore, knowing that he had offended the Miniſters, and therefore could expect no ſupport from them, he willingly undertook the Patronage of Arminius, by whoſe followers he ſought to prop up himſelf.

Heretickes ſubtilty.

Yet at firſt he carryed this very privately, whilſt his Faction was ſmall, and might have been eaſily quaſhed: Whence alſo it was that Arminius long concealed his opinions till the year 1608. At which time Gomarus accuſed him to the States of Holland, and diſcovered that he diſſented from the Reformed Churches, about Juſtification, Predeſtination, Grace, Free-will, and Perſeverance of the Saints.

Wallæus labors to regain him.

Yet Arminius was not ſo long concealed from Wallæus, who knowing all the ſculking holes of Sectaries, by his path wherein he walked, eaſily diſcovered whereunto he tended, and therefore from the year 1606. he had labored to bring him into the right way again, which alſo he did all the year following, by his frequent Letters to him: To which Arminius ſometimes anſwered; but at laſt would anſwer no longer.

The ſame things that Arminius taught, did Corvinus teach about twenty years after, and was ſilenced with the ſame Argument by Wallæus.

Arminius being thus diſcovered, began to fear that he ſhould be ruined by the Miniſters; for Barnevelt durſt not as yet publickly undertake his Patronage; neither durſt Arminius undertake the alteration of Religion with an Heroical ſpirit, ſuch as was in our Reformers, who wholly minding the glory of God, reſted ſecure whatſoever ſhould befall themſelves, whereas Arminius being ſeized upon with ſorrow, and overwhelmed with grief fell ſick and dyed Anno Chriſti 1609.

Arminius dies through fear and grief.

Arminius being dead, amongſt all his followers, Utenbogard ſhewed himſelf the Ringleader: for though he was far inferior to Arminius in Learning, yet in the Government of the Church and State he was well ſeen: and indeed by his wit did more hurt to the Church than Arminius did by his Diſputations.

His faction continues.

This Bogard that he might make the Magiſtrates of Holland diſpleaſed with other Miniſters, and more to favour himſelf, wrote a Book of the Authority of Magiſtrates in Church-affairs, wherein he allowed the Magiſtrate, not only to order the external Government of the Church, but to determine controverſies in Religion, whereby he got great favour to his own party.

A Synod deſired.

In theſe ſtirs the Miniſters knew not what better remedy to finde, than in a National Synod of all the Reformed Churches, which they earneſtly ſolicited the States General for: and indeed the States of Gelderland, Zeland, Friſland, Groning, and

ſix

ſix Cities of Holland were for it, who deſired no Innovations in Religion, and diſpaired of any union with the Lutherans: and ſaid that the Eccleſiaſtical Government was no way grievous, but a remedy againſt Oligarchie. That the Power of the Prince of Orange was not dangerous, but rather a means to unite and tye them together: But on the contrary, the Nobility of Holland, and the other twelve Cities, as alſo the States of Utrick and Overiſle, though they did not openly deny a Synod, yet by tergiverſations and procraſtinations ſought to evade it.

In the mean time the Miniſters neglected not the remedy which was in their power: viz. to diſcover thoſe Errors to their people, and to confirm their mindes againſt them both by Preaching and Writing: And ſuch as were to be admitted to the Miniſtry, they examined them more ſtrictly: and ſuch as they diſcovered to be already in the Miniſtry, they cenſured and caſt out. Preachers. pattern.

Utenbogard and his companions ſtrongly oppoſed themſelves to theſe proceedings, both by word and writing, and promoted to the Miniſtry ſuch as were of their own opinions: yet were they inferior to the other party both in number and in the affections of the people: Fearing therefore that they ſhould be overcome, they framed a Remonſtrance (whence they were called Remonſtrants) to the States of Holland, wherein they requeſt to be taken into their Protection; who did not onely doe it, but preſently commanded, that none ſhould meddle with theſe Controverſies either by word or writing, neither ſhould examine Condidates upon theſe points, or cenſure any that differed in Judgement about them; which truly was to ſet up a party, when as the Remonſtrant Miniſters were ſcarce forty, and the Contra-Remonſtrants were fifty. Whence called Remonſtrants.

Yet the Remonſtrants thought that they could not continue long, except new ones of their own Opinion could be brought in as the other dyed, and theſe muſt be firſt formed in the Univerſity; wherefore to ſupply Arminius his place in Leiden, Wallæus and others, that were deſired by honeſt and Learned men, were rejected, & Utenbogard was ſought for. But he, knowing himſelf unfit for ſuch a Work, wrought by the Curators of thoſe parts, who were of kin to Barnevelt, that Conradus Vorſtius ſhould be brought from Steinford to Leiden: who in the year 1590. had been convicted by the Univerſity of Heidleberg, for favouring Socinus and his Opinions.

To the choice of this man the Miniſters preſently oppoſed themſelves, and ſuch Magiſtrates as favoured them: yet had it been impoſſible to have hindred his Election, the Remonſtrants did ſo prevail, but that James, King of Great Britain, frequently admoniſhed and urged the States not to do it, yea he condemned him of Hereſie, and burnt his Books publickly. King James oppoſeth Vorſtius.

At laſt certain Laws were obtruded upon the Church, which Barnevelt had framed twenty years before, but till now the States would never endure them, much leſs bring them in practice, in which the choice of Deacons, Elders and Paſtors was almoſt wholly given to the Magiſtrates. The Cenſuring of Paſtors or Members offending, was taken away from the Miniſters. The Curators of the Univerſity, and the Magiſtrates of Leiden did Execute the Decree for reſtraining of controverſies with more rigor than any other. The Miniſters oppreſſed.

By this they hindred Gomarus, both from defending himſelf and his Religion: At which being offended, he prepared to depart: And by this his departure, ſeeing the Students of Divinity ſhould thereby want a Profeſſor of the Reformed Religion, the Churches of Gelderland, and Curators of the Illuſtrious School there, ſent Anthony Thiſius, Profeſſor of Theology at Harderwick, and the Churches of Zealand, and Magiſtrates of Middleborough ſent Wallæus to Leiden, by all means to perſwade his ſtay: But Gomarus was reſolved to depart, whereupon they both of them invited him to make his abode with them, and Wallæus prevailed, ſo that he went to Middleborough, Anno Chriſti 1611. Gomarus leaves Leiden.

The States of Zealand were reſolved long ago, and this Calamity of Leiden now haſtened it, to Erect an Illuſtrious School in Zealand: but as yet they could not agree about the place: But they of Middleborough, ſeeking thereby to get advantage, An Illuſtrious School begun at Middleborough.

vantage, resolved to make the Grammer School more famous: For Gruter the School-Master being dead, Anno Christi 1607, they sought out another who might with credit bear the Rule in an Illustrious School, and therefore called Wallæus to the place.

But Wallæus would by no means accept of it, knowing what a tedious thing it was to govern Boys, and how subject he should be to calumnies in dieting them. Wherefore the care of both was devolved upon Giles Bursius Pastor of Middleborough, and the instructing them was committed to Justus Lyræus, afterwards Professor of Utrich: Yet Wallæus undertook the care of the School, and to read Lectures of Greek and Philosophy to them.

Wallæus his Lectures. In these Lectures he explained Homer, Hesiod, and other Authors: In Philosophy, he read Ethicks, Physicks, Astronomy, and Opticks: And now Gomarus being come to them, they prepared all things that belonged to an Illustrious School.

The place was appointed in the Quire of the new Church, and Gomarus was o read and interpret the sacred Scriptures, and to discuss the Common places in his Publick Disputations: James Meivartius was to read Philosophy: So that the fame of the School began to be spread abroad: and the Magistrates of Middleborough profered to Wallæus the place which was reserved for him, viz. to be Professor of Divinity Common places.

Gomarus his Ingratitude. At this Gomarus (who too much indulged his passions) was displeased, opposed himself, and accused Wallæus of Heresie, for that when he was a Student at Leiden, he stifly defended, that there were three souls in man.

The Magistrates were more offended at this opposition than was Wallæus: For Wallæus presently disclaimed the choice, who having never in his life sought after any place, was now much more content with his present Condition, and would not so far offend his old Master, as, against his will, to be chosen for his Colleague.

Wallæus his modesty. No injury did ever so disturb the mind of Wallæus as to discompose it, or make him unlike himself. But in the mean time the people were very angry that their beloved Minister was thus disgraced by him, who formerly, by his publick Testimony, had attested the purity of his Doctrine.

He is called to Sedan. But it so fell out about that time, that Philip, Lord of Plessis, called Wallæus to Salmur, who getting leave to depart, went thither, Anno Christi 1615. but stayed not long.

Returns to Middleborough. Upon this occasion they of Goesan, being stirred up by Hugh Grotius, would not suffer the City of Middleborough to have an Illustrious School, so that it was nipt in the Bud, and Meivartius returned to his Grammer School again: Onely the Magistrates of Middleborough requested Wallæus that sometimes he would read Greek and Philosophical Lectures, and would go on with his Common-places, and so they might still keep up the face of an Illustrious School: which accordingly he did, and yet neglected not his Work in the Ministry.

He answereth Bogard. Shortly after, at the command and request of the Churches of Zealand, and at the importunity of some of the chief Ministers of Holland, he answered Utenbogard, wherein he shewed that the Authority which was granted by the Magistrates to the Belgick Church was agreeable to the Sacred Scriptures, and the custome of the Primitive Church.

By this Book Wallæus every-where gat the name of a very Learned man, and of one that deserved well of the Church, because he had thereby freed the Church from that Aspersion cast upon it by the Remonstrants, that it was disobedient to Magistracy. He deserved also thanks from many Polititians, because he took away from some of their Society that Pretence whereby they oppressed the Churches.

Bogard's brag. Utenbogard himself could not but acknowledge that the Book was Learned and full of modesty, yet he pretended that he would return a speedy answer, for which cause he gat leave of the Deputies of the States to write again: But though he easily obtained ed leave, yet wrote he not: only about thirty years after, and seven years after the death of Wallæus, he would seem to return an answer, though it contained nothing in it but glorious promises and empty performances.

Wallæus was not content to have thus taken away the chiefest pillar to the Dissention, but endeavoured also to quiet the people, and to moderate the Magistrates of Holland: whereupon he set forth a treatise, shewing the people how they should demean themselves when any difference sprang up amongst the Pastors about Religion: The Magistrates he sought to reconcile to the Ministers by the means of Hugh Grotius, a man very familiar with him because of his Learning: who from an hope of succeeding Barnevelt in his dignity, was looked upon as his right hand. From him he extorted this speech, That he saw no better means to compose the difference than by a National Synod; which if it was denyed, God would punish them for it. Wallæus endeavors peace.

In the mean time the dissentions increased daily in Holland, and threatned the ruine of one, if not of both parties: Six of the Cities of Holland did openly oppose themselves against the Decrees concerning the Vocation of Pastors, and of tollerating the Controversies of Religion on both sides: The Ministers also refused to obey them, yea the Remonstrants themselves, especially those which were framed by Hugh Grotius at the instigation of Utenbogard, that set bounds to the Ministers, from which in handling Controversies, it was not lawful for them to deviate.

Yet the Magistrates would have them obeyed; and such Pastors as refused, were forbidden the exercise of their Ministry; and such as were more pertinacious, were cast out of their Cities: and such Citizens as most favoured them were banished: And though they were restored again by the Presidents of Justice who judged it to be; not a correction but a faction, yet the Magistrates would not suffer them to come into the Cities: whereupon they were filled with animosities on both sides: and at last, the Magistrates not daring to trust their Citizens, gathered souldiers. Remonstrants persecute the Orthodox.

But this dissention was no where more conspicous, nor hotter than at the Hague. Utenbogard, who had sometimes stirred up his hearers to use all extremity would now seem moderate, having gotten so much power in the Church, which that he might hold, he perswaded them to yeeld something to the Contra Remonstrants: But some sharp sights perceived, that this was but a trick to deceive the Pastors, and seduce the people, whereupon Henry Rosæus, an eloquent and couragious man, took heart to discover the fraud to the people, shewing that poyson lay under this honey: Upon this the Magistrates forbade him the use of his Ministry: But the people who now saw the fraud, would not hear Utenbogard any longer, but resorted to Sermons in the neighbor Village of Riswick: This the Magistrates sought to hinder: On the contrary the people urged that either Rosæus, or some other Preacher of the Reformed Religion (for which they had spent so much treasure and blood) should be allowed them. Bogards subtility. Rosæus opposeth him. The people stand for the truth.

Against this Utenbogard opposed himself, and laying aside his pretence of moderation, sought by all means to hinder the gratifying of the people in their request.

Prince Maurice observing, that not so much the Ministers as himself was aimed at, and that by his connivence the power of Barnevelt and his Adversaries was increased, he began openly to favour the Contra-Remonstrants, and requested the States of Holland that they might have a Church and Minister allowed them: But the Nobles and the twelve Cities much opposed it: yet still the Prince urged it, and seeing the Contra-Remonstrants desired but reason, he procured the English Church at the Hague to be allowed them: which when it would not receive all the Auditors, they took another Church, brought in Henry Rosæus, and frequented his Sermons. Prince Maurice sides with the Orthodox.

Barnevelt and his associates were much troubled at this, as if violence who profered to their authority: But seeing that the Contra-Remonstrants had no more granted them but what was equal, they suffered that which they knew not how to prevent. By this example the Contra-Remonstrants every where took courage, and the people They get a Church in the Hague.

ſided with them, ſeeing the Prince to favour them, who was ſo beloved and eſteemed of them.

But the Contra-Remonſtrants of the Hague thought it not enough to have a Church and Preacher, but in ſo illuſtrious a place, they muſt make it appear that their opinions and Doctrine was better than that of the Remonſtrants: But when Utenbogard excelled Roſæus in Learning, and daily provoked him to Diſputation, ſome other muſt be ſent for that might cool his boaſting: For which end none was judged fitter then our Wallæus, and therefore Anno Chriſti 1617. Deputies were ſent from the Church of the Hague and the Prince of Orange, with the conſent of the Magiſtrates, to fetch him from Middleborough for a time, to be a Paſtor of the Church at Hague.

Wallæus ſent for to the Hague.

As ſoon as he was come thither, he began in his Sermons to ſet down the ſtate of the controverſie, to weigh the Arguments of both ſides; to anſwer thoſe of the Remonſtrants, and to vindicate thoſe of the Contra-Remonſtrants; and ſo fully to inſtruct the people in theſe controverſies.

Then did Utenbogard give over his talk of diſputing, who well knew the Learning of Wallæus. But his followers who did not know Wallæus ſo well, ſometimes ſet upon him. And firſt of all La Haye, a Preacher of the Remonſtrants, as ſoon as the Sermon was ended before the Auditory was diſſolved, began to contend with him about the Perſeverance of Saints: But Wallæus dealt ſo modeſtly with him, equally conſidering his arguments, ſolidly and clearly anſwering them, and urging others with ſuch acuteneſs and judgement, that the man having nothing to anſwer, ſhrunk away with ſhame.

His Diſputations.

The Remonſtrants thinking to repair this diſgrace, challenged Wallæus to a new Diſputation, wherein an Eloquent and nimble Lawyer was appointed to aſſiſt La Haye: But this Diſputation was to be in a private houſe, where ſhould be preſent only two Elders for witneſſes: Wallæus refuſed it not: And when they were met, the Lawyer began very contentiouſly to propound the point of Predeſtination; Wallæus anſwered mildly, but ſolidly, whereby he tamed the fierceneſs of his Adverſary: But when ſome hundreds of both parts preſſed into the houſe to hear, the Remonſtrants fearing the like event of this Diſpuration as was of the former, would proceed no further, ſaying, that ſuch a conference ſhould not be where ſo many were preſent.

Its broken off.

Wallæus not content with this, often invited Utenbogard to a conference, eſpecially by the Lady Alice Coligni, the Widdow of William Prince of Orange, becauſe Utenbogard had by her formerly challenged Roſæus to a publick diſputation: But Utenbogard always by excuſes evaded it: By which means the Doctrine of the Contra-Remonſtrants began to flouriſh again at the Hague.

The truth prevailes.

The cauſe of the Contra-Remonſtrants was eſpecially defended by John Becius of Dort, Henry Vander Leyden of Delph, Feſtus Hommius of Leiden, Peter Plantius, and James Triglandius of Amſterdam, learned and wiſe men, who were much eſteemed by the people: Theſe men formerly in all weighty matters uſed ſtill to conſult with Wallæus, and now they were wholly guided by him.

His prudence made much uſe of.

The Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, who were the chief of thoſe that defended the Contra-Remonſtrants, continually by their Deputies conſulted with Wallæus: and when they had any buſineſs of weight, they earneſtly importuned him to be preſent, both in their Presbytery and City-Council to aſſiſt there with his advice.

And the Prince of Orange (of whom it was wittily ſaid, that when he ſate on Horſe-back he had all his Counſellors with him, yet) had Wallæus for his intimate Counſellor in all things which either concerned Religion, or this Controverſie. So that no day paſſed wherein he did not require his counſel, and ſometime ſpent whole nights in deliberating with him, that he might conclude upon ſuch matters as he was to diſpatch the next day. For indeeed he much eſteemed Wallæus, becauſe, though he was very prudent, yet would he never diſſemble, and all his counſels were free from craft.

His integrity.

His candor

For this candor he was reſpected by the Remonſtrants themſelves, for they knew which ways his counſels tended, that though he would have the Contra Remonſtrants ſetled, yet he would not have the Remonſtrants deſtroyed, perſwading himſelf, that if the contentions

contentions were once composed, and men could with a more calm minde weigh things indifferently, many of them would return to the Truth: He also maintained familiarity with Grotius and others of the Remonstrants as formerly he had done, and would have taken them off from Barnevelt, but that (as they used to say) a greater humane power hindred them.

By these means Wallæus was a chief instrument of bringing the whole controversie to the decision of a National Synod, and took care that due preparation should be made for the same, which when he had effected, he left the Hague: Indeed the Prince of Orange endeavoured to hinder his departure, and chose him for his Court-Preacher: But Wallæus wholly disliked that course of life, as prejudicial to his studies and dangerous, seeing he must either flatter, or hazard the loss of great mens favour, and incur their frowns.

His return to Middleborough.

Anno Christi 1618, he returned to Middleborough, where he found the great love of the people to him; whilst many came to meet him: His Colleagues and the Magistrates visited him with many expressions of their great love.

Heresie like a Gangreen.

The Controversies between the Remonstrants and Contra Remonstrants was not now confined within the bounds of Holland, but it spread into Utrich, Overisle, Gelderland; yea as far as Sedan; where Daniel Tilenus, an Eloquent man, but no deep Scholar, by degrees began to vent the Remonstrants Doctrines, and drew in Auratus a Minister, and a better man than himself, though not so learned. But Rambourgius the Court Preacher discovered him, so that by the Duke of Bovillian, he was forced to leave his Professors place and depart.

He is sent for to Sedan.

For the supply of which place, and to build up what Tilenus had pulled down, Wallæus was again called to Sedan: and all means were used to prevail for his remove. The messenger was Francis Arsenius, a man famous for such employments, and Wallæus his old friend, then whom that Age had not a man of more Learning, Judgement and Experience. The conditions were very large, and indeed, better than the other Professors did obtain: The Dukes invitation was serious, frequent, and friendly: yet could not VVallæus get away from his wife and friends: and for those large conditions which were profered him, the Middleburgians would have doubled his stipend rather then part with him: Besides, it seemed grievous to him who was now forty five years old to change his Country and Customs, and leaving his old and intimate friends to go to strangers: wherefore returning humble and hearty thanks to the Duke, he told him that he thought he should never leave Middleborough.

He refuses to go thither.

Division dangerous.

In the mean time the States of the United Provinces (observing that the factions in Holland tended to the dissolution of the League, and to the indangering the ruine of all the Provinces) seriously thought of a way of cure: and by the advice of Reiner Pavias, a Consul of Amsterdam, a man of great Authority, and by the instigation of Grave Moris, they Decreed and called a National Synod: and withall required the Prince of Orange to disband those Souldiers which the Magistrate of Utrich had raised, and to put the Magistrate out of his Office, and to substitute another in his room.

A Synod called.

To these things Barnevelt openly opposed himself by the Nobility, and twelve Cities of Holland: and with all his endeavour sought to impede the Synod by sending to forreign Kings and Princes, by provoking them of Utrich (who began to quail) profering them help to prevent the putting down of their Magistrate, and disbanding their Souldiers.

Whereupon the States of the united Provinces required the Prince of Orange to imprison the heads of the contrary faction, viz. Barnevelt, Rombert, Hagerbetius, Hugh Grotius, Giles Ledenbergius, and to disband the rest of the souldiery that was collected in Holland: To purge the Cities of disaffected Magistrates, and to substitute better in their rooms. All which were effected without any tumult or effusion of Blood, so displeasing were those Magistrates to the Citizens: after which all the other Magistrates consented to the Synod appointed at Dort.

The Remonstrants imprisoned.

In this Synod the flower of all the Reformed Churches met together, and amongst them our VVallæus, who had a place aſſigned him amongſt the Low-country Profeſſors, and was appointed one of the Directors of the Synod, but that the Paſtors had in private agreed amongſt themſelves to chuſe only ſuch as were Profeſſors.

It was the unhappineſs of the Remonſtrants that they had Simon Epiſcopius for their Preſident, who was a hot, imprudent, and cholerick man, by whoſe advice it was, that the Remonſtrants would not ſubmit to the Laws of the Synod: wherefore the work of the Synod was to find out the ſtate of the Controverſie by the writings of the Remonſtrants, and accurately to propound it in the Fundamentals themſelves: To examine them by the Word of God, and to ſee of what weight they were.

How the affairs of it were carryed on.

In the government of the whole Synod, John Bogerman excelled, being Prolocutor in it; and indeed a more fit man could not have been choſen. Feſtus Hommius was imployed in propoſing the ſtate of the Controverſie, who often conferred with Wallæus about it: But in weighing the controverſies, ſtrengthening, or enervating Arguments, and in vindicating them from exceptions, VVallæus excelled; whereupon when any difficulty aroſe, as the Explication of the Epiſtle to the Romanes, &c. it was committed to VVallæus; If any thing was to be accurately and prudently defined, it was committed to VVallæus: And he was choſen for one of thoſe that drew up the Canons of the Synod, and ſet down reaſons why the Doctrine of the Remonſtrants was rejected: And it was judged that the wiſdom of VVallæus prevailed much to procure the unanimous conſent of the Synod thereunto.

Wallæus highly eſteemed.

Wherefore of the Politicians and ſtrangers, who had no cauſe of envy, he was much eſteemed: yea he ſo demeaned himſelf, that Giles Burſius his Æmulus, acknowledged that Wallæus excelled all in the Synod, and he made this acknowledgment to the VVallacrian Claſſis from whom he was delegated.

God ſo bleſſed the labors of all in this Synod, that the Remonſtrants themſelves had no cauſe to complain. Controverſies were ſo decided, difficulties ſo expedited, that all godly and learned men were abundantly ſatisfied; and from thence forwards the roots of Remonſtrancy were ſo cut off, that preſently it began to wither: And all things were managed with that modeſty, all things diſpatched with that unanimous conſent, that never was the like from the Primitive times.

The Remonſtrant condemned.

All Controverſies being now determined, and the Cauſe of the Remonſtrants judged, the chief Patrons of the Remonſtrants were condemned of Treaſon by the Delegates of the States of the United Provinces: The perſons condemned were, Barnevelt, Hogerbetius, Grotius, and Ledenburgius: This laſt by killing himſelf prevented the puniſhment. And James Schot Conſul of Middleborough, one of thoſe Delegates, was ſent by the States to Dort to fetch VValleus to the Hague, who accordingly brought him thither, May the 12. privily, that ſo the people might have no ſuſpition of the puniſhment intended to the Remonſtrants.

By the way he told VVallæus that the States ſent for him to prepare the Priſoners for death, they judging, that by his prudence and perſwaſions he might beſt of all other men effect it.

VVallæus when he ſaw that he could not avoid the employment, yet deſired that he might not be the firſt meſſenger of death to them: that he might be ſpared from dealing at all with Grotius in regard of his former friendſhip contracted with him; and that he might not be preſent at their death, which he could not bear without much trouble of minde.

Wallæus is ſent to prepare them for death.

Being come to the Hague, in the Evening, Schot went to the Deputies and Judges to acquaint them that VVallæus was come, and to tell them, what requeſt he had made to him. Whereupon the Advocates Fiſcal were ſent to Barnevelt to tell him that the next day he was to be judged and put to death: and Schot in the mean time went to VVallæus to tell him that his requeſts were granted, that Hogerbetius and Grotius, though they were condemned, ſhould not be executed, but kept in perpetual Priſon: That the Advocates Fiſcal were ſent to Barnevelt to acquaint him that the next day he was to dye, and that therefore the Delegates and Judges requeſted him to make haſte to him, and ſo about ſix a clock VVallæus was conducted to the Priſon to Barnevelt.

When

When he came into his Chamber, he found him full of perplexity, writing to his wife and children, to acquaint them with the meſſage of his death: and at firſt he was unwilling to have any ſpeech with Wallæus: but after a while he became more calm, yet complained of the hard meaſure that he met with from the States, whom he had ſerved for forty three years: He would feign have taken ſome reſt that night, but could not: The next morning, when he had heard his Sentence read, he was had to the place of Execution; at which time he told the people, that he dyed not a Traytor, but a Patriot. At the place of Execution, he asked his man whether no man came? Belike expecting a pardon: but when his ſervant told him that there was none, kneeling down, his head was cut off.

He comes to Barnevelt.

Barnevelt beheaded.

The day following, Wallæus returned to Dort, and attended upon the Affairs of the Synod till the end of May; at which time he had ſome Money given him; and with the reſt was invited to a Publick Feaſt: and afterwards with ſome Principal men, he was privately Feaſted by the States Delegates, and ſo was diſmiſſed honourably.

Wallæus returns to Middleborough.

Theſe things being diſpatched, the States of Holland, leſt the commotions now ſuppreſſed, ſhould break forth again, thought fit in the firſt place to take care of the Univerſity of Leidens which was the Seminary both of their Church and State; And for that end they reſolved to add to John Poliander, the Divinity Profeſſor, Andrew Rivet, Anthony Wallæus, and Anthony Thyſius: To Rivet they ſent Thomas Erpenius the Arabick Profeſſor: To Thyſius, Adrian Pavius Syndic of Amſterdam: And to Wallæus, Rochus Honartius Senator of the Supream Court, and Peter Deiman Chief Conſul of Leiden, who came to him to Middleborough in the midſt of July to acquaint him with his Election, and to urge him to accept of it: They alſo preſented him with the Letters of Prince Maurice, requeſting the ſame of him.

New Profeſſors at Leiden.

Wallæus ſent for.

Yet did Wallæus deſire that he might have time to conſider of it, telling them that he would ſeek unto God by Prayer, and adviſe with his Friends, with the Church and Magiſtrate. In the mean time the Delegates earneſtly ſollicited the Presbytery and Magiſtrates to give their conſents, which at laſt with much ado, they obtained; becauſe he was to go to Leiden where he might take care of theirs as well as of the Holland Youths.

His Friends ſtuck ſome-what at it, becauſe he had as good a ſtipend at Middleborough as he was to have at Leiden; and though at Leiden he might bring up his Sons at the Univerſity, yet being ſo far from his Friends, he could not place them forth as well to honeſt Callings as at Middleborough: To ſatisfie theſe therefore, he had alſo a Paſtors place in Leiden profered him. Wallæus thought that he might not reſiſt this call, becauſe he was not ſo much to form one Church by it, as to prepare Paſtors for many, not ſo much to govern one Church, as to aſſiſt with his Counſels all the Belgick Churches.

He inclines to go.

September the tenth, he Preached his farewel Sermon, which filled his people with ſighs and tears: ſo that it ſeemed rather that Children were to part with their Father, than People with their Paſtor.

Peoples love to their Paſtor.

During his abode at Middleborough, he much wanted his health, being troubled with Rhumes, Collick, Feavers and other Diſeaſes: Sometimes alſo having an intermitting Pulſe, the cauſe whereof was partly hereditary from his Mother, and partly by reaſon of Studying ſo ſoon after meals, ſcarce affording any reſt to his mind, or Food for the refreſhing of his Body: yet a healthful and diligent Wife much cheered him up.

His diſeaſes.

He had ſeven children, five daughters and two ſons, whereof two dyed very young; the other he took much pleaſure and delight in.

His Children.

September the nineteenth, he removed with all his Family to Leyden: where he was entertained honorably with a Publick Feaſt by the Magiſtrate, with much congratulation by the Univerſity, and very heartily by his old Friends.

He comes to Leiden.

At Leiden he was preſently graced with the Degree of a Doctor, without any Examination, which is uſed at other times.

He is made a Doctor.

October

His Oration. October the 21. being to begin his Professorship, he made an Oration about the right regulating the study of Divinity: which was received by a great Auditory, with the great applause of all: yet it presently displeased himself, because he observed that many things are excellently conceived which cannot be brought into practise.

The other Professors come. Presently after came Anthony Thysius, and not long after him Andrew Rivet out of France, to adorn the Profession of Divinity: who as they were all men of great note, so by their excellent parts they made that Faculty far more famous.

Their several excellencies. Each of them had his several gifts wherein he excelled: Thysius in Memory, and Wallæus and Rivet in Judgement; and Polyander in dexterity of performance. In actions Thysius was fervent; Wallæus full of vigor: Rivet was somewhat slower, and Polyander very calm, &c.
